

LIBRARY
OF
UNIVERSITY OF CALIFORNIA

Gift of

Miss Mary Anna Smith

Class

7-4

Digitized by the Internet Archive in 2008 with funding from Microsoft Corporation

THE DEATH OF GENERAL WOLFE.

(QUEBEC.)

889
B24
1848
PE
1625
33
1848
MAIN

A

COMPLETE AND UNIVERSAL

D I C T I O N A R Y

OF THE

ENGLISH LANGUAGE:

COMPREHENDING

THE EXPLANATION, PRONUNCIATION, ORIGIN, AND SYNONYMES OF EACH WORD;

AN

EPITOME OF HISTORY, BIOGRAPHY, AND THE USEFUL SCIENCES;

A DESCRIPTION OF THE COUNTIES, CITIES, AND MARKET-TOWNS OF GREAT BRITAIN, AND OF THE KINGDOMS, STATES, PROVINCES, AND CITIES IN THE KNOWN WORLD, WITH A VARIETY OF OTHER USEFUL INFORMATION.

BY

THE REV. JAMES BARCLAY.

A NEW EDITION,
ENLARGED, IMPROVED, AND ADAPTED TO THE PRESENT STATE OF SCIENCE, BY B. B. WOODWARD, B.A. LONDON.

LONDON:

GEORGE VIRTUE, 26, IVY LANE, PATERNOSTER ROW.

Wood Swift

P R E F A C E.

THE extensive sale of the former editions of this Dictionary makes it unnecessary to speak of its general utility. For a book which, like this, is sold almost wholly amongst the people, such a fact may be regarded as a sufficient test of worth. The time was, however, come for a complete revision of its contents; whilst the advance of science, the progress of events, and the growth of popular intelligence, demanded an extension of its original plan. This edition is, therefore, issued with changes so great that it might claim to be an altogether new work. The scientific, geographical, and historical parts have been entirely re-written; and, in addition to the biographical articles, which form a perfectly new feature in it, great numbers of new articles in all the departments of knowledge, which were formerly included in its design, have been inserted. The latest authentic information on every subject which could be obtained has been given; and the difficulty of this in these times will be appreciated, when the condition of the European continent for the last twelve months is recalled to mind; and when it is stated that, since the compilation of the tabular view of the solar system, another asteroid and an eighth satellite to Saturn have been discovered, and it has been shown that Neptune is not the planet whose existence and position Adams and Leverrier had demonstrated by mathematical calculation. In such a work, copious and technical detail on scientific subjects was, of course, inadmissible. Clear and intelligible definition, with brief intimations of what would be found in treatises expressly devoted to them, were all that either its extent or its plan would allow; and it is hoped that, in this view, these articles will not prove unsatisfactory. Tables of the measures of weight, length, &c. &c., used in this and other civilized countries, have been appended, because of their evident practical value. As much of history as could be narrated in the sketches of the lives of its great actors, will be found under their several names; and beside this, outlines of the great events, a rapid review of the whole story of the fortunes of our own country, and an ample Chronological Table, reaching to the middle of the current year, (1848,) have been given. The space requisite for these alterations has been gained by the enlargement of the page, by the condensation of the articles common to this and to all English dictionaries, and by the omission of the Preliminary Treatises on the British Constitution, &c. &c., which were antiquated, and in great part rendered needless by the revision of the body of the work.

It is possible that many names, commonly inserted in biographical works, will be sought for here in vain. Most of these have been omitted intentionally; the editor's hope and purpose being to aid, as far as the selection and exhibition of examples could aid, in the genuine development of all that is most manly in man, but in no case to pander to feelings which would hinder the attainment of this end. The articles on theology, ethics, and philosophy have been written in the same spirit. Neither devotion to any school of opinions, nor indifference to subjects of such great and universal concern, have been inculcated; but the free and intelligent use of all the original sources of knowledge respecting them, the employment of the appropriate means of investigation, and especially the vital distinction between what are, from their nature, matters of speculation and inquiry, and what are the motive principles of man's proper life, have been, on all suitable occasions, illustrated and enforced. In all that has been said respecting questions which are now regarded by the working classes as of intense interest, the aim has been to exhibit the very heart of them, cleared from all the sophistries and perversions so much employed both by those who promote, and by those who would suppress, the discussion of them.

From what has been said, it will be seen that this Dictionary does not pretend to be an Encyclopædia, or to supply the place of one, for the learned and the studious; but that it is intended to be a compendious and satisfactory BOOK OF UNIVERSAL REFERENCE for those who, shut out from the means of acquiring extensive and profound knowledge, yet desire to partake, in such measure as they can, of the guidance and comfort of that light, which is now, at length, perceived to be sent forth for all. It will afford no mean nor selfish pleasure to the editor to find his intentions fulfilled, and his labour crowned with this success: and if this book should stir up any to desire, and to seek for, fuller and wider information, on any of the varied and multiplied subjects it notices, he will have realized his most ambitious hopes. Possibly, the assurance of any such reward may be denied. In that case, to have worked with such objects, in view, as have been mentioned will be his reward. And, notwithstanding what may be believed or taught to the contrary, it is a privilege of the highest order, to have wished heartily, to have sought honestly, to advance one's fellows in true knowledge.

In an age like the present, no other prize than this may, perhaps, be reasonably expected. We live, not, as we thought, in the " piping times of peace," but amidst convulsions more threatening than any that have ever yet terrified the nations. And if our land be spared the material and revolting horrors of revolution, it is not the less surely passing through a revolution as sweeping as those which have shaken all the thrones of Europe; of the same nature, essentially, with them; which will know the same crises, the same agonies; be checked, and at times all but stopped, as they; and, in the end, reach the same goal. To discern the agencies actually at work in this revolution, and all that, in the manners, the laws, and the circumstances of the nation, makes it needful, is the first duty of such an undertake, whether by word of mouth or through the press, to be teachers of others. To weigh well the various healing measures proposed, to reject the nostrums of the quack, and to approve the prescriptions of the skilled physician,—these, too, are not less their duty, nor should less engage their care. Whilst to them also, if they be teachers indeed, belongs the high task of looking through the confused and shifting tumult of the scenes that fill the eye; and, appalling the heart of the timid, rouse the passionate hope of the deluded to, the future which is to be wrought out of it; and without imperilling the reception of the truth they can impart, by hazarding predictions respecting the events of the morrow, to point, by words that can convey the spiritual influence of genuine knowledge, to that future, and so to reassure the expectations of the good, to dash the malignant triumph of their opponents, and to lighten the toil of every true-hearted labourer amongst the children of men.

Without mistaking the position which the humble nature of his work assigns to him, the writer confesses that he has been cheered in it by the desire to be such a teacher as far as was possible; and of helping by it in hastening the advent of the "good times," that all classes now so fondly trust "will come." Those times, it is true, do not image themselves to his mind under the form in which they present themselves to the hopes of most men. He does not hail, as signs of their approach, the movements which are confidently appealed to by the most favoured prophets of the day. Perhaps but a small minority would sympathize with him, in his dreams of the coming æra. Yet not for such reasons dare he renounce that which has never deceived his faith; and which seems to be at once permanent and progressive, to have its foundations in the nature of things, and to lead inevitably to the end, which has been announced in no doubtful manner by the Almighty himself, as the goal of the human race. And who that, aided by knowledge of what is in man, and of what has been the history of mankind to this hour, and by such knowledge as God only can give, has addressed himself to the study of the characteristics of the passing age, could fail to see, in the hearty and entire devotion of individual men to the very Truth, the assured promise of a glorious future,—and in that alone? And who, that sees it, would forsake this rock of strength, for any of the specifics for inducing "peace on earth, and good-will amongst men," by the sole force of circumstances, which are so ostentatiously proclaimed by contending parties, as the infallible means of bringing about the true millennium?

THE HEARTY AND ENTIRE DEVOTION OF INDIVIDUAL MAN TO THE VERY TRUTH.

"But there is no originality or novelty in this; every one already knows it." Its truth then is not denied. But if known of all men, where and who are they that act upon it?

"It would require ages for the development of any result, sufficient to commend it to the attention of all men." The question is not in how little time; but, how can men be surely and universally advanced to that lofty position, which is the secret aspiration of all, and which every tradition of the old times declares to be the consummation of the world's destiny. Now, it is not denied, and it cannot be denied, that this end may be reached by the accession of men, one by one, to the service of the Truth. But no such assurance attends even the success of any of the schemes which propose, by the mere alteration of their circumstances, to reform and renovate the race. Implicit obedience to spiritual authority, the licence of legalized scepticism, the tyranny of despots, constitutions which recognised the political rights of all, education by rulers and priests, economy, communism, colonization, philanthropy, philosophy, all, under various names, and at various times and places, have already been tried; and the condition of mankind at this moment is the evidence of their failure. But the silent, resolute culture of all good in one's own heart, and, as far as the influence of one's own attainments could empower, in the hearts of others; this, to which all that is excellent or hopeful in the world is owing, is dismissed, because it demands time for the maturing of its glorious promise!

"Then, each man, to the end, must encounter all the toil and woe of the conflict, through which, as we have heard, they have ever passed who have chosen this course." In truth he must. For who else can vanquish, who else resist, who else even know, the ignorance, the evil habits, the lusts, the sin, that give the lie to his stoutest resolutions, and foil his best efforts, to be in all things the devoted servant of the Truth? But though it be so, and each one must fight out this battle for himself, just as each one must, as the great French moralist says, "die alone"; the labours and the sufferings of those who go before are not fruitless for them that follow after. He who undertakes truthfully this warfare will find whole legions of auxiliaries. Every step taken by sage and scholar in the rugged path of learning aids him; every achievement of genuine art aids him; every discovery, every invention, that science can boast aids him; every generous suggestion of hearts that have pitied the wants and the miseries of their brethren aids him; every assertion and defence of human right, every approach to the establishment of justice in human affairs, every example of virtue and holiness, that the world has first martyred and then worshipped,—in a word, every thing that is of the Truth, aids him who has sworn fealty to her.

And yet there are higher aids. The Roman stoic wrote, "There is no good man without God." He knew not all the truth of his own words, but he knew that without such aid victory were hopeless for man. We know, on the testimony of witnesses who would not, and who have not deceived us, that in this conflict God is so profoundly interested, that it has called forth a manifestation of Himself in the world so marvellous, that human powers are baffled and confounded in every attempt to understand it. Heralded by all that was befitting such a display of care for man, JESUS came; and, subjected to all the conditions of our lot, engaged in this conflict himself, and triumphed in the very hour when those he came to bless exulted in having slain him. Alone he fought the fight; alone he gained the victory; that thenceforward, not alone, not without him, should any soldier of the Truth enter into the battle. It is his voice that calls them to it; his example that cheers them in it; his strength that supports them through it; and it is he, himself, that crowns them, as "more than conquerors," at its close.

And thus it was declared to man, that not learning, nor art, nor science, nor any amount of human wisdom or skill, was his life, but faith; and that if he would realize the splendid vision that each one is born with, the half-forgotten fragments of which have suggested the prophecy of a "golden age" yet to beautify and gladden this earth, he must "fight the good fight of faith, and lay hold of everlasting life." Thus, too, we are led, at length, to see that the glorious future promised by the hearty and entire devotion of individual men to the Truth, is no life made up of the shows of worldly good, but of the realities of a better world than this; and this again assures us that no changes in outward circumstances, however skillfully contrived or however powerfully carried out, can bring to pass that result mankind so passionately and so blindly long for; for then only will the end they darkly seek be gained, when "the earth shall be filled with the knowledge of the glory of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea."

With hopes such as these has this book been prepared; and it is sent forth in the trust that, though it be one of the least things that can help in their accomplishment, it may effect all that it is fitted for, even if it cannot do all that the editor could desire.

Harleston, November, 1848.

TABLES OF WEIGHTS AND MEASURES,

FROM THE MOST RECENT AUTHORITIES.

BRITISH ISLANDS.

I. MEASURE OF LENGTH.

Standard. Suppose a pendulum vibrating seconds in a vacuum, at the level of the sea, in the latitude of London, at a temperature of 62° Fahrenheit, to be divided into 391,393 parts; 360,000 are taken as the length of a yard.

12 inches	make	1 foot
3 feet	—	1 yard
5½ yards	—	1 rod, pole, or perch
40 poles	—	1 furlong
8 furlongs	—	1 mile

The inch is subdivided into eighths amongst mechanics; and into tenths, hundredths, &c. amongst scientific persons, and by the officers of the revenue. It was formerly, also, divided into twelfths, or lines.

Particular Measures of Length.

2½ inches	make	1 nail	} used for all kinds of cloths.
4 nails	—	1 quarter
4 quarters	—	1 yard
5 quarters	—	1 ell	} used in measuring the height of horses.
3 barleycorns	—	1 inch
3 inches	—	1 palm
4 inches	—	1 hand	} used in measuring depths, at sea, &c.
9 inches	—	1 span
5 feet	—	1 pace
6 feet	—	1 fathom	} used in measuring of a great circle of the earth.
69⅓ miles	—	1 degree
⅓ degree	—	1 geographical mile
3 miles	—	1 league	} used in measuring the sides, &c. of areas.
7⅞ inches	—	1 link
100 links	—	1 chain

In measuring cloth, the Flemish ell = 3 quarters, and the French ell = 6 quarters, were formerly used.

II. MEASURE OF SURFACE.

Standard. The same as in the preceding measure.

144 square inches	make	1 square foot
9 square feet	—	1 square yard
30½ square yards	—	1 sq. rod, pole, or perch.
40 square perches	—	1 rood
4 roods	—	1 acre
640 acres	—	1 square mile

In measuring land, a chain is used of the length given in the preceding measure; and 10 square chains = 1 acre.

III. MEASURE OF SOLIDITY.

Standard. As before.

1728 cubic inches	make	1 cubic foot
27 cubic feet	—	1 cubic yard

In the case of timber, 40 cubic feet of rough timber, or 50 feet of hewn timber = 1 load, or ton; whilst in shipping, 42 cubic feet = 1 ton.

IV. MEASURE OF CAPACITY.

Standard. The gallon contains 277⅓ cubic inches of distilled water, at a temperature of 62° Fahrenheit, the barometer being at 30 inches; which when weighed in air = 10 pounds avoirdupois.

4 gills	make	1 pint
2 pints	—	1 quart
4 quarts	—	1 gallon
2 gallons	—	1 peck
4 pecks	—	1 bushel
8 bushels	—	1 quarter
5 quarters	—	1 load, or wey

The four last-named measures are used for dry goods only. Heaped measure is abolished.

Other Measures of Capacity yet in use.

4 bushels	make	1 coomb	} used for corn.
2 weys	—	1 last
9 gallons	—	1 firkin	} used for beer.
2 hkins	—	1 kilderkin
2 kilderkins	—	1 barrel
3 kilderkins	—	1 hogshead
2 hogsheads	—	1 butt

For wine and spirits, although many of the old names continue in use, such as anker, runlet, tierce, hogshead, puncheon, pipe, butt, and tun, they are employed rather as names of casks, than as measures; and the contents of such vessels are usually ascertained by gauging before being charged. The old Winchester gallon contained only 268⅔ cubic inches. Flour is sold by weight, 7 pounds avoirdupois being reckoned to the gallon. Coals are now sold by weight. Only 8 gallons of ale used to be reckoned to the firkin.

V. MEASURE OF WEIGHT.

Standard. One cubic inch of distilled water, at a temperature of 62° Fahrenheit, the barometer being at 30 inches, weighs 252⅓ troy grains; and 7000 troy grains = 1 pound avoirdupois.

27⅓ grains	make	1 dram
16 drams	—	1 ounce
16 ounces	—	1 pound
28 pounds	—	1 quarter
4 quarters	—	1 hundredweight
20 hundredweights	—	1 ton

This weight, which is called avoirdupois, is used in almost all commercial transactions and common dealings. The particular measures of weight are the following:

Troy Weight.

24 grains	make	1 pennyweight
20 pennyweights	—	1 ounce
12 ounces	—	1 pound

This is used in weighing gold, silver, and precious stones, excepting diamonds, for which the carat =  $3\frac{1}{2}$  grains, is employed. Apothecaries also employ this weight in compounding medicines, with the following addition:

20 grains	make	1 scruple
3 scruples	—	1 dram
8 drams	—	1 ounce.

In the purchase of drugs, avoirdupois weight is used. Scientific men use only the grain; and sets of weights from  $\frac{1}{10}$  of a grain to 10,000 grains are made for them. The carat, applied to gold, is a term which expresses only the relative proportions of the gold and the alloy. Each mass is supposed to be divided into 24 equal parts, or carats; so that "22 carats fine" signifies that only 2 parts of alloy are added to 22 parts of gold; and "18 carats fine," the New Standard, signifies 6 parts of alloy to 18 of gold.

Wool Weight.

7 pounds	make	1 clove
2 cloves	—	1 stone
2 stone	—	1 tod
6½ tods	—	1 wey
2 weys	—	1 sack
12 sacks	—	1 last

But in some places 7 tods = 1 wey, and 240 pounds = 1 pack. There were a great many different weights which passed under the name of stone, but every one except that of 14 pounds is now illegal. In weighing hay and straw, 56 pounds of old hay, or 60 pounds of new (that is, till Sept. 1 of the year of its growth), and 36 pounds of straw = 1 truss. Of cheese and butter, 8 pounds = 1 clove, and 7 cloves = 1 firkin; whilst the wey varies between 32 and 42 pounds, in different localities.

The comparison of the avoirdupois and troy measures is, as will be seen by the tables just given, in the pound, in favour of the former, in the ratio of nearly 17 to 14; and in the ounce, in favour of the latter, in the ratio of nearly 79 to 72.

The fluid measure of Apothecaries is,

60 minims	make	1 dram
8 drams	—	1 ounce
20 ounces	—	1 pint;

which is exact in both weight and measure, in the case of water. A drop of water = 1 minim, naturally.

Various weights assigned to bags, chests, &c. &c. of different articles, in commerce, only express the usual capacity of such vessels; but the actual weight of the commodity must be ascertained now by measurement.

VI. MEASURE OF TALE, OR RECKONING.

Only a few common examples can be given under this head; as it is evident that convenience and custom are the only standard it admits.

12 = 1 dozen; 13 = 1 long dozen; 120 = 1 long hundred; 12 dozen = 1 gross, or small gross; 12 small gross = 1 great gross; 10 = 1 dicker; 60 = 1 shock; 10,000 = 1 last.

24 sheets	make	1 quire
20 quires	—	1 ream
10 reams	—	1 bale

VII. MEASURE OF TIME.

60 seconds	make	1 minute
60 minutes	—	1 hour
24 hours	—	1 day
7 days	—	1 week
28 days	—	1 lunar month
28, 29, 30, or 31 days	—	1 calendar month
365 or 366 days	—	1 year

See the articles CALENDAR, YEAR, BISSEXTILE, LEAP-YEAR, &c. &c. in the Dictionary.

The second is divided, for scientific purposes, into 10ths, 100ths, &c.

February has 28 days, or 29 in leap-year; April, June, September, and November, 30; and the rest, 31.

VIII. MEASURE OF ANGULAR DISTANCE.

60 seconds	make	1 minute
60 minutes	—	1 degree
30 degrees	—	1 sign
90 degrees	—	1 quadrant
12 signs	—	1 circumference.

This table of the divisions of the circle is employed in mathematical science; and the second is subdivided decimally, as the second of time is. On globes, and maps of the stars, 15 degrees = 1 hour.

IX. WEIGHT OF ENGLISH COINS.

Sovereign	weights	5 dwt 3½ grains
Half-sovereign	—	2 13½
Crown	—	18 4.3636
Half-crown	—	9 2.1818
Shilling	—	3 15.2727
Sixpence	—	1 19.6363
Fourpence	—	1 5.0909
Threepence	—	9¼

For the value, &c., see the article COIN in the Dictionary.

THE COLONIES

use the imperial weights and measures, generally. But in some the old system is employed, as in the West Indian Islands; whilst at the Cape, the old Dutch measures are also used; and at the Mauritius, the French system.

THE UNITED STATES.

The English weights and measures, as they were before 1835, are used here. The principal alterations having been noticed in the notes upon the Tables, given above, it is needless to repeat them.

THE IONIAN ISLANDS.

The English imperial weights and measures are used, but with Italian or Turkish denominations. The Troy pound is the Libbra Sottile; and the avoirdupois pound, the Libbra grossa; 100 Libbre = 1 Centinajo; and 1000 Libbre = 1 Migliajo. In Measures of Capacity, 8 Dicotoli = 1 Galloni; 8 Gallone = 1 Chilo, which is an imperial bushel; and 16 Gallone = 1 Barile. In Measures of Length, 5½ Yarde = 1 Carnacio; and 22 Yarde = 1 Stadio.

FRANCE.

The "metrical system," now universally enforced, was devised by the scientific men of the end of the last century, at the instance of the National Assembly, and was introduced in 1799; but not till 1840, and then only by a special statute, did it supersede the old or "usual system." The basis of this system is the length of a quadrant, or fourth part of the meridian, the distance between the equator and one of the poles at the level of the sea. Meridional arcs were measured in various latitudes, the most extensive being one of 570 miles, extending from Dunkirk to Barcelona, in order to ascertain this length; and the whole being supposed to be divided into 10,000,000 parts, one was taken as the original unit for all weights and measures, and called a mètre. It is a decimal system; that is, each denomination is a tenth part of the one next above it, and ten times that next below it; and the ascending denominations are distinguished by the Greek prefixes, deca, hecto, kilo, and myria; whilst the descending denominations have the Latin prefixes, deci, centi, and milli. This system is unsurpassed in simplicity and completeness, and renders all operations in commercial and scientific arithmetic at once easy and certain.

I. MEASURE OF LENGTH.

1 myriamètre	equals	10000 mètres
1 kilomètre	—	1000 mètres

1 decamètre	make	10 mètres
1 mètre	—	{ The 10,000,000th part of the quarter of the meridian of the earth.
1 décimètre	—	1 tenth of a mètre
1 centimètre	—	1 hundredth of a mètre
1 millimètre	—	1 thousandth of a mètre

II. MEASURE OF SURFACE.

1 hectare	make	100 ares
1 are	—	100 square mètres
1 centiare	—	1 square mètre

III. MEASURE OF SOLIDITY.

1 stère	make	1 cubic mètre
1 decistère	—	1 tenth of a stère

IV. MEASURE OF CAPACITY.

1 kilolitre	make	1 cubic mètre
1 hectolitre	—	10 decalitres
1 decalitre	—	10 litres
1 litre	—	1 cubic decimètre
1 decilitre	—	1 tenth of a litre

V. MEASURE OF WEIGHT.

1 millia	make	{ 1000 kilogrammes, and is the weight of a tun of sea-water.
1 quintal	—	100 kilogrammes
1 kilogramme	—	{ Weight of a cubic decimètre of water, at the temperature of 4° above melting ice, or about 40° Fahrenheit
1 hectogramme	—	100 grammes
1 decagramme	—	10 grammes
1 gramme	—	1 thousandth of a kilogramme
1 decigramme	—	1 tenth of a gramme

These measures may be compared with the English measures by means of the following table:

1 mètre	equals	39.38 English inches, nearly
1 are	—	3.9 English perches, nearly
1 stère	—	35.32 English cubic feet
1 litre	—	1.76 English pints
1 gramme	—	15.44 English grains

BELGIUM.

The metrical system is used here; but the kilogramme is termed a livre; the litre, a litron; and the mètre, an aune.

NETHERLANDS.

Here, also, the metrical system has been adopted; but Flemish names are employed instead of those used in France.

LOMBARDO-VENETIAN KINGDOM.

The metrical system, with Italian names substituted for most of the original terms, is used officially; but the old measures are also used: see VENICE.

AUSTRIA.

The ell =  $30\frac{4}{5}$  inches. The joch = 1 acre  $1\frac{1}{2}$  rood. The metzen =  $1\frac{1}{2}$  bushel. The eimer =  $12\frac{1}{2}$  gallons. The pfund =  $1\frac{1}{2}$  pound. Gold and silver are weighed by the mark of Vienna, which = 4333 grains.

BASEL.

100 pounds =  $108\frac{1}{2}$  pounds avoirdupois. The ohm =  $10\frac{1}{2}$  gallons. The sack =  $3\frac{1}{2}$  bushels. The large and small ells =  $46\frac{1}{2}$  and  $21\frac{1}{2}$  inches respectively.

BAVARIA.

The long and short ells = 24 and  $23\frac{3}{5}$  inches respectively. The schaff of 8 metzen =  $5\frac{1}{5}$  bushels. The muid of 48 mass = 15 gallons. 100 pounds heavy and light weight =  $108\frac{2}{5}$  and  $104\frac{1}{5}$  pounds avoirdupois respectively. The mark of Augsburg = 3643 grains.

BREMEN.

The foot or half-ell =  $11\frac{1}{5}$  inches. The ohm =  $31\frac{1}{5}$  gallons. The last =  $10\frac{1}{5}$  quarters. 100 pounds =  $109\frac{2}{5}$  pounds avoirdupois.

CAPE OF GOOD HOPE.

The centner, or 100 pounds Dutch weight =  $108\frac{4}{5}$  pounds avoirdupois. The leager of 15 ankers =  $126\frac{1}{3}$  gallons. The muid of 4 schepels = 3 bushels. The ell of 27 Rhyland inches =  $27\frac{1}{4}$  inches.

CHINA.

The chang of 10 chih = 4 yards, nearly. The shing = 1 pint. 10 ho = 1 shing; 10 shing = 1 tow; 10 tow = 1 hwuh, or 120 catties. The catty =  $1\frac{1}{2}$  pound avoirdupois. 16 taels = 1 catty; 100 catties = 1 pecul. Liquids are sold by weight; but the English gallon is used in trading with foreigners.

DENMARK.

The foot =  $12\frac{2}{5}$  inches. 100 ells =  $68\frac{2}{5}$  yards. The viertel =  $1\frac{1}{5}$  gallon. 100 tonnen =  $47\frac{1}{5}$  quarters. The pound =  $1\frac{1}{5}$  pound avoirdupois. The pound for gold and silver weighs 726 grains.

EAST INDIES.

Bengal. The Factory maund =  $7\frac{1}{2}$  pounds avoirdupois. 10 bazar maunds = 11 Factory maunds. 16 chittacks = 1 seer; 40 seers = 1 maund. The guz of 2 cubits = 1 yard.

Bombay. The maund = 28 pounds avoirdupois. 40 seers = 1 maund; 20 maunds = 1 candy. The candy =  $24\frac{1}{2}$  bushels.

Madras. The maund = 25 pounds avoirdupois. 40 pollams = 1 vi; 8 vis = 1 maund; 20 maunds = 1 candy. The coid =  $18\frac{1}{2}$  inches. The garse of 80 parabs =  $16\frac{1}{2}$  quarters, and weighs 8400 pounds avoirdupois.

EGYPT.

The Turkish pike = 27 inches. The ardeb of 24 Cairo rubbie =  $\frac{1}{4}$  quarter. The cantar = 100 pounds avoirdupois. 216 drams or 144 meticals = 1 rottele; 100 rottoli or 36 okes = 1 cantar.

FRANKFORT ON THE MAINE.

The ell =  $21\frac{1}{5}$  inches. The foot =  $11\frac{1}{5}$  inches. The malter = 3 bushels, nearly. The viertel =  $1\frac{1}{5}$  gallon, nearly. The pound, light and heavy weight =  $1\frac{1}{5}$  and  $1\frac{1}{5}$  pounds avoirdupois. The Zoll-center =  $110\frac{1}{5}$  pounds avoirdupois. The Cologne mark, used for gold and silver, weighs 3609 grains.

GENEVA.

The ell = 45 inches. The acre = 1 acre  $1\frac{1}{3}$  rood. The coupe or sack =  $2\frac{1}{5}$  bushels. The setier = 10 gallons. The heavy pound =  $1\frac{1}{5}$  pound avoirdupois; the light pound 1 sixth less. The mark weighs 3785 grains.

GENOA.

The braccio of 2 palmi =  $22\frac{1}{2}$  inches. The mina =  $3\frac{1}{5}$  bushels. The barile =  $16\frac{1}{5}$  gallons. The pound =  $\frac{1}{5}$  pound avoirdupois.  $1\frac{1}{2}$  pound = 1 rottolo. The pound sottile, for gold and silver, weighs 4891 grains.

GREECE.

The Venetian measures of length are used, the braccio being called a piche. 100 kila =  $11\frac{1}{3}$  quarters. The cantaro of 40 okes = 112 pounds avoirdupois.

HAMBURG.

The foot =  $11\frac{1}{3}$  inches, nearly. 100 ells =  $62\frac{1}{3}$  yards. The scheffel = 1 acre  $\frac{1}{6}$  perches. The last =  $1\frac{1}{16}$  last. The viertel =  $1\frac{1}{2}$  gallon. The pound =  $1\frac{1}{16}$  pound avoirdupois. For the Cologne mark, see FRANKFORT. 2 marks = 1 pound troy.

LUBECK.

The ell =  $22\frac{1}{2}$  inches. The last = 11 quarters. The viertel =  $1\frac{1}{16}$  gallon. The pound =  $1\frac{1}{16}$  pound avoirdupois, nearly.

MALTA.

The palme = 10½ inches; 3½ palmi = 1 yard; 8 palmi = 1 canna. The salma =  $7\frac{1}{2}$  bushels. The catiso =  $4\frac{1}{2}$  gallons. The barile = 9½ gallons. 64 rottoli = 1 hundredweight. The cantaro = 175 pounds avoirdupois.

MAURITIUS.

Beside the English weights and measures, those of France before the late alteration are used. The aune =  $1\frac{1}{16}$  yard. The veile =  $1\frac{1}{16}$  gallon. The poids de marc =  $1\frac{1}{16}$  pound avoirdupois.

NAPLES.

The canna =  $83\frac{1}{2}$  inches. The moggia = 3 roods 12 perches. The tomolo = 1½ bushel. The barile = 9½ gallons. The cantaro grosso and piccolo = 196½ and 106 pounds avoirdupois, respectively. The pound used in weighing gold and silver contains 4950 grains.

PORTUGAL.

The covado =  $25\frac{1}{16}$  inches. The almude =  $3\frac{1}{2}$  gallons. The pound =  $1\frac{1}{16}$  pound avoirdupois.

PRUSSIA.

The ell =  $26\frac{1}{2}$  inches. The morgen = 2 roods 21 perches. The scheffel = 1½ bushel. The eimer =  $15\frac{1}{16}$  gallons. The pound =  $1\frac{1}{16}$  pounds avoirdupois. The mark of Cologne is used for gold and silver.

ROME.

The canna of 8 palmi =  $2\frac{1}{2}$  yards. The canna of 10 palmi = 88 inches, nearly. The rubbio =  $8\frac{1}{2}$  bushels. The boccale =  $\frac{1}{16}$  gallon. The pound =  $\frac{1}{16}$  pound avoirdupois.

RUSSIA.

The arshine = 28 inches. The foot =  $13\frac{1}{4}$  inches. The dessetnia = 2 acres 2½ roods. The ischetwert =  $5\frac{1}{16}$  bushels. The wedro =  $2\frac{1}{16}$  gallons. The pound = ½ pound avoirdupois. The pood = 36 pounds avoirdupois.

ST. GALLEN.

The ell for silks and woollens =  $31\frac{1}{2}$  and  $24\frac{1}{2}$  inches, respectively. The müt of 4 viertels =  $2\frac{1}{16}$  bushels. The eimer =  $1\frac{1}{2}$  gallons. The pound, light and heavy weight =  $1\frac{1}{16}$  and  $1\frac{1}{8}$  pound avoirdupois, respectively.

SAXONY.

The foot =  $11\frac{1}{16}$  inches. The acre = 1 acre  $1\frac{1}{2}$  rood, nearly. The eimer, at Dresden =  $14\frac{1}{16}$  gallons; at Leipsic =  $16\frac{1}{16}$  gallons. The wispel, at Dresden =  $69\frac{1}{16}$  bushels; at Leipsic =  $91\frac{1}{16}$  bushels. The pound =  $1\frac{1}{16}$  pound avoirdupois.

SICILY.

The canna =  $76\frac{1}{2}$  inches. The salma =  $7\frac{1}{16}$  bushels. The barrel = 8 gallons, nearly. The pound of 12 ounces =  $\frac{1}{16}$  pound avoirdupois. The cantaro = 175 pounds avoirdupois.

SMYRNA.

The pike = 27 inches. The killow =  $11\frac{1}{16}$  gallons. The rottolo =  $1\frac{1}{2}$  pound avoirdupois.

SOUTH AMERICA.

The Spanish and Portuguese measures are most generally employed. The use of the English measures prevails in some parts.

SPAIN.

The vara, or ell =  $33\frac{1}{16}$  inches. The fanegada = 1 acre 21 perches. The arroba =  $3\frac{1}{2}$  gallons. The fanega =  $1\frac{1}{2}$  bushel. The pound =  $1\frac{1}{16}$  pounds avoirdupois.

SWEDEN AND NORWAY.

The ell =  $23\frac{1}{16}$  inches. The tunneland = 1 acre 1 rood, nearly. The tunna =  $\frac{1}{16}$  quarter. The kann =  $\frac{1}{16}$  gallon. The pound =  $\frac{1}{16}$  pound avoirdupois.

TURKEY.

The pike =  $26\frac{1}{16}$  inches. The killow =  $\frac{1}{16}$  bushel. The almd =  $1\frac{1}{16}$  gallon. The oke = 2½ pounds avoirdupois. The rottolo =  $1\frac{1}{16}$  pound avoirdupois.

TUSCANY.

The braccio = 23 inches, nearly. The saccata = 1 acre  $\frac{1}{16}$  rood. The sacche = 2 bushels. The fiasche = 4 pints. The pound = 12 ounces avoirdupois.

VENICE.

Beside the metrical system, the following measures are used. The braccio, for woollens =  $26\frac{1}{16}$  inches; for silks = 24½ inches. The stajo =  $2\frac{1}{16}$  bushels. The secchia = 2½ gallons. The pound sottile =  $\frac{1}{16}$  pound avoirdupois, nearly; grusso =  $1\frac{1}{16}$  pound avoirdupois.

BARCLAY'S ENGLISH DICTIONARY.

ENLARGED AND IMPROVED.

ABA

A IS the first letter of the alphabet. In our language it is one of the five vowels, and has three different sounds; the broad sound: as, all, wall; the open, as, father, rather; and the slender a, which is peculiar to the English, and is to be found in place, face, waste. When placed before nouns of the singular number, it denotes one, as, a man, i. e. one man; or signifies something indefinite, as, a man may pass this way, i. e. any man. Before a word beginning with a vowel or a silent h, we write, an, as, an ox, an herb; but when the h is sounded, we then write a, as, a horse. Before a participle it denotes some action not yet finished; as, I am a walking. Formerly it was a contraction of at. Sometimes it signifies to. It has likewise a peculiar signification, implying each; as, he gains a hundred pounds a year. In abbreviations, with a stroke over it thus A it stands for 5000 among the Romans. With logicians, it denotes a universal affirmative proposition. Among merchants, if set alone after a bill of exchange, it signifies accepted, and is used by them to distinguish their sets of accounts instead of a figure; thus, A, B, C, are instead of 1, 2, 3. a, or aa, is used by physicians instead of ana, and signifies that the proportions of the ingredients to which it refers are to be equal. In abbreviations it stands likewise for Artium, or Arts, as, A. B. artium baccularius, or bachelor of arts: when applied to time, for anno: A. C. ante Christum, before Christ; A. M. anno mundi, the year of the world; A. D. anno Domini, the year of our Lord. A, in music, is the note between the 2d and 3d line in the treble; or upon the top, or 5th line, in the bass. Abp. is an abbreviation of Archbishop.

AARGAU, one of the Swiss cantons, in which the river Aar, which flows into the Rhine, takes its rise.

AARON, one of the leaders of the Jews from Egypt. He was the elder brother of Moses, and, with him, commissioned by God to conduct his people out of the land of their bondage. On the establishment of the nation, when the law was given at Sinai, he was appointed high priest, and his family as the hereditary priesthood. His conduct during the journeyings in the wilderness was not always becoming his commission. He helped the idolatry before Sinai, and the distrust which led to the forty years of wandering in the desert. During the last year of which he died, and was buried on the top of Mount Hor.

AB, the fifth month of the Jewish ecclesiastical year, and answers to the month of July. Ab, prefixed to the names of places in England, generally denotes that they belonged to some abbey, as, Abingdon.

ABACK, ad, a sea term, signifying that the sails are flatted against the masts by the force of the wind.

ABACUS, s. [Lat.] a counting-table, anciently used in calculations. In Architecture, the uppermost member of a column, which serves as a finish to the capital and column.

ABAFT, ad, [abaftan, Sax.] toward the stern of the ship.

ABALIENATION, s. [abalienatio, Lat.] an alienation, or estrangement from.

To ABANDON, v. a. [abandonner, Fr.] to forsake utterly; to cast off; to give up oneself wholly to any prevailing passion or vice. To abandon, is more applicable to things; to leave, to persons. He was under a necessity of abandoning his possessions, and compelled to leave his friends. To forsake, implies resentment or dislike; to relinquish, quitting any claim; to desert, leaving meanly or treacherously. To quit, implies the breaking off from, and may be either voluntary or involuntary.

ABARTICULATION, s. [ab and articulus, Lat.] in Surgery, that construction of the joints which enables them to move easily.

To ABASE, v. a. [abaissier, Fr.] to lower, bring down, or humble.

ABASED, a. humbled; brought down. In Heraldry, the tip of the vol or wings of an eagle turned downwards.

ABASEMENT, s. the state of being brought low; the act of bringing low; depression.

To ABASH, v. a. [abaissier, Fr.] to affect with sudden shame, or confusion; to dash. The passive is followed by at or of.

To ABATE, v. a. [abatir, Fr.] to make or grow less; to diminish or decrease. These words are nearly synonymous. To abate, implies a decrease in action; diminish, a waste in substance; decrease, a decay in moral virtue; lessen, a contraction of parts.

ABATELEMENT, s. in Commerce, a term used for a prohibition of trade to all French merchants in the ports of the Levant, who will not stand to their bargains, or who refuse to pay their debts.

ABATEMENT, s. [abatement, Fr.] in general, signifies the lessening or diminishing something. In Heraldry, something added to a coat of arms, to lessen its dignity, and point out some defect or stain in the character of the person who bears it. In Law, the rejecting a suit, for some fault discovered, either in the matter or process, upon which the process may begin anew. Among traders, it is the same as rebat or discount.

ABATIS, s. in Fortification, a range of large trees laid side by side, with their boughs outwards, to hinder the approaches of an enemy.

ABAUZIT, FIRMIN, a celebrated scholar of Geneva. He was born in France, and sent out of it in his youth, on the revocation of the Edict of Nantes. He was so celebrated for the universality of his scholarship, that Sir Isaac Newton appeared to him to determine his controversy with Leibnitz. He left few works to sustain his reputation. He died in 1707, aged 87 years.

ABBA, s. a Syriac word, signifying father. It is still given by Eastern Christians as a title to their bishops.

ABBACY, s. [abbatia, Lat.] the rights and privileges of an abbot.

ABBASSIDES, one of the dynasties of Mohammedan kings, descended from Abbas Ben Abdal Motaleb, Mohammed's uncle. They were in power from 749 to 1520.

ABBE, (abbé) s. formerly the same with Abbot, but latterly the name of persons in France, who act as tutors, instructors, companions, &c., and are sometimes provided for in the church, and sometimes in the state.

ABBESS, s. a governess of nuns.

ABBEVILLE, a town of France, 91 miles N. of Paris, which has long had considerable manufactories of woollen goods, &c.

ABBEY, s. [abbatia, Lat.] a monastery, or convent; a house of religious persons. To bring an abbey to a grove, a proverbial phrase, like, to bring a noble to nought, applied to a spendthrift. At the dissolution of the abbies in England, under King Henry VIII., about 500, or 600, were dissolved whose yearly revenues did not amount to less than £150,000.

ABBEY-HOLM, a township in Cumberland. Market, Saturday. 295 miles from London. Pop. 868.

ABBEY-MILTON, Dorsetshire. 112 miles from London. Pop. 833.

ABBOT, s. [abbod, Sax.] the chief ruler of a monastery, or abbot, for men.

ABBOT, GEORGE, Archbishop of Canterbury in the time of James I. A man who rose from the humbler walks of life, and by means of the education obtained at the grammar school at Guildford, Surrey, his birth-place, entered the University of Oxford. He was one of the parties intrusted with the translation of the Bible, in 1604; and he rose by rapid steps to the highest dignity in the Church of England. He opposed the high-church opinions of the following reign, and was consequently in little favour, being greatly annoyed by the machinations of Laud, who succeeded him. He died in 1633.

ABBOTS-BROMLEY, Staffordshire. 129 miles from London. Market, Tuesday. Pop. 1598.

ABBOTSBUURY, Dorsetshire. 128 miles from London. Market, Thursday. Pop. 1005.

TO ABBREVIATE, v. a. [ab and brevis, Lat.] to abstract from, shorten, or reduce to a less compass.

ABBREVIATION, s. [abbreviatio, Lat.] a contraction or abridgement of a word or passage, by leaving out part of the letters, or substituting other marks or characters in the room of words.

ABBUTTALS, s. [abbuto, cor. Lat.] in Law, the boundaries of lands, &c., showing by what other lands, &c. they are bounded.

ABDERA, a town of ancient Thrace, known chiefly as the birth-place of the philosophers Democritus and Protagoras.

TO ABDICATE, v. a. [abdicco, Lat.] to give up a right; to resign; to lay down an office.

ABDICATION, s. the act of abdicating; resignation.

ABDOMEN, s. [Lat.] in Surgery, the cavity containing the stomach, liver, bowels, &c., and is lined with a membrane called the peritoneum. The lower part is called the hypogastrium; the foremost part is divided into the epigastrium, the right and left hypochondria, and the navel; it is bounded above by the cartilago ensiformis and the diaphragm, sideways by the short or lower ribs, and behind by the vertebrae of the loins, the bones of the coxal arch, pubes, and the os sacrum. It is covered with several muscles, by whose motions, in respiration, digestion is promoted.

TO ABDUCE, v. a. [abduco, Lat.] to draw to a different part; to withdraw one part from another.

ABED, [ad, for at, and bed] in bed.

ABELARD, a teacher in the University of Paris, in the twelfth century. During his life he was celebrated for his universal learning and eloquence, no less than for the guilt and misfortunes he brought on himself, by his passion for the daughter of a canon at Paris, named Heloise. He helped greatly in the establishment of the logical theory, which was carried to such perfection by the "schoolmen" after him; but his works are little read now. His fame rests on his letters, and on the romantic accounts which poets have given of his unhappy love-story. He died in a monastery, in 1142. His Heloise died in 1163, a nun in the oratory of Paraclet, which he had founded.

ABEL-TREE, a species of poplar, used for wainscoting rooms, and for turnery ware.

ABENCERRAGES, an Arabian family of Grenada, in Spain, which became famous shortly before the overthrow of that kingdom, in the fifteenth century. It is related, that when the greater number of them fell in the course of a feud with another family, named the Zegries, the remainder embraced Christianity.

ABEN-EZRA, the author of a Commentary on the Old Testament, much esteemed amongst the learned Jews. His other works which remain show that he was a scholar, accomplished in the learning of his day. He was a native of Toledo, in Spain, and after visiting various countries of Europe, for study, and to teach, he died about seventy-five years old, in the year 1168.

ABER, an old British word, signifying the fall of a lesser water into a greater, as of a brook into a river, and a river into the sea; also the mouth of a river, whence several rivers, and towns built at or near their mouth, derive their names, as, Aberconway, Aberdeen, Abercrommy, &c.

ABERAVON, Glamorganshire. At the mouth of the river Avon, 105 miles from London. Pop. 1290.

ABERBROTHIC, or ABERBROTHOC, or ABERROTH, Forfarshire, in Scotland, a town on the river Tay. It had a monastery, which was demolished at the time of the Reformation. It has a pretty good harbour, advantageous for trade, and stands on a fertile plain. 58 miles from Edinburgh. Pop. 8707.

ABERCONWAY, Carnarvonshire, a town situated on the declivity of a hill, with a fine prospect over the river Conway. It has a good harbour, and formerly carried on a considerable trade. Here is a magnificent castle, built originally by the earl of Chester in the reign of William the Conqueror, was destroyed in the reign of King Stephen, and afterwards rebuilt by order of Edward I. 235 miles from London. Market, Friday. Pop. 1828.

ABERDEEN, Aberdeenshire, is the third city in Scotland for trade, extent, and beauty. It is formed of the Old and New Towns. The former, which is about a mile N. of the New, is situated on the Don, over which, besides a lofty Gothic bridge of one arch, built at the desire of King Robert the Bruce, a bridge of five arches has lately been erected. New Aberdeen is situated on the Dee, over which there are also two magnificent bridges. Its Universities, consisting of King's College in the Old Town, and Marischal College in the New, have produced many learned men. Connected with the town there are extensive establishments for the manufacture of cottons, carpets, woollens, and thread. In addition to these manufactures they export butter, cattle, corn, salmon, &c., which are now chiefly conveyed by steam navigation. On the N. side of the harbour of the New Town there is a most substantial pier, and by late alterations the harbour has been rendered easy of access, and forms a safe retreat for vessels of moderate size. Pop. 63,288. 108 miles from Edinburgh. Lat. 57. 9. N. Long. 2. 8. W.

ABERFORD, Yorkshire, W. R., noted for pin-making. It stands on the Roman causeway. 184 miles from London. Market, Wednesday. Pop. 1071.

ABERFRAW, Anglesey, where the princes of North Wales formerly resided. 263 miles from London. Pop. 1336.

ABERGAVENNY, Monmouthshire. Its chief trade is in wool. Market, Tuesday. 143 miles from London. Pop. 4953.

ABERISTWYTH, Cardiganshire. There is a small harbour. Woolen goods and the fisheries are its principal support. Market, Monday. 203 miles from London. Pop. 4975.

ABERNETHY, JOHN, an eminent surgeon to St. Bartholomew's Hospital. Having studied under Dr. Hunter, he applied himself to the practice of surgery with such success that he changed its whole aspect as a science. Nor was he less successful in his pathological studies. As a teacher, his command of his students' convictions was unequalled. His name is most generally known from its association with humorous and coarse anecdotes of his interviews with his patients. He died in 1831, aged 67 years.

ABERRANCE, s. [aberro, Lat.] a deviation from the right way; an error.

ABERRANT, part. [aberrans, Lat.] wandering from the right or known way.

ABERRATION, s. [aberratio, Lat.] the act of deviating from the common track. In Astronomy, an apparent change of place in the fixed stars, which arises from the motion of the earth, combined with the motion of light.

TO ABERUNCATE, v. a. [averunco, Lat.] to pull up by the roots.

TO ABET, v. a. [betan, Sax.] to push forward another; to support him in his designs by connivance, encouragement, or help.

ABETMENT, s. the act of abetting.

ABETTER, Abettor, s. he that abets; the supporter or encourager of another.

TO ABHOR, v. a. [abhorreo, Lat.] to hate with acrimony; to loathe; to abominate.

ABHORRENCE, Abhorrence, s. the act of abhorring; detestation; the disposition to abhor; hatred.

ABHORRENT, a. struck with abhorrence. Contrary to, foreign, inconsistent with; used with from or to.

ABHORRER, s. a hater, a detester.

ABIB, s. [Heb. an ear of corn] the first month of the Jewish ecclesiastical year, afterwards called Nisan. It answered to the latter part of March and the beginning of April.

To ABIDE, v. n. [abidian, Sax.] to dwell in a place; not to remove; to dwell; to bear or support the consequences of a thing; to bear without aversion.

ABIDER, s. the person that abides or dwells in a place.

ABJECT, a. [abjectus, Lat.] low, mean, beggarly. These words are synonymous.

To ABJECT, v. a. [abjicio, Lat.] to throw away.

ABJECTION, s. meanness of mind; servility; baseness.

ABJECTLY, ad. meanly; basely; contemptibly.

ABILITY, s. [abal, Sax.] capacity or power to do any thing. Capacity has more relation to the knowledge of things; ability, to their application. The one is acquired by study; the other by practice. When it has the plural number, abilities, it signifies the faculties or powers of the mind; and then it is synonymous with ingenuity, cleverness, parts. Ingenuity relates more to the invention of things; cleverness, to the manner of executing them; ability, to the actual execution of them; and parts, to the discernment.

ABINGDON, Berkshire. Its chief trade is in malt and hempen goods. 56 miles from London. Markets, Monday and Friday. Pop. 5530.

ABINTESTATE, a. [ab and intestatus, Lat.] in Law, applied to one who dies without making his will.

ABIPONES, the name of a tribe of natives of Paraguay, in South America, now extinct. The only information we have concerning them, and that not all authentic, is in Dobrizhofer, the Jesuit missionary's, History of Paraguay.

ABJURATION, s. the oath taken for renouncing, disclaiming, and denying the Pretender to have any manner of right to the throne of these kingdoms. In our old customs, it implied a voluntary banishment of a man's self from the kingdom for ever, which in some cases was admitted for criminals, instead of putting them to death, provided they could shelter themselves in a church. Also the solemn recantation of some doctrine, as wicked and heretical.

To ABJURE, v. a. [abjuro, Lat.] to swear not to do something; to recant, or abnegate, a position upon oath.

ABLACTATION, s. [ablacto, Lat.] the weaning a child from the breast; also what gardeners call grafting by approach.

ABLANCOURT, P. NICOLAS D., a noted translator of Tacitus, Cesar, Thucydides, and other Greek and Roman authors, who lived at Paris, under the patronage of Colbert, Louis XIV.'s famous minister. He was a friend of Salmasius, the opponent of Milton. He died in 1664.

ABLAQUEATION, s. [ablaqueatio, Lat.] is opening the ground about the roots of the trees; called, by gardeners, baring of trees.

ABLATION, s. [ablatio, Lat.] the act of taking away.

ABLATIVE, a. [ablativus, Lat.] in Grammar, the case expressing the act of taking away.

ABLE, a. [abal, Sax.] ended with, or having power sufficient.

ABLEGATION, s. [ablegatio, Lat.] the act of sending abroad.

ABLEPSY, s. [ablepsia, Gr.] want of sight.

To ABLOCATE, v. a. [abloco, Lat.] to let out to hire.

ABLUTIONS, s. [abluo, Lat.] in Medicine, purging medicines.

ABLUENT, s. [abluo, Lat.] the washing or purifying of any thing with water. A ceremony in use among the ancients, and consisted in washing the body before sacrificing, or even entering their temples; and still practised by the Mohammedans. In the Church of Rome, a small quantity of wine and water, which the communicants formerly took to wash down and promote the digestion of the host. Among chemists and apothecaries, it is used for washing away the superabundant salts of any body. See EDUCATION. Physicians use it for washing the external parts of the body by baths; or for cleansing the bowels by abluents.

ABNEGATION, s. [abnegatio, Lat.] denial, renunciation.

ABNODATION, s. [abnodatio, Lat.] in Gardening, the pruning, paring, or cutting away knobs, knots, or any other excrescences, from trees.

ABO, the capital of Swedish Finland, is a university, bishop's see, and good port; 140 miles N. E. of Stockholm. Lat. 60. 27. N. Long. 22. 15. E.

ABOYARD, ad. [la bord, Fr.] in a ship.

ABOYDE, s. place of residence; continuance in a place.

ABOYEMENT, s. a secret anticipation of something future.

To ABOLISH, v. a. [aboleo, Lat.] to repeal, destroy, and utterly erase any thing, so that no part of it remains.

ABOLISHMENT, s. the act of abolishing.

ABOLITION, s. [abolitio, Lat.] in Law, denotes the repealing any law or statute; also the prohibiting some custom, usage, or ceremony, that had been long established.

ABOMINABLE, a. [abominabilis, Lat.] that excites horror, joined with aversion and detestation. In conversation, this word is used to convey an idea of something superlative.

ABOMINABLENESS, s. the quality which renders any thing odious.

ABOMINABLY, ad. extremely, superlatively, in an ill sense, and a word of low language.

To ABOMINATE, v. a. [abominor, Lat.] to abhor, detest, or have an extreme aversion to.

ABOMINATION, s. an object causing extreme aversion. When used with the auxiliary verb to have, followed by the particle in, to reckon, or look upon as an object of detestation.

ABORIGINES, s. [Lat.] the primitive inhabitants of a country.

ABORTION, s. [abortio, Lat.] a miscarriage, or the exclusion of a child from the womb before the due time of delivery; in animals, it is termed slinking or casting their young. In Gardening, the word signifies such fruits as are produced too early.

ABORTIVE, a. [abortivus, Lat.] that is brought forth before its time. Figuratively, any thing or design which miscarries, is frustrated, or comes to nothing.

ABORTIVELY, ad. born before due time; immaturely, untimely.

ABOVE, prep. [bufan, Sax.] higher in place or position; before nouns of time, it denotes more, or longer than. Figuratively, it signifies superiority, or higher in rank, power, or excellence; likewise beyond, or more than.

ABOVE, ad. [distinguished from the prep. by the manner in which it is used, that being followed by nouns, but this not] a high place; and, figuratively, the heavens. In allusion to the method of writing anciently on scrolls, it denotes before.

ABOUKIR, otherwise called BIKER, or BIKE, and in French BEQUIERES, a small town of Egypt, lying between Alexandria and Rosetta, near one of the mouths of the Nile. It is the ancient Canopus, and was formerly an island, according to Pliny, Strabo, &c., which its present topography renders very credible. The rock, on which the town is built, affords a convenient road for shipping. See NILE.

To ABOUND, v. n. [abundo, Lat.] when used with the particles in or with, to have an excessive great number, or quantity of any thing; when used without the particles, to increase prodigiously, to be great in number, plenty, or excess.

ABOUT, prep. [a-butan, Sax.] when applied to time or place, it denotes near, or within compass of; and when used before words implying measure. Its most simple acceptation is that of round, surrounding, or encircling, according to the Saxon, whence it is derived. Figuratively, annexed, or appendant to a person, as clothes, &c.; concerning of, relating to.

ABOUT, ad. in circumference, or compass. "Two yards about," Shakespeare. Figuratively, the longest way, in opposition to the shortest, alluding to the difference between the circumference and diameter of a circle. When joined with go, it signifies from place to place, or every where. "He went about doing good." Acts. When prefixed to other verbs, it implies that the action or thing affirmed will soon happen; as, "about to fight." When following the verb to be, it denotes being engaged, or employed in: "What are you about?" A certain point, period, or state: "He has brought about his purposes;" i. e. he has accomplished them. When joined with come, it implies the thing arrived at a certain state or point: "When the time was come about," 1 Sam. i. 20. When joined with go, it implies preparation, or design: "Why go ye about to kill me?" John vii. 19. In familiar discourse we say, to "come about a man;" i. e. to circumvent him.

ABRACADABRA, a magical word, which has been used by credulous persons as a charm for the ague.

To ABRADE, v. a. [abrado, Lat.] to rub off, or waste by degrees. ABRAHAM, the father of the Jewish people. He was called by God, about 2000 years B. C., from his own family, and country Chalde, instructed in the true knowledge of the Almighty, and blest with his favour, and promises of good for his posterity. He lived as a nomade in the land of Canaan, and was buried in the cave of Machpelah, the only spot of the promised land which he possessed as his own. His history is comprised in the 11th and following chapters to the 25th of the Book of Genesis.

ABRANTES, a strong town in Estremadura, in Portugal, 74 miles N. E. of Lisbon.

ABRA'UM, s. a species of red clay, used in England by the cabinet-makers, to give a red colour to new mahogany wood. It is found in the Isle of Wight, also in Germany and Italy.

ABRE'AST, ad. [breast, Sax.] side by side.

To ABRIDGE, v. a. [abridge, Fr.] to shorten in words, so as to retain the substance; to express a thing in fewer words. Figuratively, to diminish, lessen, or cut short. Followed by the particles from or of, to deprive.

ABRIDGMENT, s. [abrégement, Fr.] the contraction of a larger work into fewer words and less compass; a lessening or diminution, in a secondary sense.

ABROACH, ad. running out, in allusion to liquor, which is browned or tapped; to be in such a position that the liquor may easily run out. Figuratively, to undertake with a sure prospect of success.

ABROAD, ad. [a and brad, Sax.] without confinement, at large, out of the house, in a foreign country; in all directions; from without, or opposition to within.

To ABROGATE, v. a. [abrogo, Lat.] to take away from a law its force; to repeal; to annul; to abolish; to revoke. Abrogate and repeal are terms rather to be used with respect to laws; abolish, with regard to customs; annul and revoke, to private contracts.

ABROGATION, s. [abrogatio, Lat.] the act of repealing, or the repeal of a law, used in opposition to rogation; distinguished from derogation, which implies the annulling only part of a law; subrogation, which denotes the adding a clause; abrogation, which implies the limiting or restraining it; dispensation, which sets it aside only in a particular instance; and antiquation, which is the refusing to pass a law.

ABRUPT, a. [abruptus, Lat.] craggy, broken; sudden, unexpected, without the customary preparations; unconnected, when applied to compositions.

ABRUPTION, s. [abruptio, Lat.] breaking off, separation.

ABRUPTLY, ad. in a hasty, unexpected, rude manner.

ABRUPTNESS, s. a hasty, unexpected, unceremonious manner; suddenness, the state of unconnectedness, ruggedness, craginess.

ABRUZZI, the name of three divisions of the kingdom of Naples, lying on the coast of the Gulf of Venice. They are wild and mountainous, inhabited chiefly by shepherds, who have the undesired reputation of being brigands.

ABSCCESS, s. [abscessus, Lat.] a cavity containing pus or matter, so called, because the parts which were joined are now separated, to make way for the collected matter.

To ABSCIND, v. a. [abscondo, Lat.] to cut off. Not often used. ABSCISSA, s. [Lat.] in Mathematics, part of the diameter of a conic section, intercepted between the vertex and a semi-ordinate.

ABSCISSION, s. [abscissio, Lat.] the act of cutting off, the state of being cut off.

To ABSCOND, v. n. [abscondo, Lat.] to keep oneself from the view or knowledge of the public; to hide; applied to those who fly from the commerce of mankind, to escape the law, whether on account of debt or criminal actions.

ABSENCE, s. [absentia, Lat.] distance, which renders a person incapable of seeing and conversing with another; used in opposition to presence. Figuratively, inattention to the present object; because a person in that state resembles one who is distant. It is used with the particle from, which limits its signification.

ABSENT, a. [absens, Lat.] at a distance from, out of the sight and hearing of a person. Figuratively, inattentive to, or regardless of, something present.

To ABSENT, v. a. to withdraw, or decline the presence of a person or thing.

ABSENTEE, s. in Law, he that is absent from his station, or country; most generally applied to the owners of estates who reside in another country.

ABSNTHIUM, s. [Lat.] in Botany, wormwood. A plant whose leaves and flowers have a very bitter taste, and a very strong smell; not now used by physicians.

To ABSOLVE, v. a. [absolve, Lat.] to acquit of a crime, to free from an engagement or promise; to pardon, in allusion to the absolution of a priest; to perfect, accomplish, or complete, applied to time.

ABSOLUTE, a. [absolutus, Lat.] perfect, complete, without conditions; independent, without restraint or limitation.

ABSOLUTELY, ad. completely; without relation; without limits or dependence.

ABSOLUTE'NESS, s. completeness; freedom from dependence or limits; despoticism.

ABSOLUTION, s. [absolutio, Lat.] in common Law, a full acquittal of a person, by some final sentence; a temporal discharge for some further attendance upon a mesne process: in ecclesiastical Law, a juridical act, whereby a priest pronounces a pardon for sins to such as repent.

ABSONANT, a. [absonans, Lat.] sounding harshly.

To ABSORB, v. a. [absorbeo, Lat.] to suck up.

ABSORBENT, s. [absorbens, Lat.] in Medicine, medicines which dry up redundant humours, whether applied internally or externally; likewise the lacteals, which absorb the chyle; the cutaneous vessels, which admit the water in baths or fomentations.

ABSORPTION, s. the act of sucking up. In Physiology, the process which, by means of a system of vessels differing in structure and appearance from the venous system, continually removes the old particles of the body, to make way for the new particles which the arteries carry to supply their place.

To ABSTAIN, v. a. [abstineo, Lat.] to forbear, to refrain from, or decline any gratification.

ABSTEMIOUS, a. [abstemius, Lat.] temperate in the enjoyment of sensual gratifications. Figuratively, the cause of temperance. Sometimes used substantively, for those who practise the virtue of temperance.

ABSTEMIOUSLY, ad. temperately; soberly.

ABSTEMIOUSNESS, s. the quality of being temperate, or declining the gratifying of our sensual appetites.

To ABSTERGE, v. a. [abstergo, Lat.] to wipe clean; to cleanse: used mostly by medical writers.

ABSTERGENT, a. [abstergens, Lat.] endowed with a cleansing quality. In Medicine, it signifies medicines which resolve concretions, as soap, &c.

ABSTINENCE, s. [abstinentia, Lat.] in a general sense, the refraining from any thing to which we have a propensity; used with the particle from. In a more limited sense, fasting, or the forbearance of necessary food: distinguished from temperance, as that implies a moderate use of food, but this a total avoiding of it for a time.

To ABSTRACT, v. a. [abstraho, Lat.] to take one thing from another. Figuratively, to separate, followed by the particle from: used absolutely, the exercise of the faculty of the mind, named abstraction; or separating ideas from one another. When applied to writings, to express their substance in less compass.

ABSTRACT, a. [abstractus, Lat.] separated from something else; generally applied to the operations of the mind; followed by from. Abstract terms, are those which signify the mode or quality of a being, without any regard to the subject in which it inheres. Abstract mathematics, those branches which consider the quantity, without restriction to any particular species of it. Abstract numbers, are assemblages of units, considered in themselves, without being applied to any subject.

ABSTRACT, s. a compendious view of a treatise, more superficial than an abridgment.

ABSTRACTED, part. separated, refined, or abstruse; a disposition of mind whereby a person is inattentive to external objects, though present.

ABSTRACTEDLY, ad. with abstraction; simply; separately from all contingent circumstances.

ABSTRACTION, s. [abstractio, Lat.] an operation or faculty of the mind, whereby we separate things that are in themselves inseparable, in order to consider them apart, independently of one another; whereas precision separates things distinct in themselves, in order to prevent confusion. Sometimes it is used for the exercise of this faculty. The state of being inattentive to external objects, or absence of mind.

ABSTRACTLY, ad. simply; separately.

ABSTRUSE, a. [abstrusus, Lat.] obscure, dark, not easy to be understood; deep, hidden, or far removed from the common apprehensions or ways of conceiving.

ABSTRUSELY, ad. obscurely, not plainly.
ABSTRUSENESS, Abstrusity, s. difficulty, darkness, obscurity, hard to be understood or comprehended.

ABSURD, a. [absurdus, Lat.] not agreeable to reason or common sense, or that thwarts, or goes contrary to, the common notions and apprehensions of men; inconsistent, contrary to reason.
ABSURDITY, or ABSURDNESS, s. [absurditas, Lat.] a contradiction to common sense; an inconsistency with reason.

ABSURDLY, ad. improperly, unreasonably.
ABUBEKER, the father of Ayesha, one of the wives of Mohammed. He succeeded the prophet in the caliphate. He collected the writings and sayings of Mohammed, called the Koran, and died in 634.

ABUNDANCE, s. [abundantia, Fr.] great plenty; a great many; vast numbers, as, abundance of people; a great quantity; more than sufficient.

ABUNDANT, a. [abundans, Lat.] plentiful; exuberant; numerous; well stored with; replete, or abounding. Abundant number, is a number the sum of whose aliquot parts is greater than the number itself. Thus the aliquot parts of 12, being 1, 2, 3, 4, and 6, they make, when added together, 16.

ABUNDANTLY, ad. amply, liberally.

ABURY, or A'VEBURY, Wiltshire, near Marlborough Downs; noted for the stupendous remains of a Druidical temple, like Stonehenge. Pop. 751.

TO ABUSE, (abuse) v. a. [abutor, Lat.] to make a bad use of; to impose upon, or deceive; to treat rudely.

ABUSE, s. the ill or improper use of a thing; a vicious practice or bad custom; unjust censure; carnal knowledge, either with or without violence.

ABUSER, (abuser) s. the person who makes an ill use of any thing. An impostor, seducer, ravisher; one who makes use of reproachful language, or is guilty of rudeness towards another.

ABUSIVE, a. [abusivus, Lat.] insolent; offensive; injurious.

ABUSIVELY, ad. reproachfully.

ABUSIVENESS, s. the use of reproachful language; or the exercise of rude and unmerited incivility.

TO ABUT, or ABUTT, v. a. [abuttir, Fr.] to terminate, bound, or border upon another place or thing.

ABUTMENT, s. that which abuts or borders upon another.

ABYDOS, a town formerly on the Hellespont, or Dardanelles. It is known almost solely through the story of Hero and Leander. It is also the name of a city in Upper Egypt, whose ruins yet remain, in which many singular paintings, &c. have been discovered.

ABYSS, s. [abyssus, Lat.] a bottomless pit or gulf, or any prodigious deep where no bottom can be found, or is supposed to have no bottom; a vast unfathomable depth of waters; the vast collection of waters supposed to be enclosed in the bowels of the earth. Among divines, it is often used to signify hell. In a figurative sense, that in which any thing is lost.

ABYSSINIA, called also Hæuser Ethiopia, and by the Arabians, ALBA-BASH, a very ancient kingdom or empire in Africa, now divided into three states, Tigré, Amhara, and Shoa. It is bounded on the N. by Nubia, on the E. by the Red Sea and Adel, on the S. and W. by Ajan, Alaba, Gingo, and Gorum; lies between 6 and 20 degrees N. lat. and between 26 and 44 E. long. It is about 770 miles long and 550 broad, and contains 378,000 square miles. The mountains are very high, and scattered all over the country; among these the Nile has its source: and here, as in Egypt, they have their periodical inundations, which greatly fertilize the plains. Their rainy season holds for near six months, during our summer months, and is succeeded by an equal period of cloudless sky. Gold, silver, and copper mines are found here; the vegetables are various; the animals are the lion, leopard, elephant, rhinoceros, dromedary, camel, stag, horse, cow, goat, sheep, monkeys, &c. with a great variety of birds, as the ostrich, eagles, vultures, storks, &c., and in the rivers are found the crocodile and the hippopotamus. The complexions of the inhabitants are copper-coloured, olive, and black; their religion seems to be a mixture of Judaism and the Christianity of the Greek church, though some still worship the Nile; their language is the Ethiopic, which is akin to the Arabic. The emperor or king is called Négus.

AC, AK, AKE, at the beginning or ending of a name of a town or place, is the Saxon word ac, which signifies an oak; as Acton is as much as to say, Oak-town, and Austin's ac, Austin's oak; and as for the names of persons of the same form, they are for the most part derived from the places of their birth, or some achievements there.

ACACIA, s. [Lat.] in Botany, Egyptian thorn, or binding bean-tree. The Acacia, styled Vera, i. e. true, is the tree from whose branches exudes the Gum Arabic, and from whence the Succus Acacæ, or Juice of Acacia, is drawn.

ACADEMIC, ACADEMICK, s. in a large sense, signifies a member of a university or school, where languages and other branches of polite education are taught; in a stricter sense, a philosopher of the school of Plato.

ACADEMIC, ACADEMICK, a. [academicus, Lat.] belonging to the academy.

ACADEMICIAN, ACADEMIAN, s. a name used for members of modern Academies, or instituted societies of learned men.

ACADEMY, s. [academia, Lat.] It was originally a public place planted with trees at Athens, so called from one Academos, who presented it to the city. A place where learned men met to confer upon discoveries already made in the sciences, or to try experiments for their further improvement. It is sometimes used for a college, or university; a place where persons are taught the liberal arts and sciences, &c. It is also used for a particular society of ingenious persons, established for the improvement of learning, &c., and for a sort of collegiate school or seminary, where young persons are instructed in a private way, in the liberal arts and sciences.

ACADIA. See NOVA SCOTIA.

ACANTHUS, s. in Architecture, the leaf which adorns, or rather forms, the capital of the Corinthian order of columns.

ACAPULCO, in Mexico, an inconsiderable town, seated on a commodious and excellent bay, in the Pacific Ocean, and has a harbour free and open for ships of any burthen; the best, indeed, on all the western coast of Spanish America. During the possession of Mexico by the Spaniards, it monopolized the trade with the East Indies; it has not any considerable trade now. Lat. 16. 50. N. Long. 99. 46. W.

ACARUS, [Lat.] in Zoology, a parasitical insect.

TO ACCEDE, v. n. [accedo, Lat.] to come to, to draw near to, to enter into, or to add oneself to something already supposed to take place.

TO ACCELERATE, v. a. [accelero, Lat.] to hasten, to quicken, to spur on with superadded motion and expedition.

ACCELERATION, s. the act of quickening motion, &c. With philosophers, a continual increase of velocity in any heavy bodies, tending towards the centre of the earth by the force of gravity.

TO ACCEEND, v. a. [accendo, Lat.] to set on fire.

ACCENSION, s. [accensio, Lat.] in Philosophy, the kindling or setting any natural body on fire.

ACCENT, s. [accentus, Lat.] the rising or falling of the voice; a tone and manner of pronunciation contracted from the country in which a person was bred, or resided a considerable time. With rhetoricians, a tone or modulation of the voice, used sometimes to denote the intention of the speaker, with regard to energy or force, and expressive of the sentiments and passions. Grave Accent, is this mark ( ` ) over a vowel, to show that the voice is to be depressed. Acute Accent, is this mark ( ´ ) over a vowel, to show that the voice is to be raised. Circumflex Accent, is this mark ( ^ ) over a vowel, and points out a kind of undulation in the voice. The Long Accent, shows that the voice is to dwell upon the vowel, and is expressed thus ( ~ ). The Short Accent (in Grammar) shows that the time of pronouncing ought to be short, and is marked thus ( ˘ ). The two last, however, come properly under the head Quantity, and not Accent. In Music, emphasis, or expression given to notes at the beginning of a bar.

TO ACCE'NT, v. a. [from accentus, Lat.] to mark with an accent; to pronounce with regard to the accents.

TO ACCENTUATE, v. a. [accentuar, Fr.] to place the proper accents in reading, speaking, or writing, on the vowels or syllables of any word.

ACCENTUATION, s. a pronouncing or marking a word, so as to lay a stress of the voice on the right word or syllable.

TO ACCE'PT, v. a. [accipio, Lat.] to receive favourably or kindly; to take with particular approbation: used either with or without the particle of.

ACCEPTABLE, a. [acceptabile, Fr.] that may be favourably or kindly received; agreeable.

ACCEPTABLY, ad. in an acceptable manner.

ACCEPTANCE, s. [acceptance, Fr.] an accepting or receiving favourably or kindly; sometimes the meaning or manner of taking a word with the accent promiscuously on the first or second syllable. In Law, it is the tacit agreement to some act done by another before, which might have been avoided, if such agreement or acceptance had not been made. In Commerce, it is the subscribing or signing an inland bill of exchange, which makes the person debtor for the sum of its contents, and obliges him to discharge it at the time which it mentions.

ACCEPTATION, s. [acceptation, Fr.] the received meaning of a word, or the sense in which it is usually taken; reception of any person or thing, either agreeably or not; particular regard as to acceptableness and manner of reception.

ACCEPTER, s. in Commerce, the person who accepts a bill by signing it, and therefore obliges himself to pay the contents when due.

ACCESS, s. [accessus, Lat.] admittance, approach, or passage to a place or person; licence or means to approach any thing; accession to any thing; the return or fit of an ague or other distemper.

ACCESSIBLE, a. [accessibilis, Lat.] that may be approached, reached, or come to. It is used with the particle to before the object. Accessible height, is either that which may be measured mechanically, by applying a measure to it; or else it is a height whose base can be approached to, and from thence a length measured on the ground.

ACCESSION, s. [accessio, Lat.] addition or increase; the act whereby a thing is superadded to another; joining oneself to any thing else; coming to, as the coming of a king to the crown. In Physic, the beginning of a paroxysm.

ACCESSORY, ad. [accessory, Fr.] in Civil Law, any thing that of right belongs or depends on another, although it be separated from it; as if tiles be taken from a house to be laid on again, they are an accessory, if the house be to be sold. By statute, a person who commands, advises, or conceals an offender, guilty of felony by statute. In Common Law, a person guilty of felony, though not principally, as by advice, command, concealment; and this may be either before or after the fact.

ACCIDENT, s. [accidentia, Lat.] the first principles of a language.

ACCIDENT, s. [from accidents, Lat.] a casualty or chance; a contingent effect, or something produced casually, or without any foreknowledge or destination of it in the agent that produced it, or to whom it happens. A thing is also frequently styled an accident in reference to its cause, or at least to our knowledge of it; and by this an effect either casually produced, or which appears to have been so to us, is commonly understood. In Grammar, the property of words, such as their division into substantives and adjectives; their declensions, cases, numbers and genders of nouns; the conjugations, moods, tenses, numbers, persons, &c. of verbs. In Physic, it is analogous to the word symptom. In Heraldry, accidents are additions, notes, or marks in a coat of armour which are not necessary to it, such as abatements and differences; and in Astrology, the most extraordinary occurrences in the course of a man's life.

ACCIDENTAL, a. [accidentalis, Lat.] pertaining to accidents, happening by chance.

ACCIDENTALLY, ad. casually; fortuitously.

ACCIDIOUS, a. [accidius, Lat.] spiteful.

ACCIDITY, s. [acciditas, Lat.] spitefulness.

ACCINCT, a. [accinctus, Lat.] girded, prepared, ready.

ACCIPIENT, a. [accipiens, Lat.] receiving. Substantively, a receiver.

ACCLAMATION, s. [acclamatio, Lat.] a shouting for joy; expressing applause, esteem, or approbation.

ACCLIVITY, s. [acclivitas, Lat.] the ascent of a hill; and among geometers, the slope of a line or plane inclining to the horizon upwards.

ACCLIVOUS, a. [acclivus, Lat.] rising upwards with a slope.

TO ACCLY, v. a. to crowd, to overflow; to surfeit or satiate.

ACLOYD, part. with farriers, denotes a horse being pricked in shoeing.

TO ACCOIL, v. n. to bustle, crowd, or be in a hurry. See COIL.

ACCOLENT, s. [accolens, Lat.] he who inhabits near, or a borderer on any place.

ACCOMMODABLE, a. [accommodabilis, Lat.] that may be fitted to another thing, in its primary signification; in its secondary, that may be reconciled to, is consistent with, or may be applied to.

TO ACCOMMODATE, v. a. [accommodo, Lat.] to provide or furnish with conveniences; to agree, compose, make up, or adjust a matter in dispute; to adapt, fit, or apply one matter or thing to another.

ACCOMMODATUS, a. [accommodatus, Lat.] followed by for, it denotes convenient or proper; by to, it implies suitable.

ACCOMMODATELY, ad. suitably; fitly.

ACCOMMODATION, s. [accommodatio, Lat.] an adapting, fitting, adjusting, &c.; the composing or putting an end to a difference, quarrel, &c. Convenience.

ACCOMPANIMENT, s. the adding of one thing to another by way of ornament. In Heraldry, the mantlings, supporters, &c. In Music, the instrumental part to be played while the vocal part is being sung.

TO ACCOMPANY, v. a. [acompanier, Fr.] to go or come with, to wait on, to keep company with; to join or unite with. To accompany a voice, i. e. to play to it with proper instruments.

ACCOMPLICE, s. [complice, Fr.] one who has a hand in a matter, or who is privy to the same crime or design with another.

TO ACCOMPLISH, v. a. [accomplir, Fr.] to complete; to fulfil; to execute or bring a matter or thing to perfection; to complete a period of time; to obtain or acquire. A person well accomplished, one who has extraordinary parts, and has acquired great accomplishments in learning.

ACCOMPLISHMENT, s. the perfecting, ending, fulfilling, or achieving of any matter or thing completely. Also an acquirement in learning, arts, sciences, or good behaviour.

ACCORD, s. [accord, Fr.] agreement or compact; agreement of mind; mutual harmony or symmetry. Self-motion; as, "It opened of its own accord." In Common Law, agreement between several persons or parties to make satisfaction for an affront or trespass committed one against another. In Music, it is the production, mixture, and relations of two sounds, of which the one is grave, the other acute.

TO ACCORD, v. n. [accorder, Fr.] to agree; to hang together. v. a. To tune two or more instruments, so as they shall sound the same note when touched by the hand or bow; to harmonize.

ACCORDANCE, s. friendship, conformity, consistence, or agreement with.

ACCORDING, prep. agreeable to; in proportion; with regard to.

ACCORDINGLY, ad. conformably; consistently. In the beginning of a sentence it refers to what went before, and implies a deduction from it.

ACCORPORATED, part. [accorporatus, Lat.] joined or put to; embodied.

TO ACCOST, v. a. [accoster, Fr.] to make or come up to a person, and speak to him.

ACCOUNT, s. [compte, Fr.] a computation of the number of certain things; a reckoning. The total or result of computation; estimation of value; rank, dignity, or distinction; regard, consideration, for the sake of; as, "Scamponius gives no thanks on this account." Reason or cause; narrative or relation; opinion or belief; review or examination; explanation or assignment of causes; the reasons of any thing collected; profit, gain, or advantage. In Commerce, all those books in which merchants and other traders register their transactions. Merchants' accounts, are those which are kept by double entry. Account in Company, is between two merchants or traders, wherein the transactions relative to their partnership are registered. Account in Bank, is a fund deposited either at some banker's, or the Bank, by traders, as running cash, to be employed in the payment of bills. Account of Sales, is an information given by one merchant to another, or by a factor to his principal, of the disposal, net proceeds, &c. of goods sent for the proper account of the sender or senders who consigned the same. In Law, a particular detail or enumeration delivered to a court or judge, &c. of what a man has received or expended for another, in the management of his affairs. Also, a writ or action that lies against a man, who by his office is obliged to give an account to another (as a bailiff to his master) and refuses to do it. Upon no account, or by no means. Upon all accounts; by all means, in every respect; in every particular.

TO ACCOUNT, v. a. to compute; to reckon, or esteem; to impute. Followed by for, it denotes to explain by assigning the cause and reasons. To take account of, to estimate, value, or admit into a calculation.

ACCOUNTABLE, a. liable to give an account, answerable.

ACCOUNTANT, s. one who is skilled in book-keeping; an officer appointed to keep or make up the accounts of a company, office, or court. The Accountant-general is an officer belonging to the court of Chancery, appointed by parliament to receive all money lodged in court, and to convey it thence to the Bank of England.

To ACCOUPLE, v. a. [accouple, Fr.] to link or join together.

To ACCOUTRE, v. a. [accouter, Fr.] to dress, attire, trim, especially with warlike accoutrements.

ACCOUTREMENT, s. dress; equipage, furniture, or habiliments of war; ornaments.

ACCRETION, s. [accretio, Lat.] the act of growing to another, so as to augment it. With naturalists, an addition of matter to any body externally; but it is frequently applied to the increase of such bodies as are without life; and it is also called apposition.

ACCRETIVE, a. [accretio, Lat.] that by which growth is increased; that by which vegetation is augmented.

ACCRINGTON, Lancashire. Pop. 8719.

To ACCROACH, v. a. [acrocchar, Fr.] a law term, to encroach, to draw away another's property.

ACROACHMENT, s. the act of encroaching the property of another.

To ACCRUE, v. n. [accroître, Fr.] to be increased, or added to. In a commercial sense, to arise or proceed from.

ACCUBATION, s. [from acumbo, Lat.] a posture of the body between sitting and lying. It was the table-posture of the Greeks and Romans.

ACCUMBENT, a. [accumbens, Lat.] leaning.

To ACCUMULATE, v. a. [accumulo, Lat.] to heap on, or pile one thing upon another; to gather or amass together in great quantities.

ACCUMULATION, s. [accumulatio, Lat.] repeated acquisitions and additions; an amassing; the state of a thing amassed.

ACCUMULATIVE, a. that which increases, or that which is added to; additional.

ACCUMULATOR, s. he that accumulates; a gatherer or heapster together.

ACCURACY, ACCURATENESS, s. [accuratio, Lat.] exactness, justness, or nicety.

ACCURATE, a. [accuratus, Lat.] done with care; exact either as to persons or things.

ACCURATELY, ad. exactly; nicely.

To ACCURSE, v. a. to doom to destruction; to imprecate curses upon.

ACCURSED, part. lying under a curse, or excommunicated; execrable; that which deserves execration.

ACCUSABLE, part. [accusabilis, Lat.] that which is liable to be found fault with, censured, or blamed.

ACCUSATION, s. the charging with some defect or crime. In Law, the preferring a criminal action against any one before a judge.

ACCUSATIVE, a. [accusativus, Lat.] a case in Grammar, which denotes the relation of the noun or pronoun on which the action of the verb directly terminates. In English Grammar it is called the objective case, and is easily distinguished in the pronouns; but in the substantives there is no difference but that the nominative precedes and the accusative follows the verb.

ACCUSATORY, a. [accusatorius, Lat.] of or belonging to accusation.

To ACCUSE, (akeize) v. a. [accuso, Lat.] to charge with a crime; to inform against, indict, or impeach; to censure. It is followed by of, and for, before the matter of censure or accusation.

ACCUSER, (akeizer) s. the person who accuses.

To ACCUSTOM, v. a. [accostumer, Fr.] to inure or use oneself to any thing. It is followed by to.

ACCUSTOMABLE, part. that which a person has practised or been used to for a continuance.

ACCUSTOMABLY, ACCUSTOMARILY, ad. according to use or custom.

ACCUSTOMARY, a. commonly practised, customary, usually done.

ACCUSTOMED, a. according to custom; frequent, usual.

ACE, s. a single point or speck on cards or dice. Figuratively, the least quantity, or the smallest distance, i. e. within an ace of it.

ACEPHALI, [a and kephale, Gr.] certain ecclesiastics so called, who making profession of extreme poverty, would not acknowledge any chief, whether layman or ecclesiastic; also certain sects which refused to admit the authority of the councils of Ephesus and Chalcedon.

ACEPHALOUS, a. [akephalos, Gr.] without a head. Figuratively, without chief or leader.

ACERB, a. [acerbus, Lat.] that has a compound taste, consisting of sour and astringent, such as most unripe fruits have.

ACERBITUDE, ACERBITY, s. the rough sour taste of unripe fruit; severity of temper, roughness of manners.

ACEROSE, a. [acerosus, Lat.] chafy; full of or mixed with chaff.

To ACERVATE, v. a. [acervo, Lat.] to raise up in heaps.

ACERSCENT, a. [acrescent, Lat.] tending to sourness.

ACETATES, in Chemistry, salts formed by the combination of any base with the acetic acid.

ACETIC, a. in Chemistry, derived from an acetate, as the acetic acid.

ACETOUS, a. [acetum, Lat.] having the nature of vinegar. The acetous acid is principally obtained from saccharine liquors which have undergone the vinous fermentation.

ACETUM, s. [Lat.] vinegar in general; any sharp liquor, as spirit of salt, nitre, vitriol, &c.

ACHAIA, (akain) now Livadia, a province of Greece, which formerly contained the celebrated cities of Athens and Thebes, the oracle of Delphi, and several other remarkable places. Also a district in Peloponessus.

ACHARD, FRANC. CHARLES, a Prussian chemist, who projected the extraction of sugar from the beet root, during the last century.

ACHE, (ake) s. [ace, Sax.] a continual pain in any part of the body. With farriers, a disease in horses, causing a numbness in the joints.

To ACHE, (ake) v. n. to be affected with pain.

ACHERON, (akeeron) the name of several rivers in ancient Greece; also of a fabulous river in hell, over which departed souls were ferried. Figuratively, it is used for the state of departed souls, or the grave.

To ACHIEVE, v. a. [achever, Fr.] to finish; to accomplish; to perform some notable exploit with success; to gain or procure.

ACHIEVEMENT, s. the finishing of a notable action; the ensigns armorial of a family.

ACHIEVER, s. he who acquires, or obtains, or performs some great exploit.

ACHILLES, one of the Grecian warriors who joined in the expedition against Troy, whose wrath and valour form the theme of Homer's Iliad. The tales about him are almost altogether fabulous.

ACHING, s. pain; uneasiness.

ACHROMATIC, a. [a and chroma, colour, Gr.] want of colour. Achromatic telescopes are such as have the object-glass made of plates of different kinds of glass, to prevent the appearance of fringes of colours round whatever is looked at.

ACHRONICAL, a. [akros, highest, and nux, night, Gr.] a term used in Astronomy, signifying the rising of a star when the sun sets, or the setting of a star when the sun rises.

ACID, a. [acidus, Lat.] sour; sharp.

ACIDITY, ACIDNESS, [aciditas, Lat.] keenness, sharpness; that taste which acid or sharp bodies have in the mouth.

ACIDS, s. all things that affect the organs of taste with a pungent sourness. In Chemistry, all substances that change the blue, green, and purple juices of vegetables to red, and combine with alkalies, earths, or metallic oxides, so as to form those compounds called salts. They are not simple substances, but compounds of oxygen or hydrogen with other elements, and are distinguished into two classes; the first comprehending those which are formed of not more than two elements, and the second composed of a greater number. Their names terminate with icous, according to the quantities of oxygen with which they are combined. Thus sulphuric acid contains more oxygen, and of course less sulphur, than sulphurous acid.

ACIDULATED, a. applied to medicines that have been mixed or tintured with some acid.

To ACKNOWLEDGE, v. a. to confess or own; to be grateful or thankful for any benefit; to own or profess a former acquaintance with a person; to approve.

ACKNOWLEDGMENT, s. concession of any thing; thankfulness, gratitude; confession of a fault; belief, attended with open profession. It supposes a question asked, whereas confession implies self-accusation. We acknowledge what we had an inclination to conceal: we confess that which we were blamable in doing.

ACME, s. [Gr.] with physicians, is used to denote the third degree or height of distempers, of which many have four periods. 1. The arch, or beginning. 2. Anabasis, or growth. 3. The acme, when the distemper is at the height. 4. The paracme, or declension of the disease.

ACOLITHIST, A'COLYTE, s. [akolouthos, Gr.] certain young persons among the ancient Christians who attached themselves to the company of the bishops. In the Roman Church, one of the lowest order, whose business it is to prepare the elements, light the church, &c. The same term, differently derived, was applied to stoics, and other persons who were immovable in their resolutions.

ACONITE, s. [aconitum, Lat.] in Botany, wolfsbane; poetically, poison in general.

ACORN, s. [ecorn, Sax.] the fruit or seed of the oak.

ACOUCHY, an animal of the cavy kind, much resembling the agouti. It is a native of South America.

ACOUSTIC, a. [akouo, Gr.] that belongs to the organ of hearing. Acoustic nerve in Anatomy, the same as auditory nerve.

ACOUSTICS, the science which investigates the causes and the laws of sound. The experiments of Chladni and Young, and the mathematical researches of Herschel, have shown that sound is occasioned by a peculiar vibratory motion imparted to the particles of the atmosphere; and that the differences in pitch and quality of musical sounds, arise from vibrations of very singular and beautiful forms. Sound travels through the air at the rate of about 1142 feet in a second; but it is communicated by water, masonry, and the earth at a much more rapid rate. The lowest rate of vibration that is heard as a musical note is 30 in a second, and the highest, between 2000 and 3000; but different persons have different degrees of susceptibility of impression. Persons who are deaf, that is, who hear no sounds that are propagated through the air, frequently are able to hear when they touch with their hands or teeth substances which have had the vibration communicated to them.

To ACQUAINT, v. n. [acquaint, Fr.] to inform; to be accustomed, or be habituated to; to know perfectly; to make oneself agreeable to, to insinuate oneself into the favour of; to acquire a perfect and intimate knowledge of.

ACQUAINTANCE, s. [acquaintance, Fr.] applied both to persons and things, and followed by with. Application productive of knowledge; personal knowledge arising from familiarity; an intimate friendship and alliance; a familiar and constant companion; something to which one has been accustomed, when applied to things; applied to persons, a slight or superficial knowledge.

ACQUAINTED, part. informed; accustomed or habituated; familiar, or having perfect knowledge of; followed by with.

To ACQUIESCE, v. n. [acquiesco, Lat.] to yield, to comply with, to rest satisfied with, used with the particle in.

ACQUIESCENCE, s. a tacit consent, submission, or yielding to; approbation, excluding all repining.

ACQUIRABLE, a. that may be acquired or obtained; attainable.

To ACQUIRE, v. a. [acquirere, Lat.] to attain, to purchase by one's labour.

ACQUIRER, s. a gainer.

ACQUIREMENT, s. gain; attainment.

ACQUISITION, s. [acquisitio, Lat.] an obtaining, the thing obtained.

ACQUISITIVE, a. [acquisitivus, Lat.] that is acquired, or gained.

ACQUIST, s. [from acquirere, Fr.] additional increase; something acquired or gained; acquisition. In Law, goods not held by descent or inheritance, but obtained by purchase. In Politics, something gained by conquest.

To ACQUIT, v. a. [acquitter, Fr.] to discharge or free from; to clear from guilt, not to condemn, with of or from before the crime; to discharge from any obligation.

ACQUITTMENT, ACQUITTAL, s. in Law, a setting free from the suspicion of guilt, or an offence; also a tenant's discharge from or by a mesne landlord, from doing service to, or being disturbed in, his possession by any superior lord, or paramount.

ACQUITTANCE, s. a discharge or release given in writing for a sum of money, or other duty paid or done; the writing itself.

A'CRA, A'CRE, or ST. JEAN D'A'CRE, a sea-port of Palestine, called in Scripture Accho, and by the Greeks Ptolemais. The bay, or harbour, extends in a semicircle of three leagues as far as Mount Carmel, and is open to the N. W. winds; yet the port is reckoned one of the best, and the town is one of the principal ones, upon the coast of Syria. It is 28 miles S. of Tyre. Lat. 32.30. N. Long. 35.24. E.

A'CRE, s. [acre, Sax.] a measure of land containing forty perches in length, and four in breadth; or four thousand eight hundred and forty square yards. The French acre, or arpent, is one fourth more; the Welch acre, commonly two English ones; the Irish, 1 acre, 2 roods, and 19 perches English.

ACRID, a. [acridus, Lat.] tasting hot and sour.

ACRIMONIOUS, a. abounding with sharp or corrosive particles, when applied to things. Figuratively, sharp and austere, applied to persons.

ACRIMONY, s. [acrimonia, Lat.] sharpness, tartness, corrosive quality; severity of disposition; sharpness of temper.

ACRITUDE, s. [acritudo, Lat.] a quality in a body, which affects the taste with a sensation of rough, pungent, and hotish sour.

ACROAMATICAL, a. [acroamati, Gr.] profound, abstruse, belonging to some secret doctrine. Several of the ancient philosophers had certain doctrines which they taught publicly, and others which they communicated to their most intimate disciples only.

ACROPOLIS, the name given to those fortified mounts existing in most of the ancient Grecian cities, which were probably, like the Roman camps and baronial castles in this country, the germs of the cities. It is from the temple of Pallas, called the Parthenon, in the Acropolis at Athens, that most of the sculptures in the Elgin saloon of the British Museum were taken.

ACROSPIRE, s. [akros and spiro, Gr.] a shoot or sprout from the ends of seeds, before they are sown.

ACROSPIRED, part. and a. having sprouts.

ACROSS, ad. [See Cross] acrosswise, thwartwise.

ACROSTIC, s. [akros and stichos, Gr.] a poetical composition, the initial letters of which, when added together, form a particular word.

ACROTERIC, s. [akros, Gr.] in Architecture: 1. Little pedestals, placed at the middle and both extremes of pediments, which serve to support statues. 2. Sharp pinnacles, or spiry battlements, standing in ranks about flat buildings, with rails and balusters. 3. Figures of stone or metal, which are placed as ornaments on the tops of temples and other edifices.

To ACT, v. a. [ago, Lat.] to be active, to exert one's active powers; to exercise its active powers; to perform its proper functions; to perform the functions of life; to be excited to action; to perform, in allusion to the theatre; to counterfeit, in allusion to the office of a player; to be impelled, forced, or incited to or by action; to exert action or produce effects upon a subject; to actuate.

ACT, s. [actum, Lat.] a deed, a performance; a part of a play; the power of producing an effect; a deed, or decree of parliament, or other court of judicature. In Physics, an effective application of some power or faculty. With metaphysicians, that by which a being is in real action. In Law, an instrument or other matter in writing, to declare or justify the truth of a thing: in which sense records, decrees, sentences, reports, certificates, &c. are called acts. Matters of fact, transmitted to posterity in certain authentic books and memoirs. At the university of Oxford, the time when degrees are taken. The word act signifies something done which is remarkable. The word action is applicable indifferently to every thing we do, whether common or extraordinary. An elegant speaker will not say a virtuous act, but an act of virtue; whereas to say a virtuous action, is proper and elegant. Act of faith, in the Inquisition, is the punishment of such as they declare heretics, and the absolution of the innocent accused, called by them auto da fe.

ACTIAN, a. belonging to Actium. Actian games, games instituted, according to some, by Augustus, in memory of the victory obtained over Antony, near the promontory of Actium; though others say, that Augustus only restored them. Actian years, or Active era, in Chronology, a series of years beginning from the conquest of Egypt by Augustus, called also the era of Augustus.

ACTINIA, in Zoology, that species of marine animals commonly called sea anemones. They are attached to rocks or the bottoms of vessels, and are of a cylindrical shape, but variable figure. Around the opening, which is both mouth and vent, are placed rows of arms or tentacula, which, when protruded, give the animal the appearance of a flower. With them the food is taken. This is one of those creatures, any part of which severed from the rest will grow to a complete animal.

ACTION, s. [actio, Lat.] the exerting or employing any active powers, in opposition to rest; something done or performed, a deed; power, influence, agency, or operation. In Metaphysics, the exercise of an ability which a being has to begin or determine a particular train of thought or motion. In Ethics, the voluntary motion of a reasonable creature. In Painting, or Sculpture, the posture or attitude expressive of the passion the painter or carver would convey to the mind of a spectator. In Horsemanship, the gait of a horse. With orators, actors, &c., it is the accommodating the person, voices, and gesture to the subject. In Poetry, an event or series of occurrences, mutually connected and depending on each other, either real or imaginary, which makes the subject of a dramatic or epic poem. In Law, a legal demand of, or the form of, a suit given by law, for the recovery of a person's right. Actions are either criminal or civil. Criminal are such as have judgment of death. Under this head are included, 1. Actions penal, which lie for some penalty, corporal or pecuniary. 2. Actions upon the statute, brought on breach of any statute, and which did not lie before, as an occasion of perjury. 3. Actions popular, given on breach of some penal statute, for which any person has a right to sue. Civil actions are:—Action upon the case, a general action, given for redress of wrongs done without violence, and not provided against by a law. Action on the case of words, is where a person is injured in his reputation by words maliciously spoken. Action of a writ, in Law, is when it is pleaded that the plaintiff has no cause to have it brought, though he may have another for the same. In the plural number, actions, in Commerce, imply the movable effects; thus, a merchant's creditors have seized upon all his actions, i. e. they have seized upon all the debts owing to him.

ACTIONABLE, a. [action and abel, Sax.] in Law, that admits an action to be brought against it; punishable, blamable, or culpable.

ACTIVE, a. [activus, Lat.] that has the power of acting, as opposed to passive; busy in acting, as opposed to idle; practical, not merely speculative, or in theory; nimble, quick, apt, or forward to act. Active principles, in Chemistry, are spirit, oil, and salt; so named, because when their parts are briskly in motion, they cause action in other bodies. Active verbs, are such as not only signify doing or acting, but have also nouns following them, to be the subject of the action. Thus, to love, to teach, are verbs active; because we can say, to love a thing, to teach a man. Verbs neuter also denote an action, but cannot have a noun following them. Such are, to sleep, to go, &c. In Medicine, it implies such a dose as operates quickly, and with some force, as emetics, cathartics, and cordials.

ACTIVELY, ad. busily; nimbly; in an active signification, as, "The word is used actively."

ACTIVITY, s. propensity, readiness, nimbleness to do a thing. Applied both to persons and things, a power of acting, operation, influence, continual exertion of the active powers, in opposition to indolence.

ACTIUM, the promontory at the entrance to the Ambracian Gulf, now called the Gulf of Arta, on the Adriatic coast of Greece, off which was fought the naval battle that established Augustus as emperor of Rome, and finished the career of Mark Antony, in the year 31 B. C.

ACTON BURNEL, Shropshire. Pop. 394.

ACTOR, s. [actor, Lat.] he that does any thing; he that practices, in opposition to theory; a player.

ACTRESS, s. [actrice, Fr.] a woman who personates a character on the stage; a female who performs any thing.

ACTS, s. in Dramatic Poetry, the divisions or principal parts of a play.

ACTUAL, a. [actual, Fr.] that includes or implies action; really in act, not merely in speculation.

ACTUALITY, s. the power of exerting action, or operating; activity; reality, or certainty.

ACTUALLY, ad. in effect; really.

ACTUALNESS, s. a quality which denotes the reality of the operation, existence, or truth of a thing.

ACTUARY, s. [actuarius, Lat.] in Law, the registrar or clerk who compiles the minutes of the proceedings of a court; particularly the clerk that registers the acts and proceedings of the convocation.

TO ACTUATE, v. a. [ago, Lat.] to excite to action, to move, to quicken.

TO ACUATE, v. a. [acuo, Lat.] to sharpen.

ACULEATE, a. [aculeatus, Lat.] prickly; that terminates in a sharp point.

ACUMEN, s. [Lat.] sharpness; applied either to material objects, or the faculties of the mind.

ACUMINATED, part. [acuminatus, Lat.] sharp-pointed.

ACUPUNCTURE, a method of curing many diseases by pricking several parts of the body with a needle; much practised by the inhabitants of China and Japan, and not unknown to the ancients.

ACUTE, a. [acutus, Lat.] sharp-pointed, sharp-witted, subtle, ingenious, vigorous in operation or effect. Acute, in Geometry, that which terminates in a sharp point. Acute angle, one of less than ninety degrees. Acute-angled triangle, one whose three angles are acute. Acute-angular sections of a cone, the same as an ellipsis. Acute, in Music, shrill, sharp, or high in respect of some other note, opposed to grave. Acute, in Grammar, an accent which signifies the raising of the voice, and is written thus (´). In Physic, diseases that are very violent, and terminate in a few days.

ACUTELY, ad. sharply.

ACUTENESS, s. sharpness, applied to matter. Sagacity, or quickness of discernment; capacity of distinguishing, or receiving impressions; vehemence, productive of a speedy crisis in a disease; shrillness, applied to sound.

AD, at the beginning of English proper names, signifies the same with ad or apud amongst the Latins. So Adston signifies at or near some stone; Adhill, at or near some hill.

ADAGE, s. [adagium, Lat.] a maxim or principle received as self-evident; a proverbial saying.

ADAGIO, s. [Ital.] slow, grave, solemn. In Music, a slow movement or time; when it is repeated, as, adagio adagio, it implies a very slow movement.

ADAM, the name of the first man, respecting whom nothing is known beyond what is stated in the beginning of the Book of Genesis. He was 930 years old when he died.

ADAM, DR. ALEXANDER, the author of the School Text-book on Roman Antiquities, and of other works illustrative of the Roman history and language; was Rector of the High School in Edinburgh for many years. He was one of the men who rose from the humblest beginnings, with few advantages, to an eminence of usefulness and of learning. He died in 1809.

ADAM, ROBERT, was architect to George III., in the beginning of his reign; and the designer of many buildings, both public and private, in this country. He was the builder of the Adelphi Theatre, London; and the introducer of stucco-work, in imitation of stone, for ornaments on the outside of buildings.

ADAMANT, s. [adamas, Lat.] an imaginary stone of impenetrable hardness; the diamond; the loadstone. Figuratively, something that has any strong attraction.

ADAMANTINE, a. [adamantinus, Lat.] made of adamant; endowed with the properties of adamant, not to be broken.

ADAMITES, a sect of heretics, who imitated the nakedness of Adam during his residence in Paradise, and contemned marriage.

ADAM'S-APPLE, s. in Anatomy, a prominent part of the throat.

ADAM'S PEAK, the name of the highest peak of the mountains in Ceylon. On the summit is the famous foot-print of Buddha, which he left when he ascended to heaven, according to the Hindu Mythology; and which is worshipped to this day.

ADAMS, JOHN, one of the number who signed the American "Declaration of Independence," July the 4th, 1776. He was subsequently ambassador to France; and at the peace, was the first sent from the United States to the English court. In 1797, he was chosen to succeed General Washington as President; and in 1826, he died on the anniversary of the Independence declaration, aged 90 years.

ADANSON, MICHAEL, a French botanist, whose studies and publications contributed to the formation of "the National System of Plants." He travelled in Senegal, and wrote a very valuable work respecting that country. But the part he took in the denunciation of slavery gives him a greater claim to be remembered. In the tumults that occurred during the Revolution, he suffered greatly; and died in his 80th year, in 1806.

TO ADAPT, v. a. [adapto, Lat.] to fit one thing to another, to proportion; to make one thing correspond with another, to suit.

ADAPTATION, s. the art of fitting one thing to another; or the fitness, suitability, or correspondence of one thing with another.

ADAPTION, s. the act of fitting, or suitability.

ADAR, the twelfth month of the Jewish ecclesiastical year. It contains only twenty-nine days, and answers to the moon of February; so that it sometimes extends to March.

TO ADD, v. a. [addo, Lat.] to increase by joining something new; to enlarge, to aggrandize; to perform the operation of joining one number to another.

ADDDABLE, ADDDIBLE, part. [addo, Lat.] that may be added.

ADDER, s. [aetter, Sax.] the serpent commonly called the viper.

ADDER'S-TONGUE, in Botany, a plant of the fern tribe, which has one oval leaf, and the fruit growing from the base of it in slender, pointed spikes. It is found abundantly in marshy grounds.

ADDER'S-WORT, s. an herb, so named on account of its virtue, real or supposed, of curing the bite of serpents.

ADDE, ADZE, s. [adese, Sax.] a cooper's instrument to chop or cut with.

TO ADDICT, v. a. [addico, Lat.] to give oneself wholly to a thing; to apply one's mind wholly to it. It is mostly used in a bad sense.

ADDISON, JOSEPH, one of England's classical prose writers. He was born in 1672, and studied at Oxford, where he gained such a name as a poet, and so many influential friends, that he embarked in a political career, under the patronage of the court. Under Queen Anne he was engaged in various subsidiary offices, both in England and Ireland; and it was at this time that, in the Tatler, Spectator, and Guardian, he laid the foundation of his present distinction. In 1717 he was appointed one of the secretaries of state, but was soon obliged to quit a post he was altogether unfit for. His tragedy of Cato, which was reckoned his master-piece, is not much esteemed now. His Essays are characterized by no greatness, or power; but by delicacy of humour, and fancy, and by musical nicety of language. He has, and perhaps deserves, the praise of introducing Milton's Poems to the fashionable world of his day, and so of giving them the popularity they have ever since enjoyed. He died in 1719.

ADDITIONMENT, s. [additamentum, Lat.] a thing added, or addition.

ADDITION, s. [additio, Lat.] the act of adding or joining one thing to another, in order to increase its quantity or dimensions; the thing which is added; increase; interpolation; or the corrupting of writings, or tenets, by inserting something new or spurious. In Arithmetic, one of the five principal rules. In Law, a title given to a man, besides his Christian, or surname, implying his estate, degree, occupation, age, or place of residence.

ADDITIONAL, a. that is added; that increases. With respect to arguments, a greater number, or more forcible ones.

ADDLE, a. [adel, Sax.] empty, rotten; commonly said of eggs that produce no chicks, though laid under the hen; and hence it is applied to a brain that produces nothing.

TO ADDRESS, v. a. [addresser, Fr.] to prepare for use; to make ready, to prepare oneself for any action; to present a petition to; to make application to a person; to direct one's speech to a person, or body of men.

ADDRESS, s. [adresse, Fr.] an application in order to persuade; the suit or application of a lover; behaviour, or genteel carriage; quickness of understanding, presence of mind; an application from an inferior to a superior; the direction of a letter, or the method in which a person is directed to.

ADDRESSER, s. the person who carries the petition and delivers the address.

ADDUCENT, a. [adducens, Lat.] that which draws to, or closes. In Anatomy, applied to muscles that bring forward, close, or draw together the parts of the body to which they are fixed.

ADEL, a province in Africa, called also Zeilah, from a trading town of that name, seated near the Red Sea. Its trade, which is carried on chiefly through a town called Berbera, is almost wholly one of exchange with the nations in the interior of Africa, and Arabian and Indian merchants. This country stretches along the S. coast of the Strait of Babelmandel, near to the Red Sea. It was formerly a part of Abyssinia.

ADELING, JOH. CHRISTOPH., a philologist, and student of Comparative Grammar, whose great work, "Mithridates," is a standard work in the science of language. He wrote many other books, amongst which were a German Grammar and Dictionary, all of which are highly esteemed by scholars. He died in 1806, in his 75th year.

ADEMPITION, s. among civilians, is the privation or evocation of some donation or favour.

ADEN, a town of Arabia, on the Indian Ocean. Its trade, which is very little now, consists chiefly in that carried on with the natives of the interior of Africa, (see ADIEL,) and in coffee.

ADEPT, s. [adeptus, Lat.] one that understands all the secrets of his art, originally appropriated to chemists, but now applied to persons of any profession.

ADEPT, a. thoroughly skilled in any thing; well versed in any matter.

ADEQUATE, a. [adequatus, Lat.] equal or proportionate to; full, perfect, proper, sole, and entire.

ADEQUATENESS, s. equality, perfect resemblance; justness of correspondence, exactness of proportion.

ADESSENARI, s. those who hold the corporeal presence of Christ at the sacrament, but in a manner different from the Papists.

TO ADHERE, v. a. [adherere, Lat.] to stick to, like any glutinous matter. Figuratively, to hold together, join, or unite with. To persist in, or remain firm to a party, person, or opinion.

ADHERENCE, ADHERENCY, s. the quality of sticking to, strong attachment, steady perseverance.

ADHERENT, a. clinging or sticking to. In Logic, something added, or not essential to a thing.

ADHERENT, s. one who is firmly attached to any person, party, or opinion.

ADHERER, s. one who is tenacious of any tenet, or firmly attached to any person, party, or profession.

ADHERSION, s. [adhesio, Lat.] the act of cleaving or sticking to. Adhesion to a natural body, is used, and adherence to a party; but not constantly.

ADHESIVE, a. remaining closely attached; sticking or keeping to without any deviation.

ADJACENCY, s. [from adjaceo, Lat.] state of lying near to; the thing itself so lying.

ADJACENT, s. [adjacens, Lat.] lying near or bordering upon; contiguous, or touching each other.

ADIAPHORISTS, s. [adiaphoroi, Gr.] the followers of Milathon, who in the fifteenth century was disposed to give up several points which he regarded as indifferent, to the Catholics for the sake of peace.

ADJECTIVE, s. [adjectivum, Lat.] a word which denotes the qualities of a subject, as a great minister; the word great is an adjective, as denoting only the qualities of the minister. It derives its name from its being joined or added to another word, either expressed or understood, in order to limit the sense.

ADJECTIVELY, ad. after the manner of an adjective.

ADIEU, ad. [Fr.] farewell. God be with you.

TO ADJOIN, v. a. [adjungo, Lat.] to join, to unite to, to add to; to be contiguous to, to lie so near as to touch or join to.

TO ADJOUTIN, v. a. [adjourner, Fr.] to appoint a day, to put off to another time; used chiefly of juridical proceedings, and the meetings of parliament.

ADJOURNMENT, s. the putting off a court or meeting, and appointing it to be kept at another time or place.

ADIPOCRE, s. [adeps and cera, Lat.] a substance resembling fat and wax, into which flesh of human beings and animals, buried under peculiar circumstances, or exposed to the action of running water, is changed. Chemists are not agreed concerning its history.

ADIPPOSE, Adiposus, a. [adiposus, Lat.] fat, greasy.

ADIT, s. [aditus, Lat.] a passage, or entry; the shaft or entrance into a mine.

ADITION, s. [additio, Lat.] a going or coming nigh to.

To ADJUDGE, v. a. [adjudico, Lat.] to give judgment or sentence in a court of justice, with to before the person; to award, to sentence; simply, to determine or judge.

To ADJUDICATE, v. a. [adjudico, Lat.] to determine any claim at law; to give or assign the right of something controverted to one of the claimants.

ADJUDICATION, s. [adjudicatio, Lat.] the act of judging, or giving to a person by a judicial sentence.

ADJUNCT, a. and s. [adjunctum, Lat.] something united, but not essential; one joined to another, as a companion, or assistant. In Philosophy, something added to a thing not essentially belonging to it: a mode that may be separated from its subject. Adjuncts, in Grammar and Rhetoric, are adjectives or epithets added to enlarge or augment the energy of a discourse.

ADJUNCTION, s. [adjunctio, Lat.] the act of joining things together; or state of a thing joined.

ADJUNCTIVE, s. [adjunctivus, Lat.] he that joins; that which is joined.

ADJURATION, s. [adjuratio, Lat.] the form of an oath taken by any person; or an oath administered to any person, whereby he is under a necessity of speaking the truth without disguise.

To ADJURE, v. a. [adjuro, Lat.] to bind a person to do or not to do anything, under the penalty of a dreadful curse; to entreat earnestly by the most pathetic topic; to swear by; to oblige a person to declare the truth upon oath.

To ADJUST, v. a. [adjuster, Fr.] to make consistent, to regulate; to settle, to reduce to a standard, or criterion; to reconcile.

ADJUSTMENT, s. [adjustement, Fr.] a just description, an explication and obviation of difficulties in a subject; a just disposition of parts whereby they promote and assist each other's motion.

ADJUTANT, s. [adjutus, Lat.] in the Military art, a helper, or assistant. More particularly, an officer in the army who assists a superior, particularly the major, in distributing the pay, and overseeing the punishment of the inferior men. In Zoology, a large, carnivorous species of crane, found in India; and regarded with great veneration by the natives, because of the service it does in destroying the vermin which abound there, and as being the habitation of the souls of Brahmins. Adjutant-general, is one who attends the general, assists in council, and carries the orders from one part of the army to the other.

ADJUTOR, s. [Lat.] a helper; one who gives assistance.

ADJUTRIX, s. [Lat.] a female helper, or a woman who assists.

ADELEGATION, s. a right claimed by the states of the German empire of adjoining plenipotentiaries, in public treaties and negotiations, to those of the emperor.

ADMEASUREMENT, s. the measuring or finding the dimensions and quantity of a thing by the application of a standard or rule. In Law, a writ brought against such as usurp more than their due.

ADMEASURATION, s. [ad and mensura, Lat.] the act of determining or finding out the length and other dimensions, by a standard, rule, or measure.

To ADMINISTER, v. a. [administro, Lat.] to afford, including the idea of help or service; to give. In Politics, to manage, or conduct the affairs of government, including the idea of subordination. In judicial courts, to tender or apply to a person to take his oath. "To administer an oath." In Church matters, to perform the office of a minister, or priest, in giving the elements of bread and wine, &c. in the sacrament. "To administer the sacrament." In Physic, to dispense medicines, prescribe and apply remedies. "Administering physic." To be subservient to; to contribute to; with the particle to. In Law, to take possession of the goods and chattels of a person dying without will, to give an inventory thereof on oath at the commons, and oblige oneself to be accountable for them.

To ADMINISTRATE, v. a. [administro, Lat.] to apply or make use of. A term peculiar to physic.

ADMINISTRATION, s. [administratio, Lat.] the act of enforcing, or applying, or giving sentence according to the sense of a law; the discharge of one of the chief offices of state, which respects the direction of public affairs; the active or executive part of government; those who are intrusted with the care of public affairs; the due discharge of an office; the performance of the necessary rites, the act of distributing bread and wine, &c., in the eucharist. In Law, the act of a person who takes charge of the effects of one dying intestate, and is accountable for them, when required. The bishop of the diocese, where the party dies, is to grant administration; but if the deceased has goods in several dioceses, termed in law bona notabilia, it must then be granted by the archbishop in the prerogative court. The persons to whom administration may be granted are, first, the nearest relatives of the deceased, then those more remote; failing which, a creditor may; or, lastly, any person at the discretion of the ordinary. Administration cum testamento annexo (with a testament or will annexed) in Law, is where an executor refuses to prove a will, and, on that account, administration with the will annexed to it is granted to the next of kin.

ADMINISTRATIVE, a. that aids, supports, or assists.

ADMINISTRATOR, s. [Lat.] the person who officiates as a minister or priest in a church; he that has the chief management of national affairs. In Law, he who has the goods of a man dying without will committed to his charge, and is accountable for them, when required by the ordinary. The office of administrator is the same as that of executor, with regard to the burial, discharging funeral expenses, and payment of the debts, &c., of the deceased; but as this power is communicated by administration, he can do nothing before that is granted.

ADMINISTRATORSHIP, s. the office of administrator.

ADMINISTRATRIX, s. [Lat.] a female who has the affairs of a person dying intestate committed to her charge.

ADMIRABLE, a. [admirabilis, Lat.] worthy of admiration.

ADMIRABLY, ad. so as to raise wonder; in an admirable manner.

ADMIRAL, s. [amiral, Fr.] an officer who has a chief command in a fleet. In the British fleet, admirals are divided into those of the Red, of the White, and of the Blue; distinguished by the part of the ship where they carry their flag. Under the admirals, are rear-admirals, who command a third squadron of men of war, and vice-admirals, who command the second squadron. Lord High Admiral, was the ancient title of the officer who executed the functions of the present lords commissioners of the Admiralty. Vice-admiral, is also the title of district officers under the lords of the Admiralty.

ADMIRALSHIP, s. the office of an admiral.

ADMIRALTY, s. [amirauté, Fr.] the office or power of the lord high admiral, put in commission. It consists of a first lord, who presides, and has a seat in the cabinet; and five others. In it is vested the chief direction of the affairs of the navy; and its jurisdiction extends over all the British empire, excepting the Cinque-Ports. High Court of Admiralty, is a sovereign court held by the lord high admiral, or commissioners of the Admiralty; and has cognizance in all maritime affairs, civil as well as criminal. All crimes committed on the high seas, or in great rivers, below the bridge next the sea, are cognizable in this court only, which, by statute, is obliged to try the same by judge and jury, and all actions are determined according to civil law, because the sea is without the jurisdiction of the common law. There is also a Prize Court, to decide respecting captures made at sea, during war.

ADMIRALTY ISLANDS, a cluster of islands to the N. of New Britain, and nearly in parallel W. from New Ireland, about 40 in number, and were discovered by Captain Cartaret. The largest of the islands is about 18 leagues long. The inhabitants are a fierce people, going quite naked, except that they wear shells on their legs and arms, by way of ornament. They are of a dark copper-colour, with woolly heads, which they profusely powder; they also paint their cheeks with white streaks. Lat. about 2. N., and long. from 146. to 148. E.

ADMIRATION, s. [admiratio, Lat.] a passion excited when we discover a great excellence in an object. Preceded by to, in such a manner as to excite wonder. Surprise, including the secondary idea of something culpable. In Grammar, a point or stop, which denotes that the sentence before it implies wonder or astonishment; marked thus (!)

To ADMIRE, v. a. [admiror, Lat.] to look upon with some wonder, including esteem.

ADMIRED, part. that occasions great surprise and esteem.

ADMIRER, s. the person who feels the passion of admiration arising at the sight or contemplation of any thing surprisingly excellent; he who wonders, or regards with admiration.

ADMIRINGLY, ad. with admiration.

ADMISSIBLE, a. [admitto, Lat.] that may be granted or admitted.

ADMISSION, s. [admissio, Lat.] liberty or permission of entering; access or liberty of approaching; a power of entering; the granting a proposition not fully proved. In Law, when the bishop, after examination, allows a priest to enter into a benefice to which he is presented, saying, Admitto te habilem: "I admit you as a person properly qualified."

To ADMIT, v. a. [admitto, Lat.] to grant access to; to permit or suffer a person to enter upon an office; to grant; in a general sense, to allow.

ADMITTABLE, a. that may be admitted, applied both to persons and things.

ADMITTANCE, s. a permission of a person to take and exercise the functions of any office; access, passage, or power of entering; a prerogative, or right of finding a ready access to the great; the acceding to, granting, or concession of, any position.

To ADMIX, v. a. [admisceo, Lat.] to join to, or mingle with something else.

ADMIXTION, s. the joining, blending, or incorporating one body or fluid with another by mixing.

ADMIXTURE, s. the blending or mingling one body with another.

To ADMONISH, v. a. [admoneo, Lat.] to exhort, to give advice, with the preposition against: to reprove; to give a person a hint; to warn; to put in mind of a fault.

ADMONISHER, s. the person who reminds another of his duty, and reproves him for his faults.

ADMONISHMENT, s. admonition; notice of faults or duties.

ADMONITION, s. [admonitio, Lat.] a hint of duty; a reminding a person of his duty, or reproof for the neglect of it. In the ancient church, this was a part of discipline which preceded, and often prevented excommunication.

ADMONITIONER, s. a general adviser. A ludicrous term.

ADMONITORY, a. [admonitorius, Lat.] that exhorts and ex-cites us to the performance of a duty.

ADO, s. difficulty, when following much. With the preposition about, bustle, noise, or tumult. With the words great or more, it signifies a greater appearance or show of business than what is real, and is taken in a ludicrous sense.

ADOLESCENCE, ADOLESCENCY, s. [adolescencia, Lat.] the state of a growing youth, commencing from his infancy, and ending at his full growth; commonly computed to be between 15 and 25, if not 30 years of age. The Romans computed it from 12 to 25 in males, and to 21 in females.

ADONAI, one of the names of the Supreme Being in the Scriptures. The Jews read Adonai in place of Jehovah, wherever they meet with it.

ADONIS, s. in Botany, a genus of plants, allied to the ranunculaceae, bearing flowers which are red, or yellow, and very beautiful. Our English species is called pheasant's eye.

To ADOPT, v. a. [adopto, Lat.] to substitute another person's son instead of one's own, and make him capable of inheriting, as if so by nature; to acquire, in opposition to what is inherent by nature; to rely or confide in, and make use of as if our own. ADOPTER, s. he who gives some one by choice the right of a son.

ADOPTION, s. [adoptio, Lat.] the act by which a person takes the child of another for his own son. In Theology, an act of God's grace, whereby those who are regenerated are admitted into his kingdom and family.

ADOPTIVE, a. [adoptivus, Lat.] that is adopted, in opposition to a son by procreation.

ADORABLE, a. [adorabilis, Fr.] that ought to be adored; worthy of Divine honours.

ADORABLENESS, s. the quality which renders a being worthy of Divine honours.

ADORABLY, ad. in a manner worthy of Divine worship.

ADORATION, s. [adoratio, Lat.] the act of worshipping, including in it reverence, esteem, and love; the external act of homage paid to God, distinguished from mental worship; the act of prostration in honour of Eastern monarchs.

To ADORE, v. a. [adoro, Lat.] to reverence, to honour with Divine worship; to pay a high degree of regard, reverence, esteem, and homage.

ADORER, s. one who pays Divine honours to the Deity; one who has a great and reverential regard. In common conversation, a lover, who almost idolizes the object of his affections.

To ADORN, v. a. [adorno, Lat.] to set off with dress, to deck with ornaments; to convey splendour, or pomp; to be embellished or graced with oratory and elegance of language.

ADORNMENT, s. the advantage of ornament, applied both to dress and the faculties of the mind.

ADOWN, prep. towards the ground, downwards, or down.

ADRE/AD, ad. in a state of fear.

ADRIAN, the name assumed by six Popes of Rome; of whom the fourth was the only Englishman that ever occupied the papal chair; his name was Nicholas Brakespere. His pontificate was a troubled one, and he took the very highest ground of papal prerogative. He succeeded in destroying the power of Arnaldo of Brescia, who had defeated his predecessors; and in humbling Frederic Barbarossa. He died in 1190.

ADRIANOPLE, a considerable city of Romania, and the see of an archbishop, under the patriarch of Constantinople; pleasantly situated on a beautiful plain, and watered with three rivers, the largest of which, called the Marizza, is navigable. It is about 7 or 8 miles in circumference, including the old city and some suburbs. The public buildings are the mosques, and a beautiful bazaar, or exchange, called Ali Bassa, which is a vast arched building, with 6 gates, and 365 rich, well-furnished shops, extending half a mile in length, and kept by Turks, Greeks, Armenians, and Jews. It has some manufactures, and woollen, cotton, and silk goods. The inhabitants are estimated at about 100,000. It is 130 miles N. W. of Constantinople. Lat. 41. 41. N. Long. 22. 30. E.

ADRIATIC SEA, now called the Gulf of Venice, is that arm of the Mediterranean which divides Italy from Greece and Turkey.

ADRI/FT, ad. [adri/ftan, Sax.] driven at the pleasure of a torrent. In a figurative sense, at random, without restraint, or following the first impulse.

ADROIT, a. [Fr.] dexterous; active; skilful.

ADROITNESS, s. dexterity; readiness, activity; assiduity.

ADRY, ad. in want of drink; thirsty.

ADSCITIOUS, a. [adscitivus, Lat.] taken in to supply or complete; added unnecessarily; spurious; interpolated; and not genuine; borrowed or counterfeit.

ADSTRICTION, s. [adstrictio, Lat.] the act of binding together; contracting into a lesser compass; applied to medicines which have the power of contracting the parts.

To ADVANCE, v. a. [avancer, Fr.] to bring forward, with relation to place; to raise to a higher post; to prefer; to exalt, by improvement; to adorn, heighten, to communicate honour; to hasten the growth, applied to vegetables; to propose, to offer to the public, to produce. In a mercantile sense, to pay the charges of an undertaking before the time of reimbursement arrives. To give or lend a person money or commodities, before he has the means of repaying them.

ADVANCE, s. the act of coming forwards; approach; gradation, or gradual increase; raising to a higher degree of dignity or perfection. Advance guard, is the first line of an army in battle array next to the enemy.

ADVANCEMENT, s. the act of gaining ground, progress; promotion to a higher station, preferment; raising to a greater pitch of perfection, improvement.

ADVANCER, s. he that promotes or forwards. Among sportsmen, one of the starts or branches of a buck's attire, between the back antler and the palm.

ADVANTAGE, s. [avantage, Fr.] used with of or over before the person, the better of a person, or superiority. Used with make, take, or get, it implies superiority acquired by stratagem or cunning. A favourable opportunity. In mercantile affairs, a premium, or profit, greater than what can be obtained by law.

To ADVANTAGE, v. a. to benefit; to improve, promote, or forward; to acquire profit; to profit.

ADVANTAGED, a. possessed of advantages; commodiously situated or disposed.

ADVANTAGEOUS, a. that conduces to profit. Useful, or serviceable.

ADVANTAGEOUSLY, ad. in a manner conducing to convenience or profit.

ADVANTAGEOUSNESS, s. service or convenience.

TO ADVENE, v. a. [advenio, Lat.] to become a part of a thing, including the idea of something superadded, and not essential.

ADVENTENT, part. [adventens, Lat.] adventing; coming from outward causes; superadded.

ADVENT, s. [adventus, Lat.] signifies coming, particularly the coming of Christ, and in the calendar denotes the time immediately preceding Christmas, or the nativity of our Saviour. It includes four Sundays or weeks, which begin either on St. Andrew's day, if it be Sunday, or on the nearest one before or after it. During Advent, and to the end of the octaves of Epiphany, the solemnizing of marriage without a special licence is forbidden.

ADVENTIVE, a. [from advenio, Lat.] that is acquired, in opposition to natural.

ADVENTITIOUS, a. [adventitius, Lat.] that is superadded or acquired, in opposition to natural; that is not of the same nature; additional, or increased.

ADVENTUAL, a. relating to the season of Advent.

ADVENTURE, s. [aventure, Fr.] an incident which is not under our direction; a hazard; an incident or occurrence. In Commerce, a parcel of goods, sent by sea, at a person's own risk, to foreign parts. Bill of adventure, in the mercantile way, is a bill or writing signed by a merchant, testifying that the goods mentioned in it to be shipped on board such a vessel, belong to another person who is to run the hazard; the merchant being only to account for the produce of them, be it more or less.

TO ADVENTURE, v. n. to stand the chance; to run the risk.

In an active sense, to endanger.

ADVENTURER, s. [adventurarius, Fr.] one who seeks occasions of hazard; one who exposes himself to danger; a knight-errant.

ADVENTUROUS, a. that is ready to expose himself to the greatest dangers.

ADVENTUROUSLY, ad. in a hazardous, daring, and bold manner.

ADVERB, s. [adverbium, Lat.] is a word joined to verbs, to express the manner, time, &c. of an action; as, he fought bravely; here bravely is an adverb. Adverbs are likewise added to adjectives and to other adverbs, in order to modify or ascertain their meaning. Thus, he did the business extremely well: the word well qualifies the action of doing, and the word extremely does the same in regard to well.

ADVERBIAL, a. [adverbialis, Lat.] that is used in the sense of an adverb.

ADVERBIALLY, ad. [adverbialiter, Lat.] like, or in the manner of, an adverb.

ADVERSARIA, s. [Lat.] a sort of common-place book, used by students, to enter any remarkable observation or occurrence they meet with in reading or conversation.

ADVERSARY, s. [adversarius, Lat.] one who sets himself in opposition to another; an enemy, or one who seeks to do another an injury.

ADVERSATIVE, a. [adversativus, Lat.] a word which makes some opposition or variety. In Grammar, it expresses some difference between what goes before and what follows, as in the phrase, he lost money, but takes no pains to get it, the word but is an adversative conjunction.

ADVERSE, a. [adversus, Lat.] contrary; acting in opposite directions. Figuratively, contrary to the wish or desire. Applied to condition, unsuccessful, calamitous, in opposition to prosperous.

ADVERSELY, adversely, ad. in an adverse or unhappy manner; disagreeably.

ADVERSITY, s. [adversitas, Lat.] a state which is opposite to our wishes, and the cause of sorrow.

TO ADVERT, v. n. [adverto, Lat.] to take notice of; to regard, observe, to attend to; with the particle before the object.

ADVERTENCE, ADVERTENCY, s. attention to; regard to; consideration of; heedfulness.

TO ADVERTISE, v. a. [advertit, Fr.] to give a person notice or information; to publish a thing lost, found, or wanted, in the newspapers, or by hand-bills, with a description of its peculiarities; now practised instead of crying it.

ADVERTISEMANT, s. [advertisementum, Fr.] admonition; instruction; advice; publication of a thing in a newspaper; or an article, containing the description of a thing lost.

ADVERTISER, s. he that brings or gives intelligence or information. The paper which contains advertisements.

ADVERTISING, part. active in giving intelligence, advice, or admonition.

ADVICE, s. [avis, Fr.] opinion, or counsel; instruction; the result of judicious reflection; prudence, or discretion. Followed by the particle with, consultation, deliberation. Used with the word receive or have, information, news, or intelligence.

ADVISABLE, (advisable) a. that may, or is fit to, be advised; prudent.

ADVISABLENESS, (advisableness) s. the quality which renders a thing proper to be advised; fitness; propriety.

TO ADVISE, (advise) v. a. [aviser, Fr.] to recommend a thing as useful; to give a person an idea or hint of; to remind; to inform, or give intelligence of an action transacted at a distance.

TO ADVISE, (advise) v. n. [aviser, Fr.] used with the particle with before the person, to consult. To consider; to examine; to give one's opinion.

ADVISED, (advised) part. deliberate; guided by prudence after a due examination of the nature and consequences; done on purpose.

ADVISEDLY, (advisedly) ad. in a deliberate manner; with due consideration; prudently; with any peculiar design; on purpose.

ADVISEDNESS, (advisedness) s. a state wherein a person has taken the advice and counsel of others; deliberation; caution.

ADVISEMENT, (advice) s. [avise-ment, Fr.] advice, or counsel; prudence and circumspection.

ADVISER, (adviser) s. he that gives advice, or counsel; an adviser, or counsellor.

ADULATION, s. [adulatio, Lat.] the act of bestowing more praise upon a person than is due; including in it too high a commendation of his virtues and excellences, and an entire neglect of his defects.

ADULATOR, s. [adulator, Lat.] a flatterer; one who pays a higher compliment to another than he deserves.

ADULATORY, a. [adulatorius, Lat.] in a flattering or complimentary manner.

ADULT, a. [adultus, Lat.] grown up; arrived to the age of discretion.

ADULT, s. one who is arrived at the years of manhood. In Law, a youth between fourteen and twenty-five years of age.

ADULTERANT, s. [adulterans, Lat.] the person who is guilty of adultery; a thing which debases by admixture.

TO ADULTERATE, v. a. [adultero, Lat.] to violate the bed of a married person; to corrupt or debase by some foreign mixture.

ADULTERATE, a. flowing from, or owing to, the crime of adultery; counterfeit, though resembling in appearance, yet inferior in value; debased by mixture.

ADULTERATENESS, s. the quality or state of being adulterate; counterfeit.

ADULTERATION, s. [adulteratio, Lat.] the act of corrupting by a foreign mixture; or endeavouring to make things to pass for more than their intrinsic value, by their resemblance to something better.

ADULTERER, s. [adulter, Lat.] the person guilty of lying with his neighbour's wife.

ADULTERESS, s. a woman guilty of violating her husband's bed.

ADULTERINE, s. [adulterine, Fr.] in Law, a child born of an adulteress.

ADULTEROUS, a. [adulter, Lat.] guilty of adultery; base and corrupted. Figuratively, idolatrous.

ADULTERY, s. [adulterium, Lat.] the crime of being false to the marriage bed. Figuratively, idolatry.

TO ADUMBRATE, v. a. [adumbrare, Lat.] to shadow; to give a slight resemblance or faint likeness, alluding to that of shadows, with respect to the bodies by which they are formed.

ADUMBRATION, s. the act of giving a slight representation, or illustration; an imperfect resemblance, like that of a shadow; a faint glimmering. In Heraldry, when any figure in a coat is so obscured, that nothing but the outline is visible.

ADUNATION, s. [ad and unus, Lat.] union; the junction of two or more bodies.

ADUNCITY, s. [aduncitas, Lat.] crookedness; flexure inward; hookedness.

ADUNQUE, a. [aduncus, Lat.] crooked.

ADVOCATE, s. [advocatus, Lat.] among the Romans, a person skilled in their law, and who undertook the defence of causes at the bar. Advocate is still used in countries and courts where the civil law obtains, for those who plead and defend causes. In common use it means one who manages the cause of another, or answers objections brought against it. In Scotland there is a lord advocate, who is one of the officers of state, and defends the king's right in all public meetings; prosecutes all capital crimes; concurs in all pursuits wherein the king has interest; and may plead all causes, unless when acting as an ordinary lord of session, in which case he may plead only the king's; there is also a college or faculty of advocates, 180 in number, who are appointed to plead in all actions before the lords of session.

ADVOCATION, s. the office of an advocate.
ADVOWED, a. [advowé, Fr.] he that has the right of advowson.
ADVOWSON, s. in Law, the right to present to a benefice.

TO ADURE, v. n. [aduro, Lat.] to consume by fire.
ADUST, a. [adustus, Lat.] burnt up, scorched, and thereby rendered brittle; able to burn, scorching hot. Figuratively, choleric.

ADUSTED, part. [adustus, Lat.] burnt or set on fire; warm, with respect to temperament.

ADUSTIBLE, a. that may be burnt or scorched up.
ADY, s. the palm-tree of the island of St. Thomas.
ADYTUM, [Gr.] the sacred apartment in the ancient temples, which only the priests might enter.

ADZE. See ADDICE.
E, a diphthong, wherein the sound of the A is very obscure, used by the Romans and Saxons, but now very little used, being changed for the simple e.

ÆDILE, s. [ædilis, Lat.] a Roman magistrate, deriving his name from being surveyor of the buildings, both public and private; such as baths, aqueducts, bridges, and roads; he inspected the weights and measures, took cognizance of disorderly houses; revised all plays before their being exhibited; had the care of the acts of the senate, and the examination of all books which were intended for publication.

ÆGINA, an island and town of ancient Greece, in the bay on which Athens stands. It was a considerable naval and commercial power, but it fell before its more brilliant neighbour and rival. It had a temple dedicated to Zeus Panhellenius, of which some ruins remain; and casts of the sculptures in which are now to be seen in the British Museum.

ÆGIS, s. in Mythology, the name given to the shield of Jupiter and Pallas. It derives its name from Jupiter covering his shield with the skin of the goat Amalthea, which he is reported to have sucked. This he afterwards gave to Minerva, whose shield is called by this name.

ÆLFRIC, an Anglo-Saxon archbishop of Canterbury, who did much to promote learning in his time. A Latin Glossary, and a Translation of part of the Old Testament into his own tongue, with some Canons delivered to the Clergy under him, are yet known. He died in 1005.

ÆLIA CAPITOLINA, the name by which Jerusalem was known, when the repeated rebellions of the Jews against the Roman power led to the final and deepest dishonour of the city, in the time of the emperor Hadrian.

ÆMILIUS, the name of an ancient family of Rome, in which are numbered the general defeated by Hannibal at Cannæ, and the conqueror of Perseus, the last Macedonian monarch.

ÆNEAS, a Trojan prince, according to the old fables, son of Aphrodite, the goddess of love. His fame rests on the epic poem of Virgil, called the Æneid, which was written in accordance with the popular belief that, when Troy was taken, he fled, and after many adventures founded in Italy the kingdom where Rome afterwards arose. The old historians of England used to ascribe the establishment of an imaginary British monarchy before the coming of the Romans to one of his sons, named Brutus.

ÆNEID, s. the epic poem of Virgil, celebrating the adventures of Æneas, written in the reign of the emperor Augustus.

ENIGMA, s. [Gr.] a proposition put in obscure, and often contradictory, terms, in order to exercise the sagacity of a person; or an obscure description of a thing, delivered in such terms as render the explication difficult, and the meaning not intelligible at first sight.

ÆOLIANS, one of the most ancient tribes of the Grecian stock, originally inhabiting Thessaly, the colonists of a considerable part of the coast of Asia Minor. Their dialect is believed to have been akin to the Doric, but there are so few remains of it that a satisfactory judgment cannot be formed.

ÆOLIC, ÆOLIAN, a. in Grammar, one of the five dialects of the Greek tongue. It was first used in Boeotia, whence it passed into Æolis, and was that which Sappho and Alcaeus wrote in. Æolian harp, is a musical instrument played by the wind.

ÆOLIPILE, s. [æolus and pila, Lat.] an instrument by which the conversion of water into elastic aeriform vapour, by heat, used to be demonstrated. It consisted of a hollow metallic ball, with a slender neck. This was the first steam-engine, and is ascribed to Hero of Alexandria.

ÆOLUS, in heathen Mythology, the god of the winds.

ÆRA, s. [Lat.] in Chronology, a series of years, commencing from a certain fixed point of time, called an epoch. The principal æras that need to be known are:—the Christian æra, reckoned from the birth of Christ, although it is generally admitted that it is placed four years too late; the year of the world, reckoned from 4004 years before the birth of Christ; the Olympiads, periods of four years each, reckoned from 776 B.C.; the building of Rome, reckoned from 753 B.C.; and the Hegira, reckoned from Mohammed's flight to Medina, 622 A.D.

ÆRIAL, a. [ætrius, Lat.] consisting of air; produced by the air; inhabiting the air; placed in the air; lofty; high.

ÆRIANS, s. a branch of the sect called Arians, who added some peculiar doctrines of their own, as that there is no difference between bishops and priests: from Ærius, an Armenian priest, in the fourth century.

ÆRIE, s. See ÆRY.

ÆRIFORM, a. found in the state of the air.
ÆROGRAPHY, s. [æër and grapho, Gr.] a description of the air, its limits, dimensions, properties, &c.

ÆROLITES, s. [æër and lithos, Gr.] meteoric stones; metallic substances which have fallen from the air, either by night or day, during a clear sky, accompanied usually by a loud explosion, and very vivid light. The observed instances are almost numberless, and aerolites of unrecorded fall are found in all parts of the earth. Late speculations associate them with the periodically observed meteoric showers in August and November, and assign them a planetary origin.

ÆROLOGY, s. [æër and logos, Gr.] the science which teaches the nature and properties of the air.

ÆROMANCY, s. [æër and manteia, Gr.] the art of divining by the air.

ÆROMETRY, s. [æër and metro, Gr.] the art of measuring the air, comprehending the laws of motion, gravitation, pressure, elasticity, rarefaction, condensation, &c. See PNEUMATICS.

ÆTRONAUT, s. [æër and nautæ, Gr.] a person who ascends in an air balloon.

ÆEROSCOPY, s. [æër and skopeo, Gr.] the observation of the air.

ÆEROSTATION, s. [æær and statio, Lat.] the principles and art of aerial navigation. The machines employed are called balloons. See BALLOON.

ÆRUGINOUS, a. [ærugio, Lat.] resembling or belonging to the rust of copper. Applied to colour, it is by some described as a green, and by others as a brown.

ÆRUGO, s. [Lat.] rust, particularly that of copper; verdigris.
ÆSCHINES, a celebrated Athenian orator, the rival of the more celebrated Demosthenes. On his banishment from Athens, he retreated to Rhodes, where he taught Rhetoric, and died about 317 B.C. Some of his speeches have been preserved, and are admired for clearness and elegance.

ÆSCHYLUS, the greatest dramatic poet of Greece. He was personally engaged in the battles of Marathon and Salamis; and when advanced in years, visited Hiero, tyrant or king of Syracuse, who was a patron of literature. Of his plays, one complete series of 3 plays, called the Orestes, and 4 others, have been preserved: of which the Prometheus Bound is the grandest in thoughts and action of all the Greek tragedies that are known. He was the first dramatist who introduced dialogue on the stage. He died about 456 B.C.

ÆSCULAPIUS, or Asclepius, the god of the healing art in the mythologies of Rome and Greece.

ÆSOP, an ancient Grecian fable-writer. Very little of his personal history is known; and most of the fables commonly ascribed to him were written by other authors. He died about 550 B.C.

ÆSTHETICS, s. [aisthētics, Gr.] a term invented by a German metaphysician, Baumgarten, to designate the philosophy of poesy, or the fine arts; which is now regarded generally as a separate department of metaphysical sciences.

ÆSTUARY, s. [æstuarium, Lat.] in Pharmacy, a vapour bath. In Geography, an arm of the sea, which runs a good way within land; as the Bristol Channel.

ÆTHER, s. [Gr.] in Physics, a thin subtle matter, finer and rarer than air, commencing from the limits of our atmosphere, and expanded through all the regions of space. In Chemistry, the lightest, most volatile, and most inflammable of all liquids; produced by the distillation of acids with rectified spirit of wine.

ÆTHERIAL, a. [ætherius, Lat.] formed of æther; celestial, heavenly. Ætherial space, or region, is that space in the heavens where the pure unmixed æther is supposed to be found; and figuratively is used for heavenly. Ætherial oil, in Chemistry, named likewise essential, is a fine, subtle, essential oil, approaching nearly to the nature of a spirit. The pure liquor, which rises next after the spirit, in distilling turpentine, is termed the ætherial oil of turpentine.

ÆTITES, s. [aitōs, Gr.] or eagle-stone; a small round flint-stone, containing a fossilized sponge, the inner part of which having been detached from the outer flinty covering, makes it a natural rarity. It was regarded as possessed of magical properties, formerly.

ÆTNA, now MONTE GIBELLO; a volcano or burning mountain of Sicily, situated in Long. 15.0. E. Lat. 38.0. N. This mountain, renowned from the earliest ages for its magnitude and terrible eruptions, is on the eastern coast, near Catania, in an extensive plain, called Val Demoni. Its height has been calculated to be about 10,900 feet, and its circumference at the base 180 miles. The distance from Catania to its summit is about 30 miles. Its top is perpetually covered with snow. About sixty eruptions are recorded, in some of which many towns lying near it have been destroyed, and many thousands of lives. The fine dust which has been thrown out on these occasions has been seen falling on the coast of Africa. At the elevation of about 3000 feet, is a magnificent chestnut tree, many thousands of years old, 38 feet in circumference.

ÆTOLIA, the name of that portion of ancient Greece, which lay on the N. side of the Corinthian Gulf, at its entrance from the Ionian Sea.

ÆTHER, ad. at a distance. Figuratively, foreign or strange; distant, in opposition to intimate friendship.

AFFABILITY, s. [affabilitas, Lat.] a quality which renders a person easy to be spoken to; including modesty, good-nature, and condescension; generally applied to superiors.

AFFABLE, a. [affabilis, Lat.] easy to be spoken to, on account of complaisance, good-nature, and condescension.

AFFABLENESS, s. See AFFABILITY.

AFFAIR, ad. in an affable manner; courteously; civilly.

AFFAIRE, s. [affaire, Fr.] something done, or to be done; employment; the concerns and transactions of a nation; circumstances, or the condition of a person; business.

To AFFECT, v. a. [afficio, Lat.] to produce an effect; to cause; to act upon; to excite, stir up, or work upon the passions; to aim at; to endeavour after, applied to persons; to have a tendency; to assume; to tend to; to be fond of, or long for; to assume a character not real, or natural, and to support it in an awkward manner; followed by with.

AFFECTATION, s. [affectatio, Lat.] an artful or hypocritical assuming of a character, or appearance, which is not our own, and to which we have no claim.

AFFECTED, part. having the affections excited; peculiarly fond of; disposed, with the word ill; personated, or appearing unnatural.

AFFECTEDLY, ad. in a manner which has more of appearance than reality.

AFFECTEDNESS, s. the quality of assuming an unnatural or false appearance. Distinguished from hypocrisy by its object; that being religion, and this politeness, grandeur, learning, &c.

AFFECTION, s. [affectio, Lat.] state of being affected, or wrought upon by any cause; passions in general; love, fondness, regard, or good-will; zeal; a desire of obtaining. In Logic, an attribute peculiar to some subject, and arising from the very idea or essence of it; styled by the school-men, proprium quarto modo. Affections of the body, in Physics, are certain modifications occasioned by motion. In Medicine, it implies a morbid state of the body, or some of its parts.

AFFECTIONATE, v. [affectionne, Fr.] zealous, or a strong and longing desire; warm; strongly inclined, or disposed to; fond, tender, with all the glowings of paternal love.

AFFECTIONATELY, ad. in an affectionate, fond, endearing, and benevolent manner.

AFFECTIONATENESS, s. the quality or state of exercising the social, benevolent, kind, and endearing passions.

AFFECTIONED, a. full of affection, conceited, affected; mentally disposed.

AFFECTIVE, a. that acts upon, or excites a disagreeable or painful sensation.

AFFEORS, s. in Law, persons appointed to tax, assess, and confirm such fines as are set in inferior courts; in courts leet, to settle the fines of those that are guilty of faults, which have no express penalty assigned by the statute; in courts baron, to moderate americiations.

AFFGHANISTAN, a large country of Southern Asia, lying between British India and Persia. Its capital is Cabul: Ghuznee and Candahar are considerable towns. In climate, animals, plants, &c., it generally resembles India; but birds and trees common in more temperate regions also occur. The Afghans, who possess this country by ancient conquest, retain their original nomade habits, leaving commerce, which is limited, trade, and most frequently the cultivation of the land, to the remnants of the former possessors, the Hindus and Persians. In religion, they are Mohammedans; and they display some care for popular education, which is, of course, in the hands of the priesthood. Their political condition bears some resemblance to that of the states of Europe during the middle ages; the shah, or king, being the sovereign of the khans of the tribes composing the nation, rather than of the nation itself, and his government being almost wholly restricted to military affairs and revenue. In the army, also, the Gholams exactly resemble the condottieri of Europe.

AFFIANCE, s. [affiance, Fr.] confirming one's own by plighting of faith, betrothing. Figuratively, trust or confidence, the effect of the mutual vows persons make to each other; a firm trust, an unshaken reliance.

To AFFIANCE, v. a. [affiancee, Fr.] to bind oneself to marry. Figuratively, to give confidence.

AFFIDAVIT, s. [Lat.] an oath in writing, sworn before an authorized person; which contains the time, residence, and addition of the person who makes it.

AFFIED, part. a. joined by contract; affianced.

AFFILIATION, s. [ad and filius, Lat.] adoption, or the making a son.

AFFINED, part. [affinis, Lat.] joined by affinity or marriage to another; related to.

AFFINITY, s. [affinitas, Lat.] relation by marriage, in opposition to that which is by blood; connexion; resemblance to, applied to things. In Chemistry, is that peculiar property by which different bodies unite and combine with certain other bodies exclusively, in preference to any other connexion: called also elective attraction.

To AFFIRM, v. a. and v. n. [affirmo, Lat.] to confirm a thing as truth; to declare; to assert; to tell confidently. It is synonymous with the following words: To declare, signifies to tell any thing simply, but seriously; to protest, implies a solemn affirmation; to aver, signifies a positive declaration; to assert, that declaration defended; to maintain, implies a support of such assertion; to swear, is to ratify it by an oath.

AFFIRMABLE, a. that may be affirmed or asserted.

AFFIRMANCE, s. in Law, confirmation; opposed to repeal.

AFFIRMANT, s. [affirmans, Lat.] the person who affirms, or makes a positive declaration.

AFFIRMATION, s. [affirmatio, Lat.] the act of strengthening or supporting any opinion; confirmation; assertion; or tenaciousness of any thing or position asserted; confirmation, in opposition to repeal. In Grammar, what is otherwise called a verb, because it expresses what we affirm or assert of any subject. In Law, the method allowed by law to the Quakers as a pledge of their truth in judicial courts, instead of an oath. If they make a false affirmation, they are subject to the penalties of the law; but this is only with regard to oaths of allegiance, and on public occasions; for in criminal cases their affirmation is not taken in evidence.

AFFIRMATIVE, a. that positively affirms or asserts a thing; applied to persons, positive; obstinate in opinion; dogmatical; or one that would affirm any thing. In Algebra, applied to quantities, those which express a real magnitude, in opposition to those which are negative, or do not. Affirmative sign, in Algebra, shows that the quantity it is prefixed to is affirmative; it is made thus, (+).

AFFIRMATIVELY, ad. in an affirmative or positive manner, in opposition to negative.

AFFIRMER, s. that person who asserts a thing to be true; he that affirms; he who takes the affirmative side of a question in dispute.

To AFFIX, v. a. [affigo, Lat.] to be fixed or united to; to connect with; to subjoin; to establish.

AFFIX, s. [affixum, Lat.] in Grammar, some letter or sentence joined to a word.

AFFIXION, s. the art of affixing, or state of a noun that has an affix.

AFFLATION, s. [afflatum, Lat.] the act of breathing upon any thing.

AFFLATUS, s. [Lat.] Divine inspiration. In Physic, a vapour or blast, which is prejudicial to the health.

To AFFLICT, v. a. [affligo, Lat.] to use so as to occasion sorrow; to mortify, or practise all the duties of sincere repentance; to punish; to be in adversity, or involved in temporal unhappiness.

AFFLICTION, s. [afflictio, Lat.] that which causes a sensation of pain; a very disagreeable circumstance; calamity.

AFFLICTIVE, a. that occasions torment, misery, or a sensation of pain on account of its disagreeableness; that which causes sorrow.

AFFLUENCE, AFFLUENCY, s. [affluentia, Lat.] in its primary sense, the flowing to any place; resort, or concourse. Almost always used figuratively, for abundance of wealth, plenty.

AFFLUENT, a. [affluens, Lat.] in its primary sense, flowing to any part. In its secondary, abundant in wealth; plentiful; exuberant; wealthy.

AFFLUENTNESS, s. the quality of being wealthy, or abounding with all the conveniences of life.

AFFLUX, s. [affluxus, Lat.] the act of flowing, or thing which flows.

AFFLUXION, s. [affluxio, Lat.] the act of flowing to a particular place; that which flows from one place to another.

To AFFORD, v. a. [affourer, Fr.] to yield or produce; to supply, cause, or grant; to be able to sell without losing.

To AFFOREST, v. a. to turn ground into a forest.

To AFFRANCHISE, v. a. [affranchir, Fr.] to make free.

To AFFRAY, v. a. [effrayer, Fr.] to strike with terror or fear; to fright.

AFFRAY, AFFRAYMENT, s. in Law, formerly an affright caused to one or more, by persons appearing in unusual armour. At present, a skirmish or fighting, wherein some blow is given, or some weapon drawn. It differs from an assault, as this a public, but that a personal wrong.

AFFRICTION, s. SEE FRICTION.

To AFFRIGHT, v. a. [a and frighten, Sax.] to affect with fear, including in it the idea of something dangerous and mischievous, something that can deprive us of pleasure, or affect us with pain, and that the impression of this passion is sudden; to intimidate and dishearten.

AFFRIGHT, s. terror; fear, denoting a sudden impression, in opposition to fear, which implies a long continuance.

AFFRIGHTFUL, a. abounding in such qualities as may cause fear.

To AFFRONT, v. a. [affronter, Fr.] in its primary significance, to meet face to face, to confront. Figuratively, to injure a person before his face, including in it the secondary ideas of contempt, disdain, and entire neglect of decorum.

AFFRONT, s. an insult or injury offered to the face, including the ideas of contempt and rudeness; indecent behaviour; outrage.

AFFRONTÉE, s. in Heraldry, an appellation given to animals facing one another on an escutcheon.

AFFRONTÉ, s. the person who offers the affront.

AFFRONTING, AFFRONTIVE, part. a. that occasions or causes an affront.

AFFUSION, s. [affuso, Lat.] the act of pouring one thing upon another.

AFIELD, ad. to the field.

AFLOAT, ad. [from float, Fr.] borne up by the water; floating. Figuratively, fluctuating.

AFOOT, ad. walking, in opposition to riding. Figuratively, in agitation; commended.

AFORE, prep. SEE BEFORE.

AFORE, ad. applied to time, that which is past, antecedent to a thing mentioned.

AFORETIME, ad. in times past, or those which have preceded that in which they are referred to.

AFFRAID, part. [effrayer, Fr.] to be timorous; to be affected with fear, either by a present object which may endanger our safety, or by the prospect of a distant or future evil.

AFFRESH, ad. anew; again; a second time.

AFRICA, one of the four principal parts of the world; bounded on the N. by the Mediterranean sea; on the W. and S. by the Atlantic Ocean; on the E. by the Indian Ocean and Red Sea. It is in length about 4600 miles, and its greatest breadth about 3500. The greatest part of it is within the torrid zone, but the coasts are more temperate, and in the N. and S. extremities, not unhealthy. Nearly the whole of the N. half of this continent is occupied by an immense desert, called the Sahara; and there are other smaller desert tracts beside. Its principal rivers are, the Nile, which waters Egypt; and the Quorra or Niger, which flows into the Gulf of Guinea. The mountains whence both these rivers flow are the highest in Africa, and are called the Mountains of the Moon; there is another chain, still called Atlas, separating the Barbary States from the Sahara. It abounds in peculiar animals; and as so little of the country is reclaimed, or even reclaimable, they are in numbers and ferocity almost the lords of the soil. Lions, and their kindred races, elephants, rhinoceroses, hyenas, baboons, zebras, with hippopotami and crocodiles, serpents, and birds of prey, are to be met with almost through its entire range. Its plants are mostly peculiar to itself, and every year introduces to our hot-houses new specimens of rare beauty. The natives of Africa, with the exception of the Egyptians, who resemble the Caucasian race of man, are negroes, and preserve, amidst great differences in colour, &c., the general appearance of that race. Ivory and gold are its most valuable exports.

AFTER, prep. [after, Sax.] applied to time, denotes that something had been done before. Applied to place, behind or following. Concerning; according to; agreeable to, in imitation of.

AFTER, ad. succeeding or following in time; second or following in place, in opposition to before.

AFTER-AGES, s. ages which are to come, or future.

AFTER-CLAP, s. some unexpected incident after an affair is supposed to be ended.

AFTER-COST, s. expenses which are incurred after the original bargain or plan is finished.

AFTER-CROP, s. the second crop or produce of a ground in one year.

AFTER-GAME, s. an expedient after the original plan or first attempt has miscarried.

AFTER-MATH, s. second crop of grass mown in autumn.

AFTERNON, s. that space, or interval, which is from twelve at noon till the evening. Figuratively, decline; "The afternoon of life."

AFTER-PAINS, s. pains after birth.

AFTER-PROOF, s. evidence posterior to the thing in question; qualities known by subsequent experience.

AFTER-TASTE, s. a taste remaining upon the tongue after the draught, which was not perceived in the act of drinking.

AFTER-THOUGHT, s. an expedient formed too late; reflection, or thought arising after the finishing of a thing; repentance.

AFTER-TIMES, s. [seldom used in the singular] future ages; in time to come.

AFTERWARD, AFTERWARDS, ad. in succeeding or future time, referring to something which preceded, and which it is supposed to follow.

AFTER-WIT, s. an unseasonable expedient, or a contrivance which is too late.

AGA, s. the title of a Turkish military officer.

AGAIN, ad. [agen, Sax.] a second time, implying the repetition of the same action; on the other hand, denoting a correspondence or reciprocation of action. After ask, a return of a thing given; return by way of recompence, or reimbursement. After much, or words implying dimension, a repetition of the same quantity which preceded.

AGAINST, prep. [ageon, Sax.] used of persons, in opposition, alluding to the position of two armies ready to attack each other. After speak, to be represented in a bad light. Applied to motion, contrary direction; or that in which one body meets with another.

AGAPAI, (agapai), s. [Gr.] love feasts, exercised by the primitive Christians, and revived by the Methodists.

AGAPE, ad. a stupid kind of admiration; wondering, as expressed by the ignorant, with open mouths.

AGARIC, s. [agaricum, Lat.] in Botany, the general name for all kinds of fungi resembling the mushroom.

AGATE, s. [agate, Fr.] a stone of the flint kind, much used for ornaments, because of the beautifully shaded colours it displays, and the polish it will take.

AGATHOCLES, one of the tyrants or kings of Syracuse. He rose from the low condition of a potter, by daring, eloquence, personal appearance, and wealth, to such importance, that he seized on the chief power. His reign was a troubled one, but it won him a great name. He died in 289 B. C.

AGAVE, s. the common American aloe.

AGAZED, part. struck with a sudden terror; terrified to stupidity.

AGE, s. [age, Fr.] the time of a man's life; a succession of generations of men; a century, or the space of a hundred years. Persons are said to be of age, when they have reached the period (in our country, 21 years) at which they are by law reckoned capable of managing their own affairs. Age of the moon, the interval that has elapsed since the last new moon.

AGES OF THE WORLD, in Poetry, are the periods into which the ancient poets divided the history of mankind, viz. the golden age, when all were innocent; the silver, when crime first began; the brazen, when it gained the upper hand; and the iron, when all good seemed overthrown. In History, divisions of the history of the world, either for the convenience of a synoptical and chronological view of the whole, or of which divisions almost every writer makes his own; or else according to the degree of credibility that attaches to the narratives of the times: thus we have the Mythic, in which facts cannot be obtained at all; the Heroic, in which we obtain them, but magnified and distorted; and the Historic age, in which we have credible documentary evidence of what has occurred. But these divisions cannot be made exact.

AGED, a. that has lived a long course or series of years, generally applied to animals. Figuratively, that which has stood for many years; decayed by length of time, applied to inanimate things.

AGEDLY, ad. after the manner of a person advanced in years, or in the decline of life.

AGEN, ad. See AGAIN.

AGENCY, s. the quality of acting; action; the state of being in, or exerting action.

AGENT, a. [agens, Lat.] that which acts, or is active, in opposition to patient or passive.

AGENT, s. a being, endowed with the power of action. In Physics, that which is endowed with power to act on another, and to produce a change or alteration by such action. The schools divide agents into natural or free. Natural, are those which are determined by the great Author of nature to one sort of effect, with an incapacity to perform any other, as fire to heat only, not to cool. A free agent is that which may do or not do any action, and has the conscious perception that his actions are caused by his own will, without any external necessity or determination whatever. In Commerce, an agent is a person intrusted with transacting business for another at a distance, or the negotiation of the affairs of a state or corporation. Agent and Patient, in Law, is a person who does or gives something to himself, being both the doer of a thing, and the party to whom it is done. Thus a creditor being left executor, he may retain so much of the estate of the deceased as will pay his debt, and by that means becomes both agent and patient, i. e. the party to whom the debt is due, and the person who pays it.

AGESILAUS, one of the most noted kings of Sparta. He raised his state to its highest pitch of power, humbling, though not defeating, the Persians, and subjecting Athens, and the other states of Greece, except only the Thebans, under the brief command of Epaminondas. He died as he was returning from a successful, but not very honourable, campaign in Egypt, in 360 B. C.

AGGERHUYS. See CHRISTIANIA.

TO AGGLOMERATE, v. a. [agglomerare, Lat.] to gather up in a ball; to gather together.

AGGLUTINANTS, s. [agglutino, Lat.] substances which have the quality of glueing, or sticking any bodies together.

TO AGGLUTINATE, v. a. to unite one part to another, as with glue; to make one part stick to another; followed by to.

AGGLUTINATION, s. the joining of two bodies fast together.

AGGLUTINATIVE, a. that which has the power of making bodies adhere closely.

TO AGGRANDIZE, v. a. [aggrandisere, Fr.] to exalt, prefer, or to make considerable by the addition of posts and pensions; to enlarge, exalt, or ennoble, applied to the faculties and sentiments of the mind. It is applied to persons generally, sometimes to things.

AGGRANDIZEMENT, s. the act of promoting to a high place in a state; or the act of conferring power, honour, and wealth on a person.

AGGRANDIZER, s. the person who confers honour and riches on another.

TO AGGRAVATE, v. a. [aggravare, Lat.] to increase the weight of a thing. Figuratively, to add to the enormity, applied to crimes.

AGGRAVATION, s. the act of making worse, applied to the demerit of actions. Some circumstance which heightens the guilt of any crime, &c.

AGGREGATE, a. [aggregatus, Lat.] assembled or collected into one mass.

AGGREGATE, s. [from aggrego, Lat.] an assemblage formed of several particulars; the sum total or result of several things added together.

TO AGGREGATE, v. a. [aggrego, Lat.] to collect together several particulars into one sum, or several parcels or particles into one mass.

AGGREGATION, s. a whole made up of several parts added together. In Arithmetic, the sum total, formed by the addition of several units together. In Physics, an assemblage of several things which have no natural connexion with each other.

TO AGGRESS, v. n. [aggressor, Lat.] to commit the first act of hostility; to make the first attack; to occasion or begin a quarrel.

AGGRESSION, s. [aggressio, Lat.] the act of beginning a quarrel, or being guilty of the first attack.

AGGRESSOR, s. the person who commits the first act of hostility or injury.

AGGRIEVANCE, s. an action which causes pain or uneasiness in the person to whom it was done, and includes in it the secondary idea of injury, or something undeserved.

TO AGGRIEVE, v. a. [from gravis, Lat.] to do or say something which shall make a person uneasy; to offer an injury, which shall occasion vexation.

TO AGGROUPE, v. a. [aggruppare, Ital.] to bring together into one figure; to crowd together: a term of painting.

AGHAST, a. [a, and ghast, Sax.] having all the signs of a person terrified by an apparition; like one who had seen a ghost.

AGILE, a. [agilis, Lat.] active; acting with great speed and readiness; nimble. Applied to the mind, alert, vigorous, in opposition to slow and stupid.

AGILENESS, s. the quality of performing without pain or any other impediment.

AGILITY, s. [agilitas, Lat.] a capacity of moving without pain, or any other impediment.

AGILOCHUM, s. aloes-wood; occasionally used as a medicine for nervous disorders.

AGINCOURT, a village in the department of the Straits of Calais, rendered famous by the battle fought near it, Oct. 25, 1415, wherein Henry V. of England, with an army of about 12,000 men, obtained a complete victory over the French army, consisting of about 60,000 men. The French lost about 10,000 men, and 14,000 prisoners, among whom were the duke of Orleans, and many others of great distinction: while the loss of the English, including the duke of York and the earl of Suffolk, did not exceed 1200. Lat. 50. 31. N. Long. 2. 10. E.

AGIO, s. [Venet. aid or assistance] in Commerce, the exchange or difference between bank and current money, or cash. Thus, if a bargain be made to pay either 100 livres bank or 105 cash, the agio is said to be 5 per cent. The agio varies almost every where; at Amsterdam it is usually from 3 to 5 per cent.; at Rome near 25 per 1500; at Venice 10 per cent. fixed; and at Genoa from 15 to 16. It likewise signifies the profit which arises from money advanced, and is the same as premium.

AGIS, the name of four kings of Sparta, the fourth of whom endeavoured to reform the state by reinforcing the laws of Lycurgus, by abolishing the distinction between the Spartans, or noblesse, and the Lacedæmonians, who were the unprivileged classes of Sparta. He fell a victim to the conservative spirit of the rulers, and the fickleness of the people. He was put to death in 241 B. C., when only 24 years of age.

AGISTMENT, s. in Law, the feed of other people's cattle, taken into any ground, at a certain rate per week. In a large sense, it extends to all manner of common or herbage, or the profit arising from thence.

AGITABLE, a. [agilabilis, Lat.] that may be put in motion. To AGITATE, v. a. [agito, Lat.] to move by repeated actions; to actuate, act upon, or give motion to; to disturb, or disorder by the distractions of different motives; to toss from one to another, to discuss or controvert with great warmth.

AGITATION, s. [agitatio, Lat.] the act of shaking or putting the particles of a body into motion; disorder of the mind arising from the violence of different passions; consideration or deliberation of several persons.

AGITATOR, s. the person who projects any scheme, occasions any disturbance, or causes any motion; he who manages and conducts the affairs of another.

AGLET, s. a tag of a point carved into some representation of an animal. The pendants at the ends of the chives of flowers.

AGNAIL, s. [Sax.] a whitlow.

AGNATU, s. [Lat.] in the Roman law, the male descendants from the same father, distinguished from cognati, which includes the female descendants.

AGNATION, s. [from agnatus, Lat.] in Law, the relation between the descendants from the same father, including only males.

AGNESI, MARIA G., an eminently accomplished woman who wrote on Philosophy and Mathematics, the daughter of a Bolognese Professor. She died in 1709.

AGNITION, s. [agnitio, Lat.] an acknowledging.

To AGNIZE, v. a. [agnosco, Lat.] to own; to avow; to acknowledge.

AGNOETÆ, s. [a and gnoeto, Gr.] in Church History, a sect of heretics, who held that Christ, with respect to his human nature, was ignorant of some things, and especially the day of judgment.

AGNOMEN, s. [Lat.] an addition of name added to the surname of a person on account of some peculiar action or circumstance; as the addition of Africanus to the name of Scipio, on account of his exploits in Africa.

AGNOMINATION, s. [agnominatio, Lat.] the resemblance or allusion of one word to another both in sound and sense.

AGNUS CASTUS, s. [Lat.] the name of the tree commonly called the chaste tree, from an imaginary virtue of preserving chastity.

AGNUS DEI, s. [Lat. the Lamb of God] in the Roman Church, a flat piece of white wax of an oval form, stamped with the figure of a lamb, and consecrated by the Pope.

AGO, ad. [agen, Sax.] past. When we reckon past time, to-wards, or ending with the present, we use since; as, "It is a year since it happened." But when we reckon from the present, and end with the past, we use ago; as, "It happened three nights ago."

AGOG, ad. [ago, Fr.] eager for the possession of something; longing; having set one's fancy or affections on.

AGONE, ad. [egan, Sax.] past, with respect to time; formerly.

AGONISTES, s. [Gr.] one who used to exhibit at the public games of Greece and Rome, being a candidate for the prizes awarded for superiority of strength, &c.

AGONIZE, v. n. [agonizomai, Gr.] to strive earnestly. Figuratively, to be affected with acute and excessive pain.

AGONY, s. excessive pain.

AGOUTI, s. in Zoology, a class of animals resembling the rabbit, or guinea-pig, to which they are allied. They are natives of South America, and some of the West Indian islands.

AGRA, s. the capital of a province of the same name in Hindustan, 830 miles from Calcutta. It was, in the last century, a most extensive and opulent city, where the Great Mogul sometimes resided. There were above 60 spacious caravansaries, 800 baths, 700 mosques, and 2 magnificent mausoleums. It had a considerable trade, but has since declined. It is seated on the river Jumna, 100 miles S. by E. of Delhi. Lat. 27. 12. N. Long. 77. 56. E.

AGRAIRIAN, a. [agrarius, Lat.] in the Roman Law, a term applied to such laws as relate to the division and distribution of lands.

To AGREE, v. a. [agree, Fr.] to be friends, or in concord, i. e. a state wherein the sentiments of one person are similar to, or the same as, those of another; to consent to do a thing upon certain conditions; to bargain; to resemble; to be like; to match, applied to colour; to tally with; to be consistent with.

AGREEABLE, a. [agreeable, Fr.] suitable; conformable to or consistent with; pleasing; grateful; as suitable to our inclinations or faculties.

AGREEABLENESS, s. the quality which renders a thing grateful to the taste; or, which renders a thing pleasing, below rapture, and less than admiration; likeness; affinity, resemblance.

AGREEABLY, ad. in a manner consistent with, or conformable to; in a manner which affords a pleasing satisfaction.

AGREED, part. settled by mutual consent.

AGREEMENT, s. [in Law Lat. agreementum] friendship; alliance; concord; a contract, bargain, or compact; resemblance.

AGRICOLA, C. JULIUS, a Roman commander in Britain, who conquered Boadicea, reduced the whole of Wales, overcame the army gathered together by Galgacus, and secured all Britain south of the river Clyde and the Frith of Forth by a fortified Vallum. He was the first Roman circumnavigator of our island. Tacitus, his son-in-law, who wrote his Biography, insinuates that he was poisoned by the emperor Domitian, who hated both his success and his virtue, in 93 A. D.

AGRICOLA, (properly HAUSMANN,) RODOLPH, one of the learned men of Europe in the age of Lorenzo the Magnificent. He studied at Italy, and was a professor in the universities of Gröningen and Heidelberg. His works were highly esteemed; and he may be regarded as one of the precursors and pioneers of the Lutheran Reformation. He died in 1485, when only 42 years old.

AGRICULTURE, s. [agricultura, Lat.] the art of tilling and manuring the ground, so as to make it fruitful and bear plants; consisting in manuring, fallowing, sowing, harrowing, reaping, mowing, &c.; the management of the productions of different soils, and planting; together with the culture of forests, timber, &c.

AGRIGENTUM, a magnificent city of ancient Sicily, on the S. coast, a little removed from the sea. It was reduced by the Carthaginians in 406 B. C., and after that time was of no importance in history. The temple of Zeus Olympius there was, according to Diodorus Siculus, the greatest sacred edifice amongst the Greeks, except the temple of Artemis at Ephesus.

AGRIMONY, s. [agrimonia, Lat.] in Botany, a common English plant, formerly used in medicine.

AGRIPPA, See HERON.

AGRIPPA, M. VIPSANIUS, a partisan of Augustus Caesar, and commander of his forces in successful campaigns against L. Antonius and the Aquitanians, and in the naval battles of Mylae and Actium. He consecrated the Pantheon at Rome; and was twice governor of Syria. He died in 12 B. C.

AGRIPPA, HENRY CORNELIUS, a physician of the beginning of the 16th century, who, with Paracelsus and others, who attempted to investigate the hidden causes of natural phenomena, has been generally stigmatized as an impostor, and pretender to magical power. He died in 1535.

AGROUND, ad. a sea term, stranded; stuck fast upon shore, so as not to be got off, and pursue a voyage; hindered by the ground from passing further. Figuratively, meeting with some impediment or obstacle, which renders it impossible to advance in or go on with an affair.

AGUE, s. [aigu, Fr.] a periodical species of fever, beginning with a cold shivering, which is succeeded by heat, and terminates in a sweat. When the cold fit is scarcely perceptible, and there is a return of the hot one only, it is called an intermitting fever. According to the returns of the fit, it is differently denominated. If it returns every day, it is then called a quotidian; if every third day, a tertian; and if every fourth day, a quartan.

AGUED, part. struck or affected with an ague. Figuratively, cold, shivering, trembling, in allusion to the effects of this disorder.

AGUE-FIT, s. the cold, shivering, trembling fit which affects people in the ague.

AGUE-TRÉE, s. a name given sometimes to sassafras.

AGUISH, a. like or having the properties of an ague.

AGUISHNESS, s. the quality which resembles an ague.

AH! interj. denoting some sudden dislike, and occasioned by the apprehension of evil consequences.

AHA! interj. denoting the triumph of contempt; intended to express joy at the calamities of others, and to increase the uneasiness which they themselves experience.

AHASUERUS, the king of Persia whose court is the scene of the story in the Book of Esther; and who is now believed to be the same with Xerxes, whose disastrous attempt on the freedom of Greece is so well known.

AHEAD, ad. a sea term; beyond; implying a greater degree of swiftness.

AHEIGHT, ad. on high; a great distance above us.

AHOUIA, s. a poisonous plant.

A-HULL, ad. a sea term, used when all the sails are furled on account of the violence of the storm, and with the helm lashed on the lee-side, a ship lies nearly with her side to the wind and sea.

ALATA, a Brazilian bird which resembles the spoonbill.

ALAN, or ALEX, a country on the east coast of Africa, south of Abyssinia, and the Straits of Babelmandel; it extends about 1500 leagues in length, from Magadoxo to Cape Guard-a-fui. The coast is sandy and barren, but to the N. the country is more fertile, producing, more particularly, an excellent breed of horses, which the Arabian merchants, who come to trade in their ports, take, together with ivory, gold, Abyssinian slaves captured in war, &c., in exchange for silks, cottons, and other cloths.

AICHTADT, or ERCHTADT, capital of an extensive bishopric of the same name in Franconia. Here are several hospitals, an alms-house, a seminary for students, a cathedral, and other churches, one of which is built after the model of that called the Holy Sepulchre at Jerusalem. Aichtadt is seated in a valley, on the river Altmul, 30 miles S. of Nuremberg.

TO AID, v. a. [aider, Fr.] to give assistance or succour to; to deliver a person in danger, or distress, out of it, by giving him all the assistance, help, or succour in one's power. To support, when applied to the means used to free a person from want.

AID, s. [aide, Fr.] that which contributes to render a thing more easy; assistance; support given to a person. In Politics, a subsidy, or money given to support the necessities of the state.

AID-DE-CAMP, s. [Fr.] in the army, an officer who receives and carries the orders of a general officer to the rest of the army.

AIDERS, s. one who assists or helps; one who takes part with a person, and endeavours to promote his undertaking.

AIDLESS, ad. deprived, or in want of help or assistance to render an undertaking successful, or a misfortune supportable; without aid or assistance from another.

AIGULET, s. [Fr.] a point with tags; points of gold at the end of fringes.

AIKIN, DR. JOHN, a physician who is best known to us as the writer of a very popular book for young persons, called Evenings at Home. He wrote many other works, some addressed to the young, others on more general subjects. He took part in editing the Monthly Magazine. He died in 1822.

TO AIL, v. a. [eglan, Sax.] to disturb; to affect with a disagreeable sensation.

AIL, s. a distemper.

AILEROUS, s. [Fr.] two small shelly substances resembling small wings found at the root of the wings of two-winged flies.

AILING, part. having a weak constitution, subject to disorders; valetudinary.

AILMENT, s. indisposition; disorder; diminution of health.

TO AIM, v. a. to direct a weapon so as to hit any object; to throw a thing at an object so as to strike it. Figuratively, to direct the edge of satire against a particular person.

AIM, s. the position or direction of a weapon, in order to strike an object; the point which is intended to be hit, or the object designed to be struck. Figuratively, an endeavour to obtain any thing; intention; purpose; or design.

AINSWORTH, ROBERT, a schoolmaster of Bolton, Lancashire, and of London, and compiler of the Latin Dictionary, which, till the late work by Scheller, was the principal authority in that tongue. He died in 1743.

AIR, s. [ær, Lat.] applied to all that class of thin, elastic fluids, imperceptible to the eye, called gases; but generally restricted to the atmosphere of our globe, which is composed of oxygen and nitrogen gases, in the proportions of 20 to 80 in a 100 parts, and of carbonic acid gas, about 5 parts in 10,000. In Music, it is the melody of the tune. Figuratively, and in Painting, the mien or manner of a person; a clownish or genteel air; posture, attitude, or behaviour; "he gave himself airs."

TO AIR, v. a. to expose to the air; to enjoy the benefit from the air; to expose to the fire, in order to free from damp.

AFRBLADDER, s. a bladder found among the entrails of fish, which by its contraction or dilatation enables them to rise or dive in the water.

AIRBALLOON, s. a bag of any light substance filled with inflammable air. See AEROSTATION.

AIRDRAWN, a. chimerical; imaginary.

AIRGUN, s. an instrument for discharging bullets by means of compressed air.

AIRINESS, s. applied to situation, exposed to a free current of air, in opposition to confined; openness. Figuratively, applied to a person's manner, or behaviour; levity, gaiety.

AIRING, s. a short walk or ride abroad; so called because we then enjoy the fresh and open air.

AIRING, s. a youthful, light, gay, and thoughtless person.

AIRPUMP, s. in Philosophy, an instrument or machine used for extracting the air from a vessel called the receiver, by means of pistons; for the purpose of scientific experiments. It is also used to supply the diving bell with air; and to reduce the boiling point by sugar-refiners, as a safeguard against fire.

AIRSHAFT, s. in Mining, a passage made for the air like a well.

AIRY, a. [æreus, Lat.] on high, or in that space assigned to the air. Figuratively, chimerical, wanting solidity of foundation. Applied to dress, that which exposes to the weather, in opposition to warm, close, or confined. Applied to temper or behaviour, gay, sprightly, full of vivacity.

AISLE, s. [ile] the side-walks of a church, running parallel to the centre path, called the nave.

AIT, EYERT, s. a small island in a river.

AIX, a city in the department of the mouths of the Rhone in the south of France. It derives its name from its hot baths, which were known to the Romans; is populous, and adorned with several beautiful squares and fountains. Its principal trade is in oil. It is 17 miles E. of Montpelier.

AIX-LA-CHAPELLE, the chief city of a division of the same name, of the province of Lower Rhine, Prussia. There are hot baths in it, and some mines near it. It has 30 parochial churches, and a very spacious market-place. It was the residence and capital of the emperor Charlemagne, who lies interred in the church of Notre Dame, where his sword and belt are kept to this day. Two celebrated treaties of peace were concluded here, in 1668 and 1748. It has still a considerable trade in needles and woollen goods. It is 17 miles N. of Limburg, 22 N. E. of Liege, and 40 W. of Cologne. Lat. 50. 48 N. Long. 6. 3 E.

TO AKE, ACHE, v. n. to feel a dull and continual pain, in opposition to smart, which is an acute one, and of a short continuance.

AKENSIDE, MARK, one of the poets of England, whose Pleasures of Imagination is ranked amongst our classics. He was a physician by profession, and he died in 1770.

AKIN, a. related by blood or descent. Figuratively, resembling; having the same properties; having a near relation to.

ALABAMA, one of the United States of N. America, lying between the State of Florida, the Gulf of Mexico, and the State of Mississippi, on the S. and W., and the States of Tennessee and Georgia on the N. and E. It is 317 miles from N. to S., and 174 from E. to W., and contains 46,000 square miles. The Alleghany Mountains extend into the N. part of this State; and its principal rivers are the Mobile, the Alabama, and the Tombigbee. Its population is 590,756, of whom 253,532 are slaves. The principal places are Tuscaloosa, the capital, and Mobile, the chief port. Its constitution was framed in 1819, and it was admitted to the Union in the following year. There is a university at Tuscaloosa, and a college in Franklin county. It has but one bank. In addition to the river navigation, which is considerable, it has two canals; and there are five railroads. Cotton is the staple production of this state, but Indian corn, rice, wheat, oats, &c. are produced. Iron ore and coal are found near the mountains.

ALABASTER, s. [alabastron, Gr.] a kind of soft marble much used for little statues, vases, and columns. It is known in Mineralogy as gypsum, or sulphate of lime.

ALABASTER, a. made of alabaster.

ALACK! ALACK-A-DAY! interj. an expression of sorrow, or something which causes it.

ALACROUSLY, ad. [alacer, Lat.] with great cheerfulness.

ALACRITY, s. [alacritas, Lat.] cheerful activeness.

A-LA-MODE, ad. according to the fashion. A French phrase, used to imply that a thing is the reigning taste or fashion.

A-LA-MODE, s. [Fr.] a thin, light, glossy, black silk.

ALARIC, the leader of the Visigoths, who, in the end of the 4th and beginning of the 5th century, overran Greece and Italy, sacking Athens and Rome. He died in 410.

ALARM, s. [à l'arme, Fr.] a military signal, either by beat of drum or sound of trumpet, by which men are now called to arms. It generally includes in it an idea of approaching or sudden danger. Figuratively, the notice signifying the approach of any sudden danger; tumult, or disturbance, causing fear, or apprehension of danger.

To ALARM, v. a. to give an army the signal of arming, or preparing themselves to encounter any sudden danger. In a secondary sense, to cause fear or apprehension of some approaching mischief.

ALARMING, part. that which occasions terror, fear, or apprehension, from the idea of approaching danger.

ALARMPOST, s. the place appointed for the several companies of an army to repair to, in case of any sudden and unforeseen danger, which occasions an alarm to be beat or sounded.

ALARUM, s. a clock, calculated to give notice to a person of any particular time it is set to, by the running down of its weight, which is attended in its descent by a continual striking of its hammer on the bell.

ALAS! interj. when used of ourselves, it implies lamentation, occasioned by the idea of some calamity. When applied to others, it implies pity, caused from an idea of their distress.

ALAY, s. in Hunting, the adding fresh dogs into the cry.

ALB, s. [albus, Lat.] a vest or garment of white linen, reaching down to the feet, worn by priests; a surplice.

ALBANIA, a province of Turkey in Europe, lying on the Gulf of Venice. Its inhabitants are rude and fierce in their habits, possessing few of the arts of civilized life, and much given to war, piracy, and robbery. The Albanians who live inland are mostly Mohammedans, but they are not very strict followers of the prophet. They are very fond of finery, and are not over-attentive to personal cleanliness. They have no manufactures to depend on, so they exchange the natural products of the country for arms, apparel, &c. It was formerly an independent kingdom, and long resisted the Turks.

ST. ALBANS, Hertfordshire, with the title of a duchy. Markets, Wednesday and Saturday. It is seated on the river Coln, arose from the ruins of the ancient city of Verulam, and receives its name from a monastery dedicated to St. Alban, a Roman martyr, now used as a parish church. 21½ miles from London. Pop. 6497.

ALBANY, the capital of the state of New York, United States, 370 miles from Washington. The older streets of this city are narrow and irregular, but those more recently laid out are spacious and regular. The Capitol is a fine building, standing in a commanding position at the head of State Street. It is advantageously situated on the Hudson for trade, and, by the Erie and Champlain canals, and the Boston and Mohawk and Hudson railroads, has ready access to the interior. It has extensive manufactories of carriages, hats and caps, tobacco, different metals, &c. There are also eight banks, and four insurance companies. It has a medical college and two academies, or colleges, one for females only. Pop. 33,721. There are nine other places of this name in the United States.

ALBATROSS, a large sea-bird, common about the Cape of Good Hope, Cape Horn, Kamtschatka, and the Kurile Islands. It is sometimes 13 feet in the stretch of its wings.

ALBERT, ad. although; notwithstanding; granting.

ALBERONI, GIULIO, an intriguing and unscrupulous statesman, who rose from the curacy of an obscure parish in Italy to a cardinalship, and to be minister of Philip V. of Spain. To recover the lost Italian possessions he broke through the Treaty of Utrecht; and drew upon Spain the Quadruple Alliance. He was soon banished, and lost to the political world. He died in 1752.

ALBERT THE GREAT, one of the most illustrious of the founders of scholastic theology; he was a monk of the Dominican order, at Cologne, and preferred to be no more, relinquishing valuable church-preference given him by Pope Alexander III. He wrote many works, and died in 1282.

ALBIGENSES, a religious sect who protested against the corruptions of the Roman Church in the 12th century. They were called also Cathari, which seems to have been equivalent to our word Puritans. They are charged by the Romanists with holding Manichæism, which represented the principle of evil as eternally co-existing with God. But as they were the objects of crusades and persecution, and the office of the inquisition was set up to destroy them, the statements of their opponents must be cautiously received.

ALBINO, a name given to those varieties which occur amongst men, and many quadrupeds and birds, in which, apparently from deficiency of the colouring matter, the skin and hair, or feathers, are of a dead white colour, and the eyes pink.

ALBION, a considerable tract on the W. coast of N. America, the name given to the Oregon territory, by Sir F. Drake.

ALBINGENEUS, a. [from albugo, Lat.] something belonging to or resembling the white of an egg.

ALBUGO, s. [Lat.] a disease in the eye.

ALBUM, a. anciently, a kind of white table, or register, in which the names of certain magistrates, public transactions, &c. were entered; now, a kind of common-place book, for strangers and friends to write their names, or verses, in.

ALBUMEN, s. coagulable lymph. That peculiar substance which forms the serum of blood, and the white of eggs, and is found in nuts, almonds, &c.

ALBUQUERQUE, ALFONSO, the Portuguese captain who helped mainly to set up the empire which Portugal possessed for a short time in India. He died in 1515.

ALCEUS, the Mitylenian poet, lover of Sappho, and inventor of that lyric metre which bears his name. His greatest efforts were made to rouse his fellow-countrymen against Pittacus, who had seized on the chief power. The poet's own valour in battle was not remarkable. He died about 600 B. C.

ALCAHEST, s. See ALKAHEST.

ALCAID, s. [al and hadkai, Heb.] the governor of a castle. In Spain, the judge of a city.

ALCALL, ALCALY, s. See ALKALY.

ALCALLIZATION, See ALKALIZATION.

ALCA'NA, s. [Arab.] a drug used in dying, which comes from the Levant. In powder it is green, but the tincture it makes differs according to the difference of the liquor in which it is steeped: when soaked in water, it is yellow; but when in vinegar, citron juice, or alum water, it is red.

ALCARAZA, s. a vessel, employed in Spain in cooling wine by evaporation.

ALCESTER, Warwickshire; an ancient town whose chief manufacture is needles. It stands on the Alne and the Arrow. Market, Tuesday. Pop. 2390.

ALCHEMICAL, a. according to the process or method made use of by alchemists.

ALCHEMIST, s. one who professes or pursues the science of alchemy.

ALCHEMY, s. [al, Arab., and chéme, Gr.] the ancient art of attempting the transmutation of metals. The principal objects of alchemy are these: 1. The making of gold. 2. A universal solvent. 3. A universal medicine, or panacea. The making of gold by transmutation they pretended to effect by the philosopher's stone. A mixed metal, used in making spoons.

ALCIBADES, one of the most famous Athenian leaders, during its struggle with Sparta. He was distinguished by every excellence, and every fault that was peculiarly Athenian. Socrates was his teacher, and also the preserver of his life at Potidea. He was sent out on the lamentable Syracuse expedition, but recalled and banished; he betook himself to the enemies of Athens, and by his counsels aided the Spartans in their attacks on his native city. Being subsequently recalled from exile, he conducted the Athenian affairs with distinguished success, but again in disgrace he left Athens for ever. He was killed in Asia, whither he retired when Athens was taken, in 404 b. c.

ALCOHOL, s. [Arab.] in Chemistry, the purest spirit of wine, rectified by frequent distillations to its utmost subtilty. A very fine impalpable powder.

ALCOHOLIZATION, s. the act of rectifying spirits; or of reducing bodies to an impalpable powder.

To ALCOHOLIZE, v. a. to make an alcohol; or to rectify spirits by frequent distillation; so that, when set on fire, they shall consume away, without leaving any moisture or dregs behind them.

ALCORAN, s. See KORAN.

ALCOVE, s. [alcoba, Span.] among builders, a recess, or part of a chamber separated by partitions of columns and other ornaments, in which is placed a bed of state, or seats for the repose of company. A small open summer-house or seat in gardens, with a circular door or covering.

ALDBOROUGH, (Aldboro) a sea-port town in Suffolk, pleasantly seated in a dale, with the sea to the east. The harbour is tolerably good, but small. The town was formerly much longer, but the sea has taken away whole streets, and has shifted the mouth of the Aldre 10 miles S. of its former place. Market, Saturday. 93; miles from London. Pop. 1557.

ALDBOROUGH, or OLDBOROUGH, W. R. Yorkshire, on the Ouse. 205 miles from London. Pop. 2424.

ALDEBARAN, s. a star of the first magnitude, in the constellation of Taurus, vulgarly called the Bull's Eye, whose longitude in the beginning of 1806, was in  $7^{\circ} 4' 25''$  of Gemini, and latitude  $5^{\circ} 28' 49''$  S. The annual increase of its longitude is  $50''$ , 204, and annual decrease of lat.  $0'$ , 317.

ALDER, s. a genus of English trees. The wood is much used for making household furniture, &c.

ALDERMAN, s. [elderman, Sax.] the title of one order of political officers amongst the Anglo-Saxons. It seems generally to have signified the exercise of delegated royal authority. In municipal corporations they were, as they still are, a sort of committee of magistrates, chosen by the town councils from amongst themselves. In the city of London, the mayor is chosen from amongst them.

ALDERNEY, an island on the coast of Normandy, belonging to England, fruitful in corn and pasture, and remarkable for a fine breed of cows. It is about 8 miles in compass, 7 miles from Cape la Hogue, and about 30 from the nearest part of England. On the S. there is a harbour, called Crabbs, which only admits small vessels, and in the centre stands the town of Alderney. The Race of Alderney, which is a dangerous passage in stormy weather, but otherwise safe, with depth of water sufficient for the largest ships, separates it from France. Pop. 1030.

ALDROVANDUS, U., a distinguished naturalist of Bologna, who, by diligent observation and inquiry, together with more scientific anatomical study, added greatly to the existing amount of knowledge of animals, trees, and minerals. He died in 1605.

ALE, s. [ale, Sax.] a liquor, the common drink of the English; made of an infusion of malt and hops in boiling water; afterwards fermented with yeast or barn. It is distinguishable from beer in respect of its strength and age; owing to its having a greater quantity of hops and malt than beer has, in proportion to the same quantity of water.

ALE, (GILL) s. a liquor made of ground-ivy leaves, steeped in ale.

ALE-CONNER, s. [ale and connan, Sax.] an officer of the city of London, whose business it is to inspect the measures of the public-houses.

ALEGAR, s. sour ale.

ALEHOOF, s. [ale and hof, Sax.] in Botany, the ground-ivy; so called by the Saxons, because a chief ingredient in their malt liquors, instead of hops.

ALEHOUSE, s. [ælhuse, Sax.] a house where ale is sold. Distinguished from a tavern, because that is appropriated to wine.

ALEMBERT, JEAN D., an eminent French mathematician. He was a founding, but acknowledged and supported by his father. His mathematical works are highly esteemed by the cultivators of the mixed sciences. He was one of the editors of the celebrated French Encyclopedia, and wrote the Introductory Discourse. His connexion with Voltaire, Diderot, and Rousseau, and the friendship of Frederic the Great for him, have brought upon him the charge of hostility to religion, but it is not supported by the tenor of any of his writings. He died in 1783.

ALEMBIC, s. a chemical vessel, usually made of glass or copper, formerly used for distillation. Retorts, and the common worn-still, are now more generally employed.

ALENGTH, ad. at full length, along; stretched upon the ground.

ALENTEJO, a fruitful province in the S. of Portugal.

ALEPPO, or HALEB, the principal town of Syria, in Asia. It is one of the most considerable towns in the Turkish empire. It stands on four hills, in the middle of a pleasant fruitful plain, being of an oval figure, and about three miles in circumference. The castle stands on the highest hill, in the middle of the city: and the houses are better than in other places in Turkey. They have a great many stately mosques and caravansaries, with fountains and reservoirs of water, and vineyards and gardens well planted with most kinds of fruits. The Christians have their houses and churches in the suburbs, and carry on a very considerable trade in silks, camlets, and Turkey leather. Several European nations have factories here.

ALERT, s. [alerte, Fr.] watchful, active, diligent; ready on any emergency; brisk, pert, sharp.

ALETTNESS, s. the quality of being alert, sprightly, pert, active, or vigilant.

ALEVAT, s. the tub in which ale is fermented.

ALEUTIAN ISLANDS, a range of islands lying between Kamtschatka and C. Alaska in N. America. They are inhabited by a people who resemble the Esquimaux in manners and appearance.

ALEW, s. clamour; outcry. Not in use.

ALEXANDER THE GREAT, the son of Philip of Macedon, who first gave Macedonia a name, by gaining the supremacy of Greece. Alexander was one of the greatest monarchs history has recorded. He was instructed by Aristotle, and in his youth evinced a daring and determined spirit. His father was assassinated as he had completed his preparations for an expedition into Asia; this Alexander set out upon at once. In battle after battle he defeated the countless forces of Persia, subdued Tyre, Syria, Egypt, and subjugated all Asia W. of the Indus. It was not so much the extent of these conquests that established his lasting fame; he introduced Grecian arts and civilization, and provided for their preservation by founding Grecian colonies throughout their whole range. It was by the establishment of this great empire, that a foundation was laid for the influence exerted on the world by the wisdom of the Greeks, the power of the Romans, and through them, as instruments, for the rapid diffusion of the gospel of Jesus Christ. This great king was at last a victim to his intemperance, and died at Babylon in 323 b. c., when only 32 years old; leaving his empire to be divided by his four most powerful generals. There were two kings of Macedon of this name before him; and four Syrian kings, or pretenders, after him.

ALEXANDER, the name assumed by six occupiers of the Papal throne, of whom the sixth was the infamous Roderick Borgia, whose life was polluted by almost every crime that man could commit.

ALEXANDER, the name of three kings of Scotland, under the third of whom, who died in 1286, that country first began to join in the progress of national civilization.

ALEXANDER PAULOWITSCH, emperor of Russia from 1801 to 1825. After having been occasionally the ally, and occasionally the foe of Napoleon Buonaparte, the French emperor invaded Russia in 1812, burnt Moscow, and then retreated leaving his army to follow, with the loss of 300,000 men. In 1814, Alexander, as one of the allied sovereigns, entered Paris. In the following year after the overthrow of Napoleon, he entered it a second time. The subsequent part of his reign was devoted to the maintenance of the peace of Europe, and to the good of his empire.

ALEXANDERS, s. in Botany, the smyrniun. It is an umbelliferous plant found upon rocks on the sea-coast, and about Nottingham, and flowering in May and June. It was formerly cultivated in our gardens; but its place is now better supplied by celery.

ALEXANDRIA, or SCANDERIA, once a magnificent, rich, and celebrated city of Egypt, built by Alexander the Great, near the most westerly branch of the Nile, soon after the overthrow of Tyre, about 331 years before the Christian era. The celebrated library which was founded here by Ptolemy Soter, and placed in the temple of Serapis, containing, in his time, 400,000 volumes, and by addition of his successors 700,000, was, it is said, in 642, destroyed by order of the Saracen Caliph Omar, when he took the city. It has now about 25,000 inhabitants; and it trades with most nations of Europe, as well as with Asia and the interior of Africa, whose consuls and agents reside here. Before the discovery of the passage round the Cape of Good Hope, it was the emporium of Europe and India; the new overland communication with the latter may restore some of its former glory. The remains of the ancient city are numerous: Pompey's Pillar is the most perfect. The famous Pharos, one of the wonders of the world, is replaced by a modern lighthouse, bearing the same name. Lat. 31. 16. N. Long. 30. 5. E.

ALEXANDRINE, s. [from Alexander Paris, the inventor of this metre] a kind of verse borrowed from the French, consisting among them of twelve or thirteen syllables in alternate couplets, and among us of twelve.

ALFIERI, VICTOR, an Italian dramatic poet of the last century, whose tragedies are admired as the most perfect poems of that kind in the Italian language. He wrote some other works, and ended a somewhat dissipated life in 1803.

ALFORD, Lincolnshire, 133 miles from London. Market. Tuesday. Pop. 1945.

ALFRED THE GREAT, grandson of Egbert, the first Saxon king of all England, succeeded his brother Ethelred on the throne in 872 A. D. He reigned nearly 30 years, and excepting the last two years was constantly at war with the Danes, who had, at his accession, the greater part of England in their possession. By his courage, skill, and perseverance, he at length defeated them; and devoted the remainder of his reign to the arts of peace. The tales of his adventures in the Danish camp, disguised as a harper, and with the neatherd's wife, who scolded him for letting her cakes burn, &c., during his struggle with the invaders, are well known. He was the first English monarch who possessed a fleet. He is most celebrated however for his laws, which were chiefly digested from the former codes and customs of the Anglo-Saxons. He endeavoured also to promote learning in his kingdom, by the diligent cultivation of it for himself, and by inviting scholars from other countries to settle in England. Some of his writings and translations are preserved to this day. Partly from motives of benevolence, and partly from love of knowledge, he sent one of his bishops on a mission to the Christians of Malabar. The love with which he has always been regarded in this country has attributed to him every law and institution whose origin was prior to the Norman Conquest. But apart from all national predilections, his name will always stand in the foremost rank of kings who have, in spite of difficulties and disadvantages, illustrated their own age, and deserved well of those that followed.

ALFRETON, in Derbyshire, 141 miles from London. Near it are collieries and ironworks, which, with the manufacture of stockings and brown earthenware, give employment to the inhabitants. Market, Friday. Pop. 7577.

ALGE, s. in Botany, the name of the seaweeds, and freshwater plants resembling them.

ALGEBRA, s. that branch of mathematical science, which investigates the general properties of number, by the use of letters instead of figures, and symbols which represent processes instead of results. It was known to the Greeks of Alexandria, in the 4th century, and to the Hindus, very early. By these it was communicated to the Arabians and Persians, from whom it was brought into Europe again in the 13th century. No great advance was made till the 17th century, when Vieta in France, and Harrison in England, prosecuted it with great success. This science furnishes the only means of knowing the principles of the rules of Arithmetic.

ALGEBRATIC, ALGEBRAICAL, a. something relating or belonging to Algebra.

ALGEBRAIST, s. a person conversant to the operations of Algebra.

ALGECIRAS, a sea-port of Spain, in the bay of Gibraltar.

ALGENIB, s. a star of the second magnitude, in the constellation of Perseus.

ALGERIA, ALGIE'S, in Africa, a state on the Mediterranean, between Morocco and Tunis. The Atlas Mountains form the principal physical feature of this state; there are also some considerable rivers, as the Sheliff, the Yissah, and the Wad-al-khebir; with the Wad-al-jedi, which flows into the Great Desert, which bounds all the states of Barbary to the S. The country is fertile, and the climate of the part next the sea not unhealthy. The population consists of the aboriginal Berbers, or Kabyles, Bedouin Arabs, Moors who are not of pure Arabian extraction, Jews, Negroes, Turks, who were the rulers under the Sultan, and elected the Dey from amongst themselves, and French colonists, who since the occupation of the country by the French have immigrated in great numbers. It has been divided into three districts, called after the names of their chief towns, Algiers, Oran, and Bona. Algiers, the capital of this state, is finely situated on the bay of the same name, in Lat. 36. 42. N. Long. 3. 30. E.

ALGID, a. cold; chill.

ALGOA BAY, in Cape Colony, S. Africa, called also Port Elizabeth, about 500 miles E. of the Cape of Good Hope.

ALHAMBRA, the fortified palace of the Moorish kings of Granada, built about 1270 A. D. It is richly ornamented, and seems not to have suffered from time, nor from any of the casualties to which it has been exposed.

ALIAS, ad. [Lat.] otherwise; used in Law to specify the different names of a man, as, Frith, alias Wortley, alias Smith: that is, Frith, otherwise Wortley, otherwise Smith.

ALI-BEN-ABI-TALEB, the friend and fourth successor of Mohammed. He was the prophet's first convert, and married his daughter Fatima. He died from a wound by a poisoned sword, in 660, at about 60 years of age.

ALIBI, [Lat.] in Law, a plea used in defence against a charge, showing that the defendant was in another place when the offence was committed.

ALIBILE, a. [alibilis, Lat.] that nourishes; or that may be nourished.

ALICANTE, a sea-port of Spain on the Mediterranean Sea, in a province of the same name, of the ancient kingdom of Valencia. It exports wine, particularly that called Tent, oil, olives, brandy, &c. It has a good harbour, protected by a mole. Lat. 38. 35. N. Long. 0. 24. W.

ALIEN, a. [alienus, Lat.] not of the same kind; inconsistent with; estranged from; at enmity with.

ALIEN, s. something adverse to, or at enmity with; a foreigner, or one of another country; not of the same profession, party, or sect. To ALIEN, ALIENATE, v. a. [alieno, Lat.] to transfer our own property to another; to grow averse to, or dislike.

ALIENABLE, a. [alien and abal, Sax.] that may be transferred to, and become the property of, another.

ALIENATE, a. [alienatus, Lat.] averse, or inimical to.

ALIENATION, s. [alienatio, Lat.] in Law, the act of transferring property to another. Change of affection from approbation to dislike.

To ALIGHT, v. a. [alightan, Sax.] to descend from a higher situation to a lower; to descend from, or get off a horse.

ALIKE, ad. equally, or in the same manner, without difference or distinction; resembling.

ALIMENT, s. [alimentum, Lat.] food, or that which nourishes, or satisfies the calls of hunger.

ALIMENTAL, a. that can increase the dimensions of plants or animals by being taken in food.

ALIMENTALLY, ad. so as to serve for nourishment.

ALIMENTARINESS, s. the quality which renders a thing capable of affording nourishment.

ALIMENTARY, a. that has relation, or belongs to aliment; that nourishes, or is eaten for diet. Alimentary Ducts, the intestines, so called on account of the food coming through them. It is sometimes used for the thoracic duct.

Alfred receiving the family of Hastings

11/10/11

ALIMENTATION, s. the quality, action, or power of affording nourishment; or the increasing of the dimensions of a body, by converting food into its own substance.

ALIMONY, s. [alimonia, Lat.] in its primary sense, nourishment; but now appropriated to the Law, wherein it implies that allowance which a married woman sues for, and is entitled to, upon any occasional separation, provided it be not for elopement or adultery.

ALIQUANT, a. [aliquantus, Lat.] in Arithmetic, is that part of a number, which, however repeated, will not make up the exact number, but will leave a remainder; as 3 is an aliquant part of 10, 3 times 3 are 9, and 1 remaining.

ALQUOT, a. [Lat.] in Arithmetic, such part of any number or quantity as will exactly measure it without any remainder; as 3 is an aliquot of 12, and 6 of 18.

ALISON, ARCHIBALD, an Episcopal minister of Edinburgh, known chiefly by his Essays on Taste, which are not much esteemed now. He died in 1830, aged 82 years.

ALTITURE, s. [altitudo, Lat.] nourishment.

ALIVE, a. [vivus, Lat.] in animals, denotes sense and feeling; in vegetables, when the sap circulates; in liquors, when they taste brisk on the palate. Figuratively, cheerful, sprightly, gay, and full of spirits; without diminution or lessening.

ALKAHEST, s. [Arab.] a pretended universal menstruum, asserted by the alchemists to be capable of resolving all bodies into their first matter, and which should yet retain its seminal power and natural form entire.

ALKALESCENT, a. that which resembles the qualities of an alkali.

ALKALI, s. in Chemistry, the name of a class of compound earthy or saline substances, of various constitution. Ammonia is a gaseous alkali; the composition of certain metallic bases and oxygen produces a large number of alkalies; and there are also those produced during the process of growth in plants. The presence of the alkalies is easily discovered by the changes produced by them in vegetable colours; they turn blue into green, and yellow into a reddish brown, and restore blue which has been turned red by application of an acid. When combined with acids they form salts.

ALKALINE, a. that has the qualities of alkali.

TO ALKALIZATE, v. a. to make bodies alkaline by chemical process; or to draw out the latent alkaline virtues of a body.

ALKALIZATE, a. that has the powers and qualities of a body which is termed an alkali by medical writers.

ALKALIZATION, s. in Chemistry, the process of making alkaline.

ALKANET, s. in Botany, anchusa, a plant used in medicine.

ALKERMES, s. [Arab.] in Medicine, a term borrowed from the Arabs, denoting a rich cardiac electuary, consisting of several warm and aromatic ingredients, of which kermes is the basis.

ALL, ad. entirely, completely; exclusive of any other.

ALL, a. [all, Sax. alle, Teut.] applied to a number, it sometimes is used collectively for the whole or every one of the parts without exception. Applied to quantity, every parcel, or every particle. Applied to time, the whole space or interval. Applied to place, its whole extent.

ALL, s. the whole, opposed to a part, or nothing.

ALLAH, s. the name of God in Arabic.

ALLAHABAD, the name of a city and province of Hindustan. The province, lying on the Ganges, has a considerable trade, all goods from Bengal to the territories lying beyond it passing through it; it exports diamonds, metals, drugs, &c. The city is esteemed peculiarly sacred by the Brahmins, because of the alleged confluence of the Ganges and two other sacred rivers on this spot. It is 550 miles N. W. of Calcutta, in Lat. 25. 27. N. Long. 81. 50. E.

ALLAN, DAVID, a Scotch artist, whose illustrations to Allan Ramsay's Gentle Shepherd, and to some of Burns's Poems, are much admired. He died in 1796, aged 52 years.

TO ALLAY, v. a. [allayer, Fr.] to abate or lessen any quality. To quiet, pacify, or reduce a boisterous temper into a calm.

ALLAYED, s. the person or thing which is ended with the power of allaying, lessening, or diminishing.

ALLAYMENT, s. a diminishing, or lessening, applied to the passions.

ALLEGATION, s. affirmation, declaration, excuse, plea. In Law, the producing instruments, deeds, or vouchers, to authorize or justify proceedings.

TO ALLEGE, v. a. [allego, Lat.] to declare, or affirm; to plead in excuse; to produce in defence.

ALLEGABLE, a. that may be charged; that may be pleaded in excuse.

ALLEGGER, s. he that asserts or declares any thing.

ALLEGHANY MOUNTAINS, a range in the United States, extending from the State of New York to Alabama. They vary from 50 to 200 miles in breadth, and consist of many parallel ridges. They do not exceed 2500 feet in height, and their summits are generally well wooded. The rivers which flow into the Atlantic Ocean, and some of those which flow into the Mississippi and the lakes, have their origin in them. Some of the valleys are very fertile. The mountains produce coal, iron, gold, and other metals, and consist of granite, and the usual primary rocks lying on it, with Devonian rocks occasionally.

ALLEGIANCE, s. [allegiance, Fr.] in Law, that natural, sworn, or legal obedience, every subject owes to his prince. Oath of allegiance, is that which is taken to the king in quality of a temporal prince, and is distinguished from that of supremacy, which is taken to him in quality of supreme head of the church.

ALLEGORIC, a. something which must be understood figuratively, in opposition to literal.

ALLEGORICAL, a. that consists of expressions purely figurative, where something else is meant than what is expressed.

ALLEGORICALLY, ad. figuratively, in opposition to literally.

ALLEGORICALNESS, s. the quality of being figurative.

TO ALLEGORIZE, v. a. to turn into allegory; to talk in a sense not literal.

ALLEGORY, s. [allegoria, Gr.] a figurative speech, in which something else is contained than what the literal meaning conveys. Thus the Roman commonwealth is addressed by Horace under the figure of a ship.

ALLEGRO, s. [Ital.] in Music, one of the six distinctions of time, expressing the quickest motion, excepting presto. If it be preceded by poco, it must be played in a slower or graver manner than when allegro stands alone; if by pizz, it must then be fastest of all.

ALLEMANDA, ALLEMAN'D, s. [Ital.] in Music, a grave air, composed in common time, consisting of two parts or strains.

ALLEN, WILLIAM, a member of the Society of Friends, distinguished as a practical chemist in earlier life, and subsequently as the supporter of the British system of popular education. He had schools at Lindfield, in Sussex, which were conducted under his personal superintendence. He died in 1843, aged 73 years.

TO ALLEVATE, v. a. [allevo, Lat.] figuratively, to lighten, to make lighter or less, in allusion to the diminishing the pressure of a heavy load. To lessen, mitigate, or diminish the enormity of a fault.

ALLEVIATION, s. the act of making a thing lighter; ease from pain; exemption of a fault.

ALLEY, s. [alle, Fr.] in Gardening, a strait walk bounded on each side with trees or shrubs. Alleys are distinguished from paths, as being broad enough for two people to walk abreast. The word is in towns applied to narrow passages, to distinguish them from streets, which are wider. Alley, in Perspective, is that which is larger at the entrance than at the opposite extremity, in order to make it seem long.

ALLEYN, EDWARD, an actor, contemporary with Shakespeare and Ben Jonson, who founded Dulwich College, in Surrey; where he lived as master till his death in 1625, at the age of 60.

ALL-FOURS, s. in Gaming, a particular play, wherein the whole sum a person gains each deal is limited to four, which are the highest, the lowest, the knave of trumps, and the game, or the greatest number to be made from tens and court cards; the latter of which are reckoned four for an ace, three for a king, two for a queen, and one for the knave; and he who has all these particulars, is said to have all-fours.

ALL-HAIL! interj. a salutation or invocation.

ALL-HALLOW-TIDE, s. [all, hallow, and tide, Sax. a week; hence Whitsun-tide, or Whitsun-week] that space of time which is near All-Saints day, or the 1st of November.

ALLIANCE, s. [alliance, Fr.] the union or connexion of two persons or two families by marriage. In a political sense, the leagues or treaties between different states for their mutual defence. Italy Alliance, the convention formed between the emperor of Russia, the emperor of Austria, and the king of Prussia, at Paris, in 1815; avowedly for carrying out the principles of Christianity in their respective governments.

ALLICIENCY, (alliciency) s. [allicio, Lat.] the quality of attracting, or drawing to; attraction.

ALLIGATION, s. the act of uniting, or the state of things united, linked, or joined together. In Arithmetic, the rule wherein questions are resolved relating to the mixtures of different commodities, with their value, effects, &c., when so compounded.

ALLIGATOR, s. in Zoology, a genus of reptiles resembling the crocodile, peculiar to the two Americas.

ALLIGATURE, s. the link, or ligature, by which two things are joined together.

ALLINGTON CASTLE, in Kent. Market, Tuesday. Pop. 49.

ALL-JUDGING, part. exercising judgment without control or partiality.

ALLISION, (allzyon) s. [allisio, Lat.] the act of striking one thing against another.

ALLITERATION, s. [ad and littera, Lat.] an ornament in poetical language, consisting in the repetition of the same letter at certain intervals, as, "weave the warp, and weave the woof."

ALL-KNOWING, part. intimately acquainted with every thing that is the object of knowledge; that is endowed with absolute, perfect, or infinite knowledge.

ALLOA, a sea-port of Scotland, on the Forth. There are extensive breweries, distilleries, glass-works, and other manufactories here. The trade in coals is considerable. It has a good harbour and dry-dock. 7 miles from Edinburgh. Pop. 7921.

ALLOCATION, s. [allico, Lat.] the act of putting one thing to another. In Commerce, the admission or allowance of an article to an account, and the passing it as such. In the Exchequer, it is an allowance made upon an account.

ALLODIAL, a. [allodium, Teut.] in Law, that of which a person has an absolute property, without paying any acknowledgment or service, and is opposed to feudal.

ALLODIUM, a. [Teut.] a possession which a man holds in his own right, without any dependence, charge, service, or homage to be paid to a superior lord.

To ALLOT, v. a. [alot, Sax.] to distribute by lot; to assign a share; to grant.

ALLOTMENT, s. the parcel, share, lot, office, or condition, assigned to any one. Also, a small portion of land let to a labouring man to be cultivated by him after his regular work, as an addition to his means of living.

ALLOTTING, s. in Commerce, is when a ship's goods are divided into different parcels, to be purchased by persons whose names are written on pieces of paper, which are indifferently affixed to each of such lots, and the goods thus divided without any partiality.

To ALLOW, v. a. [allow, Fr.] to confess, to yield, admit, grant, acknowledge, or assent to a principle, in opposition to contradiction; to yield, or permit; to confer an honour on a person; to approve as just, or consistent with one's duty; to give, to bestow, to pay as a debt.

ALLOWABLE, a. that may be granted, or permitted; that may be admitted without contradiction; that may be suffered, as repugnant or inconsistent with no laws; lawful; not forbidden.

ALLOWABLENESS, s. the quality of a thing, which denotes it to be lawful, proper to be granted or permitted, and no ways inconsistent with the rules of reason, or the customs of a place.

ALLOWANCE, s. concession, or assent to any doctrine, opinion, or principle; permission, licence, or consent, applied to superiors; liberty, freedom from restraint, used with the word give. In Commerce, the same as Tare.

ALLOWED, part. [from allow] universally acknowledged; established with respect to character. In Commerce, it is written in the margin of an account of expenses, opposite to such articles as are granted.

ALLOY, s. the mixture of different metals, or of portions of the same metal of different degrees of fineness. Gold and silver, both for coins and other purposes, are mixed with an alloy of copper. Figuratively, any thing that lessens the properties of that with which it is mixed; that which depreciates, or renders base.

To ALLOY, v. a. [alloyer, Fr.] to mix one metal with another, to render it fit for working.

ALL-POWERFUL, a. capable of operating without defect or control, and of producing every thing that is consistent with infinite wisdom.

ALL-SAINTS-DAY, s. the 1st day of November, set apart by the church to commemorate the exemplary lives and noble fortitude of all the saints and martyrs; added as a supplementary day to the rest of the festivals, that those who were worthy of remembrance might not be passed over without notice, and that the human mind might be more strongly excited to exemplary piety, or pious martyrdom, by considering the number of those who have preceded in those shining paths.

ALL-SEED, s. a plant, called also least rupture wort, and little flux.

ALL-SEEING, a. endowed with the power of seeing every thing.

ALL-SOULS, the name of one of the colleges at Oxford, founded by Henry Chicheley in 1437, when archbishop of Canterbury.

ALL-SOULS-DAY, s. a festival observed by the churches of Rome and England on the 2nd of November; anciently with a particular service relating to the souls supposed to be in purgatory.

ALLSTON, WASHINGTON, an American painter of some celebrity in England and Europe, as well as in his own country. He died in 1843, aged 64.

ALL-SUFFICIENT, (all-sufficient) a. capable of procuring every thing which is the object of power or wisdom; absolutely perfect in himself.

To ALLUDE, v. n. [alludo, Lat.] to have a distant respect to a thing, without mentioning it expressly; to hint at.

To ALLUMINATE, v. a. to beautify, decorate, adorn. Before the invention of printing, certain persons, called Allumners, made it a trade to paint the initial letters of manuscripts in all sorts of colours, and to gild them with silver and gold.

To ALLURE, v. a. [lure, Fr.] to entice, or attract, either in a good or bad sense; to persuade or draw, by the addition of something besides the intrinsic value and advantages of the object.

ALLURE, s. originally some artificial bird, made use of by bird-catchers, to entice birds into their traps. Figuratively, any thing that entices, or draws a person into the power of another.

ALLUREMENT, s. that which has the power of enticing by its charms; temptation; enticement.

ALLURER, s. the person who tempts, or seduces by fair speeches, enticements, or inveiglements.

ALLURINGLY, ad. so as to entice, tempt, inveigle, or seduce.

ALLURINGNESS, s. the quality which has such effect upon the mind, as to prevail upon it to engage in any action.

ALLUSION, (alluzyon) s. [allusio, Lat.] something spoken with reference to a thing already known, and on that account not expressed; a reference, hint, or implication.

ALLUSIVE, a. that does not mention a thing expressly, but comprehends it by implication; that hints at something not fully expressed.

ALLUSIVELY, ad. in a manner wherein a reference is made to something not expressed, but implied.

ALLUSIVENESS, s. the quality of expressing a thing by reference, opposed to expressly, or directly.

ALLUVIAL, a. belonging to alluvium. Alluvial deposits, in Geology, are all strata or beds of earth and soil produced by the agency of water, as the mud banks in rivers, the deltas of the Nile and other great streams, boulders, &c. transported by floating ice, sandbanks and other products of tides and currents at sea.

ALLUVIUM, s. [ad and livo, Lat.] in Geology, the generic name of alluvial deposits. In Law, it is the land which along the sea-shore and banks of rivers is deposited by the tides and currents. Where it is deposited slowly and imperceptibly it may be claimed by the owner of the land against which it forms; but not in other cases.

ALL-WISE, a. that is endowed with absolute, perfect, or infinite wisdom.

To ALLY, v. a. [allier, Fr.] to join together, or unite by kindred, friendship, or interest; to resemble, or be like, in the passive.

ALLY, s. [allié, Fr.] one who is joined to or has connexions with another, owing to some contract, whether that of marriage or treaty; and is applied both to persons and kingdoms.

ALMACANTER, s. [Arab.] in Astronomy, a circle drawn parallel to the horizon. This term is not now in use.

ALMAGEST, s. [Arab.] the name of a celebrated work of Ptolemy, containing a collection of geometrical problems and astronomical observations made by the ancients.

ALMANAC, ALMANACK, s. a table, or calendar, wherein the days of the week, fasts, festivals, changes of the moon, variation of time between clocks and the sun, &c., eclipses, time of high water, beginnings and endings of terms, are noted for the year.

ALMANDINE, s. [Fr. alundina, Ital.] a ruby, coarser and lighter than the oriental, and nearer the colour of the granite.

ALMIGHTINESS, s. that attribute of the Deity, wherein he is considered as able to perform every thing that is the object of absolute, perfect, uncontrollable, and infinite power.

ALMIGHTY, a. [formerly spelt almighty; almightig, Sax.] that is possessed of perfect, absolute, uncontrollable, or unlimited power; that can do every thing that infinite wisdom can dictate, or infinite power can execute.

ALMOND, s. [amandola, Ital.] a fruit contained in a stone full of little cells, which is enclosed in a tough skin. They are divided into sweet and bitter, on account of their different tastes. The French lapidaries give the name Almonds, or Amandes, to those pieces of rock crystal which are cut with a wheel into forms resembling this fruit, and are used to adorn chandeliers of glass, and other pieces of furniture made of glass or crystal.

ALMOND-FURNACE, ALMAN-FURNACE, called also the Sheep, is a peculiar kind of furnace used in refining, to separate metals from cinders and other foreign substances.

ALMONDS OF THE THROAT, or TONSILS, improperly styled Almonds of the ears. See TONSILS.

ALMONER, s. an officer appointed to distribute alms to the poor. The lord Almoner or lord Almoner of England, is usually the archbishop of York, who has the forfeiture of all deadlands, and the goods of Felos de se, which he is to distribute among the poor.

ALMORNY, s. the place wherein the almoner keeps his office, or distributes the alms to the poor.

ALMOST, ad. [al-meest, Belg.] applied to action, near performing it. "They be almost ready to stone me," Ezod, xvii. 3. Applied to number or multitude, a considerable majority, little less than the whole. "Came almost the whole city together," Acts xiii. 44. Applied to time, very near the period mentioned. "When seven days were almost ended," Acts xxi. 27. Applied to the effect of an argument, not far from persuading or conviction. "Almost thou persuadest me to be a Christian," Acts xxvi. 28.

ALMS, s. [used in the plural only; elmesse, Sax.] money, or other necessities, given to relieve the necessities of the poor and distressed, including in it a tender sympathy in their afflictions, and a pious readiness to relieve them.

ALMSDEED, s. an act of charity; something done out of compassion, to relieve the distresses and wants of others.

ALMSGIVER, s. one who is charitable, or fond of relieving the necessities of the poor.

ALMSHOUSE, s. a house endowed by legacies, or other donations, for the lodging and support of the poor.

ALMSMAN, s. a man who is supported by charity or alms; one who belongs to an almshouse.

ALNAGE, s. the measuring of woollen manufactures by the ell. Alnage was first intended as a proof of the goodness of the commodity, and a seal was invented, the affixing of which to a commodity was a sign that such commodity was made according to law. But now these seals may be bought, and affixed to any goods, at the buyer's pleasure.

ALNAGER, s. a public officer, whose business is to examine into the assize of all woollen cloths made throughout the kingdom, and fix seals upon them; likewise to collect an alnage duty to the king. There are now three officers relating to the alnage, namely, a searcher, measurer, and alnager, all which were formerly comprised in the last, till, by his own neglect, it was thought proper to separate them into three offices.

ALNEWICK, or ALNWICK, the county town of Northumberland, 310 miles from London, seated on the little river Alne, and is populous and well built. It has a fine market square, surrounded with piazzas. One of the old gates is still standing.

There is an ancient castle near it, the seat of the Duke of Northumberland. Market, Saturday. Pop. 6026.

ALOE, s. [Gr.] in Botany, a species of tropical plants, (some kinds of which are very common in hot-houses,) which yield a very useful drug, called aloes. The best is that prepared from the Socotrine Aloe, which is now cultivated in the W. Indies.

ALLOETIC, a. that consists of aloes.

ALOFT, ad. [loffer, Dan.] in the air, in opposition to the ground; on high; above.

ALOGY, s. [alogos, Gr.] unreasonableness; absurdity.

ALONE, ad. [alleen, Belg.] without a companion; without any assistance; exclusively of all others; solely.

ALONG, ad. [au longue, Fr. or al lungo, Ital.] at full length; prostrate on the ground; motion, or progression, measured lengthwise. Used with all, for a continuance, or during a whole space of time. Throughout, or from one end to the other, applied to writings. After come, it implies attendance and encouragement to proceed.

ALOOF, ad. [æd and off, Sax.] used with the particle from, at a distance which is within sight. When applied to persons, at a distance, from caution and circumspection; or, so as not to appear as a principal, or party in any design; not connected with, having no relation to.

ALOPECIA, s. [alopez, Gr.] a distemper wherein all or a great part of the hair falls off.

ALoud, ad. loudly; with a strong voice, with a great noise.

ALow, ad. in a low place; near the ground, in opposition to aloft, or above.

ALPACA, s. in Zoology, an animal related to the sheep, indigenous in Peru, in S. America; whose long and silky wool has lately been greatly in demand. Various attempts have been made to naturalize this animal in Great Britain.

ALPHA, s. the first letter in the Greek alphabet, answering to our A; therefore used to signify the first, as omega, the last.

ALPHABET, s. [alpha and bela, the two first letters of the Greek alphabet] the several letters of a language arranged in their accustomed order. The English alphabet has 26 letters, the French 23, the Hebrew, Chaldee, Syriac, and Samaritan, 22 each; the Arabic 28, Persian 31, Turkish 33, Georgian 36, the Ethiopic 26, Coptic 32, Muscovite 43, Greek 24, Latin 22, Slavonic 27, Dutch 26, Spanish 27, Italian 20, and the Bengalese 21. The Chinese have no alphabet, but have characters which are the signs of things and symbols of thoughts, of which there are about 200 radicals.

ALPHABETIC, ALPHABETICAL, a. placed in the order of the alphabet.

ALPHABETICALLY, ad. in the same order as in the alphabet.

ALPHONSINE TABLES, astronomical tables compiled under the direction of Alphonso X., of Castile, in about 1250 A. D.; which are, however, of little more value than the Ptolemaic tables formed eleven hundred years before. The length of the year is more correctly given in them, than it had been before, and the places of the fixed stars are so given that they can be compared with their present places.

ALPINE, a. [alpinus, Lat.] that pertains to or resembles the Alps.

ALPS, the range of mountains lying between Italy and France, Switzerland, and Germany. They lie in the form of a semicircle, and vary from 60 to 200 miles in breadth. The highest point is Mont Blanc, which is 15,732 feet high; Monte Rosa is 15,152 feet high, and many others above 10,000 feet. The Rhine and Rhone, the Drave, the Danube and its tributaries, the Po and its tributaries, and other rivers, have their origin in the valleys and glaciers of the Alps. The plants and trees are arranged in well-defined bands on the sides of the mountains according to the temperature of the different elevations. The vine is not found higher up than 1500 feet, the pine ceases at the elevation of 6500 feet, and at about the elevation of 9500 feet all vegetation ceases, and the perpetual snow begins. The glaciers form one of the most remarkable features of the Alpine scenery. They are masses of frozen snow, which partly from the inclined planes on which they lie, and partly from the temperature of the rock beneath, slightly melting the under surface, slide slowly down the valleys, bearing with them immense masses of rock, and smaller fragments, which have fallen from the heights they have passed. During the summer the lower part of these glaciers is melted; the rivers flowing from them are abundantly supplied; and the cargo of rocky fragments deposited in moraines along the valleys. Avalanches, which are detached masses of snow, frequently fall down from the heights, and occasion great destruction. Whole villages have sometimes been buried under them. The passage of the Alps by the army of Hannibal, the Carthaginian general, in his march against Rome, and that of the army of Napoleon Buonaparte when he advanced into Italy, have been greatly celebrated in history. But the difficulties of the passage are now lessened by the construction of admirable roads through many of the passes. Mont Blanc has frequently been ascended, and some of the other peaks have been climbed from curiosity, or for scientific purposes. The geology of the Alps resembles that of most mountain chains. There is a mass of granite which has broken through the overlying strata, and forced them up with it, into an almost vertical position. But this elevation has evidently taken place at different times, and comparatively modern strata are found resting on the upturned edges of the older beds. In some parts also the upheaved rocks are broken and twisted in every direction, showing an irregular force acting upon strata offering considerable resistance. The fossil remains, almost all of which are marine, are numerous.

ALREADY, (pronounced as if the a was dropped) ad. [ell and ready, Sax.] at the time present; even now.

ALRESFORD, NEW, in Hampshire. 57 miles from London. It has one church, and a small manufacture of linseys. Market, Thursday. Pop. 1578.

ALRUCCABAH, s. the north-pole star.

ALSACE, Upper and Lower, formerly provinces of France, having the Rhine and Switzerland on the E. and S. E., and Strasburg being the capital of the whole; they are now included in the departments of the Upper and Lower Rhine.

ALSINE, s. the same with chickweed.

ALSO, conjunct. [alsace, Sax.] used to show that what had been affirmed of one sentence or person holds good of the succeeding part of the period, and of another person; in the same manner; likewise.

ALSTON-MOOR, in Cumberland. It is seated on a hill, at the bottom of which runs the river Tyne, with a stone bridge over it. There are near it mines of copper and lead. 363 miles from London. Market, Saturday. Pop. 6812.

ALT, a. in Music, a term applied to the highest notes in the scale.

ALTAISCH, a range of mountains running across Siberia, nearly 4500 miles long. According to Humboldt, some parts are nearly 10,000 feet high.

ALTAR, s. [altare, Lat.] a kind of table or raised place, whereon the ancient sacrifices were offered. In churches, that place where the communion is received, or the table on which the vases and the elements of bread and wine are placed. Among the ancient Romans the altar was a kind of a pedestal, either square, round, or triangular, adorned with sculptures and inscriptions. In Astronomy, a constellation of the southern hemisphere, consisting of seven stars.

ALTARAGE, s. [altarium, Lat.] denotes the profits arising to the priest from the oblations on the altar.

ALTAR-THANE, ALTARIST, in old law-books, the priest or parson of a parish.

ALTAVELA, a fish found in the Mediterranean Sea, whose flat sides bear some resemblance to wings. It is sold in the markets at Rome.

ALTDORF, a town of Uri in Switzerland, where Tell refused to do homage to the Austrian governor's hat, and was sentenced to shoot at an apple on his son's head.

To ALTER, v. a. [alter, Fr.] to change; to make a thing different from what it is; used both of a part and the whole of a thing, and applied both to a good and bad sense, v. n. to change; to become different from what it has been.

ALTERABLE, a. [from alter, and abel, Sax.] that may be changed, or be made to appear different from what it is.

ALTERABLENESS, s. the quality of being changed; or liable to have its present properties and appearance changed by external or internal causes.

ALTERABLY, ad. in a manner that may be altered.

ALTERAGE, s. [from alo, Lat.] the breeding, nourishing, or fostering of a child.

ALTERANTS, ALTERATIVES, s. such medicines as correct the bad qualities of the blood, and other animal fluids, without occasioning any sensible evacuation.

ALTERATION, s. [alteration, Fr.] the act of changing the form or purport of a writing, the shape and other qualities of a body, the properties and faculties of the mind, and making them different from what they were.

To ALTERCATE, v. n. [altercor, Lat.] to wrangle, or contend with another; to dispute.

ALTERCATION, s. [altercatio, Lat.] a debate or dispute on any subject between friends, implying warmth, but not so great as what is implied in a quarrel.

ALTERN, a. [alternus, Lat.] that succeeds another by turns; successive, or alternate; that follows by succession.

ALTERNACY, s. the succession or following of one action after another in its turn.

ALTERNATE, a. [alternus, Lat.] that succeeds or follows one another by turns. In Botany, applied to the position of the leaves of a plant, it implies that the leaves on each side of the stalk, or branch, do not stand directly opposite, but between, or a little higher, than each other. In Geometry, applied to angles, it signifies the internal one, and is made by a line cutting two parallels, and lying on opposite sides of it. In Heraldry, applied to the situation of the quarters of a coat; thus in quarterly, earle, the first and fourth are alternate, and of the same nature.

ALTERNATELY, ad. in such a manner that the thing which precedes shall follow that which comes after it.

ALTERNATENESS, s. the quality of being alternate; the reciprocal succession of things.

ALTERNATION, s. in Arithmetic, the different changes, alterations of place, or combinations, that any proposed numbers are capable of; which is found by a continual multiplication of all the numbers, beginning at unity, and ending with the last number of the things to be varied.

ALTERNATIVE, s. [alternativa, Fr.] a choice of two things, whereby if one is rejected the other must be accepted.

ALTERNATIVELY, ad. by turns; reciprocally.

ALTERNITY, s. a state wherein there is a continual succession, change, or vicissitude.

ALTHOUGH, conjunct. [pron. as if written altho'; all and theah, Sax.] used to imply that a thing or conclusion may be allowed or maintained, notwithstanding something seemingly inconsistent had been allowed, admitted, or granted.

ALTIMETRY, s. [altimetria, Lat.] the art of taking or measuring heights, whether accessible or inaccessible.

ALTITUDE, s. [altitudo, Lat.] in Geometry, one of the three dimensions of body, namely, height. In Optics, it is the height of an object above a line, drawn parallel to the horizon from the eye of the observer. In Astronomy, the elevation of any of the heavenly bodies above the horizon. This altitude is either true or apparent, according as it is reckoned from the rational or sensible horizon, and the difference between these is called by astronomers the parallax of altitude. Near the horizon this altitude is always increased by means of refraction.

ALTO RELIEVO, s. See RELIEVO.

ALTOGETHER, ad. [all and together, Sax.] completely; without restriction; without exception, applied to number and quality; in all respects; perfectly.

ALTON, in Hampshire. It formerly had manufactures of baragons, corded druggets, and serges. In the neighbourhood are extensive plantations of hops. 47 miles from London. Market, Saturday. Pop. 3139.

ALTRINGHAM, in Cheshire. 180 miles from London. Market, Tuesday. Pop. 3639.

ALVA, FERNANDO, DUKE OF, the celebrated general of the emperor Charles V., and Philip II., his successor on the throne of Spain. He is notorious for the cruelty of the policy he adopted when he had subdued the Netherlands, which had revolted from Philip. He died in 1583.

ALUM, s. [alumen, Lat.] a salt known in Chemistry as the double sulphate of potassa and alumina. It has a sweetish astringent taste, and reddens litmus paper. It is prepared in this country from alum-stone, a rock highly charged with pyrites. But in Italy it is prepared from alum-stone, and this is preferred as being quite free from iron. Roché alum is so called from Rochha in Syria, where it is found native.

ALUMINE, s. in Chemistry, pure clay, the basis of alum.
ALUMINOUS, a. that has the properties of alum, or is mixed with alum. Waters of this kind are prepared by dyers, to make their stuffs take their colours the better; and those which are to be crimson must be steeped in water made very strong with this ingredient. In Chemistry, it means belonging to clay.

ALWAYS, ad. [allevseaga, Sax.] applied to action, without ceasing or intermission.

AM, v. [ean, Sax.] when used singly, it implies existence; following what, it implies nature; "Knowing what I am," Prior. Applied to place, it signifies presence; "Where I am, there shall my servants be," John xii. 26. Applied to truths, it implies affirmation: "Jesus said, I am the bread of life," John vi. 35. When repeated, it implies self and independent existence, and is the name of God, Exod. iii. 14.

AMADETTO, s. a sort of pear; so called from the name of him who cultivated it.

AMADOU, s. or German tinder, a preparation from a species of boletus, found growing on various trees in Europe.

AMAIN, ad. [a and magen, Sax.] with all one's force, or strength, applied to action. Applied to the voice, extremely loud, or as loud as possible. Also a sea-term, importing to lower or let fall the top-sails; to let down any thing into the hold, as a word of command to do it gently and by degrees.

AMALFI, one of the early Italian republics. Its possessions scarcely extended beyond the city walls, but it was noted for its trade. It is illustrious for the foundation of the hospital and military order of St. John of Jerusalem, for the invention of the mariner's compass, and for the preservation of the one copy of the Pandects of Justinian. It was one of the last which surrendered to the Normans, losing its liberty in 1131. The city yet has a little trade, and it belongs to the kingdom of Naples. Lat. 40. 37. N. Long. 14. 35. E.

AMALGAM, s. [ama and gameo, Gr.] a substance produced by incorporating quicksilver with another metal.

To AMALGAMATE, v. n. to incorporate metals with quicksilver.

AMALGAMATION, s. [ama and gameo, Gr.] the incorporating quicksilver with other metals.

AMANEUSIS, s. [Lat.] a person who writes down what is dictated by another; likewise a person who copies writings, or writes extracts from books.

AMARANTH, s. [a and maranoma, Gr.] among the ancients, a flower, which was imagined never to fade. In Botany, the genus of plants including the cock's comb, prince's feather, &c.
AMARANTHINE, a. [amaranthinus, Lat.] relating to amarantus; consisting of amarantus.

AMARAPURA, the former capital of the Burmese empire. It is situated on the Irrawaddy, and is strongly fortified according to the science of the country. It has much decreased in population since the removal of the seat of government, having now only about 30,000 inhabitants.

AMARYLLIS, s. in Botany, a genus of plants allied to the narcissus, having very beautiful flowers, but very poisonous bulbous roots. It is much cultivated by florists in this country.

To AMASS, v. a. [amasser, Fr.] to gather together, so as to form a mass or heap.

AMASSMENT, s. a collection of things heaped together.

AMATORY, a. [amatorius, Lat.] relating to love; causing love.

AMAUROUSIS, s. [amauro, Gr.] in Medicine, a dimness of sight, wherein the eye to external appearance seems to be unaffected.

To AMAZE, v. a. [mase, Sax.] to strike with astonishment; to confuse, or throw into perplexity.

AMAZE, s. astonishment, or perplexity, caused by an unexpected object, whether good or bad; in the former case it is mixed with admiration, in the latter with fear.

AMAZEDLY, ad. in a manner expressive of surprise or astonishment on the appearance of something unexpected.

AMAZEDNESS, s. the state of a person's mind when affected with surprise, astonishment, confusion, or perplexity.

AMAZEMENT, s. confusion; perplexity; admiration; surprise.

AMAZING, part. that causes surprise, astonishment, or admiration.

AMAZINGLY, ad. in a manner capable of exciting astonishment, wonder, or admiration; prodigiously; surprisingly.

AMAZON, or ORELLANA, a river of South America, which has its source in the Cordilleras, whence running eastward, it empties itself into the Atlantic Ocean, directly under the equinoctial line. This largest of all rivers is, at its mouth, 180 miles broad; and 1500 miles from its mouth, 30 or 40 fathoms deep. It runs at least 4000 miles, forms during its course many islands in itself, and receives nearly 200 other rivers, many of which have a course of 500 or 600 leagues, some of them not inferior to the Danube or the Nile.

AMAZONS, a warlike nation consisting wholly of females, which the Grecian poets represented as living some where in Western Asia. The sculptures on some of the Grecian temples represented the victory of Theseus over them when they invaded Attica. Some modern writers have not merely believed this fable, but have pretended to discover similar nations themselves.

AMBAGES, s. [Lat.] a round-about way of expression; circumlocution.

AMBASSADE, s. [Fr.] the office of a person who is commissioned to negotiate the affairs of a state in foreign parts.

AMBASSADOR, s. [ambassadeur, Fr.] a person sent in a public manner from one sovereign power to another, and supposed to represent the power from which he is sent. The person of an ambassador is inviolable. Ambassadors are either ordinary or extraordinary. Ambassador ordinary, is he who constantly resides in the court of another prince, to maintain a good understanding, and look to the interest of his master. Till within these 200 years, ambassadors in ordinary were not heard of. All, till then, were ambassadors extraordinary; that is, such as are sent on some particular occasion, and who retire as soon as the affair is despatched. By the law of nations, none under the quality of a sovereign prince can send or receive an ambassador.

AMBASSADRESS, s. [ambassadrice, Fr.] in its primitive sense, the wife or lady of an ambassador; in a secondary one, a woman sent on a message.

AMBASSAGE, s. [ambassage, Fr.] the employ or office of a person acting as an ambassador.

AMBER, s. [ambar, Arab.] a kind of gum, or resin, found most plentifully in the Baltic, on the coast of Prussia. Being susceptible of a fine polish, it is cut into necklaces, bracelets, snuff-boxes, &c., and also constitutes the basis of several kinds of varnish.

AMBERGRIS, s. a fragrant gum, that melts almost like wax, commonly of a greyish or ash colour, used both as a perfume and a cordial. Ambergris is found on the sea coasts in warm climates, particularly those of Africa, from the Cape of Good Hope to the Red Sea, sometimes in very large lumps, in the middle of which we frequently meet with stones, shells, and bones.

AMBIDEXTER, s. [Lat.] one who has equally the use of both hands, or who can use both hands with the same facility, and for the same purpose; also, one who is ready to engage on either side in party disputes.

AMBIDEXTERITY, AMBIDEXTROUSNESS, s. the power of being able to use both hands equally; double-dealing.

AMBIDEXTROUS, a. applied to one who can make use of either hand indifferently.

AMBIENT, a. [ambiens, Lat.] that covers every part; that encompasses or surrounds.

AMBIGU, s. [Fr.] an entertainment, wherein the dishes are set on the table in a promiscuous manner, without any regard to order, so as to perplex the guests.

AMBIGUITY, s. [ambiguitas, Lat.] the quality of a word or expression, received in different senses; words whose significations are doubtful or uncertain. We make use of an equivocation to deceive, of an ambiguity to keep in the dark from all, and of a double entendre to conceal from some.

AMBIGUOUS, a. [ambiguus, Lat.] applied to expressions having more senses than one, which are not easily determined.

AMBIGUOUSLY, ad. uttered in equivocal terms, or words having two senses.

AMBIGUOUSNESS, s. the quality which renders the signification of a word uncertain.

AMBITLOGY, s. [ambo and lego, Lat.] discourse of an ambiguous signification.

AMBITLOQUOUS, s. [ambo and loquor, Lat.] using ambiguous expressions.

AMBIT, s. [ambitus, Lat.] a term in Geometry, signifying the boundary, outline, or circumference of any figure, regular or irregular; the compass or circuit of any thing.

AMBITION, s. [ambitio, Lat.] is generally used in a bad sense, for an immoderate and illegal pursuit of power, a vehement desire of greatness or fame; a restlessness that cannot bear any competitor either in government or honour.

AMBITIOUS, a. [ambitiosus, Lat.] desirous, longing after and industrious to obtain a greater degree of power, an advancement in honour, or a more extensive dominion; proud, lofty, aspiring; elegantly applied to inanimate things, and implying their being not contented with their present dimensions or situation.

AMBITIOUSLY, ad. in a manner which shows a desire or thirst after greater dignity, power, riches, dominion, or preference.

AMBITIOUSNESS, s. the quality of being desirous of a greater degree of honour, riches, or power.

To AMBLE, v. n. [ambulo, Lat.] to move upon an amble; to move with a gentle motion; to move with an affected motion.

AMBLE, s. in Horsemanship, a pace wherein the two feet of a horse on the same side move together.

AMBLER, a. a horse that has been taught to amble; sometimes called a pacer.

AMBLESIDE, in Westmoreland, situated among lofty mountains at the upper end of Winandermere, and near a remarkable waterfall. 271 miles from London. Market, Wednesday. Pop. 1281.

AMBLINGLY, ad. in such a manner as to perform that pace by jockeys called the amble.

AMBOYN, the chief of the Molucca Islands, remarkable for the quantity of cloves and nutmegs it produces. The Dutch established factories on this island in the beginning of the seventeenth century, and it is still in their possession. Beside the natives and the Europeans, there are many Malays and Chinese resident on the island.

AMBROSE, ST., a very celebrated archbishop of Milan in the fourth century. When nominated to the office, he was not even in orders; but as the appointment had originated in what was deemed supernatural influence, this was made no obstacle. He excommunicated the emperor Theodosius, on occasion of his massacre of the inhabitants of Thessalonica. The influence he exerted both in and out of the church was very considerable. Some of his writings yet remain. He died in 397, aged about 60 years.

AMBROSIA, [ambrosia] s. [Gr.] the imaginary food of the heathen deities, which preserved them immortal. Figuratively, applied to any delicious fruit, by way of hyperbole, and signifying, that it was fit for the gods, or that it would communicate immortality.

AMBROSIAL, [ambrosial] a. [ambrosialis, Lat.] heavenly, delicious, or beyond the possession of mortals.

AMBS-ACE, s. in Gaming, when two aces are thrown at one time.

AMBULATION, [ambulatio, Lat.] the act of walking.

AMBULATORY, a. [ambulo, Lat.] having the power of walking; movable: a term applied to courts that were not fixed, but held sometimes at one place, and sometimes at another.

AMBURY, A'BURY, a name given by our farriers to a kind of soft and spongy swelling growing on the bodies of horses, somewhat sore to the touch, and full of blood.

AMBUSCADE, A'MBUSADO, A'MBUSADO, s. [embuscade, embusche, Fr.] a place wherein men are hid in order to surprise an enemy.

AMBUSHED, a. lying in wait; hid in order to surprise.

AMBUSHMENT, s. a concealment in order to surprise.

AMBUSTION, [ambustio, Lat.] in Medicine, the effect which fire, or bodies heated by it, have on the flesh: when caused by fire immediately, termed a burn; when by boiling liquors, a scald.

AMEL, [email, Fr.] See ENAMEL.

AMEN, ad. in Hebrew, signifies true, faithful, certain. It is also understood as expressing a wish, as so be it; or an affirmation, yes, I believe it.

AMENABLE, a. [amenable, Fr.] in Law, responsible, or subject to inquiry and examination. Tractable, or easily governed.

To AMEND, v. a. [amender, Fr.] to alter something faulty for the better; to grow from a more infirm state to a better; to recover.

Applied to writings, to correct. To reform, applied to manners or behaviour.

AMENDABLE, a. capable of amendment, or possible to be amended.

AMENDE, s. [Fr.] a fine by which a compensation is made for a fault committed.

AMENDER, s. the person who makes the changes or alterations in a thing for the better.

AMENDMENT, [amendement, Fr.] an alteration which makes it better; a correction, a change from vice to virtue; a change from sickness towards health; a recovery.

AMENDS, s. [amende, Fr.] something paid to make good a damage done; atonement, or satisfaction.

AMENITY, [amenitas, Lat.] a situation or prospect which affects the mind with pleasure or delight.

To AMERCE, v. a. [amercier, Norm.] in Law, to inflict a pecuniary punishment, or fine a person a sum of money for an offence.

AMERCIER, s. the person who sets the fine upon an offender; or settles the value of the satisfaction or fine which is to be paid.

AMERCEMENT, AMERCIAMENT, s. in Law, the fine imposed on an offender against the king, or other lord, who is convicted, and therefore stands at the mercy of either.

AMERICA, the name of the two great continents occupying the northern hemisphere. They were first discovered by Christopher Columbus, a Genoese, who went out under the auspices of Ferdinand and Isabella, of Castile and Arragon, in 1492; but are not now fully explored. The name was taken from Amerigo Vespucci, a Florentine, who directed an expedition in 1499. The form of these continents, which extend from the perpetually frozen regions of the North to the parallel of 56. S. Lat., is well known from maps. The chief physical features of North America are, Baffin's and Hudson's Bays, and the Gulf of Mexico; the lakes, named Erie, Ontario, Huron, Michigan, Superior, Winnipeg, and the Great Slave and Great Bear lakes; the rivers St. Lawrence, Ohio, Missouri, and Mississippi; the Rocky Mountains, and the Alleghanies; the West Indian islands in the Gulf of Mexico, Newfoundland, Vancouver's Island, the groups of islands in Behring's Straits, and the partially explored islands in the Frozen Ocean. The S. part of this continent lies within the tropics, but the average temperature of the whole is very low; the winters at New York, which lies as far S. as Rome and Madrid, being as severe as those of the N. of Europe, which is owing to the great quantity of land within the Arctic region, and the small portion lying within the tropics. The history of the aborigines of N. America is hidden in total obscurity. Respecting the Esquimaux, who inhabit the most northerly part in scattered and scanty tribes, and the Red Men who had sole possession of the temperate portions at the time of its discovery, we refer to those names below. There have been recently discovered throughout both N. and S. America, particularly in the more temperate parts, and those bordering on the Pacific Ocean, remains of races far superior in civilization to any of the races dwelling there within the reach either of history or tradition. They are mounds resembling the barrows or sepulchral hills of the ancient Celtic nations of the old world, or towers and temples displaying an architecture analogous to that of ancient India and Egypt. On the borders of Mexico the ruins of entire cities are found, which Mr. Stephens, the principal explorer, thinks do not date further back than a little before the arrival of the Spaniards. See YUCATAN. The mass of the present population are colonists and their descendants, from every country of Europe, and the slaves brought from Africa and their miserable posterity. The Zoology and Botany of this continent are almost wholly different from those of the eastern hemisphere. The whole of this continent N. of 40. N. Lat., and the river St. Lawrence, with New Brunswick and Nova Scotia, excepting a small portion adjoining Behring's Straits, belongs to the British empire. The combined republics called the United States occupies the whole of the centre; beneath this is the Mexican republic; and next to the Isthmus of Panama, the republic of Guatemala. South America, which is connected by this narrow strip of land with the northern continent, has for its chief physical features the great rivers, named Orinoco, Amazon, and La Platte, with the tributaries of the two latter; and the range of mountains extending from N. to S., called the Cordilleras or Andes, containing many volcanoes. The Falkland Isles, Chiloe, and Terra del Fuegos are its only islands; and Lake Titicaca its only large lake.

The aborigines of the N. W. part were possessed of some civilization when they were discovered, and the ruins still remaining resemble those of Mexico. Those of the southern part, who were represented as of gigantic stature, are almost extinct, and are still sunk in the lowest barbarism. Excepting the northern coast, this continent was colonized chiefly from Spain and Portugal. In Zoology and Botany it is as peculiar as N. America; the butterflies of the tropical part are particularly splendid. The English, French, and Dutch have colonies on the N. E. coast; the other states are independent. Three republics occupy the ancient Columbia; below are the republics of Peru, and Bolivia, and Brazil; more to the S. the republics of L'Uruguay, Chili, La Plata, and Paraguay. See further all these names below, WEST INDIES, &c. &c.

AMERSFOORT, a town in the Netherlands, 25 miles from Amsterdam, where there are still considerable plantations and manufactories of tobacco.

AMERSHAM, in Buckinghamshire, consisting of a long street, intersected in the middle by a short one. There are some trifling manufactures carried on here. 26 miles from London. Market, Tuesday. Pop. 3645.

AMES, JOSEPH, the author of Typographical Antiquities, which, as edited by Dr. Dibdin, is perhaps the best history of Printing in England. He wrote some other books, and was a collector of antiquities and other curiosities. He died in 1759, aged 70 years.

AMESBURY, in Wiltshire, on the Avon, a very ancient place, consisting of two irregular streets. 78 miles from London. Pop. 1171.

AMETHYST, s. [amethystos, Gr.] a gem of a purple colour, which seems composed of a strong blue and deep red; and, according as either of these colours prevail, affording different tinges of purple, sometimes approaching to violet, and sometimes even fading to a pale rose-colour. In Heraldry, a purple colour in the coat of a nobleman, used by those who blazon by precious stones instead of metals and colours. This in a gentleman's escutcheon is called purpure, and in those of sovereign princes, Mercury.

AMETHYSTINE, a. of a fine violet purple colour, resembling that of an amethyst.

AMHARA, a province of Abyssinia, consisting of the S. and W. portions of the table-land of that country. Some parts of this tract are above 10,000 feet higher than the sea-level. In the valleys the soil is good, and fruitful in corn. In some parts most of the wild beasts peculiar to Africa abound. There are two considerable lakes, named Zana and Dembea. Near the latter, the capital of the province, Gondar, is situated.

AMHARIC, one of the dialects of the Ethiopic language spoken in Amhara, in Abyssinia.

AMHERST, a town on the Gulf of Martaban, in the Burmese empire. It was built at the conclusion of the Burmese war by the British, and has a considerable population and good trade.

AMHERST, a town of Massachusetts, U. S., where is a highly flourishing college, founded in 1821, and incorporated in 1825.

AMIALE, [amiable, Fr.] that is an object of love. That is able to attract the affection of love or delight.

AMIALENESS, s. the quality which renders a person or thing an object of delight, pleasure, or love.

AMICABLY, ad. in such a manner as to gain love.

AMICABLE, a. [amicabilis, Lat.] endowed with all the qualities, kindness, and social benevolence, which can knit the tie of friendship.

AMICABLENESS, s. that quality which is exerted in performing acts of kindness, and in exercising the offices of friendship.

AMICABLY, ad. in such a manner as is consistent with the warmest affection.

AMICE, s. [amictus, Lat.] the first or undermost of the six garments worn by priests, and next to the alb.

AMID, [amidst, prep. [a and mid, Sax.]] in the middle, with respect to situation; applied to things, placed in a straight line, between or in the centre.

AMIDE, s. in Chemistry, an organic acid, a compound of nitrogen and hydrogen. It is the radical of ammonia. It enters into the composition of starch, and combines with metals.

AMIENS, a handsome, large, and ancient city in the department of Somme. It has three bridges over as many branches of the Somme. There is still a considerable trade here. The Treaty of Amiens was signed here between Great Britain and France, Spain, and Holland, in 1802. 75 miles from Paris. Lat. 49. 54. N. Long. 2. 22. E.

AMIoT, the name of a Jesuit who laboured for 44 years in China. His works on the dialects, &c., of that country are very valuable. He died in 1794, aged 77 years.

AMISS, ad. [a and miss, Sax.] wrong, or contrary to any law, divine or moral; improperly, or inconsistent with the dictates of reason.

AMITY, s. a state wherein there is the greatest concord, harmony, or mutual intercourse, between two or more persons. Applied to nations, peace, wherein states are employed in promoting the good of each other.

AMMIANUS MARCELLINUS, the author of a History of some of the later Roman Emperors, part of which is lost. He was in the army, and served under Julian in the war in Persia.

AMMON, an Egyptian god, supposed by the Greeks to be the same as Zeus Olympius. Alexander the Great claimed to be his son, and bore on his coins the ram's horns, which were the symbol of Ammon.

AMMONIA, in Chemistry, the volatile alkali. The hydrochlorate of Ammonia, commonly called Sal Ammoniac, whose uses as a volatile salt are so well known, is now manufactured in this country. It used to be imported from Egypt, where it was procured by sublimation from the soot of canes' dung.

AMMONIAC, (GUM) s. a gum, or gum-resin, extracted from a plant of the genus Ferula, growing in some parts of Asia.

AMMONIACAL, a. that has the properties of ammoniac, as above described.

AMMONITES, s. a genus of fossil shells, nearly allied to the genus nautilus. They are distinguished from it by the peculiarity of the lines of suture, where the divisions of the cells are inserted into the outer shell;—they being a simple curve in the nautilus, whilst in this genus they are wavy or zig-zag, or crenated so as to produce the most beautiful effoliations. By late conchologists this genus has been divided into several genera.

AMMONIUM, in Chemistry, a substance possessing all the properties of a metal, obtained only as a compound or amalgam, by means of the Galvanic battery.

AMMUNITION, s. [ad and munitio, Lat.] such arms, instruments, and stores, as are necessary to carry on a war; military stores.

AMMUNITION-BREAD, s. bread provided for an army or garrison.

AMNESTY, s. [amnesia, Gr.] an act wherein a prince promises pardon to criminals for offences past; an act of oblivion.

AMNION, AMNION, the innermost membrane with which the fetus is covered.

AMNIOTIC, a. belonging to the amnion. The amniotic acid is found in the amnion of a cow.

AMONG, AMONGST, prep. [among, Sax.] present, or residing with.

AMORIST, s. [amor, Lat.] one who is captivated with the charms of a female; one who is in love; a lover.

AMOROUS, s. [amoureux, Fr.] fond; smitten with love at the sight of an amiable object; naturally inclined to love.

AMOROUSLY, ad. with great appearance of affection or love; in a fond or loving manner.

AMORT, a. [à la mort, Fr.] spiritless.

AMORTIZATION, AMORTIZEMENT, s. [amortissement, Fr.] in Law, a transferring of lands to a corporation, &c., to remain in their possession for ever; called an alienation or tenements in mortmain.

To AMORTIZE, v. a. [amortir, Fr.] to alien or transfer lands to any corporation, guild, or fraternity, for ever.

AMOS, one of the Jewish prophets, whose prophecies form part of the Old Testament. He prophesied about 790 B. C. His writings consist principally of threatenings against the Israelites and the surrounding nations, for their sins against Jehovah.

To AMOVE, v. a. [amoveo, Lat.] in Law, to move a person from his post or station.

To AMOUNT, v. n. [monter, Fr.] applied to arithmetical processes, to make up, to come to, when all the separate parts or figures are added together; to compose when united.

AMOUNT, s. in Arithmetic, the sum produced by the addition tion of several numbers or quantities; the product of several quantities, added together; the consequence, result, or value.

AMOUR, a. [amour, Fr.] a loving intrigue, including the secondary idea of something vicious.

AMPÈRE, ANDRÉ MARIE, an eminent electrician of the present century. To him is due the proof of the connexion and oneness of the electric, magnetic, and galvanic forces, which had long been suspected and in part only shown before. He died in 1836, aged 61.

AMPHIBIA, in Zoology, a term used to designate those classes and species which are amphibious.

AMPHIBIOUS, a. [amphi and bios, Gr.] that can live both upon land and in water, as the beaver, otter, frog, &c.

AMPHIBIOLOGY, s. [amphibologia, Gr.] an abuse of language, wherein words are so placed in a sentence as to admit of a different sense, according to the different manner of combining them.

AMPHICTYONS, s. in Grecian Antiquity, an assembly composed of deputies from the different states of Greece; and resembling in some measure the Diet of the German empire.

AMPHIBSÆNA, s. [Lat.] in Zoology, a kind of serpents which was believed to have a head at each extremity.

AMPHISCHI, s. [amphi and skia, Gr.] those people who live between the tropics, so called, because according to the sun's coming up to the two solstices, the shadow changes, and falls sometimes on the right and sometimes on the left hand.

AMPHITHEATRE, s. [amphi and theatron, Gr.] in Antiquity, a large edifice either round or oval, with seats rising one above another, upon which the people sat to behold the combats of gladiators, of wild beasts, and other sports; they were at first only built of wood, but in the reign of Augustus there was one erected of stone.

AMPHITRITE, s. in Grecian Mythology, the wife of Neptune, and goddess of the sea.

AMPHORA, s. a tall earthen vessel, pointed at the bottom, used for wine, &c., and as a liquid measure, by the ancient Greeks and Romans.

AMPLE, a. [amplus, Lat.] applied to extent, wide or spacious. Applied to bulk, large, great, or big. Applied to permission, or liberties granted, full; without restraint. Applied to gifts, large, liberal. Applied to writings, full, minute, containing all the circumstances.

AMPLENESS, s. largeness, splendour.

TO AMPLIATE, v. a. [amplio, Lat.] to enlarge, extend, to make additions to.

AMPLIATION, s. [ampliatio, Lat.] applied to rumours, increasing their sense by additional circumstances; an exaggeration or enlargement. Enlargement, or dwelling long upon a subject.

TO AMPLIFICATE, v. a. [amplifico, Lat.] to enlarge, to dwell long upon a subject.

AMPLIFICATION, s. [amplificatio, Lat.] enlargement, or increase of dimensions, applied to a body; but, generally speaking, it is used for the heightening of a description, commendation, definition, or the blame of a thing, by such an enumeration of particulars as most forcibly affects the passions; hyperbolic expression.

AMPLIFIER, s. one who enlarges.

TO AMPLIFY, v. a. [amplus and fio, Lat.] to increase the dimensions, or number of parts, applied to matter or body. To increase, or heighten, applied to quality. To extend, or enlarge, applied to power or dominion. To render complete, or increase by additions, applied to writings; to expatiate, to treat fully, or enlarge upon; to represent in a pious, heightened, and hyperbolic manner.

AMPLITUDE, s. [amplitudo, Lat.] compass, or extent; greatness, or largeness; capacity, endowed with powers sufficient. In Astronomy, is an arch of the horizon, intercepted between the east or west part thereof, and the centre of the sun, star, or planet, at its rising or setting; at the rising it is called ortive, at the setting occasive.

AMPLY, ad. largely, liberally; at large; copiously.

AMPTHILL, in Bedfordshire. 44 miles from London. Market, Thursday. Pop. 2001.

TO AMPUTATE, v. a. [amputo, Lat.] in Surgery, to cut off a limb.

AMPUTATION, s. [amputatio, Lat.] in Surgery, the cutting off a limb of the body.

AMSTERDAM, the capital of the kingdom of Holland, situated on a small stream named Amstel, at its junction with the IJ, which is an arm of the Zuyder Zee. It is built on an old marsh, and a foundation for it was made by driving piles into the yielding soil. It is well fortified with ramparts and ditches; and has, according to the custom of the country, canals running through the principal streets, with rows of trees beside them. The bridge over the Amstel where it enters the city, is a fine structure, 610 feet long, with 35 arches, and under the central arches large ships can pass. It has a good harbour, and spacious docks, secured by dikes. The public buildings, churches, hospitals, &c., are very numerous, and some of them are very fine. It has a great trade, tobacco, sugar, &c., and its population is above 200,000. The passage to the city through the Zuyder Zee being difficult, a canal has been constructed of above 50 miles long, connecting it directly with the sea near Texel. Lat. 52. 23. N. Long. 4. 54. E.

AMULET, s. [amulette, Fr.] something worn round the neck as a defence against mischief, or as a cure from some disease. Some of these were expected to operate as charms, but others probably produced some effect through the pores of the skin.

AMUR, a large river in Asia. It flows through China and part of the Russian empire into the Pacific Ocean near the island Saghalien.

TO AMUSE, (amúze) v. a. [amuser, Fr.] to employ a person's thoughts on some object that may engage them from wandering to any other, including the idea of something trifling; to entertain with something agreeable, which has not force enough to divert, and wants importance to please.

AMUSEMENT, (amusement) s. an employment, in order to avoid the tediousness of inaction; any thing which engages the mind, or is the subject of the senses; an entertainment. SYNON. The general idea of diversion and amusement is innocent recreation; but that of amusement implies tranquil entertainment; that of diversion, tumultuous merriment: card-playing, concerts, plays, &c., are amusements; cricket, cudgel-playing, horse-races, &c., are diversions.

AMUSE, (amúzer) s. one who deludes, or engages the attention of another, by specious or false promises.

AMUSIVE, s. that engages the attention to something trifling, specious, and delusive.

AMYGDALINE, a. [amygdala, Lat.] resembling almonds.

AMELL, OUZEL, a name given to certain birds of the blackbird kind.

AN, article, [ane, Sax.] the indefinite article put before nouns of the singular number, which begin with a vowel, or an h, when not sounded or aspirated, as an eye, an hour, but if aspirated, a is used, as a hand, a hare. Applied to number, it signifies one, in a loose and undetermined sense.

ANA, s. [Gr.] a term used by physicians to denote an equal quantity of ingredients to be used in compounding a medicine; and in their recipes is thus abbreviated, ā or aa.

ANA, Anas, or books in Ana, are collections of the memorable sayings of persons of learning and wit, such as Cusuboniana, or the sayings of Casaubon, &c.

ANABAPTISTS, s. [ana and baptizo, Gr.] a religious sect, which arose at the time of the Reformation, who disallowed baptism in infancy, and required that their adherents should be re-baptized. They were guilty of great extravagances both in their creed and their conduct, and were suppressed by the princes who favoured Luther.

ANABASIS, the name of one of the writings of the Grecian author, Xenophon, which narrates the retreat of the 10,000 Greeks through Asia Minor.

ANACATHARTIC, a. [anacathartikos, Gr.] in Medicine, that operates as an emetic.

ANCHORET, s. See ANCHORITE.

ANACHRONISM, s. [ana and chronos, Gr.] in Chronology, the misplacing an action with respect to the time in which it was performed; a mistake in computing the time when an event happened.

ANACREON, a Grecian poet, a native of Teos, in Asia Minor, who was celebrated during his life throughout Greece for his lyrics, and died in old age, being choked by a grape-stone. His poems are esteemed for their beauty of style. He flourished about 540 B. C.

ANACREONTIC, s. verses in imitation of Anacreon, either as to style or subjects.

ANADIPLOSIS, s. [Gr.] reduplication; in Rhetoric, a figure in which the last word of a foregoing member of a period becomes the first of the following: as, "He retained his virtues amid all his misfortunes, misfortunes which only his virtues brought upon him." In Medicine, the return of a paroxysm of a fever, chiefly of a semi-tertian.

ANAGNI, a city, formerly of some celebrity, in the neighbourhood of Rome.

ANAGOGICAL, a. [anagoge, Gr.] mysterious, transporting. The term is principally used in reference to a particular scheme of interpreting Scripture.

ANAGRAM, s. [ana and gramma, Gr.] the transposition of the letters of some name, by which a new word or motto is formed, either to the advantage or disadvantage of the person or thing to which the name belongs.

ANALECTA, s. [analect, s. the remains or fragments taken off the table. In Literature, it is used to denote a collection of small pieces, as Essays, Remains, &c. A miscellany.

ANALEMMA, s. [Gr.] in Geometry, a projection of the sphere on the plane of the meridian, orthographically made by straight lines and ellipses, the eye being supposed at an infinite distance, and in the east or west points of the horizon; likewise an instrument of brass or wood, upon which this kind of projection is drawn.

ANALEPTICS, s. [analeptikos, Gr.] in Physic, medicines proper to restore the body when emaciated either by the long continuance of a disorder, or want of food.

ANALOGICAL, a. [analogikos, Gr.] applied to words, a term which signifies any particular idea as attributed to several others, not by way of resemblance, but on account of some evident reference to the original idea.

ANALOGICALLY, ad. in a manner wherein there is some resemblance to the thing compared, though it may not hold good with respect to all its properties.

ANALOGISM, s. [analogismos, Gr.] reason. In Logic, an argument drawn from the cause to the effect, and importing an unanswerable necessity.

To ANALOGIZE, v. a. to turn into analogy; to form a resemblance or run a parallel between things which differ; to interpret a thing as if it had a reference or resemblance to something else.

ANALOGOUS, a. [analogia, Gr.] that bears a resemblance to a thing in some particulars, but not all.

ANALOGY, s. [analogia, Gr.] a resemblance which one thing bears to another in some of its properties or qualities, though not in all. In Geometry, a similitude of ratios. In Medicine, the similitude observable among several diseases, which, accordingly, are treated in nearly the same manner. In Grammar, the agreement of several words in one common mode; as love, loved; hate, hated. In Rhetoric, it is a figure of speech, otherwise called comparison.

ANALYSIS, s. [Gr.] a separation of a compound body into several parts. In Logic, it is a method of tracing things backward to their source, and resolving knowledge into its original principles. In Mathematics, it is an investigation which, commencing with the assumption of that which is sought, goes back to some principle upon which a proof may be established. It is usually pursued by means of Algebra, and the Calculus. In Chemistry, it is the reduction of a compound body to its immediate or to its ultimate elements; to ascertain either their nature or their proportions. In Grammar, it is the explaining the etymology, construction, and other properties of words. In Rhetoric, it is the stripping an oration of all its embellishments, and the exhibition of its simple thoughts and argument.

ANALYTIC, s. [analytikos, Gr.] the manner of resolving a thing into its primary, elemental, or constituent parts; the reducing a book into the several topics which it treats of.

ANALYTICAL, a. that which resolves things into their first principles.

ANALYTICALLY, ad. in such a manner as to separate a thing into the parts of which it is composed; to resolve a subject into its first principles.

To ANALYZE, v. a. [analyz, Gr.] in Chemistry, to resolve a compound into its first principles. To investigate or trace a thing to its first principles or motives.

ANALYZER, s. that which can reduce a thing into its first principles.

ANAMORPHOSIS, s. [Gr.] in Optics, the construction of drawings so that they appear in true proportion and perspective only when viewed in a cylindrical mirror, or through a particularly formed glass, or from one special point of view.

ANANASSA, s. in Botany, the pine-apple.

ANAPÆST, s. in ancient poetry, a foot, consisting of two short syllables and one long.

ANAPHORA, s. [Gr.] a figure when several clauses of a sentence are begun with the same word or sound; as, "Where is the wise? where is the scribe? where is the disputer of this world?"

ANAPLEROSIS, s. [Gr.] repletion; that part of surgery which supplies deficiencies.

ANAPLEROTIC, a. [anapleroo, Gr.] that fills up a wound with flesh.

ANARCH, (anark) s. [a and archos, Gr.] one who is the author or promoter of confusion or sedition, a rebel.

ANARCHICAL, (anárkikal) a. that is not subject to rule, law, or government; rebellious, or seditious.

ANARCHY, (anárkey) s. [anarchia, Gr.] a state wherein there is not, or no one will acknowledge, a supreme magistrate; a state wherein people are without the enforcement of laws, or will not submit to them; sedition; confusion.

ANASARICA, s. [ana and sarz, Gr.] a kind of universal dropsy, wherein the skin appears bloated, and yields to the impression.

ANASTOMOSIS, s. [Gr.] in Anatomy, the insinuation, or opening of two vessels into each other.

ANATHEMA, s. [Gr.] originally, any thing devoted to the gods, whether celestial or infernal. In the New Testament and subsequently, a curse pronounced on persons for evil-doing, or for heresy.

ANATHEMATICALY, ad. in the manner of an anathema, or sentence of excommunication.

To ANATHEMATIZE, v. a. to pronounce the sentence of excommunication against any person.

ANATOCISM, s. [ana and tokos, Gr.] the accumulation of interest upon interest; a species of usury generally forbidden.

ANATOLIA, a name of the country commonly called Asia Minor, which lies between the Black, the Ægean, and the Mediterranean Seas. Mount Taurus runs throughout its length, in the S. part; and there are other less elevated ranges in the N. The table land in the centre abounds in lakes; and there are many rivers, of which the Kizil-ermak, anciently the Halys, is the largest. There are mines of iron, silver, copper, and lead; and gold used to be found in the rivers flowing into the Ægean. The population is principally Turkish, but in the western part there are some Greeks. It is under the Turkish government.

ANATOMICAL, a. that pertains to Anatomy.

ANATOMIST, s. [anatomiste, Fr.] one who dissects the human body, or that of any of the animals; dividing every one of the parts from each other; inquiring into their structure, properties, uses, &c.

To ANATOMIZE, v. a. [anatenno, Gr.] to dissect the body; to discover all the properties of a truth or a person; to lay open the secret motives, affections, or dispositions of a person's mind.

ANATOMY, s. [anatomie, Gr.] the science which, by dissection, exhibits the structure and uses of the different parts of the human body. Comparative Anatomy is the science which investigates in a similar manner all classes of animals, and traces the resemblances and differences between their various parts and functions.

ANAXAGORAS, an ancient Greek philosopher, a native of Clazomenæ, in Asia Minor. He lived and taught at Athens during 30 years preceding the most splendid era of its history, and was the teacher of Socrates, Pericles, and Euripides. He was afterwards banished, and died at Lampacus in 428 B. C., aged 73 years. His great doctrine was that "mind" was the origin and governor of the universe.

ANAXIMANDER, an ancient Greek philosopher, born at Miletus, in Asia Minor. The reputed inventor of maps and of the sun-dial. He was a mathematician, and his speculations were chiefly physical. He died about 547 B. C., aged 63 years.

ANAXIMENES, an ancient Greek philosopher, a native of Miletus, who discovered the obliquity of the ecliptic. He taught that air was the beginning of all things. He lived about 520 B. C.

ANCESTOR, [ancestre, Fr.] the person from whom one is descended by birth. SYNON. It is distinguished from predecessor, because that is used to signify those whom we succeed in dignity and office; but ancestors, those whom we follow by natural descent, and as men, whether by father or mother's side.

ANCESTRAL, a. in Law, that may be claimed in right of our ancestors, or that which has been done by them.

ANCESTRY, s. such persons of a family from whom a person is descended; family, lineage, progenitors; pedigree, descent, or birth.

ANCHOR, (ānkor) s. [anchora, Lat.] an instrument formed of a strong bar of iron, with two arms with flukes at one end, and a beam and a ring to hold a cable with in the other, used to keep ships or other vessels from driving with the wind, tide, or currents. It is used with the following verbs, to drop, or cast, which imply the letting down; and to weigh, which signifies the pulling up of the anchor. There are several kinds of anchors; the sheet anchor, which is the largest; the two bowers, which are carried at the bows of the vessel, and are those most commonly used; the stream anchor, the kedge, and grapnel. In Heraldry, it is the emblem of hope.

To ANCHOR, (ānkor) v. n. to be secured, to be kept from driving, by means of an anchor. Figuratively, to fasten, to stop.

ANCHORAGE, (ānkorage) s. the effect which an anchor has, so as to hold or keep a ship from driving; the anchors themselves; the duty paid for anchorage in a port; ground fit to hold a ship's anchor so that she may ride safely.

ANCHORET, ANCHORETTE, (ānkorēt, ānkoritē) s. [anachorete, Gr.] the name given to persons who used to retire from the world, to deserts, for the practice of contemplation and ascetic piety.

ANCHOVY, s. [anchova, Span.] a small fish, much used for sauce, which abounds in the Mediterranean.

ANCHYLOSIS, s. in Surgery, a joint which has lost the power of bending, by the growing together of the bones.

ANCIENT, ANTIENT, s. the flag or streamer of a ship, or the bearer of a flag. Also, one that lived in old times. Among the lawyers in the temple, such as are passed their reading are called Ancients; and in Gray's Inn, it is one of the four classes that compose the society, which consists of ancients, barristers, benchers, and students.

ANCIENT, a. [ancien, Fr.] that has endured for some time; that has been formerly, or some time ago; opposed to modern, but not to new.

ANCIENTLY, ad. in former times, in times long past, or before the present instant.

ANCIENTRY, s. a pedigree which can be traced a great many years backwards; or a family which has been noted for a long course of years.

ANCONA, a considerable sea-port on the Gulf of Venice, in the papal states of Italy. 116 miles from Rome. Lat. 43. 36. N. Long. 13. 35. E.

ANCUS MARTIUS, the name of the fourth king of Rome, who is said to have devoted his chief attention to the internal administration of the city, but to have been successful in the wars to which he was driven by the hostilities of the neighbouring towns. His history belongs, however, to the Mythic Period.

AND, conjunct. (Sax.) a particle, by which sentences are joined together, signifying that what was affirmed or denied of the sentence before it, holds good of that which comes after it.

ANDALUSIA, a rich and fertile province in the S. of Spain. It abounds in fruits, corn, wine, oil, honey, sugar, cattle, and very beautiful horses. Its capital is Seville, and its chief river the Guadalquivir.

ANDAMAN ISLANDS, four islands in the Bay of Bengal, inhabited by very barbarous people. No persevering efforts have yet been made to raise them.

ANDANTE, s. a musical term, signifying that every note must be played very distinctly.

ANDES, otherwise called CORDILLERA, a great chain of mountains, which run almost the whole length of South America, parallel to the western shore. They are almost the highest in the world, and those within the torrid zone are always covered with snow. There are a great many volcanoes, which break out sometimes in one place and sometimes in another; and by melting the snow, occasion great floods, which have been very destructive.

ANDERSONS, s. irons placed at each end of a grate on which a spit turns; or irons on which wood is laid to burn instead of a grate.

ANDOVER, in Hampshire. 63 miles from London. It has three principal streets, and a very ancient church. It has some silk manufactories, and malting houses. Market, Saturday. Pop. 4941.

ANDOVER, a town of Massachusetts in the United States, on the Merrimack. The Theological Seminary was opened in 1808, and has much furthered the study of sacred literature in the States. It has a fine library, and furnishes instruction to about 140 students. The town has woollen factories and fulling mills, &c. Pop. 5207.

ANDRÉ, J. Major, a distinguished British officer during the American war. He was employed by General Clinton to conduct the negotiation with Arnold for the surrender of W. Point fortress to the British, and was taken in disguise and under an assumed name, within the American lines. He was hung as a spy on the 2nd Oct., 1780. A monument has been erected to his memory in Westminster Abbey.

ANDREW, one of the apostles, and brother to Simon Peter. He accompanied our Lord during his ministry, and according to some historians, after having laboured in Greece, was crucified at Patre in Achaia.

ANDREWS, ST., in Fifeshire, Scotland. 30 miles from Edinburgh. It stands on a small hill, on the side of a bay, which forms a small harbour for the town. Its trade was anciently considerable, but it has little now. Its name rests on its university, which is very ancient, and consists of two colleges in which literary, scientific, and theological studies are pursued. There are usually above 300 students. This town is rich in antiquities, particularly of the ecclesiastical order. Pop. 6017.

ANDREWS, LANCELOT, bishop of Chichester, and afterwards of Winchester, in the time of James I. He was thought to be an eloquent preacher in his time. He is now known only as an advocate of High Church doctrines, and the passive obedience usually associated with them. He died in 1626, aged 61 years.

ANDROGYNOUS, a. [aner and gune, Gr.] an epithet given to those animals or persons which were supposed to have the distinction of both sexes in the same individual.

ANDROIDES, [aner and eidos, Gr.] an automaton in the figure of a man, which, by means of internal mechanism, performs the actions of a man.

ANDROMEDA, a constellation in the northern hemisphere, representing the figure of a woman chained to a rock.

ANDRONICUS, RHODIUS, the name of an editor and commentator of the works of Aristotle, who lived at Rome about 60 A. C.

ANDROS, one of the islands in the Ægean Sea, very fertile in corn, wine, &c., but exporting little beside silk.

ANDUJAR, an ancient, large, and populous city of Andalusia. It has several fine buildings, a strong castle, and a stately bridge, and exports silk and wine. 25 miles from Cordova.

ANECDOTE, s. [anekdoton, Gr.] an article of secret history; a relation of detached and interesting particulars.

ANEMOGRAPHY, s. [anemos and grapho, Gr.] a description of the winds.

ANEMOMETER, s. [anemos and metro, Gr.] an instrument to measure the force of the wind.

ANEMONE, s. (Gr.) in Botany, wind-flower, a genus of plants of which there are many species, some of which are accounted beautiful. Two species are natives of Britain. The garden species are varieties of one common on the continent of Europe.

ANEMOSCOPE, s. [anemos and skopeo, Gr.] an instrument for determining the course and velocity of the wind.

ANENT, prep. a Scotch word signifying about, concerning; over against, opposite to.

ANES, AWNS, s. the beards or spires of corn.

ANEURISM, s. [aneuro, Gr.] a soft red tumour, occasioned by the weakness of an artery, or by blood spread under the flesh, in consequence of a wound, or rupture of an artery.

ANEW, ad. [neove, Sax.] again; over again; once more.

ANGEL, s. [angelus, Lat.] a name given to those spiritual beings who are employed by God in the government of the world. The word signifies a messenger. We read of evil angels, the ministers of God's wrath; as the destroying angel, the angel of death, the angel of Satan, the angel of the bottomless pit. Angel is likewise the name of an ancient gold coin in England, having the figure of an angel engraved on it, of the value of 10s. Figuratively, a person of exquisite beauty, and superior to the common run of mortals.

ANGELIC, ANGELICAL, a. resembling, belonging to, or partaking of, the nature of angels.

ANGELICA, s. [Lat.] in Botany, a common umbelliferous plant, formerly of great esteem amongst physicians, but now little used.

ANGELO, MICHAEL, one of the most celebrated artists of the world. In sculpture he has left us the colossal statues of Moses, and of David, with many others; in painting, the adorning of the vault, &c., of the Sistine Chapel at Rome; in architecture, St. Peter's at Rome; in engineering, the fortifications of San Miniato; in poetry, works that are placed amongst the Italian classics. In all, however, we find little pathos, or human beauty; every thing is sublimely great or terrible. He flourished during the most wonderful period of history since the Christian era, the awakening of mind which was the forerunner of the Reformation. He had for his patrons the Medici; and for fellow-labourers, Raffaële, Bramante, Politian, &c. He died at Rome in 1563, aged 89 years.

ANGELOS, a city of Mexico. It has a fine cathedral, and some other beautiful buildings; a mint glass-house, and other manufactures; and the country round it is very fertile. 62 miles S. E. of Mexico. Lat. 19. 30. N. Long. 99. 22. W.

ANGER, s. [Anger, Sax.] a desire of thwarting the happiness of another, on account of an injury received. SYNON. The word anger implies a passion more internal and lasting; whereas the expression of in a passion, carries in its idea a sudden external gust of anger, short but violent.

To ANGER, v. a. to injure or offend a person, so as to provoke him to resentment, or to desire to thwart one's happiness.

ANGERLY, ad. in the manner of, or like a person who re-sents an injury.

ANGERS, a town of France, the capital of the department of the Maine and Loire. It stands on the Mayenne, and has a castle and a cathedral, both of great age. It has also several scholastic institutions, and a fine library, museum, &c. Its trade lies in the products of its factories, and of the surrounding country. It has not so great a population now as it had two centuries ago.

ANGINA, s. [Lat.] in Surgery, a disease or swelling of the throat, called the quinsy.

ANGIOGRAPHY, s. [Angion and grapho, Gr.] a description of the vessels or tubes of the human body.

ANGIOLOGY, s. [Angion and logos, Gr.] a treatise or discourse of the vessels of the human body.

ANGLE, s. [angulus, Lat.] in Geometry, the inclination of two lines which meet together to one another. There are various kinds of angles, as plane, spherical, and solid; and these again, according to the degree of inclination, are named acute, right-angled, and obtuse; or according to the kind of lines forming them, rectilinear and curvilinear. An angle is called the complement of another when with it it makes up one right angle; and the supplement, when with it it equals two right angles. Angles of incidence, reflexion, and refraction, in Optics, are the angles between the direction of a ray of light falling on, reflected from, or passing beyond, a surface and the perpendicular to that surface. An instrument to catch fish with, consisting of a line, hook, and rod.

To ANGLE, v. a. to fish with a hook, line, and rod. Figuratively, to entice by some allurement or artifice.

ANGLE-ROD, s. the rod to which the line and hook are fastened in angling.

ANGLER, s. he that fishes with rod, hook, and line.

ANGLES, a branch of the great Teutonic family, who are mentioned first by Tacitus as connected with the Suevi of ancient Germany. They afterwards settled in Sleswick, in Denmark, and thence migrated, or sent colonies to the E. parts of Britain, founding the Saxon kingdoms of E. Anglia, Bernicia, Deira, and Mercia. From them the S. part of our island received its name Eng-land. In common with the other tribes of the Saxon stock, they held by the stern and cruel but poetical faith which sprang from Odin and deified him. But of all the Saxons they most readily embraced Christianity, when re-introduced into England by Austin and Paulinus.

ANGLESEA, ANGLESEY, Isle of, a county of N. Wales, separated from Caernarvonshire by the Straits of Menai, over which is a suspension bridge. Its ancient name (in common with the Isle of Man) was Mona. It abounds in Druidical remains, and was the last retreat of that faith before the arms of the Romans. It was conquered by the Saxons, and from them received its present name. It is about 24 miles long and 18 broad; has not very good arable soil, but has good pastures. It has mines of copper, lead, silver, and coal; and quarries of limestone and slate. Beaumaris is its chief town. Pop. 50,891.

ANGLICISM, s. [Anglicus, Lat.] a method of expression peculiar to the English language.

ANGLING, s. the diversion of fishing by a rod, line, and hook, armed with a bait.

ANGLO-SAXONS, See Saxons.

ANGOLA, a kingdom on the western coast of Africa, bounded on the N. by the river Danda, which separates it from Congo; and on the S. by the Coanza, which divides it from Benguela. The soil produces Indian corn, beans, oranges, lemons, grain of various kinds, and great variety of fruits. Although the Portuguese preserve their superiority in Angola, yet the English, Dutch, and other European nations, carry on trade with the natives for various commodities. This country has been the principal source of slaves for the empire of Brazil. The language spoken is named the Bunda, and a grammar and dictionary have been compiled by one of the Romanist priests who have been sent out hither by the pope.

ANGORA, a town of Asiatic Turkey, remarkable for its antiquities, and for a breed of goats, whose hair, which is almost as soft as silk, is exported to Holland, France, and England, and manufactured into camlets, and other fine stuffs.

ANGOSTURA, a town of Colombia, South America, standing on the Orinoco. Its trade has chiefly consisted of the products of the interior, which, by its river navigation, it can most conveniently export. Its population is not large. Lat. 8. 9. N. Long. 63. 55. W.

ANGOULEME, a city of the department Charente, France, 287 miles from Paris. It is a very ancient town, and very finely situated on the Charente. There are here paper manufactories, and factories of some other commodities. Its population is above 15,000.

ANGRILY, ad. in a manner which bespeaks resentment on account of some injury.

ANGRY, a. desirous of revenge, on account of some affront; highly displeased.

ANGUILLA, or Snake Island, the most northern of the English Caribbean Islands. It is about 20 miles long and 6 broad, with good anchorage on the south side. Sugar, cotton, tobacco, &c., are its only productions.

ANGUSCIOLA, SOFONISBA, an eminent portrait painter, born at Cremona, invited to Spain by Philip II., and afterwards settled at Genoa. She died about 1620, at above 90 years old.

ANGUIISH, s. [angoisse, Fr.] excessive pain, applied to the body. Immoderate, or the highest degree of sorrow, anxiety, and torture, applied to the mind.

ANGUIISHED, a. affected with the profoundest anxiety, torture, and sorrow, on account of some calamity.

ANGULAR, a. [angulus, Lat.] that has corners or angles.

ANGULARITY, s. the quality of having angles or corners.

ANGULARLY, ad. with angles or corners; like an angle.

ANGULATED, a. [angulus, Lat.] that has angles or corners.

ANGULOUS, a. [angulus, Lat.] that has corners or angles.

ANGUS, See FORFARSHIRE.

ANHALT, a principality of Upper Saxony, which abounds in corn and hops, and has some rich mines.

ANHELATION, s. [anhele, Lat.] a shortness of breath, or quickness of breathing, occasioned by running or going up any high and steep place.

ANIELLO, TOMMASO, commonly known as Masaniello, the leader of a revolt at Naples against the government of Spain. He was a fisherman, who protested against the increase of the taxes, and at last resisted the collection of them, and was chosen as the popular leader. Terms of peace being made with the viceroy, he held for a few days the chief power in the city. But he exercised his authority very tyrannically, and at last lost his reason, and was assassinated, in the year 1647, in his 25th year.

ANIGHTS, ad. in the night-time, or every night.

ANILITY, s. [anilitas, Lat.] old age, considered as it respects a woman.

ANIMADVERSION, s. [animadversio, Lat.] a taking notice of a fault with some degree of anger, severity, or despatch.

ANIMADVERSIVE, a. that has power to make the mind attend to, or consider, any particular object; that has the power of judging.

To ANIMADVERT, v. n. [animadverto, Lat.] to censure, to blame, including the secondary idea of defect in a person animadverted on, together with authority, displeasure, and severity in the animadverter.

ANIMADVERTER, s. he who inflicts punishment or passes censure on crimes.

ANIMAL, s. [Lat.] generally, the name for all living, organized beings; but popularly, the lower orders of beings as distinguished from man. Animal magnetism. See MESMERISM. Animal physiology, that branch of physiological science which treats of the structure, &c., of the bodies of the lower orders of animals, in distinction from that which treats of the human body. Animal secretion, the operation of various glands of the body, in separating fluids, &c., of particular properties, from the blood. Animal spirits, the energy and vivacity which accompany a healthy state of the body. Animal system, the whole class of organized, animated beings, distinguished from the organic but inanimate class, plants; and the inorganic substances, as minerals, &c.

ANIMALICULE, s. [animalculum, Lat.] an animal so small as to be invisible to the naked eye. Animalcules are seen only by the assistance of the microscope, and are vastly more numerous than any other living creatures. See INFUSORIA.

ANIMALITY, s. [animal, Lat.] the state of animal existence.

To ANIMATE, v. a. [animare, Lat.] to give life to; to quicken; to join or unite a soul to a body. Figuratively, applied to musical instruments, to enliven, to make vocal, to inspire with the power of harmony; to communicate boldness to; to encourage; to excite.

ANIMATE, a. [animatus, Lat.] that is endued with a soul; that has life, or the properties of an animal; possessing animal life.

ANIMATED, part. that has a great deal of life; vigorous; spirited.

ANIMATION, s. [animatio, Lat.] the act of bringing into existence, or enduing with life both vegetable and animal; the state wherein the soul and body are united.

ANIMATIVE, a. that has the power of communicating a soul, or principle of life; that has the power of enlivening, encouraging, or making vigorous.

ANIMATOR, s. that which enlivens, or confers the principle of life.

ANIMOSE, a. [animosus, Lat.] full of spirit; violent; courageous; vehement.

ANIMOSITY, s. [animositas, Lat.] a disposition of mind wherein a person is inclined to hinder the success, thwart the happiness, or disturb the tranquillity of another; it includes in it a degree of enmity, and is opposite to friendship or benevolence.

ANINGA, a root growing in the West Indies, used in the refinement of sugar.

ANJOU, the name of an ancient duchy and province in the N. W. of France. It was in the possession of England under the Plantagenets.

ANISE, s. is a small seed of a hot nature, good to expel wind out of the bowels and stomach, and is used by confectioners in sugar-plums, &c. By distillation and pressure there is extracted from it an oil, which answers all the purposes of the seed itself; and during the distillation there comes off a water, called anised water.

ANKER, s. an old measure of wine and spirits, not used in England now, but still employed in some places on the continent. Also, the name of a cask holding about eight gallons of wine or spirits.

ANKERSTROM, J. J., the name of a Swedish officer who assassinated GUSTAVUS III. in revenge for his seizing an almost absolute power. He was executed in 1792, aged 33 years.

ANKLE, s. [ancleus, Sax.] the joint which unites the leg to the foot. Ankle-bone, the protuberant bone at the ankle.

ANNA COMNENA, one of the Byzantine historians. She wrote the life of her father, Alexius Comnenus I., emperor of Constantinople during the first crusade. She formed a conspiracy against her brother John, who succeeded his father, which failed, and she was banished the court. She died in 1148, aged 65 years.

ANNA, daughter of John I., emperor of Russia, and successor of Peter II. on the throne. She frustrated an attempt to limit the imperial power, and ruled with great decision and success in her undertakings. The palace of ice at Petersburg, so often spoken of, was built by her order at the marriage of Prince Galitzin. She died in 1740, aged 46 years.

ANNALIST, s. one who writes or composes annals.

ANNALS, s. [annales, Lat.] a narrative wherein the transactions are digested into periods, consisting each of one year; or relations which contain the public occurrences of a single year.

ANNAN, in Dumfriesshire, Scotland; principal town of the ancient district of Annandale. It stands not far from Solway Frith, and has a good bridge over the Annan. Its manufactories and trade are considerable, though it has a good harbour. 79 miles from Edinburgh. Pop. 5471.

ANNAPOLIS, the capital of Maryland, in the United States, on the W. side of the Severn, 2 miles from Chesapeake Bay. The state-house is a fine building in the centre of the city, from which, and from the Episcopal church, the streets radiate. There is a college here belonging to Maryland university. The trade is very small. Pop. 2792. Lat. 39. 0. N. Long. 76. 43. W. There are two other places of this name in the United States, and one in Nova Scotia.

ANNATES, s. [Lat.] first-fruits, or a year's income of a spiritual living. In ancient times they were given to the pope throughout all Christendom, on the decease of a bishop, abbot, or parish clerk, and paid by his successor. In England the pope claimed them first of such foreigners as he conferred benefices upon, by way of provision; but afterwards they were demanded of all other clerks, on their admission to benefices. At the Reformation they were taken from the pope, and vested in the king; and lastly, Queen Anne restored them to the church, for the augmentation of poor livings.

ANNE, one of the English sovereigns, the successor to William III. She was a daughter of James II., and married to Prince George of Denmark, and was placed on the throne by the act of settlement passed in her predecessor's reign. Shortly after her accession, she renewed the War of Succession, between England, Austria, and Holland, against France and Spain, to determine between the claims of Philip of Anjou and the Archduke Charles to the crown of Spain. The Duke of Marlborough, as commander of the allied army, in a succession of campaigns raised the military fame of England to the highest pitch, gaining various battles, amongst which those of Blenheim and Kamiles are most celebrated. In Spain, the army under Lord Peterborough achieved great success; whilst Churchill, Rooke, Shovel, and other naval commanders distinguished themselves no less: Gibraltar was taken, an acquisition whose worth was little known, and Minorca, with its fine harbour Port Mahon. At length, after ten years' war, the treaty of Utrecht was concluded, in 1713. The union with Scotland was the greatest act of statesmanship during this reign. It abolished the Scotch parliament, and introduced a uniform legislation for the whole of Great Britain. It was effected in the year 1706. Throughout this reign there was a ceaseless party struggle for the guidance of the queen's counsels. The queen, who was a weak but bigoted woman, cherishing all the predilections of the Stuarts, suffered herself to be led by Marlborough and Godolphin till she perceived that they were not aiming at her objects, and then yielding to the schemes of the opposition, they were displaced for Harley, Earl of Oxford, and Bolingbroke. But this did not put an end to the troubles: divisions in the tory camp, some being in secret Jacobites, and others warmly attached to the house of Hanover, aided the national discontent at the peace of Utrecht; and at length wearied out the life of the queen herself, who died in 1714, aged 50 years, having reigned above twelve. This reign exhibits a most mixed and incongruous spectacle. Men of the greatest ability, Newton, Marlborough, Addison, Swift, Pope, Bolingbroke, with their associates, adorned it; and an ignorant and arrogant Dr. Sacheverell could agitate the whole kingdom, and turn even the queen into a partisan, respecting the question of passive obedience, in endeavouring to maintain which, her immediate ancestors had lost life and crown; and the gravest matters of state were transacted at private interviews with the opponents of the ministry, and by the help of Mrs.

Masham. Several attempts were made to neutralize the concessions to the claims of conscience made by the Act of Toleration, which happily failed through the ascendancy of Marlborough and his party in the House of Lords.

ANNE OF AUSTRIA, infant of Spain, and married to Louis XIII. of France. Through the influence of Richelieu, who was in fact the ruler of the country, she was during almost the whole of Louis's life separated from him. At his death, her son, Louis XIV., being a minor, was under her guardianship; and as regent, with the counsel of Cardinal Mazarin, she governed the kingdom. The measures she adopted gave great offence to the nobility and to the city of Paris, and the war of the Fronde was the consequence. The civil war, which lasted for four years, left Louis XIV. in 1652, possessed of almost absolute power. Anne's influence waned from this time, and in 1666 she died, aged 64 years.

TO ANNEAL, (anneal) v. a. [elan, Sax.] to render substances tough that are naturally hard and brittle. Glass and iron are annealed by gradual cooling; brass and copper, by heating and and then suddenly plunging them in cold water. Glass is annealed to make it retain the colours laid on it.

TO ANNEX, v. a. [annecto, Lat.] to join or subjoin as a supplement; to connect; to unite, with; to belong to; to join as a property.

ANNEXATION, s. a Law term used to imply the uniting of lands or rents to the Crown.

ANNEXION, s. the adding of something as an enforcement, supplement, or aid.

ANNEXMENT, s. something that is joined to another.

TO ANNHILATE, v. a. [annihilo, Lat.] to reduce to nothing; to deprive of existence; to put an end to; to extinguish; to destroy utterly.

ANNIHILATION, s. the act by which the very existence of a thing is entirely destroyed.

ANNIVERSARY, s. [anniversarius, Lat.] the yearly return of any particular day; public rejoicing performed in honour of the anniversary day.

ANNIVERSARY, a. that falls but once in the course of a year; annual or yearly.

ANNO DOMINI, [Lat.] expressed by abbreviation, A.D.—thus, A.D. 1846, &c. in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and forty-six.

ANNOTATION, s. [annotatio, Lat.] explanation of the difficult passages of an author, written by way of notes.

ANNOTATOR, s. [Lat.] a person who explains the difficult passages of an author; a commentator.

ANNOTTO, a kind of red dye brought from the West Indies. It is used in tinging double Gloucester cheese.

TO ANNOUNCE, v. a. [annonce, Fr.] to proclaim; to reveal publicly; to pronounce; to sentence.

TO ANNOY, v. a. [annoyer, Fr.] to disturb; to vex; to make a person uneasy.

ANNOY, s. an attack; trouble, misfortune, or any state which is productive of anxiety.

ANNOYANCE, s. that which occasions any trouble, inconvenience, dislike, injury, or hurt; the state wherein a person is affected with the sight, hearing, seeing, &c., of a disagreeable object.

ANNOYER, s. the person who causes any annoyance, dislike, trouble, or loathing.

ANNUAL, a. [annuus, Fr.] occurring every year, or yearly; that endures only one year.

ANNUALLY, ad. every year, yearly.

ANNUITANT, s. [from annus, Lat.] he that possesses or receives an annuity.

ANNUITY, s. [annuité, Fr.] a yearly revenue, paid every year during a person's life, or certain term of years; a yearly allowance.

TO ANNUL, v. a. [from nullus, Lat.] applied to laws, to deprive them of their force; to abrogate; to abolish. Made imperceptible, or as if deprived of their existence, and annihilated.

ANNULAR, a. [annulus, Lat.] round, circular, having the form of a ring. In Anatomy, given to several parts of the body; thus the annular is the second cartilage of the larynx or throat; the annular ligament, that which encompasses the wrist, and binds the bones of the arm together; annular process, or protuberance, a part of the medulla oblongata. The fourth or ring finger is likewise called annular.

ANNULARY, a. being in the form of rings.

ANNULET, s. a small ring. In Heraldry, used for a mark that the person is the fifth brother; sometimes a part of the coat of several families, reputed a mark of dignity. In Architecture, the small square member in the Doric capital, under the quarter round; likewise a flat moulding common to the other parts of the column, which derives its name from its surrounding the column.

ANNULLING, s. the revoking, abolishing, or repealing of an act, &c.

TO ANNUNMERATE, v. a. [annunmero, Lat.] to reckon or count a person or thing into a list, a part of a number.

ANNUMERATION, s. [annumeratio, Lat.] something added to a number.

TO ANNUNCIATE, v. a. [annuncio, Lat.] to bring tidings; to declare something unknown before.

ANNUNCIATION, s. a festival instituted by the church in memory of the announcement of the incarnation of our Lord, made to the Virgin Mary, and solemnized the 25th of March, thence called Lady-day.

ANODYNE, s. [a and odyne, Gr.] a remedy which abates the force of pain, and renders it more tolerable.

TO ANOINT, v. a. [oindre, Fr.] to rub with some fat or greasy preparation; to consecrate by unction.

ANOINTER, s. the person who anoints.

ANOMALISTICAL, a. irregular. Anomalistical year, in Astronomy, the space of time wherein the earth passes through her orbit; differing from the common year, on account of the precession of the equinoxes.

ANOMALOUS, a. [a and omalos, Gr.] in Grammar, applied to such words as are not consistent with the rules of declining, &c. In Astronomy, applied to time which seemingly deviates from its regular motion.

ANOMALOUSLY, ad. in a manner not consistent with established laws or rules; in an irregular, uncommon, or extraordinary manner.

ANOMALY, s. [anomalie, Fr.] a deviation from the established rules and laws, whether those of nature, societies, or particular branches of science. In Astronomy, that portion of the ecliptic moved through by the moon or any planet, since it was last in its apogee or aphelion.

ANON, ad. soon after any time expressed; quickly. When applied to vicissitude, revolution, or change of action, it signifies then, afterwards, or sometimes.

ANONYMOUS, a. [a and onoma, Gr.] that has not yet received a name. Applied to books or publications, it means, that has not the name of the author.

ANONYMOUSLY, ad. in such a manner as to be without a name.

ANOREXY, s. [anorexia, Gr.] among physicians, a loathing of food, or want of appetite, proceeding from indigestion.

ANOTHER, pron. applied to things, something not like that which is mentioned; different. Applied to number or succession, one more; an addition; besides. Applied to identity, not the same. Joined with one, it signifies a thing mutually performed; something reciprocal.

ANOTTA, ANOTTA, s. in Dyeing, an elegant red colour, obtained from the seeds of the Bixa, a tree common in South America.

ANQUETIL DU PERRON, the name of two brothers, of whom the younger was eminent for his proficiency in oriental literature. He published a translation of the Zend-Avesta, the sacred book of the ancient sect of Parsees, or followers of Zoroaster. He died in 1805, aged 74 years.

ANATED, a. [anatus, Lat.] having handles; resembling handles.

ANSELM, a learned clerk, who was archbishop of Canterbury under William II. and Henry I. He was engaged in a contest with the kings of England respecting the rightful occupant of St. Peter's chair, he acknowledging Urban, and they his opponent; and also respecting the right of investiture, or of fully installing the higher clergy, which the kings claimed for themselves. He wrote many works, which are preserved yet, and died in 1109, aged 76 years.

ANSON, GEORGE, (LORD.) a famous English admiral in the reign of George II. He was engaged in various enterprises against the French and Spaniards, but his principal services were the observations, &c., he made during a circumnavigation of the world, which occupied him nearly four years. He died in 1762, aged 65 years.

ANSPACH, a principality of Franconia, in the kingdom of Bavaria, which is beautifully interspersed with woods; produces corn and tobacco, and has several iron mines, and medicinal springs. Also the name of the capital of this principality, which stands at the junction of the Holbach and the Rezat. It is a handsome town, with many fine public buildings, an old palace of the margraves of Anspach, a royal gymnasium, or high school, &c. It has manufactures of linen and woollen goods, tobacco, &c., and its population is near 20,000. Lat. 48. 12. N. Long. 10. 33. E.

ANSTRUTHER, the name of two towns in Fifeshire, Scotland, on the sea-coast. They have little trade, and that chiefly in fish. The harbour is not good, but Anstruther Easter has a good quay. They are 35 miles from Edinburgh. Pop. A. Easter, 1937; A. Wester, 449.

To ANSWER, (anser v. a. [ansuarian, Sax.] to speak in return to a question; to reply to an objection; to obviate, or give a solution; to assign reasons; to be accountable for, or satisfy any claim or debt; to pay; to bear a proportion; to be proportionate to; to vindicate; or be received as a witness, or voucher in a person's behalf.

ANSWER, s. [ansuere, Sax.] an information, or reply to a question; a solution of any difficulty, or objection.

ANSWERABLE, a. that will admit of a reply.

ANSWERABLY, ad. in proportion; in a manner which corresponds with, or is suitable to.

ANSWERER, s. one who gives such information as a question requires; he that solves, obviates, or clears up the objections of an adversary; he who writes against another in any controversy.

ANT, s. the English name of a genus of insects, allied to the bees, wasps, &c., and in Entomology named Formica. There are several species indigenous to England, which are all remarkable for the ingenuity, skill, and industry which they display in the construction of their dwellings, whether in the ground or in trees. They live in communities mostly composed of neuters or labourers, as the bees; but they have many females amongst them, who during the pairing season have wings, which they afterwards cast. The care of the eggs and immature young rests on the labourers, and it is the cocoons containing the pupæ that they are seen exposing to the sun and storing away in their galleries, and have been mistaken for grains of corn. Amongst their habits which display intelligence beyond any other creatures so low in the scale of organization, none are so surprising as the use they make of the aphides, the small green insects that deposit the honey-dew, tending and employing them much as we do cows;—or their wars, in which one colony has been seen marching against another in orderly masses, like the columns, and lines, and squares of an army;—or their piratical and slaving expeditions, which are the usual end of their battles, in which they carry off the cocoons of the vanquished, and tend them till the development of the perfect insects, which are employed as labourers amongst the conquerors.

ANTACIDS, s. medicines to correct acidity in the stomach.

ANTÆ, s. [Lat. in Architecture, the square columns or pilasters which terminated the lateral walls of ancient temples when the portico did not extend beyond the body of the building. They were sometimes also placed along the sides of the cell so as to produce a graceful effect.

ANTAGONIST, s. [anti and agonizo, Gr.] applied to a person who contends with another. Applied to writers, it means, one who opposes the opinions or sentiments of another. Antagonist muscles, in Anatomy, muscles which, being placed so as to oppose each other's strain, keep certain parts of the body in their right position. In paralysis, when one of these muscles has lost its power, the effect of the other is seen in the distortion of the mouth.

To ANTAGONIZE, v. a. to strive or contend against another.

ANTALGIC, a. [anti and algeo, Gr.] in Medicine, that softens or mitigates pain.

ANTALKALIES, s. medicines to correct the excess of alkalis in the body.

ANTAR, the name of the hero of Arabian poetry and fiction.

A warrior of this name, on whose history the romances are founded, lived in about the sixth century, and not being of pure Arab extraction, rendered himself famous by his daring and success.

ANTARCTIC, a. [anti and arktos, Gr.] that is opposite to the arctic, applied in Astronomy to the southern pole and circle. The antarctic pole in Astronomy is the south pole, or that part of the heavens to which the south end of the earth's axis points. The antarctic circle is one of the lesser circles of the sphere, parallel to the equator, and 23 deg. 28 min. distant from the south pole. The antarctic pole in Geography is the southern extremity of the earth's axis.

ANTE, [Lat.] a particle signifying before, and frequently used in composition; as, antediluvian, that which existed before the flood.

ANTE-EATER, s. in Zoology, the name of a genus of quadrupeds inhabiting South America, remarkable for their long round tongues, with which, by means of their viscid saliva, they catch the insects on which they feed. One species feeds wholly on ants; others prey upon the wild-bees, &c., whose dwellings are in the trees, which they can only reach by climbing.

To ANTECEDE, v. n. [antecedo, Lat.] to have a prior existence; to precede, or go before.

ANTECEDENCE, s. priority of existence; existence before some period or being.

ANTECEDENT, a. [antecedens, Lat.] prior; before; or existing before. Used substantively, it implies the thing which is prior in time, or which must have gone before. "It is indeed the necessary antecedent." South. In Grammar, the noun which, in the order of construction, goes before a relative; as, "Christ who redeemed us." The word Christ is the antecedent which goes before the relative who. In Logic, the first part, or proposition, of an enthymeme, or syllogism, consisting of two propositions only; as, "Christ is risen from the dead; therefore we are redeemed;" the words in Italic are the antecedent. In Mathematics, the first of two terms of a ratio.

ANTECEDENTLY, ad. in the state of antecedence, or going before; previously.

ANTECESSOR, s. [Lat.] one who precedes, or is before another in the order of time.

ANTECHAMBER, s. [incorrectly written antichamber] a chamber which leads to a state-room, or chief apartment.

To ANTEDATE, v. a. [ante and datum, Lat.] to place too early, or before its real period; to enjoy a thing in imagination before it exists.

ANTE-DILUVIAN, a. [ante and diluvium, Lat.] that existed or had a being before the flood. Used substantively for the persons who lived before the flood.

ANTELOPE, s. in Zoology, a very extensive genus of animals, which bears some resemblance to the goat, from which and from the deer they differ, in having their horns annulated or ringed round, and in other characteristics. They live in large flocks, and are found most numerously in Africa, though some species are found in Asia, and two, one of which is the chamois of the Alps, in Europe. The eye of the gazelle, which is one species, is the favourite ideal for that kind of beauty.

ANTEMERIDIAN, a. [ante and meridies, Lat.] before noon.

ANTEMUNDANE, a. [ante and mundus, Lat.] that was before the creation of the world.

ANTENNE, s. the horn-like processes projecting from the heads of insects, supposed to be the organs of hearing.

ANTEPENULT, ANTEPENULTIMA, s. [Lat.] in Grammar, the last syllable but two of a word; as the syllable nul in the word antepenultima.

ANTEPILEPTIC, a. [anti and epilepsis, Gr.] an epithet applied to a medicine against convulsions.

ANTEQUIERA, a handsome and populous city of Granada, the upper part of which is seated on a hill, and has a castle, and the lower stands in a fertile plain, and is watered by a great number of brooks. Here are still to be seen mines which were worked by the Romans. It has manufactures of silk and woollen goods, paper, &c., and fine marble abounds in its vicinity. Lat. 37. 6. N. Long. 4. 47. W.

ANTERIOR, ANTERIOR, a. [Lat.] that is before another with regard to time or place.

ANTERIORITY, s. [antior, Lat.] the state of being before another, with respect to time or place.

ANTES, [Lat.] a term used by gardeners for the foremost or lowest ranks of vines.

ANTHELION, s. See PARHELION.
 ANTHELMINTHIC, a. [anti and elmens, Gr.] that has the quality of killing worms.

ANTHEM, s. [anthimnos, Gr.] a hymn performed in two parts, by the opposite members of a choir. Socrates says, Ignatius was the inventor of it among the Greeks, and St. Ambrose among the Latins. Anthems were first introduced in the reformed service of the English church, in the beginning of the reign of Queen Elizabeth.

ANTHER, s. in Botany, that part of the stamen on the top of the filament which contains the pollen or fine dust, which, when mature, it emits for the fructification of the plant.

ANTHOLOGY, s. [anthos and logos, Gr.] a treatise of flowers; a collection of the most beautiful passages of one or more authors, whence the collection of Greek epigrams is styled anthologia.

ST. ANTHONY'S FIRE, s. See ERYSIPELAS.
 ANTHRACITE, ANTHRACOLITE, in Chemistry, coal blend, a species of coal which burns without flame.

ANTHRAX, s. [Gr.] a burning coal; a carbuncle, encompassed with fiery, sharp, and painful swellings.

ANTHROPOLOGY, s. [anthropos and logos, Gr.] a discourse or treatise upon men, or human nature, considered as in a state of health, including the consideration of both body and soul, with their laws.

ANTHROPOMANCY, s. [anthropos and manteia, Gr.] a species of divination, from inspecting the entrails and viscera of a human body.

ANTHROPOMORPHISM, s. [anthropos and morphe, Gr.] the attribution to God of the form, feelings, &c., of man. As a figure of speech, it is much used in the Old Testament. But care must be taken lest it be understood literally, as it was by an ancient sect, called theuce, Anthropomorphites.

ANTHROPOMORPHOUS, a. [Gr.] an appellation given to whatever resembles the human form; thus the mandrakes, among the plants; the monkey, among animals, &c.

ANTHROPOPHAGY, s. (never used in the singular,) [anthropos and phago, Gr.] savages who eat human flesh.

ANTHROPOPHAGY, s. the custom of eating human flesh.

ANTHROPOSCOPY, s. [anthropos and skopeo, Gr.] that part of physiology which judges of a man's character from his complexion, the lineaments of his face, features, &c.

ANTHYPONOTIC, s. [anti and npnos, Gr.] medicines given to prevent sleepings.

ANTI, [Gr.] a particle, which in composition signifies contrary or opposite; and in works of literature is prefixed to the answers written in opposition to an author; as, Anti-Cato, the names of the answers Julius Cæsar wrote to the objections made against him by Cato.

ANTIARTHRITICS, s. [anti and arthritikos, Gr.] remedies against the gout.

ANTIC, s. [antiquus, Lat.] one who plays tricks, and makes use of odd and uncommon gestures; a Merry Andrew, a buffoon.

ANTICHRIST, s. [anti and Christos, Gr.] the name used in the time of the apostles to designate the spirit or power of irreligion, or opposition to Christ. It is used in the New Testament, as in the Epistles of John. It has been usually understood, but without sufficient authority, to mean a person; and to such person all that occurs in the Epistles of Paul, and the Revelation of John, respecting an enemy of Christ, is referred. All sects have used it to stigmatize their most powerful opponents. Protestants generally apply it to the pope of Rome.

ANTICHRISTIAN, a. [anti and Christianos, Gr.] contrary, or opposite to Christianity.

ANTICHRISTIANISM, s. any doctrine or opinion contrary to Christianity.

ANTICHRONISM, s. [anti and chronos, Gr.] contrary to the right order of time.

To ANTICIPATE, v. a. [anticipo, Lat.] to be beforehand with another in taking, so as to disappoint him that comes after; to do or enjoy a thing before its fixed period.

ANTICIPATION, s. the dating a thing earlier than its due period; the enjoyment of a thing in imagination, before its real existence; a foretaste.

ANTICLIMAX, s. [anti and climax, Gr.] a sentence in which the last part is lower than the first.

ANTICKLY, ad. in the manner of an antic or buffoon; with odd gesticulations and grimaces.

ANTICONVULSIVE, a. good against convulsions.

ANTICOR, s. [anti, Gr. and cor, Lat.] among farriers, an inflammation in a horse's throat, the same as quinsy with us.

ANTICOURTIER, s. one who opposes the measures of the court.

ANTIDOTAL, s. that has the quality of preventing the effects of any contagion or poison.

ANTIDOTE, s. [anti and didomi, Gr.] a medicine given to expel poison, or prevent its effects, and to guard against contagion.

ANTIEPILEPTIC, a. [anti and epilepsia, Gr.] good against convulsions.

ANTIGONUS, one of the generals of Alexander the Great, who shared his conquests amongst them. He formed the scheme of gaining possession of the whole, but after a succession of victories was defeated and slain at the battle of Ipsus, in 301 B. c., at the age of 81.

ANTIGUA, one of the English Caribbee Islands, about 21 miles in length, and nearly the same in breadth. The inhabitants, from the want of springs, are obliged to save the rain-water in cisterns, and fetch it from the other islands. It is very rocky, and is surrounded by dangerous reefs, but has excellent harbours, and contains about 60,000 acres, 6 towns and villages, 6000 whites, and 30,000 negroes. The chief produce is sugar. The capital, St. John's, has a royal navy yard, and arsenal, with conveniences for careening ships of war. It is 60 miles S. E. of St. Christopher's. Lat. 17. 5. N. Long. 61. 53. W.

ANTIGUULAR, s. See SIPHON.

ANTILLES, s. (properly Antiles, from their smallness,) a small cluster of islands in the West Indies, extending from 18 to 24 degrees N. lat., and distinguished into Windward and Leeward Islands. The French name for the CARIBBEES.

ANTILOGARITHM, s. [anti and logarithm, Gr.] the complement of a logarithm, or its difference from one of 90 degrees. Also, and more usually, the number to a logarithm.

ANTIOLOGY, s. [antilogia, Gr.] contradiction; in its primary sense, applied to those passages of an author wherein there seems to be, or really is, a manifest contradiction.

ANTI-MONARCHICAL, a. [anti and monarchia, Gr.] that is contrary to monarchy.

ANTIMONIAL, a. that consists of, or has the qualities of antimony.

ANTIMONY, s. a brittle metal, of a dusky white colour, possessed of considerable lustre, but destitute of ductility. Though seemingly hard, it may easily be cut with a knife. It is principally procured from Hungary and Norway. Antimony is combined with some other metals in making printers' types, and specula for telescopes. Its oxides are employed in medicine, chiefly as emetics, and in colouring glass. Under the name of Stibium, it was and is now used in eastern countries by females to colour the eye-brows and eye-lids.

ANTINEPHRITICS, s. [anti and nephritis, Gr.] medicines for diseases in the reins and kidneys.

ANTINOMIANS, s. [anti and nomos, Gr.] a name signifying opposition to law; first used to designate the followers of John Hausmann, or Agricola, a German divine, contemporary with Luther, but now employed, principally by way of reproach, to designate those who hold the opinion, that since salvation is by faith, good works are not only unnecessary, but rather to be discountenanced as interfering with faith. Many rigid Calvinists have held these opinions speculatively, but very few have followed them out in practice.

ANTINOMY, s. a contradiction between two laws, or two parts of the same law.

ANTINOUS, the name of a very beautiful young man, who was the favourite of the emperor Hadrian. Many statues, supposed to represent him, still exist.

ANTIOCH, now Anthakia, an ancient and celebrated, and still a large city of Syria. The disciples of Jesus were first called Christians here. In the city and neighbourhood are very abundant relics of antiquity, of all kinds. 40 miles S. W. of Aleppo. Lat. 35. 17. N. Long. 36. 45. E.

ANTIOCHUS, a name borne by many monarchs of the Syro-Macedonian empire. The most famous of these were, Antiochus the Great, who was the first Asiatic prince with whom the Romans were engaged in war. Hannibal, the Carthaginian general, after his complete overthrow, fled for protection to him. He was defeated by the Romans, and compelled to accept most disgraceful terms of peace. He was killed by his own people in 187 B. C., aged 52 years.—And Antiochus Epiphanes, who persecuted the Jews with revolting cruelty, and polluted and closed the Temple and Jerusalem. He was resisted by the Maccabees, against whom he was advancing when he was carried off by an unknown but most execrating disease, which the Jews regarded as the immediate infliction of God. He died in 165 B. C.

ANTI-PEDO-BAPTISTS, s. [anti, pais, and baptizo, Gr.] a distinguishing denomination given to those who object to the baptism of infants.

ANTI-PARALYTIC, a. [anti and paralytikos, Gr.] good against the palsy.

ANTI-PAROS, a small island in the Ægean Sea, famous for an extensive and beautiful natural cavern, or grotto, as it is called, which has been frequently visited and described by travellers.

ANTI-PAS, HEROD, son of Herod the Great, and successor in part of his kingdom, as tetrarch of Galilee and Perea. He divorced his own wife that he might marry his brother Philip's wife, for which he was reproved by John Baptist. He ordered the death of this faithful teacher to gratify the malice of the woman he had so unlawfully espoused. It was this Herod who caused our Lord to be mocked by his soldiers, before the crucifixion. He ended his days in banishment at Lyons, for treason against the Roman emperor, in about 45 A. D.

ANTI-PATER, a. a Macedonian general who served under Philip and Alexander the Great. In the division of his empire, Macedonia fell to his share, which he had to defend against the Athenians and their allies, whom he defeated; and Perdicas, who having part of Asia, aspired to be Alexander's sole successor. He overturned the democracy of Athens, and occupied the city with Macedonian troops. He died in 318 B. C.

ANTI-PATHY, s. [anti and pathos, Gr.] a natural aversion to any particular object, which operates so strongly, as neither to be controlled by the will nor reason.

ANTI-PHONARY, a. a service book belonging to the Catholics, which contained whatever was to be sung or said in the choir, except the lessons.

ANTI-PHONY, s. [anti and phone, Gr.] the answer made by one side of the choir to the other, when a hymn or anthem is sung alternately, or between themselves.

ANTI-PHRASIS, s. [anti and phrasia, Gr.] a figure in Rhetoric, whereby the use of words is applied in a sense opposite to their true meaning.

ANTI-PODAL, a. relating to those persons or places that are antipodes with respect to their situation.

ANTI-PODES, s. [anti and pous, Gr.] in Geography, those who live on the contrary side of the globe, with their feet directly opposite to ours.

ANTI-POPE, s. a false or pretended pope, one that is, or is pretended to be, elected in opposition to another. More than twenty antipopes are mentioned in history.

ANTIQUARY, s. [antiquarius, Lat.] one who applies himself to the study of antiquities; whether they be mottos, inscriptions, or ancient manuscripts, and makes collections for that purpose. There is a Society of Antiquaries in London, which has published many valuable works relating to the ancient history, customs, &c., of England.

To ANTIQUATE, v. a. [antiquo, Lat.] to render useless; in the passive, to be grown out of use.

ANTIQUATEDNESS, s. the state of being out of vogue or use; the being obsolete.

ANTIQUE, (antike, or antekk) a. [Fr.] that was in vogue in ancient times, in opposition to modern; that is really old; whose antiquity is genuine and indisputable; old fashioned; out of fashion; uncouth and ridiculous for its antiquity. Used substantively, for a genuine piece of antiquity, or the relic of the ancients. SYNON. A fashion is old, when it ceases to be in use; ancient, when it has been some time past; antique, when it has been a long time ancient.

ANTIQUITY, s. [antiquitas, Lat.] that time or period which has long preceded the present; ancient writers, those who lived in former times; the histories written at a great distance before the present period; long life, or old age.

ANTISCI, s. [anti and skia, Gr.] the people who have their shadows projected opposite ways. The people of the northern hemisphere are Antiscia to those of the southern, the shadows of the one projecting at noon towards the north, and those of the other towards the south.

ANTISCORBUTIC, ANTISCORBUTICAL, a. [anti, Gr., and scorbutus, Lat.] good against the scurvy.

ANTISEPTICS, s. [anti and septikos, Gr.] substances, &c., that resist putrefaction. They are of use in all putrid, malignant, and pestilential diseases.

ANTISPASIS, s. [Gr.] the revulsion of any humour.

ANTISPASMODIC, a. [anti and spasmus, Gr.] that has the power of giving relief in the cramp.

ANTISPLENETIC, a. [anti and splen, Gr.] efficacious against disorders of the spleen.

ANTISTHENEs, the founder of the Cynics, a school of philosophers best known by the anecdotes related of Diogenes. He was a pupil of Socrates, and his peculiarity was the exaggeration of the Ethical element in his master's teaching. He practised and taught contempt for learning, luxury in dress and food, money, decency in habit and language, and inured himself to poverty in all its forms. "He worshipped Virtue, but it was Virtue ferocious and unbending." He lived about the year 380 B. C.

ANTISTROPHE, s. [Gr.] the second stanza in every three, in an ode sung in parts. Also a figure in Grammar, by which two things mutually dependant on one another are reciprocally converted; as, the servant of the master, and the master of the servant.

ANTISTRUMATICS, s. [anti, Gr., and struma, Lat.] remedies against a scrophulous humour, or the king's evil.

ANTITHESIS, s. [Gr.] in the plural antitheses; in Rhetoric, a figure, wherein opposite qualities are placed in contrast, or compared with each other, in order to illustrate, amplify, and adorn the speech of an orator, or piece of an author; a beautiful instance of this is in the following verse in Denham—"Though deep, yet clear; though gentle, yet not dull," &c.

ANTITRINITARIANS, s. [anti, Gr., and trinitarians,] persons who deny the Trinity, otherwise called Socinians and Unitarians.

ANTI-TYPE, s. [antitypion, Gr.] in Divinity, that which is formed according to a model or pattern; a general similitude, or resemblance of circumstances.

ANTI-TYPICAL, a. that answers to some type.

ANTIVENEREAL, a. [anti, Gr., and venereal,] in Medicine, good against venereal complaints.

ANTLERS, s. [andoulier, Fr.] among hunters, the first pearls which grow about the bur of a deer's horns; more generally, any of the branches.

ANTECI, s. (has no singular) [anti and oikeo, Gr.] in Geography, those who live under the same semi-circle of the meridian, but in different parallels, the one being as far distant from the equator south, as the others are north. Their longitude is the same, as are also their noon, midnight, and all their days, but their seasons are contrary, it being autumn with the one, when it is spring with the other, &c. The inhabitants of the Morea are the anteoi to those of the Cape of Good Hope.

ANTONINUS, ITINERARY OF, a geographical work of unknown date, comprising a survey by road of the whole Roman empire, very valuable for determining the ancient names of places, and the sites of places remarkable in the history of the empire.

ANTONINUS, MARCUS, one of the later Roman emperors, successor to Antoninus Pius, but associated with Lucius Verus during the first part of his reign. He was engaged in wars on the frontiers, and in the remote parts of the empire, in which he was successful. But as an enemy to religious persecution, and as the author of several works illustrating the Stoical philosophy, he is more deservedly and better known. During his campaign in Gaul, happened what the Legends commemorate as the miracle of the Thundering Legion. He died in 180 A. D., aged 59 years. The Antonine Column at Rome, was erected to celebrate his victories in Germany.

ANTONINUS P I U S, the successor of Hadrian as Roman emperor. His reign was distinguished by no events either in his administration at home or in the provinces from that of other emperors. But his character was such as to win him the distinction of Pius. He died in 161 A. D., aged 70 years. The wall extending from the Clyde to the Frith of Forth, was built in his reign, to protect the provinces of Britain from the Scots.

ANTONIUS, MARCUS, one of the second triumvirate formed on the death of Julius Caesar. He had espoused Caesar's cause, and had been engaged in his army. After Caesar's death, he was opposed not only by the conspirators' army, but by Octavius, (afterwards Augustus Cæsar,) and at length arranged with Octavius that he should have Gaul as his share of the government. His conduct in respect of the proscriptions consequent on this arrangement was neither better nor worse than that of his colleagues. His greatest notoriety arises however from his amours with Cleopatra, queen of Egypt, for whose sake he lost the empire, being defeated at Actium by Augustus, and afterwards at Alexandria. He killed himself in 30 B. C., in the 51st year of his age.

ANTONOMASIA, s. [anti and onoma, Gr.] a figure of Rhetoric, by which the proper name of one thing is applied to several others. Thus we say, the orator, for Cicero; a man extremely cruel, we call a Nero; and we say, the philosopher, to denote Aristotle.

ANTRIM, a county of Ulster, Ireland, forming the N. E. part of that island. The soil is pretty fertile, but the agricultural skill of the people low. The staple production of the county is linen. There is a little salmon fishing. Coal, gypsum, marble, &c., are found here. On the north coast, is the "Giant's Causeway," a great mass of columnar basalt, similar to that found at Fingal's Cave, Staffa. Pop. 276,188. Antrim, one of its principal towns, stands near Lough Neagh, 105 miles from Dublin. It has a considerable trade in its linen manufactures. Pop. 5182.

ANTWERP, a large, handsome city of Belgium, seated on the Scheldt, and having a strong citadel. It was formerly one of the greatest trading places in Europe, but for many years has been on the decline, though its commerce is still considerable. The streets of Antwerp are large and regular, besides which are twenty-two public squares; the harbour is very commodious, the river being 400 yards wide, and at the time of low water 22 feet deep, so that large vessels may come up to the quay, and by the canals from the river to the doors of the houses. The public buildings are very handsome, and at least 200 in number. The exchange, the town-house, the house of the Hans towns, and especially the cathedral, are regarded as very fine. 25 miles N. of Brussels. Pop. about 80,000.

ANUBIS, the name of one of the gods of ancient Egypt, represented as a man with the head of a dog or jackal. His offices somewhat resemble those of the Grecian Hermes, or Mercury.

ANVIL, s. [anville, Sax.] in its primary signification, a smith's utensil, serving to place the work on, which is to be hammered or forged. In a secondary sense, it implies any thing which is subject to blows. Figuratively, used with the particle upon, it implies that a thing is in agitation, is in readiness, or under consideration.

ANVILLE, JEAN BAPTISTE B. D', the celebrated French geographer, whose maps and works were until late years the authorities on that subject. He has been discovered to be frequently incorrect, owing to the imperfection of the observations of others on which he was obliged to rely. He died in 1782, aged 85 years.

ANUS, s. [Lat.] in Anatomy, the orifice of the intestines, for the discharge of the feces; likewise a small hole in the left ventricle of the brain.

ANXIETY, s. [anxietas, Lat.] an uneasiness of the mind, caused by its apprehension of the consequence of some future event.

ANXIOUS, a. [anxius, Lat.] uneasy on account of the uncertainty of some event; very solicitous about any future event.

ANXIOUSLY, ad. in an anxious manner; solicitously; unequally; carefully; with painful uncertainty.

ANY, a. [anig, Sax.] applied to time, it denotes either of the parts of which it is composed. Applied to space, either of its parts without restriction. One, in opposition to none.

ANZUAN, the name of one of the Comoro Islands between Madagascar and Africa, which has the best anchorage of the group. The climate is not oppressively hot, and the soil, on the whole, productive. Its population, composed of negroes, and of Arab tribes who have the chief power, is reckoned at about 100,000.

AORIST, s. [aoristos, Gr.] indefinite, a tense in the Greek grammar.

AORTA, s. [Gr.] the great artery rising immediately out of the left ventricle of the heart; the trunk out of which all the other arteries spring, and the great canal from whence the blood is conveyed to every part of the human body.

APACE, ad. applied to things in motion, swiftly; applied to time, quickly or speedily; and applied to the transition from one state to another, in haste, with speed.

APAGOGICAL, a. [apagoge, Gr.] an epithet given to a sort of demonstration, or indirect way of proof, by showing the absurdity of the contrary.

APANAGE, s. in France, formerly a settled portion of lands assigned by the sovereign for the subsistence of his younger sons, which reverted to the crown in failure of male issue of that branch.

APART, ad. [apart, Fr.] separately, or at a distance; aside, or for a particular use.

APARTMENT, s. [apartement, Fr.] a part of a house. By apartments is understood a set of rooms convenient to dwell in.

APATHY, s. [a and pathos, Gr.] a freedom from all passion; a state of insensibility.

APATITE, s. in Chemistry, a combination of lime with the phosphoric acid, the matter of bones.

APE, s. [affe, Germ.] in Zoology, the genus of animals most closely approaching man. They are distinguished from monkeys and baboons by having no tails, nor pouches in the cheek. Although they can walk erect for a little way, their usual manner of walking on the ground is by using their long arms like crutches, and swinging their bodies between them. The Chimpanzee and the Ouran-outang are the most remarkable species.

To APE, v. a. to mimic or imitate.

APEAK, (apeek) ad. in a posture to pierce; atilt.

ATEDALE, Staffordshire, near Stone, noted for its coarse iron ore.

APELLES, a celebrated ancient Greek painter. His pictures of Venus, and his portraits of Alexander the Great, are those most praised by Pliny and those who have preserved the records we have of him. He died in 323 B. C.

APELITES, APELLIANS, followers of Apelles, a disciple of Marcion, who was stigmatized as a heretic, for holding, amongst other things, that Jesus on his ascension returned his body to the four elements whence he took it for his incarnation. He lived about 160 A. D.

A'PENNINES, the chain of mountains running throughout Italy, in length about 800 miles, commencing at the Gulf of Genoa, where they are a continuation of the Alps, and passing on nearer to the E. coast than the W., till against Mount Vesuvius they approach the W. coast very nearly, and thence strike obliquely off to the S. E. promontory of Italy. The highest point, Monte Corno, near Aquila, is but 9521 feet in height, below the line of perpetual snow. The streams flowing from the N. side of the ridge are chiefly tributaries to the Po; the principal from the other side are the Arno and Tiber, with their tributaries. These mountains exhibit the usual ancient slate, sandstone, and limestone rocks, with admixtures of igneous rocks; but on the western side the tertiary beds almost wholly cover the limestones, and present many curious geological phenomena.

APEPSY, a. [apepsia, Gr.] in Physic, that disorder in the stomach called indigestion; a loss of natural concoction.

A'PER, s. one who mimics or imitates the actions of another.

A'PERIENT, a. [aperio, Lat.] in Medicine, that has the quality of opening, applied to gentle purges.

A'PERTURE, s. [aperitus, Lat.] an opening; a passage; a gap; an aperture or the action of making an opening or passage.

A'PERTURE, (aperia, Lat.) an opening, passage, gap, or hole. In Geometry, the space between two right lines that form an angle. In Optics, a round hole in a turned bit of wood, or plate of tin, placed within side of a telescope or microscope, near to the object glass, by means of which no more rays are admitted than are sufficient for a distinct view of the object; or the rays are so directed as to correct their aberrations. In the Civil Law, the loss of a feudal tenure by default of issue of him to whom the fee was first granted, is called apertura feudi; and the breaking up or opening the last will or testament of any person, that was sealed up, is called apertura tabularum.

A'PETALOUS, a. [a and petalon, Gr.] in Botany, having no petals or flower-leaves.

A'PEX, s. [Lat. in the plural apices] the top point or summit of any thing. In Geometry, the angular point of a cone, or any like figure.

APHÆRESIS, s. [Gr.] in Rhetoric, a figure wherein a word or syllable is taken away from the beginning of a word, as in the ingenious motto of Sir John Philips, Amore, more, ore, re, by love, by custom, by word, in reality.

APHELION, APHÉLIUM, (in the plural aphelia.) s. [apo and helios, Gr.] in Astronomy, that part of the orbit of a planet in which it is at its greatest distance from the sun.

APHION, a city of Natolia in Asiatic Turkey, which has its name from the great quantity of opium, by the Turks called aphium, produced here.

APHORISM, s. [aphorismos, Gr.] a maxim, general rule, a principle of a science, or a brief sentence comprehending a great deal of matter in a few words.

APHORISTICAL, a. that is composed in the manner of aphorisms or maxims.

APHORISTICALLY, ad. in the manner of an aphorism.

APHRODITE, the ancient Greek goddess of love, whose history is told differently by most of the poets, but who was esteemed, according to Homer, the daughter of Zeus and Dione. Her principal deeds, as might be expected from her title, were deeds of licentiousness. She was confounded latterly with the Roman goddess Venus.

APIARY, s. [apiarium, Lat.] the place where bees are kept.

APICIUS, the name of a Roman, who lived in the reign of Tiberius, so famous as a gourmand as to be celebrated ever since in all cookery books.

APIECE, ad. each; or separately taken.

APIS, a bull worshipped by the Egyptians under this name. The god Osiris was worshipped under this form. Its whole body was to be black except a white square spot on the forehead; on its back there was to be the figure of an eagle, and on its tongue that of a beetle. When a calf was found with these marks, it was carried with great joy to the temple of Osiris, where it was fed, kept, and worshipped instead of the god, as long as it lived, and at its death was buried with great solemnity and mourning. This done, they looked out for another with the same marks. Sometimes it was many years before they found one, but when they had, there was a great festival kept all over the country. The calf which the children of Israel made at Sinai, appears to have been intended as an image of the Egyptian Apis. Apis is also the name of a southern constellation, otherwise called Musca, the bee or fly.

APISH, a. This word has various significations, on account of its being applied to the different qualities of an ape; thus it signifies mimicking, or imitative; affected, or foppish; silly, insignificant, empty, specious.

APISHLY, ad. in an apish manner; foppishly; conceitedly.

APLANATIC, s. the name given to a lens, or convex glass, so constructed that the spherical aberration of the rays of light is corrected.

APOCALYPSE, s. [apokalypsis, Gr.] Revelation, the last book of the New Testament, written by John the evangelist, according to some, about the year of Christ 96, in the isle of Patmos, whither, it was alleged, he had been banished by the emperor Domitian. But others fix the date of this book earlier, viz. previous to the destruction of Jerusalem, and assign it to another writer of the name of John. This book, which partakes largely of the character of Hebrew prophecy and poetry, has occasioned great difficulties to interpreters, who are not agreed as to any point of its predictions; which may have happened from their anxiety to represent events as squaring exactly with the passages they refer to them.

APOCALYPTICAL, a. that contains the revelation of any thing mysterious.

APOCOPE, s. [Gr.] in Grammar, a figure wherein the last letter or syllable of a word is cut off; as thro' for through; hyp' for hypocynthion.

APOCRYPHA, s. [apokrupto, Gr.] in its primary signification, something which is not known. Applied to books, it denotes that their authors are not certainly known. In Theology, books appended to the sacred writings of uncertain authority, and rejected as uncanonical.

APOCRYPHAL, a. of doubtful and uncertain authority; not inserted in the canon of Scripture.

APOCRYPHALLY, ad. in a manner which is in want of authority, or the marks of authenticity.

APODEICTICAL, a. [apodeiknumi, Gr.] demonstrative, or so plain and convincing that no person can refuse his assent to it.

ATOPEE, s. [apo and ge, Gr.] that point of the moon's orbit at which she is at the greatest distance from the earth.

APOLLINARIANS, a sect in the fourth century, the followers of Apollinarius, bishop of Laodicea, who taught that the Divinity of Christ was instead of a soul to him; that his body was pre-existent, and that it was sent down from heaven; and that afterwards the Word descended into it, and had such operation in it as in the prophets, but was not united to its nature, &c.

APOLLO, s. [Lat.] in Greek and Roman Mythology, the son of Zeus and Leto, or of Jupiter and Latona, born at Delos; who was also called Phœbus. He was the god of divination, music, and afterwards of medicine, and the sun. He was represented most usually with a lyre, or a bow, as in the celebrated Belvidere statue.

APOLLONIUS, the name of several celebrated ancients, one of whom was a mathematician of Alexandria, in the third century B. C., some of whose works yet remain; but the most famous was the one born at Tyana, of whom the heathen priests and philosophers told so many miraculous stories, in the hope of checking the progress of Christianity, which was then gaining power daily. As his life and deeds were not written till a hundred years after his death, the probability is that he was no more than a popular and enthusiastic Pythagorean or Neoplatonic philosopher, pretending to no more than the Thaumaturgy studied in those schools, who would have been wholly forgotten had he not answered the ends of the heathens, who wanted a rival for our Lord.

APOLLYON, a Greek word that signifies the Destroyer, and answers to the Hebrew Abaddon. It is used in the Revelation, chap. ix. 11.

APOLOGETICAL, a. [apo and lego, Gr.] that is said or written in defence of any person or opinion.

APOLOGETICALLY, ad. in the manner of an answer, defence, or apology.

APOLOGIST, s. the person who writes or speaks in vindication of the sentiments of another; one who endeavours to extenuate the faults of another.

To APOLOGIZE, v. a. to plead in favour of a person or thing; to defend or excuse a person or thing.

APOLOGUE, (apologia) s. [apologia, Gr.] a story, or fiction, formed to convey some moral and interesting truth to the mind, under the image of beasts, and other irrational animals; a fable.

APOLOGY, s. [apologia, Gr.] in its primary sense, implies a discourse made by a defendant, to clear himself from a charge of guilt brought against him. At present the term is used to imply rather an excuse than a vindication; and an extenuation of a fault rather than a proof of innocence.

APOMECOMETRY, s. [apo, mekos, and metreo, Gr.] the art of measuring things at a distance, to know how far they are from us.

APONEUROSIS, s. [apo and neuron, Gr.] the expansion of a nerve or tendon into a membrane; the cutting off a nerve.

APOPHTHEGM, (apothema) s. [apothema, Gr.] a sententious expression uttered without deliberation; or a sentence containing some important truth, moral or divine, which bursts unexpectedly from the speaker.

APOPHYGE, s. [apo and phengo, Gr.] in Architecture, a slightly concave moulding, or fillet, preserving the continuity of outline in a column, between two plane surfaces of different degrees of projection, as at the base or summit of an Ionic column.

APOPHYSIS, s. in Anatomy, a protuberance of bone, or a part eminent and jutting out beyond the rest.

APOPLECTIC, APOPLECTICAL, a. that is of the nature of an apoplexy.

APOPLEXED, a. affected or seized with an apoplexy.

APOPLEXY, (apo and plessio, Gr.) a sudden deprivation of all sensation, while a strong pulse remains, with a deep respiration attended with a stertor, and the appearance of a profound sleep, ending in death. It is most frequently occasioned by high living.

APOSIOPESIS, s. [apo and siopao, Gr.] a form of speech by which the speaker, through some affection, as sorrow, bashfulness, fear, anger, or vehemence, breaks off his speech before it be all ended.

APOSTASY, s. [apostasis, Gr.] the abandoning and renouncing a religion one has before professed; used always in a bad sense.

APOSTATE, s. [apostates, Gr.] one who has forsaken and renounced the religion or principles he formerly professed.

To APOSTATIZE, v. a. to abandon or renounce one's religion. To APOSTEMATE, v. n. to turn to an aposteme; to form an abscess; to collect and swell with corrupt matter.

APOSTEMATION, s. in Surgery, the forming an abscess.

APOSTEME, APOSTUME, s. [Gr.] a hollow swelling filled with purulent or corrupt matter; an abscess.

APOSTLE, s. [apo and stelo, Gr.] in its most limited sense, one who was an attendant and disciple of Christ on earth, and commissioned by him after his resurrection to preach the gospel to the world. In a vaguer sense, the first or most successful preacher of the gospel in any country.

APOSTLESHIP, s. the dignity or office of an apostle, which consisted in preaching the gospel, baptizing, working miracles, and ordaining ministers.

APOSTOLIC, APOSTOLICAL, a. that was taught or authorized by the apostles.

APOSTOLICALLY, ad. after the manner of an apostle.

APOSTOLICI, several sects of Christians in different ages, who have endeavoured to conform rigidly to apostolical practice, and have consequently been persecuted and misrepresented by the Church.

APOSTROPHE, s. [apo and strepho, Gr.] in Rhetoric, a figure by which the orator, in the vehemence of his passion, turns himself on all sides, and applies to the living and dead, to angels and men, rocks, groves, &c. Thus Milton, in Paradise Lost,—
O woods, O fountains, hillocks, dales, and bowers,
With other echo, &c.

In Grammar, it is a comma placed over a letter, to show that the word is contracted by the cutting off a vowel; as esteem'd for esteemed, th'employment for the employment. It is also a sign of the possessive case of a noun.

To APOSTROPHIZE, v. a. to interrupt the thread of a discourse, in order to introduce some foreign subject.

APOTHECARY, s. [apotheca, Lat.] one who practises the art of pharmacy, prepares and sells medicines. In London, the apothecaries are one of the city companies, and are exempted from serving on juries, or in ward or parish offices. No one is permitted to act as a general practitioner in England, without conforming to their regulations, and being licensed by them.

APOTHEOSIS, s. [Gr.] deification, a ceremony by which the ancient Romans consecrated their emperors and great men after their death. In earlier times it was very customary, without any ceremony observed, to enrol great men amongst the gods.

APOTOME, s. [apotemmo, Gr.] in Mathematics, the difference between a rational line, and one only commensurable in power to the whole line. In Music, the remaining part of an entire tone, after a greater semi-tone has been taken from it. Its proportion in numbers is that of 2048 to 2187.

APPOZEM, s. [apo and zoo, Gr.] in Pharmacy, a medicine made by boiling roots, plants, &c., in water, called likewise a decoction.

To APPAL, (appdull) v. n. [appallir, Fr.] to strike with terror or fear; to affright; to damp a person's courage; to dishearten, including, in its secondary idea, the sudden appearance of some terrible object.

APPALACHIAN MOUNTAINS. See ALLEGHANIES.

APPALEMENT, (appdullment) s. a sudden affright, which robs a person of his courage, and renders him inactive.

APPARATUS, s. [Lat.] a collection of instruments necessary to accomplish any design, and applied to the tools of a trade; the instruments used in philosophical experiments; the bandages, &c., of a surgeon; the furniture of a house; the ammunition for war.

APPAREL, (it has no plural,) s. [appareil, Fr.] the clothing worn for ornament or decency; dress. Figuratively, appearance or ornament.

To APPAREL, v. a. to clothe; to dress; to adorn; to set out or embellish.

APPARENT, part. [apparent, Fr.] applied to truth, plain and indubitable. Applied to shape or form, seeming, in opposition to real. Applied to actions, or qualities, visible; manifest or known, opposed to secret. Apparent time, in Astronomy, is that shown by a true sun-dial.

APPARENTLY, ad. plainly; evidently; manifestly.

APPARITION, s. [apparitio, Lat.] the appearance of a thing, so as to become visible to the eyes, or sensible to the mind; a visible object; a spectre; a ghost, which is the most common acceptance at present. In Astronomy, a star's becoming visible, which before was below the horizon.

APPARITORS, s. [from appareo, Lat.] messengers who cite men to appear in the spiritual courts; the beadle who carries the mace, &c. before the masters in our universities.

To APPEACH, (appeech) v. a. to accuse; to censure.

APPEACHMENT, (appeachment) s. an information made against a person; an accusation.

To APPEAL, (appel) v. a. [appello, Lat.] to transfer a cause or dispute from one to another.

APPEAL, (appel) s. the removal of a cause from an inferior to a superior court or judge, when a person thinks the inferior has not done him justice. Also a call upon any as witness. In Ecclesiastical causes, if an appeal is brought before a bishop, it may be removed to the archbishop; if before the archdeacon, to the Court of Arches, and thence to the archbishop, and from thence to Chancery. Appeal also means, a private accusation of a murderer by one who held interest in the murdered party, as his wife, or son, or of any felon by one of his accomplices in the fact.

APPEALER, (appealer) s. one who makes an appeal.

To APPEAR, (appeer) v. n. [appareo, Lat.] to become an object of sight, or visible to the eye; to make its appearance, like a spirit or ghost; to be in the presence of another, so as to be seen by him; to answer a summons by attending a court of justice.

APPEARANCE, (appearance) s. the exterior surface of a thing, or that which immediately strikes the senses or imagination, which, on a nearer inspection, may appear in a different light. In Law, it signifies a defendant's filing common, or giving special bail, or any process issued out of a court of judicature. In Perspective, it denotes the projection of a figure or body on the perspective plane. In Optics, direct appearance is the sight of an object by direct rays, without refraction or reflection.

APPEASABLE, (appeasable) a. that may have the violence of passion lessened or softened; that is reconcilable.

To APPEASE, (appease) v. [appaier, Fr.] to bring a person that is angry to calm and even temper; to pacify; to allay the ravings of a disordered mind. Figuratively, to quiet any noise, outrage, or violence; beautifully applied to inanimate things.

APPEASEMENT, (appeasement) s. a state of reconciliation; a state of peace and calmness.

APPEASER, (appeaser) s. one who prevails on another to stifle his anger; or brings about a reconciliation between parties.

APPELLANT, s. [appello, Lat.] in Law, the party who brings an appeal against another; one who appeals from a lower to a higher court.

APPELLATION, s. [appellatio, Lat.] the name, dignity, or title, by which one man is distinguished from another.

APPELLATIVE, s. [appellativum, Lat.] in Grammar, applied to those words which stand for universal ideas, or a whole rank of beings, whether general or special, as man, horse, or dog; and stand opposed to proper names, which belong to one only, as Thomas, Robert, Charles.

APPELLATIVELY, ad. after the manner of nouns appellative.

APPELLATORY, a. that contains an appeal.

APPELLEE, s. the person against whom an appeal is brought.

To APPEND, v. a. [appendo, Lat.] to hang on another; to join something as an additional, not as a principal part.

APPENDAGE, s. [Fr.] any thing that, being considered as less principal, is annexed or added to the principal.

APPENDANT, a. [Fr.] hanging to something else; annexed. In Law, any thing that is inheritable, belonging to some more worthy inheritance; as, an advowson, common or court, may be appendant to a manor, land to an office; but not land to land, both being corporeal inheritances.

APPENDICATION, s. any thing which is added as an ornament or convenience, not as necessary to another.

APPENDIX, (in the plural appendices), s. [Lat.] something added or appended to another, not as constituting a necessary part of it, but only as an embellishment or convenience. Applied to action, concurrent circumstances. Applied to books, a kind of supplement, or an addition, in order to supply some omissions, and render them complete.

APPENZEL, a canton and town of Switzerland. The canton lies at the E. extremity of the Confederation, on the Rhine, touching at one angle the Lake of Constance. It is divided into two parts, the Protestant and the Catholic rhodens, each of which is a democracy, both being under one landmann, or chief magistrate. The mountains of this canton afford good pasturage for cattle, the products of which, with some linen and cotton manufactures, form its trade. Herisau is the most considerable town; Appenzel being but small, although the seat of government.

To APPERTAIN, v. n. [appertener, Fr.] to belong to as of right; to belong to by nature or appointment.

APPERTAINMENT, s. that which relates, belongs to, or is a property of, any rank or dignity.

APPERTENANCE, s. [appertenence, Fr.] that which belongs or relates to another thing.

APPERTINENT, a. that is requisite, or has a relation to.

APPERTIBILITY, s. the quality which renders a thing the object of desire.

APPETITE, s. [appetitus, Lat.] a desire of enjoying something under the appearance of sensible good; a propensity to an object on account of the good it is imagined to possess; a violent longing after any thing.

APPETITE, a. that desires; that has the power of desiring.

APPIAN, a writer of Roman history at Alexandria in the 2nd century. His work is of no great authority except in what relates to his own times.

To APPLAUD, v. a. [applaudo, Lat.] to testify one's approbation by clapping of hands; to praise or show esteem for a person's merits.

APPLAUDER, s. one who publicly shows his approbation, or highly commends or praises the merits of another.

APPLAUSE, (applaud) s. [applausus, Lat.] approbation expressed with all the sentiments of turbulent joy; praise bestowed on merit by public and private testimonies of approbation and rapture.

APPLE, s. [appel, Sax.] any kind of large fruit of a round form, but appropriated at present to that of the apple-tree. Apple of the eye. See PUPIL.

APPLEBY, Westmoreland, almost surrounded by the river Eden. Formerly a Roman station. There is a castle here, the donjon of which is very ancient. It is the county town, and 266 miles from London. Market, Saturday. Pop. 2519.

APPLIANCE, s. the act whereby one thing is applied to another, or the thing applied. Application is the word now used.

APPLICABILITY, s. the quality of being fit to be applied to something.

APPLICABLE, a. [from applied, Lat.] that is agreeable, suits, or may be affirmed of a thing.

APPLICABLY, ad. in such a manner as to suit, agree with, or be conformable to, and consequently may be affirmed of, or applied to, any thing.

APPLICATE, s. in Mathematics. See ORDINATE.

APPLICATION, s. [applicatio, Lat.] the act of applying one thing to another, either by making them touch, or bringing them nearer to each other; intenseness of thought or study; the employment of means to produce a particular end; the address, suit, or request of a person.

APPLICATORY, a. that applies or makes the application.

To APPLY, v. a. [applico, Lat.] to put one thing to another, to lay remedies or emollients on a wound; to use as relating or conformable to any person or thing; to employ; to put to a certain use; to use as a means to some end; to fix the mind or attention upon any particular object; to study; to have recourse to; to work upon; to address as a petitioner. In Mathematics, to transfer a given line into any figure, particularly a circle; to fit quantities whose areas are equal, but figures different.

APPOGIATURA, a. in Music, a small note inserted by the practical musician, between two others at some distance.

To APPOINT, v. a. [appointer, Fr.] to authorize one person to act for another; to fix any thing; to set a person a task; to equip, to furnish a person in all points.

APPOINTMENT, s. he who settles or fixes any time, thing, or place.

APPOINTMENT, s. [appointment, Fr.] a thing settled between two or more; an agreement to perform something future.

To APPORTION, v. a. [from portio, Lat.] to allot or divide into two or more parts; to set out in just proportions.

APPORTIONMENT, s. a dividing into portions. In Law, the division of a rent into parts, in the same manner as the land out of which it issues is divided. Thus, if a person leases three acres of land, and afterwards grants away one acre thereof to another, the rent shall be apportioned between them.

To APPOSE, v. a. [appono, Lat.] used by Chaucer to imply an examination of a scholar, by embarrassing or puzzling him with questions. For this we now use the word pose, which is a contraction of this word.

APPOSER, s. an examiner. In the Court of Exchequer there is an officer called the foreign apposer.

APPOSITE, a. [appositus, Lat.] proper, fit, suitable, well adapted to the purpose for which it was intended. Applied to time, seasonable, or conformable. Applied to opinions or sentiments, proper, reasonable, or agreeable to the subject which they treat of.

APPOSITELY, ad. fitly; suitably; conformably; properly.

APPOSITENESS, s. fitness; propriety; suitability.

APPOSITION, s. [apposito, Lat.] a comparing or laying things one by another. In Grammar, the placing two or more substantives together, in the same case, without any copulative conjunction between them; as, her beauty has captivated my eyes, my heart, my reason, my understanding, my whole soul. Among naturalists, it is the same with accretion, or the external addition of matter to a subject.

To APPRAISE, (apprize) v. a. [apprécier, Fr.] to rate, value, or set a price on goods intended for sale.

APPRAISER, (apprizer) s. one who sets a value upon goods, who is sworn to do justice between party and party; whence he is termed a sworn appraiser, and is obliged to take the goods at the price which he appraises them at, provided no other will purchase them at that rate.

To APPRECIATE, v. a. to value, to estimate.

To APPREHEND, v. a. [apprehendo, Lat.] to lay hold on; to seize a person as a malefactor, in order to bring him to justice; to think on with some degree of anxiety or terror. Applied to the operations of the mind, to conceive superficially; to have an imperfect or inadequate idea of a thing.

APPREHENDER, s. one who conceives a thing imperfectly; one who seizes a malefactor in order to bring him to justice; a thinker.

APPREHENSIBLE, a. [apprehensibilis, Lat.] that may be apprehended or conceived, though not comprehended.

APPREHENSION, s. [apprehensio, Lat.] among logicians, the mere contemplation of things, without affirming or denying any thing concerning them; the faculty by which we perceive those ideas which are present to the mind; fear or anxiety; suspicion of something future. In Law, the seizing of a malefactor, or taking him into custody, in order to bring him to justice.

APPREHENSIVE, a. that is quick to understand, or conceive; fearful, or suspicious. SYNON. Want of courage makes us fear; doubt of success makes us apprehensive; distrust of strength makes us dread; imagination itself will often make us afraid.

APPREHENSIVELY, ad. after the manner in which the apprehension exercises itself, with respect to its ideas.

APPRENTICE, s. [apprenti, Fr.] a young person bound by indenture to some tradesman, in order to be instructed in a profession or trade. The indentures are stamped, and the duty varies with the amount of premium paid to the master. The term of apprenticeship varies, but most usually it is for seven years. In some cases the master has to pay the apprentice a small sum for wages, and usually he finds board, &c. Various laws exist to secure the fulfilment of the conditions on both sides. Objections are frequently taken to this custom now, on the ground of the needlessness of such a bond either for teaching or learning a business, and because it interferes, in many cases seriously, with the freedom in which men ought to be left to seek and secure their own advantage. On the abolition of slavery in the British colonies, the Negroes were employed for a time as apprentices.

To APPRENTICE, v. a. to bind a person for a certain number of years to one who is to teach him his trade, &c.

APPRENTICESHIP, s. the time for which a person is bound to continue with another, in order to learn and practise his trade; the office of an apprentice.

To APPRIZE, v. a. [aprisé, Fr.] to give a person notice of what he is a stranger to.

To APPROACH, (approche) v. n. to shorten the distance between objects; to draw nearer, or go towards. Applied to time, to be nearer its completion; to be nearer at hand. Figuratively, to come near; to resemble; to bring nearer to; to lessen the distance between objects.

APPROACH, s. the act of coming nearer to any object; access; means used to come nearer to a distant object. In Fortification, used in the plural, works thrown up by the besiegers, in order to advance nearer to the place besieged. Lines of approach, are trenches cut in the ground, the earth of which is thrown up in the form of a parapet, on the side towards the enemy, in order to approach the covert way, without being exposed to the cannon of the besieged. In Mathematics, the curve of equable approach, is that wherein a body descending by the sole power of gravity, shall approach the earth equally in equal times.

APPROACHER, s. that person who comes nearer to another, or advances towards a distant object.

APPROACHMENT, s. the act whereby the object draws nearer to another.

APPROBATION, s. [approbatio, Lat.] the acknowledging a thing to be worthy of assent, and of esteem, either by a tacit consent or public confession; the act of approving, liking, or esteeming any thing; the confirmation or support of a thing.

To APPROPRATE, v. a. [appropero, Lat.] to quicken a thing, with respect to motion; to hasten action, applied to the time in which it is expected.

APPROPRIABLE, a. that may be confined or restrained to something particular.

To APPROPRIATE, v. a. [appropriar, Fr.] to dedicate, or confine to a particular use; to claim an exclusive right to. In Law, to annex as a property.

APPROPRIATE, a. peculiar; confined, restrained, or limited to some peculiar sense or use.

APPROPRIATION, s. applied to things, the application of them to some peculiar use. Applied to qualities, the claiming as belonging to oneself, in an extraordinary if not exclusive manner. Applied to words, the restraining them to a particular sense, or confining them to signify a particular idea. In Law, the annexing a benefice to the proper and perpetual use of some religious house.

APPROPRIATOR, s. one who is possessed of an appropriated benefice.

To APPROVE, (approuve) v. a. [approver, Fr.] to be pleased with; to be delighted with from a conviction of merit; to make worthy of approbation.

APPROVEABLE, (approvable) a. applied to that which, on account of its merits, appears worthy of approbation.

APPROVEMENT, (approvement) s. consent, including liking or approbation.

APPROVER, (approveur) s. one who, confessing himself guilty of a felony, accuses one or more of his accomplices. Approvers also signify bailiffs or lords in their franchises, sheriffs, and likewise such persons as have the letting the king's demesnes in small manors.

APPROXIMATE, a. [ad and proximus, Lat.] near; that approaches near to.

APPROXIMATION, s. the coming or approaching near to any thing. In Arithmetic, a continual approach to a root or quantity sought, without being able ever to arrive at it exactly.

APRICOT, APRICOCK, s. [apricus, Lat.] a kind of wall-fruit.

APPU/SE, s. [appulus, Lat.] the act of striking against any thing. In Astronomy, applied to the moon when she approaches any planet or fixed star, so as to seem to touch or strike against it. If a very small portion of apparent space is between the two bodies at their nearest approach, it is called a near appulse.

APRIL, s. (from aperio, Lat.) the fourth calendar month in the year. It contains thirty days.

A PRIORI, (Lat.) in Logic, a term used to describe a course of reasoning from principles, for the purpose of discovering the conclusions to which they lead.

APRON, s. [apron, Sax.] a part of dress consisting of cloth,

&c., which hangs from the middle downwards, worn by the ladies for ornament, by artificers to keep their clothes clean. In a goose, it signifies the fat skin which covers the belly. In Gunnery, a piece of lead which covers the touch-hole of a great gun.

APRON-MAN, s. a man who wears an apron; a mechanic; a word of reproach.

APSIDIS, (plural apsides, or apses) s. [Gr.] in Astronomy, those two points in the orbits of the planets, or satellites, in which they are at their greatest and least distance from the sun or primary planet. The higher apsis of the planets is more particularly denominated aphelion, and the lower perihelion. The imaginary line connecting these two points is called the line of the apsides.

APT, (aptus, Lat.) fit; a relative term, implying the suitability of a thing to procure some end; that has a tendency to. Applied to the mind, ready or quick.

APTERAL, a. [a and pteryx, Gr.] in Architecture, applied to Greek and Roman temples, signifying that the columns of the porticoes at each end are not extended along the sides of the building. This style is also called amphiprostyle.

APTITUDE, s. [aptitudo, Fr.] fitness to bring about the desired end; tendency.

APTLY, ad. with great propriety; justly, or pertinently; readily, or quickly.

APTNESS, s. a relative term, implying the suitability of any means to procure its end. Applied to bodies, tendency; to minds, disposition or inclination; to the understanding, quickness, facility, or ease in conceiving.

APULEIUS, LUCIUS, a Roman author of the Platonic school, an African by birth, and by profession a pleader. His works on Platonism and Magic remain; but his principal celebrity is derived from a romance, called the Metamorphosis, or more popularly the Golden Ass, in which is contained the beautiful fable of Cupid and Psyche. He flourished in about 160 A. D.

APUS, s. the Indian bird, or bird of paradise; in Astronomy, a constellation near the south pole.

APYRQUS, a. [a and pyr, Gr.] in Chemistry, that which will sustain the most violent heat, without any sensible alteration. A diamond was formerly believed to be apyrus.

AQUA, s. [Lat.] water. Aqua fortis, or strong water, a name given to nitric acid. Aqua marina, aqua marine, in Natural History, a precious stone, which takes its name from its sea-green colour. Aqua mirabilis, or the wonderful water, is distilled from spices, infused in spirits of wine, and is a very good cordial. Aqua regia, the royal water, a mixture of nitric and hydrochloric acids, capable of dissolving gold and platinum. Aqua vita, or water of life, in a general sense, brandy or spirit of wine; but in a more confined sense, restrained to that spirit which is drawn from malt; the other term brandy being appropriated to that which is drawn from wine only.

AQUARIANS, a sect towards the close of the second century, who used water in the sacrament instead of wine.

AQUARIUS, s. [Lat.] in Astronomy, a constellation that makes one of the 12 signs in the ecliptic, which the sun enters on the 20th day of January; it is described in the zodiac on globes, in the form of a man inclining on an urn flowing with water.

AQUATIC, AQUATIC, a. [aquaticus, Lat.] applied to animals or vegetables which live and grow in the water.

AQUATINTA, s. a method of etching on copper, by which a soft and beautiful effect is produced, resembling a fine drawing in water-colours or Indian ink. It is a cheap and easy mode of engraving.

AQUEDUCT, AQUEDUCT, s. [aqueductus, Lat.] a channel formed of stone, bricks, or timber, to convey water from one place to another. In Anatomy, the bony passage of the drum that reaches from the ear to the palate.

AQUEOUS, a. [aqueus, Lat.] watery. Aqueous humour. See EYE.

AQUILA, the eagle; in Astronomy, a constellation of the northern hemisphere, usually joined with Antinous.

AQUILA, a town in the province of Abruzzo Ulloa, in the kingdom of Naples. It is 57 miles from Rome, in the midst of the Apennines, near the river Pescara. Its population is reckoned to be about 13,000.

AQUILINE, a. [aquilinus, Lat.] resembling an eagle. Applied to the nose, hooked, or like an eagle's beak.

AQUINAS, THOMAS, one of the most famous scholastic div-vines of the 13th century. He was a pupil of Albertus Magnus, and lived for the greater part of his after-life at Paris. His most celebrated work is the Summa Theologie, to which may be traced most of the questions that have vexed theologians, and imbibed Christian communities to the present day. He was named the Angelic Doctor in his life-time, and 50 years after his death, which happened in 1274, in his 48th year, he was canonized.

AQUOSE, a. (agustus, Lat.) watery; abounding with particles of water.

AQUOSITY, s. wateriness; or the quality so named from its abounding with particles of water.

ARA, the altar, in Astronomy, a southern constellation not visible in our hemisphere.

ARABESQUE, ARABESK, a. after the manner of the Arabians; generally applied to a kind of paintings or architectural ornaments, which consist of imaginary objects.

ARABIA, a country in the S. W. of Asia, bounded on the N. by Syria and the river Euphrates; on the E. by the Gulf of Persia; on the S. by the Indian Ocean; and separated on the W. from Africa by the Red Sea. It is about 1430 miles in length, and 1200 in breadth. The interior, which is very little known, is a rocky table land, with few rivers, and producing principally dates. Around this lies, towards the sea, a tract of land varying in width, principally desert. And to the N. of it is part of the Great Syrian Desert. On the W. side, between the Desert and the table land, is the coffee district. Besides coffee, the country produces manna, gum, frankincense, figs, palms, all of which constitute its exports. Camels, horses, asses, oxen, and sheep are indigenous, as well as beasts not reclaimable to the service of man. Ostriches and pelicans are amongst its birds; and locusts amongst its most abundant insects. The Arabs of the Desert are a fine race of men, maintaining a most primitive form of society amongst them, much resembling that of the times of the patriarchs. Their religion is Mohammedan, and they are bigotedly attached to it. They live a nomadic life, depending chiefly on plunder. In the cities, the influence of trade and commerce has greatly improved and raised this race; but they are greatly behind the condition in which they were in the 6th and subsequent centuries. Mecca, Medina, Mocha, and Sana, are the principal towns.

ARABIC, s. the tongue of the Arabians, a branch of the Hebrew.

ARABIC, a. that belongs to, or is used in Arabia. Arabic characters, are the figures which we make use of at present in arithmetic. Gum Arabic distils from a thorny plant in Arabia.

ARABISM, s. (arabismus, Lat.) a method of expression, or idiom, peculiar to the Arabs.

ARABLE, a. [from aro, Lat.] that is fit for ploughing, and to produce corn.

ARAC, ARAC, (rack) s. an excellent spirituous liquor, made by the Chinese from cocoa, rice, or sugar; the former of which is the best; there are two sorts imported into England, viz. the Goa and Batavia.

ARACAN, a country of Asia, on the N. E. coast of the Bay of Bengal, in length about 230 miles, and in breadth about 50. It is divided from the Burmese empire by a chain of mountains, attaining in some points an elevation of 5000 feet. Along the shore of the Bay, there is another range of hills, thus making the country a long narrow valley, which being well watered, is extremely fertile, and productive of indigo, cotton, tobacco, rice, sugar-cane, &c., but very unhealthy. Elephants, tigers, and buffaloes abound. Aracan, its capital, is a mean town, and has declined much since the country was acquired by the East India Company. The language of the people is allied to the Chinese, as is their religion, which is Buddhism. The population of the country is reckoned to be about 200,000.

AREOMETER, s. (areios and metro, Gr.) an instrument used to discover the gravity of fluids.

AREOSTYLE, a. (areos and stylon, Gr.) in Architecture, applied to temples whose columns are placed at more than three diameters apart.

AREOTICS, s. (araios, Gr.) medicines which rarely or thin the blood.

ARATGNEE, s. [Fr.] in Fortification, a branch, return, or gallery of a mine.

ARAL, the name of a small inland sea of Asia, lying on the east of the Caspian Sea. It lies considerably below the level of the sea, and its water, like that of the Caspian, is salt. It receives the waters of the two great rivers, Sihon, and Jihon or Amou. From the observations of travellers, it would appear that this sea is gradually diminishing in extent from the excess of evaporation over the supply from rivers. It is immediately surrounded by tracts of sandy desert.

ARAM, the name by which Syria, and that part of Persia called by the Greeks Mesopotamia, are designated in the Old Testament.

ARAMAIC LANGUAGES, the general name of those dialects of the great Semitic family of languages which were spoken in Syria and Assyria, commonly called the Syriac and Chaldee. Some passages in the books of Daniel and Ezra, parts of the Talmuds, the Targums of Onkelos and Jonathan, are written in the latter. Certain words, noted as the very words used by our Lord, in the New Testament, and two translations of the greater part of the Scriptures, are in the former dialect.

ARANEUS, a. (aranea, Lat.) that resembles a cobweb.

ARARAT, the name of a mountain in the table land of Armenia, which, according to Dr. Parrot, is 17,260 feet above the level of the sea, and about 10,000 feet above the high land of the district. According to almost universal tradition, it was on this mountain that the ark rested after the flood; and in the immediate neighbourhood it was believed that the vessel yet remained near the top, in a state of miraculous preservation. Various ascents of the mountain in later days have dispelled this illusion. The appearance of the mountain indicates that it is a volcano, although there are no eruptions recorded.

ARAS, a river of Armenia, which rising near Erzurum, on the opposite side of the mountain to that from which one of the branches of the Euphrates flows, passes Mount Ararat and empties itself into the Caspian Sea, after a course of nearly 700 miles.

ARATUS, a Grecian poet of the third century B. C., of whose works only a poem on Astronomy remains. He is supposed to have been born at Tarsus in Cilicia; and a few words out of his poem were quoted by the apostle Paul in his address at Athens. His Phænomena had great celebrity amongst the ancients, but the positions of the stars are stated in a very rough and inaccurate manner.

ARATU, a native of Sicily, who, by a revolution skillfully effected, obtained the tyranny or chief power of the state. As leader of the Achaean League, he resisted the power of Antigonus, the king of Macedonia. Afterwards, as an ally of Macedonia, he sought to establish the safety and order of Greece. He died in 213 B. C.

ARAUCAINIANS, a native tribe of South America, inhabiting part of Chili. Their laws and customs exhibit a comparatively high state of civilization, when their circumstances are considered. In their language, traditions, religion, &c., they seem to approach the nations of the Indo-European family.

ARBITER, s. [Lat.] a person chosen by mutual consent between two or more parties, to decide the subject of their disagreement; one who is invested with a power to decide any difference.

ARBITRABLE, a. [arbitror, Lat.] arbitrary; voluntary; determined purely by the will, without regard to any other motives.

ARBITRAIMENT, s. choice; or the exercise of the will in choosing or assenting to any thing.

ARBITRARILY, ad. in such a manner as implies a bare exertion of the will, without any regard to motives or consequences; in a despotic, tyrannical, or absolute manner.

ARBITRARIOUS, a. [arbitrarius, Lat.] depending entirely on the will; precarious.

ARBITRARIOUSLY, ad. arbitrarily; according to the mere and obstinate determination of the will.

ARBITRARY, a. not restrained or determined by any law or reasons; capricious, positive, despotic, and dogmatic.

To ARBITRATE, v. a. [arbitror, Lat.] to decide or determine a difference; to judge of—c. n. to give judgment or pronounce sentence.

ARBITRATION, s. the determination of a cause by a judge chosen by the parties contending.

ARBITRATOR, s. [Lat.] a person chosen by contending parties to determine a difference between them; a determiner.

ARBITREMENT, s. decision or determination pronounced by an umpire; a compromise.

ARBOR, s. [Lat.] in Botany, a tree. In Mechanics, that part of a machine which supports the rest; likewise the spindle or axis on which a machine turns.

ARBORIST, s. [arboriste, Fr.] a naturalist, who applies himself peculiarly to study the nature and cultivation of trees.

ARBOUR, s. [arbor, Lat.] a kind of a shady bower, or cabin formed of the branches of trees, and contrived so as to admit the air and keep off the sun and rain.

ARBUTHNOT, DR. JOHN, one of the brilliant wits of Queen Anne's time, the associate and friend of Pope, Swift, Gay, &c. He was by profession a physician, and was for some years physician to the queen. He was the author of many works on scientific and literary subjects; and the projector and joint author of some of the biting satires of men and manners, published in Pope's and Swift's works. He died in 1735, aged 65 years.

ARC, s. [arcus, Lat.] a segment, or part of a circle.

ARC, JOAN OF, called also the Pucelle, and the Maid of Orleans, a peasant girl of Domremy, in Lorraine, who, in the disastrous state of affairs in France that followed the death of Henry V., fired by patriotic and religious enthusiasm, undertook to deliver the city of Orleans, on which the last hope of Charles VII. hung, which was then besieged by the English. She compelled the English to retire, defeated them again at Patay, and had Charles solemnly crowned at Rheims. Being taken by the party of the Duke of Burgundy at Compiegne, she was sold to the English, who, after the formality of a trial, burnt her alive as a witch, in 1431, aged about 20 years.

ARCADE, s. [Fr.] a continued arch or walk, consisting of several arches united together.

ARCADIA, the central district of the ancient Peloponnesus, inhabited chiefly by shepherds, and of its romantic beauty, celebrated as the haunt of the gods. Facts of history, however, reveal it to us as peopled by a race of men more than half savage.

ARCANUM, (in the plural arcana), s. [Lat.] a secret; generally applied to the nostrum of a quack.

ARCELAUS, a Grecian philosopher, born at Pitane, in Asia Minor, who having been well taught by the best instructors in Mathematics, he finally learnt Platonism in the school of Polemo. He afterwards taught in the same school, and is generally looked upon as the founder of the Later Academy. So far as he taught any thing positive, it was Scepticism, but not that of Pyrrho: the method of inquiry invented by Socrates, and revived by him, was the principal feature of his teaching. He died in 241 B. C., from hard drinking, at the age of 75.

ARCH, s. [arcus, Lat.] the sky. In Mathematics, part of any curve line, whether it be ellipsis, circle, &c. Arch, in Architecture, is a vault or concave building, bent in the form of an arch or curve, and is divided into circular, elliptical, and straight. Circular arches, are either such as are exactly a semicircle, or whose centre is in the middle of a line drawn from one foot to the other, which are called semicircular arches. Elliptical arches, or those which consist of a semi-ellipsis, and were formerly used instead of mantle-trees in chimneys. Straight arches have straight edges, both upper and under parallel; but both their ends and joints pointing towards a certain centre. Arch of a bridge, is the vaulted interval between its piers. A triumphal arch, is a gate built with stone, &c., and richly ornamented with trophies, &c.

To ARCH, v. a [arcus, Lat.] to build or form into arches; to cover with arches.

ARCH, a. [archos, chief, Gr.] used in composition, to express something of the first rank or order, applied to dignity, as archbishop; but something superlative, applied to quality, as an archheretic; and is pronounced soft before a consonant, like ch in choice; but hard before a vowel, like the letter c, as if the h was dropped. It sometimes implies a person endued with a great deal of low cunning; or triflingly mischievous.

ARCULEUS, (arculus) s. a word used by Paracelsus and other chemists to express a principle of motion; the cause of all the visible changes and operations of bodies.

ARCHAIOLOGY, (arkaiology) s. [archaios and logos, Gr.] a discourse on antiquity; or a treatise on the opinions, &c. of the ancients.

ARCHANGEL, a sea-port of Russia, and capital of a province of the same name, seated on the Dvina, 4 miles from the White Sea. It is not a large nor well-built town, although an important one, and its population is inconsiderable. There are a few manufactories of sugar, rope, &c. Its trade consists chiefly of the products of the N. part of the empire, and is yet considerable, though it is greatly diminished since the building of Petersburg, from which it is distant 400 miles. Lat. 64. 34. N. Long. 39. 0. E.

ARCHANGEL, (arkangel) s. [archangelus, Lat.] one of the superior order of angels. In Botany, the deadnettle.

ARCHBISHOP, s. the chief or metropolitan bishop, who has several suffragans under him. This title was first introduced in the East, about the fourth century, but then was only honorary, and given to some bishops of great cities. England is divided between two, the archbishop of Canterbury, who is styled Primate of all England, and takes precedence of all peers except the royal family; and the archbishop of York, who is styled Primate of England, with the same dignity, except that the lord chancellor takes precedence of him.

ARCHBISHOPRIC, s. the state or jurisdiction of an archbishop.

ARCHBUTLER, s. one of the great officers of the late German empire, who presented the cup to the emperor on solemn occasions. This office belonged to the king of Bohemia.

ARCHCHAMBERLAIN, s. an officer of the late German empire, not unlike the great chamberlain in England.

ARCHCHANCELLOR, s. in ancient times, presided over the secretaries of the court under the two first races of the kings of France; and when their territories were divided into Germany, Italy, and Arles, there were three archchancellors appointed.

ARCHCHANTER, s. the president or chief chanter of a church.

ARCHDEACON, s. [archidiaconus, Lat.] a priest vested with authority or jurisdiction over the clergy and laity, next to the bishop, either through the whole diocese or only a part of it. There are sixty in England, who visit every two years in three, wherein they inquire into the reparations and movables belonging to churches, reform abuses, suspend, excommunicate, in some places prove wills, and induct all clerks into benefices within their respective jurisdictions.

ARCHDEACONRY, s. the jurisdiction, office, or province of an archdeacon.

ARCHDEACONSHIP, s. the office or dignity of an archdeacon.

ARCHDUCHESS, s. [arch and duchesse, Fr.] the title of the sister or daughter of an archduke.

ARCHDUKE, s. [archidux, Lat.] a duke invested with some greater privilege or authority than others.

ARCHE, (drige) s. [Gr.] in Medicine, the beginning, first period, or first attack of a disease.

ARCHED, part. crooked, or bent in the form of an arch.

ARCHELAUS, a Grecian philosopher, pupil to Anaxagoras, and teacher in the Ionic school, which Thales began. He removed afterwards to Athens, and is believed to have been the teacher of Socrates. His doctrines, like those of Thales, were chiefly physiological. He flourished about 450 B. C.

ARCHELAUS, one of the sons of Herod the Great, who succeeded him. Afterwards, on the solicitations of the Jews, the Roman emperor abridged his authority, and gave him only Judaea, Samaria, and Idumaea. On subsequent appeals of the Jews, he was deposed and banished to Gaul, where he died. The date of his banishment was 6 A. D. In ancient history, many persons of this name occur.

ARCHER, s. [archer, Fr.] one who shoots with a bow; one who uses a bow in battle.

ARCHERY, s. the art or exercise of shooting with a bow. The art of an archer.

ARCHES-COURT, s. [so called from Bow-church, in London, where it was kept; which likewise received its name from its top being raised upon pillars built bow or archwise] the chief and most ancient consistory or court of the archbishop of Canterbury, for debating spiritual causes. The judge of the court is called the Dean of the Arches.

ARCHETYPAL, (arkhetypal) a. original; that has something which may serve as a pattern to copy from.

ARCHETYPE, (arkhetype) s. [archetypum, Lat.] the original model or pattern of any thing.

ARCHIDIACONAL, (arkidiaconal) a. [archidiaconus, Lat.] that belongs or relates to an archdeacon.

ARCHIEPISCOPAL, (arkiepiscopal) a. [archiepiscopus, Lat.] that belongs to, or is exercised by, an archbishop.

ARCHIL, s. a well-known blue dye, called also litmus, obtained from some species of lichens, found in the Canary and Cape Verde Islands.

ARCHILOCHUS, a Grecian lyric poet, of whose writings only a few fragments remain. He invented a lyric metre known by his name; and is famed for his unmerciful satires. He was a native of Paros, an island of the Ægean, and flourished in the seventh century B. C.

ARCHIMEDES, the famous Grecian geometer of Syracuse. He was the discoverer of specific gravity, and according to the tale, convicted the fraudulent goldsmith who made Hiero's crown, by it. His inventions in Mechanics were numerous; by them he enabled the Syracusans successfully to resist the Romans through a siege of three years. One, an endless screw, by which he proposed to facilitate the raising of water, has been applied in later days to the propulsion of vessels. His inventions seem to have been suggested by his mathematical investigations, for he is reported to have said respecting them, "Give me a standing-place, and I will move the earth." He was killed when Syracuse was taken, by a Roman soldier, who found him immersed in his studies, and did not know him, in 212 B. C., in his 75th year.

ARCHIPELAGO, s. in Geography, a general term, applied to a group or cluster of small islands. There are many groups so designated, besides the original one in the Ægean Sea.

ARCHITECT, (architect) s. [architectus, Lat.] a person skilled in building, who draws plans and designs, conducts the work, and directs the artificers in carrying it on.

ARCHITECTIVE, (architective) a. that relates to building or architecture.

ARCHITECTONIC, (architectonic) a. [Gr.] that has the skill and power of an architect.

ARCHITECTURE, (architecture) s. [architectura, Lat.] the art of building; divided into three branches, civil, military, or naval. The Civil consists in erecting habitations for men, or temples for worship. The Military consists in strengthening and fortifying places, named Fortification. Naval architecture is that which teaches the construction of ships or vessels floating on the water, and is named ship-building.

ARCHITRAVE, (architrave) s. [arche, Gr. and trabe, Lat.] in Architecture, the lowest member of the entablature, which lies immediately upon the capital. In timber-building, it is styled the rafter-piece, or master-beam; in chimneys, the mantle-piece; and over jambs of doors or windows, the hyperthyron.

ARCHIVES, (archives) s. [archiva, Lat.] the places wherein records or ancient manuscripts are preserved. Figuratively, the records and manuscripts themselves.

ARCHON, (archon) s. [Gr.] in Antiquity, the chief magistrate of Athens.

ARCH-TREASURER, s. formerly a great officer of the German empire.

ARCHWISE, ad. in the shape or form of an arch.

ARCHOT, the name of a district and a city of the Carnatic, Hindustan, belonging to the presidency of Madras. The town had formerly a native fortress of great strength. It is recovering from the desolation to which it was reduced during the wars which occurred at the founding of the British empire in India. It is 1070 miles from Calcutta. Lat. 12. 54. N. Long. 79. 23. E.

ARCTIC, a. [arctikos, Gr.] northern; lying under or near the north star. Arctic Circle, a lesser circle of the sphere, parallel to the equinoctial, and 66 deg. 32 min. distant from it towards the north pole. Arctic Pole, the northern pole of the world, both of the heavens and the earth; so named of Arctos, or Bear, a cluster or constellation of stars near it.

ARCTURUS, s. in Astronomy, one of the fixed stars in the constellation of Bootes. It is mentioned in Job ix. 9. It is above the horizon of London 15h. 50m. 52s. out of every 23h. 50m. 4s.

ARCULATE, a. [arcuatus, Lat.] bent in the form of an arch.

ARCULATION, (arcuation) s. [arcus, Lat.] the act of bending any thing; the state of being bent. In Surgery, a bending of the bones, which appears in the case of the rickets; the protuberance of the foreparts of the body, with the bending of the bones of the sternum.

ARDÈCHE, a department of France, lying on the Rhone, named from the river Ardèche, which flows into the Rhone here. The Cevennes, which form its N. W. boundary, abound in traces of a volcanic character. One of the mountains, the Mezen, is 5820 feet high. The soil is good, producing wine, walnuts, chesnuts, &c., which with silk are its principal commodities.

ARDENCY, s. applied to the affections, warmth; applied to study, activity.

ARDENNES, a department of France, on the Belgian frontier, named after the ancient and celebrated forest which formerly clothed this hilly district. The river Meuse flows through it. Timber, which yet grows here abundantly, limestone and slate from the quarries in the hills, and woollen manufactures, are the staple of its export trade.

ARDENT, a. [ardens, Lat.] applied to the qualities of body, hot, burning, inflaming; applied to those of the mind, fierce, vehement, violent, passionate, inflamed.

ARDENTLY, ad. warmly, eagerly, passionately.

ARDGLASS, now a decayed, but once a principal town of Down, in Ulster. Here is a long range of buildings, in the castle style, called by the inhabitants, the New Works, though they have no tradition of its design or use. Here are also the remains of several other castles, towers, and gates. It is in Down county, 100 miles from Dublin. Pop. 1066.

ARDMEANAGH, a territory of Ross-shire.

ARDOR, s. [ardor, Lat.] heat, applied to the qualities of body; warmth, violence of affection, applied to the mind.

ARDOUS, a. [ardus, Lat.] applied to what is both lofty and difficult to ascend. Figuratively, something which is both important, sublime, and difficult to comprehend.

ARE, the plural of the present tense of the verb am.

AREA, s. [Lat.] the surface contained between any lines or limits. Any surface, such as the floor of a room, the vacant part or stage of an amphitheatre. In Geometry, the space contained within the lines bounding it, reckoned in the square part of any measure.

AREFACTION, s. [arefacio, Lat.] the act of making dry, or the state of drying.

ARENA/CEOUS, s. [arenaceus, Lat.] composed of sand; sandy.

ARENATION, s. [arena, Lat.] in Medicine, a dry bath, wherein the patient sits with his feet upon hot sand, and has it cast upon different parts of his body.

ARENOSE, a. [arenosus, Lat.] sandy or abounding with sand.

ARENULOUS, a. [arenula, Lat.] consisting of small sand.

AREOLA, s. [Lat.] in Anatomy, the coloured circle surrounding the nipple.

AREOPAGUS, s. a sovereign tribunal at Athens, famous for the justice and impartiality of its decrees, to which the gods themselves are said to have submitted their differences. It was of most remote antiquity, and was named after the hill in the city on which it was held. The number of the Areopagites seems not to have been fixed, but to have varied with the times. Its jurisdiction varied also, for it existed in the midst of a most watchful democracy. It died out at last, having sunk into a mere name under the Romans. The causes were at first tried in the open air, and no rhetorical displays were permitted, but it does not appear that the chosen time was night, as usually alleged.

AREOTICS, s. [araeotikos, Gr.] medicines that open the pores.

AREQUIPA, a populous city of Peru, seated near a dreadful volcano, 290 miles from Lima. It has a considerable trade, both with the distant provinces of Peru, and with other countries. Its population is above 40,000.

ARES, the name of the ancient Grecian god of war. He was not much worshipped, nor, according to Homer, when he took part in the affairs of mortals, much respected. He has been confounded with the Roman god, Mars.

AREZZO, a city of Tuscany, of great antiquity. It is well fortified and defended by a citadel. Its population is estimated at above 10,000. 34 miles from Florence. The district around it, called by its name, produced a peculiar and celebrated wine, with corn, &c.

ARGAL, ARGOL, s. the hard lees sticking to the sides of wine vessels, called tartar.

ARGAND LAMP, a lamp invented by a native of France, in which, by means of a hollow cylindrical burner, open below, a supply of air is secured for the interior of the flame, as well as the exterior, and so the consumption of the oil is more perfect; and the flame more brilliant and white.

ARGENT, a. [argentum, Lat.] that resembles silver; silvered. In Heraldry, the white colour in the arms of gentry, expressed by engravers by a total omission of lines in a shield.

ARGIL, s. [argilla, Lat.] the white earth used by the potters in making their white ware.

ARGILLACEOUS, a. [argillaceus, Lat.] of the nature of potter's clay.

ARGILLOUS, a. [argillosus, Lat.] consisting of clay; of the nature of clay.

ARGO, a constellation in the S. hemisphere, named after the celebrated ship in which Jason sailed on the adventure of the Golden Fleece.

ARGONAUTS, the name given to the crew of heroes who, according to ancient Greek fable, sailed with Jason in his adventure of the Golden Fleece. Which late interpreters of mythic lore have supposed to be the first trading voyage amongst the Greeks, their practices having been piratical before.

ARGOSY, s. [Argo, the name of Jason's ship,] in Poetry, a large vessel for merchandise.

To ARGUE, v. n. [arguo, Lat.] to evince the truth or falsehood of any thing by proofs. Figuratively, to persuade; to bring reasons for or against; to plead, to handle; to debate.

ARGUER, s. one who makes use of reason in order to evince any truth, or raise conviction in the mind of another; a reasoner; a disputer.

ARGUMENT, s. [argumentum, Lat.] a reason brought to prove or disprove any thing; the subject of any discourse or writing; a concise view of the heads of any discourse. In Law, a cause, debate, or suit; a controversy. In Astronomy, an arch by which we seek another unknown arch, proportional to the first.

ARGUMENTAL, a. that is formed upon the deductions of reason; belonging to argument; reasoning.

ARGUMENTATION, s. the evincing the truth or falsehood of any proposition by reasoning; the act or effect of reasoning.

ARGUMENTATIVE, a. consisting of argument, or the deduction of reason; containing reasons.

ARGUTE, a. [argutus, Lat.] witty, sharp, subtle.

ARGYLE, or Inverary, a county of Scotland, bounded on the N. by Inverness-shire, on the E. by the counties of Perth and Dumbarton, on the S. and W. by the Atlantic Ocean, by which it is broken into islands and peninsulas, with bays and inlets which afford good harbour for shipping; and the country is well watered with rivers and lakes, which yield abundance of fish. It is not quite 100 miles long, from the Mull of Cantyre to its N. E. extremity; its breadth is unequal, about 30 miles where greatest, and in some places 1 or 2. It is very mountainous, and therefore little cultivated; but it has good pastures. The mountains yield lead, copper, marble, slate, &c. There are good salmon and cod fisheries. Pop. 97,371.

ARIA, s. [Ital.] in Music, an air, a song, a tune, or a lesson.

ARIANS, s. in Church History, a sect who believed Christ to be a created being, inferior to the Father as to his deity, being neither co-eternal nor co-equal with him, but that yet he was the Son of God, and was worthy of worship. Their leader, Arius, lived at the beginning of the fourth century.

ARIANISM, s. the principles maintained by the Arians.

ARIAS MONTANUS, BENEDICTUS, a Spanish divine, profoundly versed in oriental literature and antiquities; the editor of the Antwerp Polyglott Bible, under the patronage of Philip II. of Spain. Although he had proved his Romanism by good service both to Philip and the Duke of Alva, he very narrowly escaped the hands of the Inquisition. His works are very numerous. He died in 1598, aged 71 years.

ARID, a. [aridus, Lat.] dry, parched up, withered.

ARIDITY, s. [ariditas, Lat.] a want of moisture, or dryness. In Divinity, a state of insensibility, or want of ardency in devotion.

ARIES, s. [Lat.] in Astronomy, a constellation of fixed stars, the first of the twelve signs of the zodiac, which the sun enters about the 21st of March.

To ARJETATE, v. n. [arieto, Lat.] to butt, or to attack with the head, like a ram.

ARJETATION, s. [arieto, Lat.] the act of butting like a ram; the attacking with a battering-ram.

ARJETTA, s. [Ital.] in Music, a short air, song, or tune.

ARIGHT, ad. [arid, Sax.] truly; justly; or consistent with law; properly, or in such a manner as to attain the desired end.

ARIMANES, ARIMAN, in the theology of Zoroaster, the name of the author of evil, who is represented as co-equal with Ormuzd, the author of good, and incessantly opposed to him; and to be worshipped that he may not be angry.

ARIOLATION, s. [hariosus, Lat.] soothsaying.

ARIOSEO, s. [Ital.] the movement of a common air, song, or tune.

ARIOSTO, LUDOVICO, an Italian poet of the 15th century. He was frequently engaged in diplomatic missions by the state of Venice, but his fame rests on his great poem Orlando Furioso, which is a continuation of Boiardo's Orlando Innamorato. As a poet, he was so celebrated during his life, that having fallen into the hands of some robbers on one of his journeys, they dismissed him freely, on hearing his name. He died in 1533, aged 59 years.

To ARISE, (arise) v. n. [its pret. arose, part. arisen,] to ascend; to move upwards from the earth; to get up as from sleep; to change the posture from sitting to standing; to come in view; to become visible; to come out of the grave; to flow or proceed from.

ARISTARCHUS, a Grecian astronomer, contemporary with Archimedes. He maintained the doctrine of the earth's motion, with the Pythagoreans, and showed that the orbit of the earth was so small compared with the distance of the stars, that there could be no annual parallax. He also invented a plan of discovering approximately the distance of the sun, by observation of the moon at the quadratures. An observation of the solstices made by him fixes the date of his flourishing at 281 B. C.

ARISTIDES, one of the leaders of the Athenians at the time of the Persian invasion. His character for incorruptible integrity stood so high that he was surnamed the Just. He was engaged frequently in the armies, and on missions during the war. The chief facts of his life are his disagreement with Themistocles, whose wily policy could not but be offensive to him; and his exile, according to an old tale, occasioned by dislike which his well-earned title inspired. He died at Athens in about 465 B. C.

ARISTIPPUS, the founder of the Cyrenaic school of Grecian philosophy, was born at Cyrene, Africa, and studied under Socrates. His philosophy was Epicureanism before Epicurus, but after Socrates he sought the criterion of truth in the moral nature of man. Pleasure was with him the test of good. He resided with Dionysius of Syracuse for some time, and died about 350 B. C.

ARISTOCRACY, s. [aristos and kratos, Gr.] in Politics, a form of government, wherein the supreme power is lodged in the nobility.

ARISTOCRITICAL, a. that partakes of aristocracy, or includes a government administered only by nobles.

ARISTOGEITON, the name of a Greek associated with Harmodius in an attempt to deliver Athens from the tyranny of Hippias and Hipparchus, the sons of Peisistratus. They slew Hipparchus, but Harmodius was also slain, and Aristogeiton, being taken by Hippias, was put to death. These names were the watchwords of the friends of liberty at Athens, as Brutus was at Rome, and the names of the leaders of the 17th century war in England. He was put to death in 514 B. C.

ARISTOMENES, a Messenian, whose romantic deeds and daring in the wars with Sparta have given him a name which will live along with the heroes of chivalry. On the fall of his country he retired to Rhodes, and died in about 665 B. C.

ARISTOPHANES, the great Athenian comedian, whose satires on the promoters of the Peloponnesian war, on the litigious spirit of the Athenians, on the democratic dreamers, on Pericles and Socrates, and on the false dramatic taste of the people, are presented to us in eleven of his plays which remain. His poetry is often very fine, but his plays are unspeakably gross. His caricatures of the gods, and of Socrates, show that he was essentially a jester. He died about 390 B. C.

ARISTOTELIS, commonly called Aristotle, one of the men whose thoughts have ruled the world. He was born at Stageira, in Thrace, and studied philosophy under Plato, at Athens, and so soon displayed his intellectual force that Plato called him the mind of his school. He was selected as tutor to Alexander the Great; but he afterwards opened a school in the Lyceum at Athens, in the walks of which he gave his instructions, whence his followers were called Peripatetics. Having been made the object of persecution as impious, he withdrew to Chalchis, and died in 322 B. C., aged 62 years. He sought in his studies to embrace all that could be known, and amongst his extant works we have treatises on the most diverse of subjects. His system of Natural History is regarded with astonishment even now. His political and ethical works contain abundant wisdom. In his Metaphysics he combated Plato, never being able to apprehend his master's ideal theory. Logic and Rhetoric, as sciences, he may be said to have constructed. It is by his Logic, or Organon, as he named it, that he gained an influence which abides to this day. He thought, and his idolizing followers have always thought, that the scientific development of the laws of thought was the instrument of scientific investigation. And into those provinces in which such an error is most pernicious, the true scientific organon, partly developed by Lord Bacon, has scarcely yet penetrated. The works of Aristotle which remain are almost all mere syllabi, or programmes of his lectures.

ARITHMANCY, s. [arithmos and mantia, Gr.] a sort of divination, or foretelling things by numbers.

ARITHMETIC, s. [arithmos and metreo, Gr.] the science of numbers; the art of computation. In general, it means now the applied science of numbers; and of these by means of symbols expressing results rather than processes. The fundamental rules or operations of arithmetic are four, namely, addition, subtraction, multiplication, and division.

ARITHMETICAL, a. that is performed by numbers, or agreeable to some rule in arithmetic. Arithmetical complement, is the quantity which will raise any other quantity to the next highest decimal quantity, as 4, which added to 6 would make 10. Arithmetical mean, a quantity which, whether a whole number or a fraction, lies exactly midway between two other quantities, as 12, which lies so between 9 and 15. Arithmetical progression, a series of quantities increasing, or decreasing, by the constant addition or subtraction of the same quantity. Arithmetical proportion, the relation of equality between the differences of 2 or more pairs of numbers.

ARITHMETICALLY, ad. according to the rules of arithmetic; in an arithmetical manner.

ARITHMETICIAN, s. a master of the art of numbers.

ARIUS, a Cyprian, the author of the first momentous controversy amongst Christians respecting the Trinity. He appears to have held as an article of faith what was generally taught in the philosophical school of Alexandria. He was opposed by the dialectics of the bishops and the patriarch Athanasius, and the excommunication of the emperor Constantine. He was afterwards restored on submission to the synod of Nice, but died before being fully admitted to the church, in 336.

ARK, s. [arca, Lat.] a chest, or coffer; applied in Scripture to the vehicle in which Moses was exposed to the Nile; the chest wherein the two tables of the covenant, the pot of manna, and Aaron's rod, were kept; but more particularly the vessel built by Noah, to preserve himself, family, and the whole race of terrestrial and aerial animals, from the flood.

ARKANSAS, one of the W. United States, bounded on the N. by Missouri, on the E. by the Mississippi, on the W. by the Indian territory, and on the S. by Louisiana. It is 240 miles long, and 228 wide, and its population is 97,574, of whom 19,935 are slaves. Its principal river is the Arkansas, from which it is named, which rises in the Rocky Mountains and runs, after a course of above 2000 miles, of which 1900 are navigable by boats, into the Mississippi; the Red, the White rivers, and their tributaries, also water it. The E. part of the State is swampy, and not cleared, and so unhealthy; in the W. part are the Ozark Mountains, the Black Hills, and the Washita Hills, which yield iron, gypsum, coal, and salt. The soil varies from utter sterility to the greatest productiveness. Cotton and Indian corn are its staple productions, and there is good grazing ground. Buffaloes, deer, wolves, bears, and the common wild animals of the States, abound. Little Rock, on the Arkansas, is the seat of government. Arkansas, Columbia, Batesville, and other places are little more than villages. There is but one bank, and no college. The constitution was formed in 1836, in which year it was admitted to the Union. The laws respecting slavery in this state are mild and comparatively equitable.

ARKLOW, a neat market town and sea-port of the county of Wicklow, in Ireland, with a harbour for small vessels. It is 26 miles from Dublin. Pop. 3254.

ARKWRIGHT, SIR RICHARD, the inventor or introducer of the cotton-spinning machine, was originally a barber at Preston, in Lancashire, but having a great liking for practical mechanics, devoted himself to the pursuit, and by the help of Messrs. Need and Strutt, of Nottingham, produced his spinning-machine, which altered the whole state of the cotton manufactures of England. He was exposed to much annoyance from dispartants of his right to his patent, and ultimately lost his monopoly. He gained great wealth by his mills, which he attended to most indefatigably to the last. He died in 1792, aged 60 years.

ARLES, a large, handsome, and ancient city, in the dept. of the mouths of the Rhone, in France. The adjacent country is very pleasant, and produces good wine, manna, oil, fruits, and vermillion, and the air is excellent, yet the city is not populous. There are many Roman remains in the town, of which the amphitheatre and obelisk are most remarkable. It is seated on the Rhone, 430 miles from Paris. Lat. 43. 41. N. Long. 4. 43. E.

ARM, s. [arm, Sax.] a limb of the human body, reaching from the shoulder to the hand. Anatomists divide the arm into two parts, calling that part the arm which is included between the shoulder and the elbow; the rest, from the elbow to the wrist, is called the fore-arm. The arm, in this acceptation, has only one large bone, called the os humeri, or the shoulder-bone. The other part consists of two bones, namely, the radius and cubitus, or ulna. In Geography, it denotes a branch of the sea, or a river. It is also figuratively used for power; as, the secular arm. Likewise, for a large branch or bough of a tree.

To ARM, v. a. [armo, Lat.] to furnish with weapons; to cap, case, or cover with metal, applied to the loadstone, or the shoes of a horse.

To ARM, v. n. to take arms; to be provided against any attack, either of an enemy, or casualty.

ARMADA, s. [Span.] a fleet of men of war, applied by way of eminence to that great one fitted out by the Spaniards, with an intention to conquer this island, in 1588.

ARMADILLO, in Zoology, a genus of quadrupeds covered with a hard shell, in which they can roll themselves up. They live in burrows, and do not refuse any kind of food. They are found only in South America.

ARMAGH, a county of Ireland, in the province of Ulster, which is fertile, well cultivated, and has a population of 232,393, who carry on a good trade in linen. Its county town of the same name is the see of an archbishop, who is primate of Ireland. It is 81 miles from Dublin. Pop. 10,245.

ARMAMENT, s. [armamentum, Lat.] any place wherein arms are placed; great provisions of military stores. Figuratively, an army, but most commonly applied to a fleet of men of war.

ARMAN, s. a confection for restoring appetite to horses.

ARMATURE, s. [armatura, Lat.] a military dress to defend the body from the attack of an enemy in battle; any thing to defend the body from external injuries.

ARMED, a. in Heraldry, applied to beasts and birds of prey, when their teeth, horns, feet, beak, talons, or tusks, &c., are of a different colour.

ARMENIA, a large country of Asia, bounded on the W. by the river Euphrates, on the S. by Diarbeker, Curdistan, and Adirbijan, on the E. by Shirvan, and on the N. by Georgia. It was once governed by its own kings; but the Turks and Persians at present possess it between them. The Armenians profess Christianity, but in respect of Christ, are Monophysites. In other particulars they adhere to the creeds and customs of the Catholic church. The country is fertile, and exports grain, fruits, &c. The people are greatly addicted to trade, and settle in other countries for the purpose of carrying it on. The capital is Erzerum. Armenia is a mountainous country, the Caucasus, and other lofty ranges connected with it, running through it, or bordering on it. It is watered by the Kur, the Aras, the Tigris, the Euphrates, and their tributaries. The literature of Armenia is varied and extensive, but not of recent date.

ARME'NIAN, (Bole) s. a fatty medicinal kind of earth, of a pale reddish colour, which takes its name from the country of Armenia.

ARME'NIAN, (Stone) s. a mineral stone or earth of a blue colour, spotted with green, black, and yellow; anciently brought only from Armenia, but now found in Germany and the Tyrol.

ARMHOLE, s. [armpit, s. the cavity under the shoulder.

ARMIGER, s. [Lat.] an esquire; one that bears arms.

ARMILLARY, a. [from armilla, Lat.] something that is circular, in allusion to the surrounding of a bracelet. Armillary sphere, is composed of several brass circles, which represent those of the horizon, meridian, ecliptic, &c., drawn on the globe.

ARMINGS, s. (plural) in a ship, are white or red cloths hung fore and aft on the outside of a ship; those on the tops are named top-armings.

ARMINIANS, named after Arminius, a famous minister at Amsterdam; but who follow Episcopius, a disciple of his, in holding, in opposition to the Calvinists, that predestination was not absolute, but conditional; that Christ has not only redeemed all, but that there is a universal grace given to all mankind; that grace is not an irresistible principle; that man is a free agent, always at liberty to obey all the motions of the Holy Ghost, or resist them; that with respect to perseverance, a man may, after justification, fall into new crimes.

ARMINIUS, JACOBUS, a famous minister of Amsterdam in the 16th century. He studied at Leyden, at Padua, and at Geneva, but created opposition to himself at the latter place, by renouncing the Aristotelian philosophy. Being settled at Amsterdam, he commenced his attacks upon Calvinism, and gained many adherents, and was warmly opposed. The States-General even interfered in the controversy. He died in 1609, aged 49 years.

ARMIPOTENCE, s. [arma and potentia, Lat.] power, or powerfulness in war.

ARMIPOTENT, a. [armipotens, Lat.] powerful, or strong in the field, in arms, or at war.

ARMISTICE, s. [armistitium, Lat.] a short truce, or cessation from arms for a short time.

ARMLET, s. a small arm of the sea. Figuratively, a bracelet, or some ornament worn on the arm.

ARMONICA, s. an instrument of music constructed with drinking-glasses: invented by the late Dr. Franklin.

ARMORIAL, a. [armorial, Fr.] that belongs to the coat or escutcheon of a family.

ARMORIST, s. a person skilled in heraldry.

ARMOUR, s. [armure, Fr.] a cover for the body, to defend it from the instruments of war, like a harness.

ARMOUR-BEARER, s. he that carries the arms of another.

ARMOURER, s. [armurier, Fr.] one who makes, forges, or sells armour: one who dresses another in armour.

ARMOURY, v. [armoire, Fr.] a place where arms are kept. Figuratively, arms.

ARMS, s. (not used in the singular.) [arma, Lat.] all kinds of weapons, whether offensive or defensive. Figuratively, a state of hostility between two nations; war. In Heraldry, the badges of distinctions, escutcheons, or other marks of honour, given by sovereigns, and borne on banners, shields, or coats.

ARMY, s. [armée, Fr.] a collection of men armed, commanded by their proper officers. Figuratively, a great number.

ARNALDO DE BRESCIA, a pupil of the famous Abelard, who, in the 12th century, exposed the corruptions of the Roman hierarchy, and grievously troubled that church. He headed an insurrection at Rome against the pope, and maintained the anti-papal spirit alive in the papal city for ten years. On the accession of Adrian IV. to the chair, the city was put under an interdict, the people forsook Arnaldo, who fell into his enemies' hands, and was put to death at Rome in 1155, being about 50 years of age.

ARNAULD, ANTOINE, a celebrated Jansenist priest of the 17th century. Together with Pascal and Nicole he attacked the Jesuits, and established the fame of the convent of Port-Royal. He wrote many of the works that were published by the Port-Royalists, of which his Logic is best known. The principal part of his writings were, however, polemical. Orders being given for his arrest, he retired to Brussels, where he died in 1694, aged 82 years.

ARNDT, JOHN, a Lutheran divine of the 16th century, who endeavoured, and with some success, to resist the spread of corruption in the Lutheran church, by his work on True Christianity. A book which has been much admired by the Pietists and Evangelicals of Germany. He died in 1621, aged 66 years.

ARNE, DR. THOMAS AUGUSTINE, a celebrated English composer, whose operas, oratorios, and other works, are greatly admired. He was the author of "Rule Britannia." He died in 1778, aged 68 years.

ARNEE, s. an Indian animal of the ox kind, reported to have very large horns.

ARNO, a river of Tuscany, in Italy, which rises in the Apennines, and after a course of about 140 miles, enters the Mediterranean Sea, near the town of Pisa.

ARNOLD, BENEDICT, an American general, who, after a career of great bravery, offered and attempted to betray his country to General Clinton. It was for his part in the negotiations connected with this attempt that the unfortunate Major André was executed. Arnold escaped to the British, under whom he afterwards served. At the end of the war he went to England, where he died in 1801.

ARNOLD, DR. SAMUEL, a celebrated English composer, author of some dramatic music, and of several oratorios, and organist at Westminster Abbey. He died in 1802, aged 62 years.

ARNOLD, DR. THOMAS, a distinguished English clergyman, for 14 years head-master of Rugby grammar school. His ceaseless labour for the good of his scholars, endeared him as a father to them all. He left many works of great value to sustain his reputation as a scholar, amongst which his Thucydides, and his unfinished History of Rome, may be especially named. He was Regius Professor of Modern History at Oxford, but had delivered only his introductory course of lectures. His character, as his mind, was one of great clearness and beauty; and his endeavours after what he deemed worthy of pursuit void of all selfishness or fear. He died, suddenly, in 1842, aged 47 years.

AROMA, in Chemistry, the odour which arises from certain vegetables, or their infusions.

AROMATIC, AROMATICAL, a. [aroma, Lat.] spicy; fragrant; strong-scented, or smelling like spices.

AROMATICS, s. (not used in the singular,) spices, or any strong-scented, fragrant, or high-tasted body.

TO AROMATIZE, v. a. to mix or scent with spices. Figuratively, to make any thing agreeable, which in its own nature would be loathsome.

AROUND, ad. [à la ronde, Fr.] in a circle; in a circular manner; on all sides. Used as a preposition, encircling; encompassing; round about.

TO AROUSE, (arotze) v. a. [arisen, Sax.] to wake from sleep; to excite an indolent person to action; to raise up; to stimulate.

ARPEGGIO, s. [ital.] in Music, the making the notes of a chord to be heard distinctly one after another, by a purling or rolling of the hand on stringed instruments, beginning at the lowest note, and rising gradually upwards.

ARPENT, s. an acre or furlong of ground. The arpent of France is 100 perches square, but some account it but half an acre.

ARQUEBUSE, s. anciently a large hand-gun, somewhat bigger than our musket, and called by some a caliver.

ARQUEBUSIER, s. one who carries, or makes use of, an arquebuse.

ARRACK, s. See ARAC.

ARRAGON, one of the provinces of Spain, anciently an independent kingdom. It lies against the Pyrenees, between Navarre and Catalonia, and is about 200 miles long, and 130 broad. It is watered by the Ebro, which crosses it, and its tributaries flowing from the Pyrenees, and the Sierras of Molina and Morella, which form its S. boundaries. Its climate is temperate, and its soil fertile; and the mountains yield abundance of metals, coal, &c. Game and other wild animals, as bears and wolves, are plentiful. The population does not exceed 700,000. Its principal cities are Saragossa, Huesca, and Balbastro.

TO ARRANGE, (arrain) v. a. [arranger, Fr.] in Law, to set a thing in order, or fit it for a trial. Applied to writing, to indict; to accuse; to charge with crimes.

ARRAIGNMENT, (arraignment) s. the act of trying a person upon an indictment, accusation, or charge.

ARRAN, a rocky and mountainous island of Scotland, in the Frith of Clyde, to the S. W. of the island of Bute; about 20 miles long, and 11 broad. It abounds with cattle, sheep, goats, and fowl, and agriculture here is somewhat advancing. The streams are stored with fish, especially salmon. The climate is cold, but healthful. The rocks produce iron ore, sandstone, and clear agates, called cairngorms. Remains of the forest which once covered it exist. There are many relics of antiquity, both Druidical and Runic. Pop. 6241. Lat. 55.40. N. Long. 5.10. W.

To ARRANGE, v. a. [arranger, Fr.] to dispose or put in order, including the secondary idea of art or skill.

ARRANGEMENT, s. the act of putting or placing things into order, including the idea of skill or judgment.

ARRANT, a. [errant, Fr.] notorious, infamous.

ARRANTLY, ad. in a notorious, infamous, or shameful manner.

ARRAS, a city of France, formerly the capital of Artois, a province of the Netherlands, 108 miles from Paris, in the department of Pas-de-Calais. It has a strong citadel, and is handsomely built. It formerly was famous for manufactures of rich tapestry, called after it, Arras.

ARRAY, s. the order in which an army is drawn up to give battle; dress, or external ornaments.

To ARRAY, v. a. [arrayer, Fr.] in military affairs, to place an army in proper order to engage; to deck, embellish, or adorn with dress.

ARRAYERS, s. officers that had the care of soldiers, and saw that they were properly accoutred.

ARREAR, (arrear) s. [arriere, Fr.] that which remains unpaid. Applied to rent, it signifies that which has been due some time, and is not discharged.

ARREBOY, the name of some societies which existed at Tahiti, and other islands of that group, one of the principal features of which seems to have been Infanticide.

ARREST, s. [arrestor, Fr.] in Law, the seizing or apprehending a man, thereby depriving him of his liberty by legal process, either for debt or any offence against the law; a stopping or restraint from proceeding in an undertaking.

To ARREST, v. a. [arrestor, Fr.] to apprehend by virtue of a writ from a court of justice; to seize any thing by law; to seize upon; to stop, withhold, or bind; to stop a body in motion.

ARRET, s. [Fr.] the decision of a sovereign court, or court of judicature; resembling our act of parliament.

ARRIAN, a Greek author, who wrote the History of the Conquest of Asia by Alexander the Great, and many other works, some of which relate to the philosopher Epictetus, who was his teacher. He held an office in Asia Minor under the emperor Hadrian, and was greatly honoured in Nicomedia, his native city. He flourished about 150 A. D.

ARRIÈRE, a department of France, lying on the Pyrenees, named after a river, which is a tributary of the Garonne. It is 67 miles in length, and 48 in breadth. Montcalm, the highest point of the Pyrenees within its border, is 10,660 feet high. The mountains produce abundance of iron, and some other metals. There are some manufactures of woollens, &c. Its capital is Foix, and its population about 250,000.

ARRIÈRE-FIET, s. [Fr.] a fief dependent on another.

ARRIVAL, s. the coming to any place, either by sea or land. Figuratively, the attainment of any design.

ARRIVANCE, s. company expected to come.

To ARRIVE, v. n. [arriuer, Fr.] to come to any place by water or land. Figuratively, to attain or come to.

ARROGANCE, s. [arrogantia, Lat.] the assuming or claiming to oneself more honour or merit than is our due.

ARROGANT, a. [arrogans, Lat.] self-conceited, haughty.

ARROGANTLY, ad. in an arrogant, self-conceited, or haughty manner.

To ARROGATE, v. a. [arrogatio, Lat.] to lay claim to a thing or quality which does not belong to us.

ARRROW, s. [arvee, Sax.] a slender piece of round wood, pointed, barbed, and shot out of a bow; distinguished from a dart, because that was thrown by the hand. Arrow-head, is the sharp point of an arrow, which was usually armed with steel. Arrow-shaped, in Botany, like the head of an arrow.

ARROWHEAD, s. a water-plant, so called from the resemblance of its leaves to the head of an arrow.

ARROWROOT, s. a useful and nutritious farinaceous preparation from the roots of plants growing in the E. and W. Indies, and in the South Seas. An imitation is manufactured in England from the tubers of the potato.

ARSE, [arse, Sax.] the buttocks or hind part of an animal.

ARSENAL, s. [arsenale, Lat.] a royal or public magazine; or place wherein all warlike stores are kept or forged.

ARSENATE, s. a salt formed by the combination of any base with the acid of arsenic.

ARSENATED, a. combined with the acid of arsenic.

ARSENIC, s. [arsenicon, Gr.] an exceedingly brittle metal, of a greyish white colour, sometimes found native, but more frequently in combination with cobalt and iron. The white oxide of arsenic is a virulent poison. Judiciously exhibited it is a fine stimulant tonic; and when administered for the purpose of destroying life, its presence is easily detected, and the twentieth part of a grain can be, by the appliances of modern chemistry, reduced to a metallic state again, so as to be recognised by the naked eye.

ARSENICAL, a. consisting, or having the properties, of arsenic.

ARSENIOS, a. belonging to arsenic.

ARSON, s. in Law, the malicious or wilful burning of the house, property, &c., of another man: it is felony at common law.

ART, s. [art, Fr., ars, Lat.] an abstract or metaphysical term, implying a collection of certain rules from observation and experience, by which any thing may be performed, or any end obtained; distinguished from science by its object. If the object be attained by the application of rules, or require practice, then it is an art; but if contemplated only with respect to its different appearances, the collection of observations relative thereto is a science. A trade; cunning; artfulness; speculation. We have likewise the division of arts into liberal and mechanic. The liberal arts are those which consist in the application or exercise of the mind; the mechanic, those which consist in the exercise of the body, or hand, and make use of machines to attain their ends.

ARTA, the modern name of the Ambracian Gulf, in the entrance to which the naval fight of Actium occurred, which ruined the prospects of M. Antonius, and gave the empire of Rome to Augustus.

ARTAXERXES, the name of three ancient Persian sovereigns, the second of whom was opposed by his younger brother Cyrus, aided by Xenophon and his 10,000 Greeks, whose expedition, with the battle of Cunaxa, which was fatal to their attempt, is narrated in the Anabasis.

ARTEDI, PETER, an eminent ichthyologist, and friend of Linnaeus. His arrangement of this branch of Zoology prevailed until the labours of Agassiz superseded it. He was accidentally drowned at Amsterdam, in 1735, being only 30 years old.

ARTEMIS, a Grecian goddess, twin sister to Apollo, who was represented in the poets as presiding over woodland life and hunting. She was fabled to be a rigid celibate, but to have presided over child-birth. She was worshipped at Ephesus, as an impersonation of nature. Latterly she was confounded with the moon, and with the Roman goddess Diana.

ARTERIAL, a. that belongs to, or is contained in, an artery.

ARTERIO-TOMY, s. [arteria and tomo, Gr.] in Surgery, the opening an artery with a lancet in order to draw blood.

ARTERY, s. [arteria, Lat.] in Anatomy, a membraneous, elastic, conical tube, internally smooth, without valves, which decreases in its dimension in proportion to the number of its branches, destined to receive the blood from the heart, and distribute it to the lungs and other parts of the body; that which has its origin from the right ventricle of the heart is called the pulmonary artery, and that which rises from the left, the aorta.

ARTESIAN WELLS, artificial springs, obtained by boring perpendicularly till a solid stratum is reached, which will yield a constant supply of water. The bore is very small; they are therefore more easily and more cheaply formed than common wells. The name is derived from Artois, in France, where it is supposed they were first made.

ARTEVELDE, the name of two popular leaders of the town of Ghent, in Flanders, in the 14th century. Jacob, the father, was a brewer, who was chosen as captain when the townsmen revolted against Philip of France, aided by Edward III. He was assassinated in a popular tumult, in 1344. His son, Philip, being chosen leader during a blockade of the town in 1380, proposed to attack the besiegers as a last resource. The result was a completely successful battle gained over nearly the whole of Flanders. A powerful coalition being formed against him, he was defeated and slain at Rossbeek, in 1382.

ARTFUL, a. performed according to the rules of art, including the idea of skill, judgment, or wisdom.

ARTFULLY, ad. in such a manner as shows a deal of cunning or skill.

ARTFULNESS, s. the quality of performing any thing with skill, or the attaining an end by cunning.

ARTHRITIC, ARTHRITIC, a. [Gr.] gonty, or occasioned by the gout; that has something like joints.

ARTHRITIS, s. [Gr.] in Physic, a disease which affects the joints; the gout.

ARTHUR, an ancient British prince of the Silures, who, on the progress of the Saxons westward, was elected to the sovereignty or command of all the tribes, and displayed great bravery against the invaders, gaining, according to the old chronicles, twelve battles. The Prince of Cornwall having revolted from him, a battle ensued, in which Arthur fell. He was buried at Glastonbury, in 542. His fame was so great that he has been made the hero of as much romance as the Paladins of Charlemagne. The longest and most coherent of them, the Morte d'Arthur, was not written before the time of the wars of the Roses. It contains the history of the Knights of the Round Table, their adventures, intrigues, &c., and particularly the quest of the Sang-real. The most famous amongst them was Lancelot du Lake. Magical art, of course, supplies the machinery of this prose-poem, and of that the great Merlin is the visible director. It ends with the battle of Camlan, in Cornwall, and the dispersion of the house of Arthur.

ARTICHOKE, s. a plant with large scaly heads, shaped like the cone of a pine tree. The girasole, or Jerusalem artichoke, is an agreeably tasted root, but not much cultivated now.

ARTICLE, s. [articulus, Lat.] in English Grammar, the name given to the demonstrative the, and the numeral an; the first being called the definite, and the second the indefinite article. They are used to mark the extent of signification in which the substantive is used. The is used before both numbers; an only before the singular, except in instances in which the plural is used as a whole, as, a few men, a hundred, a thousand; and when the word it stands before begins with a consonant sound, the n is dropped. In some other languages, the perfect demonstrative pronoun alone is used, which is therefore erroneously called the article. In Hebrew, and its related dialects, there is an article; but even for it demonstrative were a more correct designation. In Commerce, a single transaction, thing, or parcel, in an account. Articles of the Established Church, are 39 propositions, which all clergymen and graduates at the universities of Oxford and Cambridge are required to subscribe.

To ARTICLE, v. n. to make conditions or terms; to stipulate; to bind or oblige a person to serve another under certain conditions.

ARTICULAR, a. [articularis, Lat.] in Physic, relating to a disease which affects the joints.

ARTICULATE, a. [articulus, Lat.] in its primary sense, applied to bodies which are joined together, and may be bent without being pulled asunder. Applied to the voice, it implies, that its sounds are distinct and varied, but connected together so as to form words.

To ARTICULATE, v. a. [articuler, Fr.] to pronounce syllables or words in a distinct manner.

ARTICULATELY, ad. in such a manner as to pronounce the syllables or words distinctly.

ARTICULATION, s. in Anatomy, the juncture of two bones in such a manner, that they may be bent without being pulled asunder. Applied to the voice, the modulations and variations of the voice, which are so connected as to form syllables or words.

ARTIFICE, s. [artifice, Fr.] an indirect method of attaining one's end; a pretence, stratagem, or fraud. SYNON. Cunning is employed in using means; finesse insinuates insensibly, and must be accompanied by penetration; device surprises, and gives satisfaction; artifice generally makes use of studied dissimulation; a trick is commonly looked on as a fraud; and a stratagem is often illicit than otherwise.

ARTIFICER, s. a person employed in works of art, or to manufacture any commodity.

ARTIFICIAL, a. [artificial, Fr.] applied to something made by art, in opposition to the productions of nature; counterfeit. Artificial lines, are those which are drawn upon a sector, or scale, to represent sines and tangents. Artificial numbers, are the same with logarithms.

ARTIFICIALLY, ad. in an artful, cunning, crafty, or skillful manner.

ARTILLERY, s. (a plural noun.) [artillerie, Fr.] the heavy engines of war, such as cannons, bombs, &c.

ARTISAN, (artizan) s. [Fr.] properly applied to those professors of trades which require the least exercise of the understanding; a low mechanic, manufacturer, or tradesman.

ARTIST, s. [artiste, Fr.] one who excels in those arts which require good natural parts; or one who understands both the theory and the practice of the art which he professes.

ARTLESS, a. without art, design, craft, or cunning.

ARTLESSLY, ad. in a simple, innocent, and undesigning manner.

ARTS, DEGREES IN, the position and title assigned by universities to their scholars after due examination, &c., in general knowledge. In Great Britain they are two:—Bachelor of Arts, baccalarius artium, signified by A. B. or B. A. placed after the name; and Master of Arts, magister artium, signified by A. M. or M. A. The regulations of all the universities differ, respecting the amount of scholarship required, and the kind of examination, for these degrees.

ARTS, FINE, the general designation of those works which are the offspring of imagination, and realizations of the idea of the beautiful. In its correct use it includes poetry, music, painting, sculpture, architecture, and the arts akin to these; but popularly it is more restricted in its meaning.

ART-UNIONS, societies formed for the purchase of works of art, and the distribution of them amongst the shareholders by lot.

ARUNDEL, SUSSEX. It is seated on the side of a hill on the river Arun, (over which there is a bridge,) where small ships may ride. The ancient castle is seated on the summit of the hill. It is a corporate town; and gives the name of an ancient earldom. 57 miles from London. Markets, Wednesday and Saturday. Pop. 2624.

ARUNDEL MARBLES, a collection of ancient sculptures, &c., given to the university of Oxford, in 1667, which had been made by one of the Earls of Arundel. Of these the most remarkable and valuable is an inscription called the Parian Chronicle.

ARUSPICES, s. an order of priesthood among the old Romans; soothsayers, who pretended to foretell things to come, by inspecting the entrails of beasts.

AS, conjunct. [als, Teut.] referring to an action or time past, in the same manner; when it answers so or such, it is used for that. "So uncertain, as they require a great deal of examination," Bac. In a particular respect; as far as a particular relation extends; like, or of the same kind. By an ellipsis, for as if. Referring to the present time, it implies something done during that particular action, at the same time. "Whistled as he went," Dryd. According to, or in what manner. "As they please," Boyle. Answering to like, or same, it is used as a relative, and implies which. "The same crime as he committed." When at the beginning of two sentences immediately following each other, it denotes a likeness or comparison between them. Answering so, it implies condition, or in the same manner. "Some peculiarity as well as his face," Locke.

ASAPH, ST. Flintshire, North Wales, seated on the river Elwy, where it unites with the river Clwyd, and over both there is a bridge. It is of note only for its cathedral. Market, Saturday. 217 miles from London. Pop. 3338.

ASBESTINE, a. [asbestinum, Lat.] that cannot be destroyed by fire.

ASBESTOS, s. [Gr.] a name given to a form in which several minerals are occasionally found, viz., in long fibres, which, though fusible, have the property of resisting the heat of ordinary flame; and so are used as wicks for lamps, &c. It was made by the ancients into a cloth, in which they wrapped the bodies of their dead, who were to be burned, that they might the better collect the ashes. It is found in Corsica, and the United States, in Cornwall, and Scotland.

ASCARIDES, s. [Gr.] a genus of intestinal worms.

To ASCEND, v. n. [ascendo, Lat.] to rise upwards from the earth. Figuratively, to advance from any degree of knowledge to another. In Genealogy, to trace a pedigree backwards towards its first founders.

ASCENDABLE, a. that may be ascended.

ASCENDANT, s. [ascendant, Fr.] in Morality, superiority or influence, whereby one man or thing unreasonably biases or tyrannizes over another. Figuratively, the greatest height or perfection. In Genealogy, ancestors, or those nearest the root of a pedigree. In an astrological sense, that part of the ecliptic at any particular time above the horizon.

ASCENDING, s. a bias; an undue influence or superiority. ASCENDING, part. [ascendens, Lat.] going upwards from the earth. In Astronomy, an epithet given to those degrees or stars which are above the horizon. The ascending node of a planet is a point of its orbit intersecting the ecliptic; so called, because the planet ascends above it in its motion towards the north.

ASCENSION, s. [ascensio, Lat.] a motion upwards. Ascension, in Astronomy, is either right or oblique. Right ascension, of the sun, moon, or star, is that point of the equinoctial, counted from the beginning of Aries, which rises with it in a right sphere. Oblique ascension, is an arch of the equator, intercepted between the first point of Aries and that point of the equator which rises together with the celestial body in an oblique sphere. The difference between right and oblique ascension, is what the astronomers mean by ascensional difference. Ascension-day, the day on which the ascension of our Saviour is commemorated, commonly called Holy Thursday, the Thursday but one before Whitsuntide.

ASCENSION, the name of a small island in the Atlantic, 7 miles long, and 6 wide, in Lat. 7. 56. N. Long. 14. 24. W. It is hilly, and evidently of volcanic origin: but in some parts there is a soil in which various fruits and vegetables are grown with complete success. There is good anchorage near it. The British have an establishment on it.

ASCENT, s. [ascensus, Lat.] motion upwards; the place by which an eminence may be climbed. Figuratively, a high place or eminence. In Physics, the ascent of fluids is their rising above the level of their own surfaces, &c. In Logic, a kind of argument, wherein we rise from particulars to universals.

TO ASCERTAIN, v. a. [ascertener, Fr.] to determine the signification of any word; to take away all doubt.

ASCERTAINER, s. one who limits or determines the signification of a doubtful expression.

ASCERTAINMENT, s. the determining the signification of a doubtful expression; a settled rule or standard.

ASCETIC, a. [askos, Gr.] employed only in exercises of devotion and mortification.

ASCETIC, s. one who practises a greater degree of austerity and mortification than others.

ASCETICS, s. a name given to all who by self-denial and abstinence, seek to fit themselves for laborious undertakings. It was applied to the Athletes of ancient Greece, and to those philosophers who resembled the Stoics in their principles. In later times it has been used to designate some of the monastic order. It is also the name of a branch of ethical science.

ASCHAM, ROGER, the well-known tutor to Edward VI., Queen Elizabeth, and other distinguished persons of that age. He held several important posts at court, and the university of Cambridge. As the writer of "The Schoolmaster," and as the author of the proverb that "There is no royal road to learning," he is best known now. He died in 1568, aged 53 years.

ASCI, s. [ascia, Gr.] in Geography, those inhabitants of the torrid zone who have no shadow once or twice a year, because the sun is then vertical, or shines perpendicularly on their heads.

ASCITES, s. [askos, Gr.] in Medicine, a kind of dropsy, which principally affects the abdomen, or lower belly, and is remedied by tapping.

ASCITIC, a. caused by an ascites; dropsical, or resembling an ascites.

ASCITIOUS, (ascititious) a. [ascitius, Lat.] that is counterfeit or spurious.

ASCLEPIADES, an ancient physician, a native of Bithynia, who practised with great notoriety at Rome, immediately before the Christian era. Some of his methods of cure display great insight into the causes of disease.

TO ASCRIBE, v. a. [ascribo, Lat.] to deduce from as a cause; to attribute; to impute.

ASCRPTION, s. [ascription, Lat.] the act of ascribing.

ASH, s. [asec, Sax.] in Botany, fraxinus. It has pinnated leaves ending in a lobe. Its male flowers have no petals; and the seed has a wing attached to it.

ASHAMED, a. conscious of having done something which a person may find fault with.

ASHANTEES, a warlike nation of W. Africa, inhabiting the tract lying next to the state of Dahomey, inland from the Gold Coast. It is made up of several different tribes, under a government partly despotic and partly oligarchical. The capital is Coomassie. In their manufactures, buildings, &c., they evince a marked superiority to most of the other negro nations. There are some Mohammedans amongst them, who appear to have migrated from the Mediterranean coast. Their religious rites are horribly cruel.

ASHBOURNE, Derbyshire. Market, Saturday. 140 miles from London. Pop. 4936.

ASHBURTON, Devonshire, one of the four Stannary towns, seated among the hills, where the mines of tin and copper are. It carries on a considerable trade in wool, yarn, and serges, and stands near the river Dart. 192 miles from London. Market, Tuesday and Saturday, the former for wool, &c., the latter for provision. Pop. 3014.

ASHBY-DE-LA-ZOUCH, Leicestershire. It has considerable manufactures of stockings and hats. In the vicinity are coal and iron mines. 115 miles from London. Market, Saturday. Pop. 5652.

ASHEN, a. made of ash, or ash-wood.

ASHES, s. (has no singular,) [asca, Sax.] that substance which bodies are reduced to by burning.

ASHFORD, Kent. Market, Saturday. 57 miles from London. Pop. 3082.

ASHLAR, s. in Masonry, free-stones as they come out of the quarry, of different lengths, breadths, and thickness.

ASHLEERING, s. in Building, quartering in garrets, about two feet and a half or three feet high from the floor, and reaching to the under side of the rafters.

ASHMOLE, ELIAS, the collector of the museum of curiosities, &c., still called by his name, at Oxford, which he gave to the university in 1682. He was a barrister by profession, and by taste, a most zealous antiquary. He held for some time the post of Windsor herald. He was the author of many curious works on Antiquities, &c., and died in 1692, aged 75 years.

ASHORE, ad. to the shore, on land, or to the land.

ASHTON-UNDER-LINE, Lancashire, a considerable manufacturing town, for cotton goods. It has some fine public buildings, and a prison of great antiquity. Market, Wednesday. 186 miles from London. Pop. 46,304.

ASH-WEDNESDAY, s. the first day of Lent, when, in the primitive church, notorious sinners were put to open penance, clothed in sackcloth, and having ashes on their heads; the memory of which custom is preserved in the Communion service, which is read on this day in the English church.

ASHY, a. resembling the ash in colour; of a whitish grey.

ASIA, one of the four great divisions of the world, and the largest of the three which form the E. hemisphere. It extends from the Frozen Ocean in the N. to the Indian Ocean in the Tropics; and has Europe and Africa to the W., from which it is parted by the Ural Mountains, and the Black, Mediterranean, and Red Seas; while on the E. it is divided from America by the great Pacific Ocean. Its physical geography may be best exhibited by following the three great divisions into which it is naturally separated. The N. division includes the vast plains of Siberia, broken by occasional mountain ranges, and watered by many great rivers. This region is noted for the rigour and length of its winters. The middle division includes the Caspian and Aral Seas, with their surrounding sandy country, and the deserts north of Hindustan, Tibet, and China, comprising the great country of the Tartars. The S. or tropical division, contains Asiatic Turkey, Arabia, Persia, Hindustan, India beyond the Ganges, and China. There lie between these divisions the great Altaic chain of mountains which divide N. Asia from the deserts of Tatar; and the Himalaya Mountains, which are nearly the highest in the world, dividing Hindustan, &c., from Tatar. Besides these, the Caucasian range and Mount Taurus, lying W. of the Caspian and Asia Minor, must be mentioned. The rivers Obi, Lena, and Enisei are the greatest in the N. division. The Amur is the greatest in Tatar. In the S. division are the Tigris and Euphrates, the Indus, the Ganges, the Brahmapootra, the Irawadi, and the Yangtse Kiang and Hoang Ho. There is one considerable lake, named Baikal, in Siberia. A few smaller ones occur in the region round the Caspian and the Aral Seas; and a few in Chinese Tatar. The islands of Nova Zembla and New Siberia the peninsula of Kantschatka, the Sea of Obi, Behring's Straits, which divide the old world from the new, and the Sea of Okhotsk, complete our survey of N. Asia. Saghalien and the Kurile Isles lie off the coast of Tatar. The Japanese Islands, the Loochoo Islands, Formosa, Hainan, the numerous groups of large islands usually classed together as the Indian Archipelago, and Australasia; the island of Ceylon, and the few smaller groups round Hindustan; the peninsulas of the Corea, Cochín China, and Malacca, and the vast promontory of Hindustan; the Yellow Sea, the Gulfs of Tonquin and Siam, the Bay of Bengal, and the Persian Gulf, with the Red Sea, complete our survey of the S. division. The Zoology and Botany of the N. and middle divisions exhibit the usual characteristics of the arctic and temperate climates; the yak, a species of ruminant, and the mammoth, whose remains were discovered in an immense mass of frozen snow at the mouth of the Lena, are the most remarkable. Both of plants and animals the S. division presents us with the greatest abundance and variety. The palms and the banian tree in India, and the gigantic ferns and allied plants of the jungles, form the great peculiarity of tropical scenery. Various species of sheep, deer, and goats, the tiger, elephant, lion, enormous baboons, and bats, vast serpents and alligators, are the peculiar inhabitants of this region. Asia is the cradle of the human race, and of human civilization. Universal tradition assigns the temperate district of S. W. Asia as the birth-place of man. From the central desert regions, and the less frozen parts of Siberia, have proceeded races which in every quarter of the globe are the acknowledged leaders and kings. The natives of the farthest N. have no history, apart from their masters or conquerors. The inhabitants of the S., in their languages, religions, customs, laws, buildings, show that they had early reached to nearly the highest point of national culture. But living in an enervating climate, it has been their lot to be overrun by a succession of semi-barbarous conquerors from central Asia, who have imparted little of their own hardness to them, and learning their effeminacy, have shared the ruin brought by the next invaders. In China we have a vast nation who, in spite of such invasions, have preserved, with unyielding conservatism, a most peculiar and antique civilization. In Arabia we have a nation who, with equal rigidity, have preserved a most antique barbarism. The later history of all these nations is largely affected by the recoil of the tide which, flowing first from central Asia, produced as its special result the civilization of modern Europe, and returning now, from Russia, France, and, in pre-eminence, from England, seems bound to wash away the barriers of ancient custom, and to nerve the feeble and timid descendants with power and will to surpass their far-distant forefathers, traces of whose mind are stamped on every thing around them.

ASYDE, ad. applied to situation, that which is not straight. Opposed to perpendicular, out of, or deviating from its true direction; not directly towards, or from the company.

ASININE, a. [asinus, Lat.] partaking of the nature of an ass. To ASK, v. a. [ascian, Sax.] to desire a thing; to demand; to put a question; to inquire; to require.

ASKANCE, ASKAUNCE, ASKAUNT, ad. with a look, wherein the pupils of each eye are turned to the corners of the eye-lid; obliquely, or with a leer, and is expressive of slyness or disdain.

ASKER, s. the person who makes a request or inquiry.

ASKEW, ad. aside, wherein the pupils are drawn to one corner of the eye, and generally bespeaks contempt or disdain.

ASKRIGD, Yorkshire, N. R. 192 miles from London. Market, Thursday. Pop. 1698.

ASLAUNT, ad. on one side; obliquely.

ASLEEP, ad. in that state wherein all the senses are in a manner closed, the eyes shut, and a person enjoys that rest from animal labour called sleep.

ASLOPE, ad. declining; obliquely.

ASOV, called also ZABAK, anciently the Palus Mæotis, a sea between Europe and Asia, about 210 miles in length, and from 40 to 60 in breadth. It lies N. of the Black Sea, with which it communicates by the Strait of Caffa, the ancient Cimmerian Bosphorus.

ASP, A'spic, s. [aspis, Gr.] the popular name for any small poisonous serpent.

ASPALATHUS, s. [Lat.] a plant called the Rose of Jerusalem, which yields a fragrant oil.

ASPARAGUS, s. [Lat.] a well-known garden plant, the first shoots of which are used as a vegetable.

ASPA'SIA, a female of Miletus, who took up her abode at Athens, and endeavoured to raise the mental condition of her sex, by setting them an example in study, and by publicly teaching philosophy, &c. She was married to Pericles, but the laws of the city refused her, as an alien, the title of wife. Pericles and Socrates were indebted to her instructions for much of the wisdom that marked their different courses. The comedians of her time, and subsequently, cast many aspersions on her character, which do not appear to have any foundation. She died before 400 B. C.

A'SPECT, s. [aspectus, Lat.] the face; a peculiar cast of the countenance; look or appearance; the front situation of a building, or direction towards any point. In Astrology, the situation of the sun, moon, or planets, with respect to each other.

To A'SPECT, v. a. [aspicio, Lat.] to look upon; to behold.

A'SPEN, Asp. s. [espe, Sax.] in Botany, a kind of poplar, whose leaves are supposed to be always trembling; used adjectively for things made out of its wood, or those which resemble it with respect to the trembling of its leaves.

A'SPER, a. [Lat.] rough or rugged. Spiritus asper, in Grammar, an accent in this form (´), which shows that the letter under it is to be pronounced strong, and the breath to supply the place of an h.

To A'SPERATE, v. a. [aspero, Lat.] to roughen, or make rough.

ASPERIFOLIOUS, a. [asper and folium, Lat.] in Botany, having rough leaves.

ASPERITY, s. [asperitas, Lat.] unevenness, or roughness, applied to the surface of bodies, and pronunciation. Moroseness, or roughness, applied to the behaviour or temper.

To ASPE'RSSE, v. a. [aspergo, Lat.] to say any thing injurious to the character of another; to slander; to calumniate.

ASPER'SION, s. [aspersio, Lat.] the action of casting water about, so as it may fall in small drops, not in full streams. Sprinkling, applied in Divinity to the mode of baptism commonly practised, opposed to immersion. Figuratively, an unmerited calumny or slander.

ASPHALTE, s. a bituminous composition used for foot-pavements, &c., the principal parts of which are a limestone of the Jura Mountains, and asphaltos. It resists damp, and as a roofing material is quite impervious to wet. Heat is injurious to it.

ASPHALTIC, a. [asphaltos, Gr.] bituminous, or pitchy.

ASPHALTOS, s. [Gr.] a solid, brittle, black, bituminous, inflammable substance, resembling pitch, and chiefly found swimming on the surface of the lake Asphaltites, or Dead Sea. It is used for lamps instead of oil, and as an etching ground.

A'SPHODEL, s. [asphodelus, Lat.] in Botany, the day lily. The flowers are very beautiful.

ASPHYXIA, s. [Gr.] in Surgery, suffocation, or failure of respiration, in most cases followed by death, from the non-oxygenation of the blood.

To A'SPIRATE, v. a. [aspiro, Lat.] to lay a great stress of voice upon any syllable or letter.—v. n. to speak with stress and vehemence, or a full breath.

ASPIRATED, a. [aspiratus, Lat.] pronounced with some degree of roughness, stress, or vehemence of voice, or a full breath.

ASPIRATION, s. [aspiratio, Lat.] a sighing for, or longing after; an ardent desire, generally used in a spiritual sense. Among grammarians, it denotes the pronouncing a syllable with some vehemence; as these words beginning with the letter h, hear, heat, if pronounced softly, would be ear, eat.

To A'SPIRE, v. n. [aspiro, Lat.] to endeavour to attain something above our present circumstances, rank, or power. Used with the particles to and after.

ASQUENT, ad. [secundum, Sax.] a position of the eyes, wherein they do not both seem to look the same way; obliquely.

ASS, s. [asinus, Lat.] in Natural History, a domestic animal, remarkable for its sluggishness, hardness, patience in labour, coarseness of diet, and long life. This animal is originally a native of Arabia, and other parts of the East, where it is much valued for its spirit and beauty; its size and spirit decline as it advances into the colder regions. Figuratively, the word implies a person of mean, abject spirit, basely patient under provocations, despicable and dull.

To ASSAIL, v. a. [assailier, Fr.] to attack, or fall upon, in order to subdue, as an enemy. Figuratively, to attack with arguments.

ASSAILABLE, a. that may be attacked.

ASSAILANT, s. [assillant, Fr.] he who makes an attack, opposed to one who defends.

ASSAILANT, a. using acts of violence against another; attacking.

ASSAILER, s. one who attacks another.

ASSAM, a country of Asia on the N. W. of Bengal, lying between the Himalaya mountains, and the mountains S. of Brahmapootra river, which divide it from the Burman empire. The Brahmapootra runs through this valley, which is watered also by some minor rivers which flow into it. It is above 400 miles long, and about 60 miles in width. The climate is tropical, and the soil of the richest fertility. Rice is grown extensively, as are other fruits and vegetables peculiar to tropical climates. Buffaloes, elephants, and other wild animals of those regions, are plentiful; and there are several kinds of silk-worms, which the inhabitants breed for the silk. The tea-plant is also cultivated here. There are mines of gold and iron, and some coal has been found. The commerce of the country consists chiefly in the exchange of these natural and other productions, for the manufactures, &c., of other lands. The people, in language, religion, and political customs, show their connexion with the Hindus. In the mountainous districts, however, races of the Buddhist religion, and a language connected with the Chinese, dwell. The country is under the sway of a native rajah, (except in the mountainous parts, whose inhabitants seem to have adopted the democratic form of government,) and is protected by the East India Company.

ASSAULT, s. in Law, an offence committed in a forest, by pulling or grubbing up by the roots those trees or bushes that form thickets or coverts for beasts.

ASSASSIN, ASSASSINATOR, s. one who murders another, either for hire, or by treachery. The word Hassassin, (from hass, to kill, to assassinate, to listen, to surprise,) in the vulgar Arabic, signifies robbers of the night, persons who lie in ambush to kill. There was an incorporated society of assassins in Syria in the 11th century.

TO ASSASSINATE, v. a. to murder another treacherously, revengefully, or for hire.

ASSASSINATION, s. the act of murdering by treachery, or for hire.

ASSAULT, s. [assault, Fr.] in War, a general and furious attack of a camp, or fortified place, with an intention to carry, or become master of it. This has lately been styled a coup de main, or a strong and vigorous impression. In Law, a violent injury offered to a man's person, which may be committed by offering a blow, or terrifying speech.

TO ASSAULT, v. a. in War, to make a general and furious attack, without any cover, on a camp, or fortified place, in order to carry, or become masters of it; to offer violence to; to attack, or invade.

ASSAULTER, s. one who uses violence against another.

ASSAY, s. [essaye, Fr.] examination, trial, or attempt; attack. In Metallurgy, the proof or trial of the purity of metals or metaline substances. It is of two kinds, one before metals are melted, in order to bring them to their proper fineness, the other after they are struck, to see that the species be the standard. In Law, assay of weights and measures, is the examination of them by the clerks of markets.

TO ASSAY, v. a. [essayer, Fr.] to put to trial; to try.

ASSAYER, s. an officer of the mint, who tries metals, in order to determine their fineness, and how much they are above or below standard.

ASSAYING, s. the art of separating metals, sulphurs, mineral salts, and other bodies, from each other.

ASSECUITION, s. [assuetio, Lat.] in Canon Law, acquirement.

ASSEMBLAGE, s. [assemblee, Fr.] the collecting a number of individuals together, so as to form a whole. SYNON. It differs from assembly, because that is used of persons, and this of things.

TO ASSEMBLE, v. a. [assembler, Fr.] to unite several things together, so as to form a whole; to bring several things together into one place. Used with the preposition together.

ASSEMBLY, s. [assemblee, Fr.] a company met together for any fixed purpose, either of public worship, business, or diversion. In the military art, it is the second beating of the drum before a march, as a signal for the soldiers to strike their tents, roll them up, and stand to arms. Assemblies of the clergy are called convocations, synods, councils; the annual meeting of the church of Scotland is called a General Assembly.

ASSENT, s. [assenus, Lat.] that act of the mind whereby it takes, or acknowledges, any proposition to be true or false. In a more loose sense, agreement, or consent.

TO ASSENT, v. a. [assenio, Lat.] to receive a thing as true. A'SSER, a learned monk, who was much esteemed by Alfred the Great, and invited by him to reside with him, to aid his studies and his efforts for the advancement of the people. He has left us a record of his royal master's life and deeds. He died about 910.

TO ASSERT, v. a. [asserere, Lat.] to affirm a thing as true; to claim a thing as one's due; to defend both by words and actions.

ASSERTION, s. the affirming a thing as true; a proposition conceived or delivered in positive terms.

ASSERTIVE, a. positive; obstinate; dogmatical.

ASSERTOR, s. he who affirms any proposition as true; the author or supporter of any opinion.

TO ASSESS, v. a. [assessare, Ital.] to rate or tax; to fine a person.

ASSESSMENT, s. the sum, fine, or custom, levied upon any person or commodity; the act of levying a fine.

ASSESSOR, s. [assessor, Lat.] in Law, one who sits on the bench with a judge, in order to assist him with advice; one who is next or equal to another in rank or dignity; an officer employed in collecting taxes.

ASSETS, (used only in the plural,) s. [asset, Fr.] the goods of a person deceased, which are appropriated to the payment of his debts.

TO ASSEVER, ASSEVERATE, v. a. [assevero, Lat.] to affirm or deny a thing, not only with an oath, but likewise with imprecations, execrations, or curses.

ASSEVERATION, s. [asseveratio, Lat.] the act of affirming a thing with great solemnity by an oath or imprecation.

ASSIDUITY, s. [assiduité, Fr.] a constant attention or application to business; unwearied diligence.

ASSIDUOUS, a. [assiduus, Lat.] unwearied; incessant; continual and unremitting.

ASSIDUOUSLY, ad. in such a manner as to exercise diligence without weariness, and application without intermission.

ASSIGNTO, s. [Span.] a Spanish word, signifying a contract or bargain, particularly a contract between the king of Spain and other powers, for furnishing the Spanish dominions in America with negro slaves.

TO ASSIGN, (assin, the i is pronounced long,) v. a. [assigno, Lat.] to distribute; to allot; to appoint. In Law, to transfer property to another.

ASSIGNABLE, (assignable) a. that may be determined, settled, fixed, or marked out.

ASSIGNATION, s. [assignation, Fr.] the act of transferring property to another.

ASSIGNEE, (assigné) s. [assigné, Fr.] one appointed by another to do an act, or perform any business in his stead. Commonly applied to those persons who are intrusted with the estate of a bankrupt, and are by law empowered to collect his debts, and make a disposition of his effects to his several creditors.

ASSIGNER, (assigner) s. he who sets out, determines, or appoints.

ASSIGNMENT, (assignment) s. the transferring by deed the interest one has in a lease, or other thing, to another person. Assignments may be made of lands in fee for life or years, of an annuity, rent-charge, judgment, statute, &c.

ASSIMILABLE, a. [assimilo, Lat.] that may be converted into the same nature, or be made like another.

TO ASSIMILATE, v. a. to convert to the same nature; to bring to a resemblance.

ASSIMILATION, s. in Physics, that process by which bodies convert other bodies related to them, or at least such as are prepared to be converted, into their own substance and nature. Applied particularly to the change effected by the vital powers of plants and animals on their food, &c., by which it is fitted to be applied to their maintenance and growth, through the circulating system of blood or sap vessels.

TO ASSIMULATE, v. a. [assimulo, Lat.] to put on a counterfeit appearance; to feign.

ASSIMULATION, s. [assimulatio, Lat.] a counterfeit or specious resemblance.

To ASSI/ST, v. a. [assister, Fr.] to relieve; to help.
 ASSI/STANCE, s. [assistance, Fr.] the act of helping; help.
 ASSI/STANT, a. that supplies the defect of another; that helps.

ASSI/STANT, s. one who helps another.
 ASSI/STANT, s. [assise, Fr.] is used for the court, place, or time, when and where the writs and processes, whether civil or criminal, are decided by judges and jury. Assise is either general, when judges take their respective circuits, with commission to take all assize; or special, where a commission is granted to particular persons for taking an assize for one or two causes only. All the counties of the kingdom, except Middlesex and Cheshire, are divided into six circuits, and the judges are assigned by the king's commission for every circuit, who now hold the assizes twice a year in every county, except the four northern ones, where the assizes are held only once a year. The term is likewise applied to signify the whole process of a writ; a jury; a statute for regulating the weight of bread; and the bread itself, as prescribed in the statute.

To ASSI/ZE, v. a. to fix the price, weight, or assize of a commodity.

ASSI/ZER, Assi/SER, s. an officer who has the inspection into the weights and measures of commodities.

ASSO/CIALE, a. [associabilis, Lat.] that may be joined or united to something else.

To ASSO/CIATE, v. a. [associar, Fr.] to join as a companion; to make one of a company; to join inseparably, applied to ideas.—v. n. to unite or join himself.

ASSO/CIATED, a. [associatus, Lat.] confederated; joined as accomplices; making part of a society, or company.

ASSO/CIATE, s. one who is joined to another as assistant, companion, partner, confederate, or accomplice.

ASSO/CIATE, a. confederate; joined in interest or purpose.

ASSOCIATION, s. the act of uniting; union; society; a contract or treaty, by which two or more are united together for their mutual assistance, for the better carrying on any design. In Metaphysics, the connexion of thoughts and images in the mind, through which they are spontaneously suggested by each other.

To ASSOIL/V, v. n. [assoudre, Fr.] in Law, to deliver or discharge a person from excommunication.

ASSONANCE, s. [assonnance, Fr.] in reference of one sound to another resembling it. In Rhetoric or Poetry, it is where the words of a phrase or verse have nearly the same sound or termination, but make no proper rhyme; these are accounted vicious in English, though an elegance among the Romans.

ASSONANT, part. [assonnant, Fr.] ranging things in classes, according to their resemblance with each other.

To ASSO/RT, v. a. [assorter, Fr.] to range in classes, as one thing suits with another.

ASSORTMENT, s. [assortement, Fr.] in trade, a stock of goods, consisting of various pieces of different sorts. In Painting, the proportion and harmony between the several parts.

To ASSU/AGE, (assuage) v. a. to cool, or lessen, applied to heat; to calm, applied to the wind; to pacify or appease, applied to passion or rage; to ease, applied to pain. In its general sense, it implies the lessening the violence of something furious.—v. n. to abate, or grow less.

ASSU/AGEMENT, (assuagement) s. that which lessens the violence of any thing.

ASSU/AGER, (assuager) s. one who pacifies rage, appeases anger, or lessens pain.

ASSU/ATIVE, (assuative) a. [assuadeo, Lat.] that has a great influence; that assuages, mitigates, or pacifies.

ASSU/ETUDE, s. [assuetudo, Lat.] being the accustomed to any thing; custom.

To ASSU/ME, v. a. [assumo, Lat.] to take; to represent a character; to take to oneself; to arrogate, or claim what is not one's due.

ASSUMER, s. one who claims or arrogates more than his due; an arrogant person.

ASSUMPSIT, (pron. without the p) s. [Lat.] a voluntary or verbal promise, whereby a man takes upon him to perform or pay any thing to another.

ASSUMPTION, (pron. without the p) s. [assumptio, Lat.] the act of appropriating any thing to oneself; the supposing a thing true without any formal proof. The assumption of the Virgin Mary is celebrated on the 15th of August. In Logic, the minor, or second proposition in a categorical syllogism; sometimes the consequence drawn from the major and minor.

ASSUMPTION, a populous city, the capital of Paraguay, in S. America, situated in a fertile country, on the river Paraguay. The climate is wholesome and temperate, and the city has a good export trade of the productions of the country. Lat. 24. 47. S. Long. 50. 35. W.

ASSUMPTIVE, (pron. without the p) a. [assumptivus, Lat.] applied to that which a person may take or appropriate to himself. In Heraldry, assumptive arms are those which a person may use as his own.

ASSURANCE, (the syllables assu, at the beginning of this and the four following words, are by some pronounced like ashu) s. [assurance, Fr.] a certain expectation of something future; confidence; trust; conviction. In Commerce, a contract by which a person subjects himself to make good the damages to be sustained by another in a voyage, or by fire. See INSURANCE.

To ASSURE, v. a. [assurer, Fr.] to persuade a person of the certainty of a thing; to make a person confident, by removing the causes of doubt or fear.

ASSUREDLY, ad. in such a manner as betrays no doubt; certainly; undoubtedly.

ASSUREDNESS, s. the state of a person who is certain, or entirely free from doubt.

ASSURER, s. one who removes the doubts of another. In Commerce, one who indemnifies another against hazards at sea.

ASSYRIA, a country in Asia, celebrated in ancient history. It was one of the earliest empires, and contained the provinces now called Diarbeck, Kurdistan, and Irak; and involved, under its dominion, when at its greatest extent, many other provinces and kingdoms. Ninus, Babylon, and Nineveh were its chief cities.

ASTERISK, s. [asteriskos, Gr.] a character used to render any particular passage in the author conspicuous, or to refer to some note in the margin, or at the bottom of the page, marked thus (*); when two or three are placed together in a line, thus (***) they denote that some word is to be supplied, or is wanting.

ASTERISM, s. [asterismus, Lat.] the same with Constellation; which see.

ASTERN, ad. a sea-term, in the hinder part of a ship; or any thing situated behind the ship.

ASTHMA, (asthma) s. [Gr.] in Medicine, a difficulty of breathing, arising from a disorder in the lungs, attended with a great uneasiness in the diaphragm, or precordia.

ASTHMATIC, ASTHMATICAL, a. affected or troubled with an asthma.

ASTI, a city of Monterrat in Italy, 24 miles E. of Turin. It has a college, and a cathedral; but there is very little trade. Lat. 44. 57. N. Long. 8. 12. E.

ASTONIED, part. a. used in the Bible for astounded.

To ASTONISH, v. a. [etonnar, Fr.] to occasion surprise by the immensity and novelty of an object; to amaze.

ASTONISHMENT, s. a surprise occasioned by an immense and new object; distinguished from admiration, both by the degree and the nature of the object.

ASTORGA, a small city of Leon, pleasantly situated in a plain on the little river Tuera, 25 miles from Leon. It is a bishop's see, and a cathedral with a noble altar. Lat. 42. 27. N. Long. 6. 10. W.

To ASTOUND, v. a. [astonner, Fr.] to astonish; to confound with wonder.

ASTRACHAN, a large and populous city, seated on an island formed by the river Volga, 50 miles from the Caspian Sea. It is surrounded by strong walls, and has an excellent harbour. It is the capital of a government of the Russian empire, of the same name. Its fisheries are very considerable, and with its manufactures of silk, &c., and its orchards, make the commerce of the city very extensive. Its population is above 40,000. It is 800 miles from Moscow. Lat. 46. 21. N. Long. 47. 44. E.

ASTRADDDLE, ad. so to sit on a thing, as that one of our legs should be on each side of it. See ASTRAIDE.

ASTRAGAL, s. [astragalos, Gr.] in Anatomy, a bone of the tarsus, articulated with the tibia, the semicircular head of which forms a curious and perfect pulley. In Architecture, a little round member, in the form of a ring or bracelet, serving as an ornament to the tops and bottoms of columns. In Gunnery, the little moulding on a piece of ordnance, of which there are generally three on each piece.

ASTRAL, a. [astrum, Lat.] that belongs to, or depends on, the stars. Astral year, is the time which the earth takes to make its revolution round the sun.

ASTRAY, ad. out of the right or direct path. Figuratively, wrong, or in an error.

ASTREA, in heathen Mythology, the daughter of Jupiter and Themis, and goddess of Justice; in the golden age she dwelt on earth; but the wickedness of the iron age was such, that she fled to heaven again, and was placed in the zodiac, as the constellation Virgo.

To ASTRICT, v. a. [astringo, Lat.] to lessen the distance between two objects; to make the parts of a thing come nearer to each other; opposed to relax. Constringe is most commonly used.

ASTRICTION, s. [astriccio, Lat.] the act or power of making the parts of a body approach to each other.

ASTRICTIVE, ASTRICTORY, a. [astrictorius, Lat.] that has a stypic or binding quality.

ASTRIDE, ad. with the legs placed at a distance from each other.

To ASTRINGE, v. a. [astringo, Lat.] to press or close together; to force the parts closer to each other.

ASTRINGENT, part. [astringens, Lat.] in Medicine, that contracts the dimensions of the vessels, and so lessens the flow of the fluids; when used internally, opposed to laxative; when externally, opposed to stypic.

ASTROLABE, s. [astron and lambano, Gr.] in Astronomy, a system or assemblage of the different circles of the sphere, resembling an armillary sphere, invented by Hipparchus; but being afterwards altered by Ptolemy to a plane surface, called a planisphere, the word is at present applied to a planisphere or stereographic projection of the sphere upon the plane of one of the great circles.

ASTROLOGER, s. [astrologus, Lat.] one who pretends to predict future events by the supposed influence of the stars.

ASTROLOGIC, ASTROLOGICAL, a. relating or agreeable to the principles of astrology.

ASTROLOGICALLY, ad. according to the principles of astrology, or after the manner of an astrologer.

ASTROLOGY, s. [astrologia, Lat.] the art of foretelling future events from the aspects, positions, and influences of the stars.

ASTRONOMER, s. [astron and nomos, Gr.] one who studies astronomy.

ASTRONOMIC, ASTRONOMICAL, a. that is founded upon the principles of astronomy.

ASTRONOMY, s. the science which treats of the magnitudes, distances, arrangement, and motions of the great bodies which make up the visible universe, their constitution and physical condition so far as they can be known to us, with their mutual influences and actions on each other, so far as they can be traced by the effects produced, and established by legitimate reasoning. As a science of observation, it made considerable progress amongst the ancients; but it was not until the improved instruments for observation invented by Galileo, and the untiring and penetrating mind of Kepler, were brought to bear upon it, that it was worthy of the name. Sir Isaac Newton's invention of the calculus enabled him to raise it at once to the highest rank of sciences, which subsequent investigators have fully established its claim to.

ASTROTHEOLOGY, s. [astrum and theologia, Lat.] the proofs of a Deity drawn from astronomy.

ASTURIAS, a province in the N. W. of Spain, which produces excellent horses, fruits, and wines, and has mines of gold, lapis-lazuli, and vermillion. The mountains yield metals, marble, coal, &c., and are well covered with wood. The rest of the soil is fertile. Very little manufacturing skill is employed here. The eldest son of the king of Spain takes the title of Prince of Asturias.

ASUNDER, ad. [assunderan, Sax.] at a distance from each other; apart, or separate; an adverbial term, importing the dissolution of the union of two or more bodies.

ASYLUM, s. [lat.] a sanctuary, a place of refuge, which sheltered a criminal, and secured him from falling into the hands of any officer of justice. In the times of Popery, this privilege belonged not only to churches and church-yards, but to the houses of bishops.

ASYMMETRY, s. [a and symmetria, Gr.] a defect of proportion, harmony, or correspondence between the parts of a thing. In Mathematics, the incommensurability of two quantities when they have no common measure.

ASYMPTOTES, s. [a, syn, and pipto, Gr.] right lines which approach nearer and nearer to some curve, but which would never meet.

ASYNDETON, s. [Gr.] a figure in Grammar, when a conjunction copulative is omitted.

AT, prep. [æt, Sax.] before a place it signifies sometimes close to; and at other times, in it. Before a word implying time, it denotes the very instant in which a thing was, or will be done; and sometimes is put without the word time in the same sense. Used instead of with, it implies cause, or on account of. "At this news he dies," Shak. Before an adjective of the superlative degree, it implies manner, or perfection. Before a substantive, it sometimes denotes a particular circumstance, and gives it an adverbial meaning; as, at ease, i. e. easy. After be, it implies design, intention, or employment. "She knew what he would be at," Hud. Used with command, it implies subject. "Thou art least at my command," Dryd. Sometimes at signifies from: as, "Endeavour to deserve something at our hands," Pope. At, joined with all, implies in any respect, degree, or manner. "Most women have no characters at all," Pope.

ATABAT, s. a kind of labor used by the Moors.

ATCHEVEMENT, s. See ACHIEVEMENT.

ATE, the preter. of EAT.

ATHALIAH, the daughter of Ahab, king of Israel, and Jezebel, who, having married Jehoram king of Judah, after his death, and the early death of his son Ahaziah, who succeeded him, slew all the remaining male branches of the family, (except Joash, who escaped), and seized the throne. After ruling for 6 years, she was dethroned by Jehoiada, the high priest, and slain, and Joash was proclaimed king. This happened in 880 B. C.

ATHANASIAN CREED, a confession of faith ascribed to Athanasius, but not written by him. It is appointed to be read in the English church on Christmas day, &c.

ATHANASIUS, ST., the patriarch of Alexandria, in the fourth century, who is so celebrated for the part which he took in the Arian controversies. He adhered steadfastly to the orthodox faith, and was persecuted in consequence, on the rise of the Arian power, on one occasion hardly escaping with his life. He died, however, in peace, in 372, about 80 years of age. Many of his works, mostly polemical, remain.

ATHANOR, s. [athanatos, Gr. or athanor, Arab.] in Chemistry, a digesting furnace to keep heat for some time; so that it may be augmented or diminished at pleasure by opening or shutting some apertures made on purpose with sliders over them, called registers.

ATHAPES/SCOW LAKE, in N. America, 170 miles S. W. of the Great Slave Lake. It is about 200 miles long, and there are on it two establishments of the companies which trade with these parts. The river of the same name springs from the Rocky Mountains, and receives many tributary streams before entering the lake.

ATHEISM, s. [athéisme, Fr.] the opinion of those who deny the existence and being of a God, the Creator and Preserver of the world.

ATHEIST, s. [a and theos, Gr.] one who denies the existence of a God, the Creator and Preserver of all things.

ATHEISTICAL, a. impious, or agreeable to the principles of an atheist.

ATHEISTICALLY, ad. after the manner of an atheist.

ATHELING, [adel and ling, Anglo-Sax.] a title of honour given to the sons of the Anglo-Saxon kings.

ATHELNEY, an isle of Somersetshire, formed at the junction of the Parret with the Thone, remarkable as the hiding-place of Alfred the Great, with a few of his nobles, when the Danes had overrun the country.

ATHELSTAN, one of the Saxon kings of England, the grandson of Alfred the Great, and successor to his father Edward, surnamed the Elder. He put to death his brother Edwin, to make his succession surer. He was the first monarch who was actual king of all England. He sought the advancement of learning, and promoted whatever he deemed good for his people; and so gained great fame. He died in 940, aged 47 years.

ATHENÆUS, the writer of a book called the Deipnosophists, which contains, under the disguise of a dialogue, various anecdotes relating to Grecian history, manners, customs, &c. He was a native of Egypt, but lived for a time at Rome, and died about 230.

ATHE/NE, the Grecian goddess of wisdom, &c., daughter of Zeus, according to an early fable, having sprung fully armed (as she was always represented) out of his brain. The regis, or goat-skin shield, in which was the head of Medusa the Gorgon, was one of her distinguishing signs. Homer calls her "grey-eyed," which seems to hint a connexion with the northern nations of Europe.

ATHENS, (anciently Athenæ), the capital of the country of Attica, and the most famous city of ancient Greece. It was fortified, and had a citadel on a rock, called the Acropolis, within it. It was connected also by lines of wall with the Piræus, its port, in the Gulf of Salamis. The city was richly adorned with temples and theatres, porticoes, public buildings, &c., on which were lavished all the ornaments that the most accomplished painters and sculptors could devise. It was the chosen spot for philosophy, and continued to be a school for science, &c., long after it was taken by the Romans. It stands first amongst all cities in respect of the part which it singly has played in the history of man. It is now the capital of the new kingdom of Greece, possessing nothing but the wreck of its former beauty. The greater part of the sculptures that had escaped the destructive ravages of its various sieges and captures, adorn the museums of other countries. Lat. 38. S. N. Long. 23. 57. E.

ATH/EOUS, a. [a and theo, Gr.] opposite or contrary to the belief of a Deity; atheistical.

ATHERO/MA, s. [Gr.] a tumour, a wen, which neither yields to the touch, discolours the skin, nor causes pain.

ATHERO/MATOUS, a. having the qualities of an atheroma, or curdy wen.

ATHERSTONE, Warwickshire. It has manufactures of hats, ribands, shalloons, &c., and is situated near the river Anker, 103 miles from London. Market, Tuesday. Pop. 3743.

ATH/AS, RABBI JOSEPH, a celebrated printer at Amsterdam, during the latter half of the 17th century. His editions of the Bible in Hebrew and other languages are highly valued. He died in 1700.

ATH/RST, ad. wanting drink, or adry.

ATHLET/Æ, s. [Lat.] persons of strength and activity, exercised for the public games of Greece and Rome, and who exhibited their skill in such exploits as required bodily strength.

ATHLETIC, a. [athleta, Lat.] strong, vigorous, and active of body, robust.

ATH/LONE, in the counties of Roscommon and Westmeath, Ireland, situated on the Shannon, over which is a long bridge of many arches, which is a grand pass between the two provinces. On the bridge are some badly executed figures, with inscriptions celebrating the success of Queen Elizabeth over the rebels in her reign. It is a poor town, with no manufactures of any consequence. It is 59 miles from Dublin. Pop. 6393.

ATH/OL, a name given to a district in the N. of Perthshire, through which the Grampians run, and which contains the Pass of Killcrankie; Cairn Gorm, which is 3600 feet high; Glen Tilt; Lochs Rannoch and Erich; and the river Tummel, a tributary of the Tay.

ATH/OS, a mountain in the N. of Greece, at the extremity of the E. promontory of the three projecting from the ancient Chalcidice. It is 6349 feet high. It is famous in history, having been separated from the mainland by a canal, by Xerxes, on his ill-omened expedition against Greece; and since the monastic corruptions of Christianity, inhabited by devotees. About 8000 regular monks inhabit its convents, &c.

ATHWART, prep. transverse; across; through. Used adverbially, it implies, in a manner vexatious and perplexing; wrong.

ATI/LT, ad. like one making a thrust.

ATLAN/TIC, the name of the great ocean which runs between Europe and Africa and the two Americas. Apart from the West Indian Islands and the British Isles, which are connected with the continents they lie near, this ocean exhibits only here and there a few groups of small islands, as the Azores, the Bermudas, &c., or solitary ones, as St. Helena, and Iceland which lies on the borders of it and the N. Frozen Ocean. The most remarkable feature of this waste of waters is the Gulf Stream, which appears first as a strong current flowing from Africa to S. America, and re-appears as another current setting from the Gulf of Mexico, and reaching to the N. Ocean.

ATLAS, s. [Lat.] a collection of maps, generally folio, in allusion to the fable of Atlas's bearing the world on his shoulders. In Anatomy, the first vertebra of the neck, which lies next to, and supports, the head. In Architecture, those statues, or half-statues of men, used instead of columns or pilasters, to support any member of architecture, such as a balcony, &c. They are likewise named Telamones. Also, a great chain of mountains, which separates Barbary from the Great Desert, in Africa. Many of the summits rise beyond the line of perpetual snow; and two which have been measured are estimated at 11,400 feet and 15,000 feet high.

ATMOSPHERE, s. [atmos and sphaira, Gr.] air. In Physics, that thin elastic fluid which covers the earth, gravitates towards its centre, and on its surface is carried along with it, and partakes of all its motions. At the elevation of a few miles it is too rare to support life; but it is calculated that it may reach to a height of above 100 miles.

ATMOSPHERICAL, a. that belongs to the atmosphere.

ATMOSPHERIC RAILWAY, a railroad on which the locomotive power employed is the pressure of the atmosphere at the back of a piston that moves air-tight in an exhausted tube.

ATOM, s. [atomus, Lat.] such a small particle of matter as cannot be physically divided.

ATOMICAL, a. consisting of, or relating to, atoms.

ATOMIC THEORY, in Chemistry, called also the Theory of Definite Proportions, is the theory that the elementary principles combine with others only in certain proportions, and is well established by experiment.

ATOMIST, s. one who professes the corporeal philosophy.

TO ATONE, v. n. to agree, or accord,—v. a. to make satisfaction for; to compensate; to expiate; to make a recompence.

ATONEMENT, s. reconciliation, agreement, concord; the uniting two persons at variance with each other.

AT/ONY, s. [a and tonos, Gr.] in Medicine, wanting proper tension or tone, in the solids of a human body.

ATOP, ad. on the highest part of a thing.

ATRABILA/RIAN, ATRABILA/RIOUS, a. [atra and bilis, Lat.] that affects with a disorder flowing from a black adust state of the blood, called melancholy.

ATRABILA/RIOUSNESS, s. that quality which causes a person to be deemed melancholic.

ATRAMENTAL, a. [atramentum, Lat.] that blackens, or has the qualities of ink.

ATRAMENTOUS, a. black, or having the qualities of ink.

ATROCIOUS, a. [atrox, Lat.] that argues a great, if not the highest, degree of wickedness in the committer; that is extremely, enormously, and flagrantly wicked.

ATROCIOUSNESS, s. that quality which argues a person to be extremely, obstinately, and enormously criminal.

ATROCIOUSLY, ad. in an atrocious manner.

ATROCITY, s. [atrocia, Lat.] that which heightens the enormity of a crime, and makes it an object of horror.

ATROPHY, s. [a and trophia, Gr.] in Physics, a consumption, proceeding from various causes, but chiefly the failure of those parts of the alimentary system which repair the waste of the body, to perform their functions.

ATROPOS, in heathen Mythology, one of the three Fates, that cut the thread, or put a period to the life of man.

TO ATTACH, v. a. [attachier, Fr.] in Law, to seize either on a person or his goods; to have an affection, desire, or inclination towards a thing.

ATTACHMENT, s. [attachement, Fr.] love, zeal, or affection felt for another. In Law, the taking, securing, or detaining of a person or thing by virtue of a writ or precept. It differs from an arrest in this, that an arrest lies only against the body, whereas an attachment is often against the goods only, and sometimes against both body and goods. An arrest, likewise, issues out of an inferior court by precept only, but an attachment out of a higher court, either by precept or writ. By the custom of London, and several other places, a man can attach money or goods in the hands of a stranger to satisfy himself.

TO ATTACK, v. a. [attaquer, Fr.] in War, to make an effort or attempt upon a person, or a work, in order to conquer or subdue them. Figuratively, to set upon, invade, or treat any one as an enemy, either by actions or words.

ATTA'CK, s. [attaque, Fr.] in War, an attempt to conquer a body of troops, or master a fortified place. A false attack, is that which is made only to divert the attention of the enemy, and to conceal that of the main one. Figuratively, any hostile attempt, whether it consists in actions or words.

ATTACKER, s. the person who makes an attempt on a body of soldiers or a fortified place, in order to subdue or conquer them; any one who uses another with violence.

To ATTAIN, v. a. [atteindre, Fr.] to make one's own by labour or mental application; to procure, or obtain; to reach; to arrive at, or acquire.

ATTAINABLE, a. that may be obtained, acquired, or procured.

ATTAINABLENESS, s. the quality which renders a thing possible to be attained.

ATTAINER, s. [attaindre, Fr.] is when a person has committed felony or treason, and judgment is passed upon him. The children of such a person are thereby rendered incapable of being heirs to him, or to any other ancestor, as, if he was noble before, his posterity are thereby degraded, and made base; nor can his corruption of blood be taken away, but by an act of parliament, or by reversing the judgment by a writ of error.

ATTAINMENT, s. that which a person makes his own by labour or mental application; the act or power of attaining.

To ATTAIN, v. a. [attender, Fr.] to pass sentence against a person either for felony or treason, whereby he forfeits all his lands or hereditaments, his blood is corrupted, and his children rendered base. Figuratively, to debase, corrupt, or make infamous.

ATTAIN, s. in Law, a writ which anciently lay against a jury for giving a false verdict. The punishment on conviction was exceedingly severe. But in a late reign, this has been altered for a fine. Figuratively, a blot or stain, in allusion to the consequences of an attainer.

ATTAINURE, s. See ATTAINER.

ATTALUS, the name of three kings of Pergamus, a country of Asia Minor in former times. The first is the most famous, as the ally of Antiochus the Great in his Syrian wars, and of the Romans in their subjugation of Greece. He was the first king of Pergamus, and died of apoplexy 197 B. C., in his 71st year.

ATTAR, s. [Pers.] commonly called Otto, of Roses, an oil of very rich and exquisite fragrance, extracted from the petals of roses.

To ATTEMPER, v. a. [attempero, Lat.] to soften, applied to rigour; to render supportable, applied to heat; to lessen any quality by the mixture or addition of another. Figuratively, to suit, adapt, or fit, in allusion to the tempering metals.

To ATTEMPERATE, v. a. [attempero, Lat.] to render agreeable to; to make suitable to.

To ATTEMPT, v. a. [attenter, Fr.] to make a trial; to try, or endeavour.

ATTEMPT, s. an undertaking; a trial to do a thing; sometimes applied to the attacks of an enemy.

ATTEMPTER, s. the person who makes an endeavour; one who tries, tempts, or attempts.

To ATTEND, v. a. [attendre, Fr.] to fix the mind to an object, when applied to speculation; to listen; to wait upon; to accompany; to follow; to expect; to stay for; to lay wait for.—v. n. to yield attention; to stay, or delay.

ATTENDANCE, s. [attendance, Fr.] the act of waiting upon as a servant; service; the person in waiting; a servant.

ATTENDANT, a. [attendant, Fr.] waiting on another as an inferior, including the idea of service.

ATTENDANT, s. one who accompanies another; a servant or dependant of a nobleman; one who depends on another as a suitor; that which is inseparably united, as a concomitant or consequent.

ATTENDER, s. See ATTENDANT.

ATTENT, a. [attentus, Lat.] listening to, applying the mind to the consideration of any object; intent.

ATTENTATES, s. [attentata, Lat.] proceedings in a court of judicature, pending suit, and after an inhibition is decreed and gone out; those things which are done after an extra-judicial appeal, may likewise be styled attentates.

ATTENTION, s. [attention, Fr.] in Logic, an operation of the mind which fixes it on any particular object, and engages it to consider it in such a manner, as to acquire a distinct idea thereof, absorbing, as it were, all other ideas which offer themselves to the mind.

ATTENTIVE, a. [attentus, Lat.] applying the mind or ear to one particular object.

ATTENTIVELY, ad. in such a manner as to consider or listen to one particular object.

ATTENTIVENESS, s. that quality of mind wherein a person considers or listens to a particular object, with a total disregard of all others.

ATTENUANT, part. and a. [attenuans, Lat.] that makes thin or dilutes. Used substantively, in Medicine, for those medicines that exercise such influence on the fluids of the body, and so promote their circulation.

To ATTENUATE, v. a. [attenuo, Lat.] to liquefy or make thin. ATTENUATION, s. [attenuation, Fr.] the act of attenuating, or making thin. In Medicine, the action and result of attenuants.

ATTENBURY, FRANCIS, bishop of Rochester at the beginning of the 18th century. He was engaged in continual controversies in behalf of his high-church views. His chief opponents were Archbishop Wake and Bishop Hoadly. In consequence of the part he took during the disturbances in Scotland, in 1715, he was imprisoned and convicted of high treason. He died at Paris, in 1731, aged 69 years. His sermons and letters, rather than his Jacobitism, have made his name known in later days.

To ATTESI, v. a. [attestor, Lat.] to give a proof of the truth of a thing by evidence or writing.

ATTIGATION, s. [attestatio, Lat.] evidence, or proof of the truth of any fact, either by word or writing.

ATTIC, [Atticus, Lat.] in Architecture, applied to a kind of building or shorter story over another, wherein no roof is to be seen. In Literature, it implies wit and elegance of style peculiar to the people of Attica, usually called Attic salt. Attic witness, means one that cannot be corrupted. Attic order, is a small order raised upon a large one, by way of finish to the building. Attic dialect, that modification of the Greek language which was spoken in Attica, and written by Athenian authors. Attic of a roof, is a kind of parapet to a terrace, platform, or the like. Attic base, a peculiar kind of base used by the ancient architects in the Ionic order; and by Palladio and some others in the Doric. This is the most beautiful of all bases: and was used by Sir Christopher Wren in building St. Paul's church, London.

ATTICA, the country of ancient Greece, occupying the promontory south of Euboea, and above the Gulf of Salamis. It was bounded on the landward side by the mountains of Parnes, and the range joining it with Mount Cithæron. In its borders were the famous mountains Pentelicus and Hymettus. On the plain next the Gulf of Salamis stood Athens, its capital. The principal stream, which flowed past Athens, was named Cephissus. The soil was not very productive, but the country was famous for the olive, and for the honey of Hymettus. The marble of Pentelicus, and the silver of Laurium, were also famed.

ATTICUS, TITUS POMPONIUS, a friend of Cicero, and intimate of most of the great men of his times. He was a dilettante in literature, and spent most of his time at Athens, to enjoy his favourite luxury, and avoid the troubles at Rome. He was not above accumulating wealth, however, even by bookselling. He flattered his friend by writing a history of his consulship in Greek. He starved himself to death in 32 B. C., deeming that the only cure for a disease which befell him, in his 77th year.

ATTILA, the celebrated leader of the Huns, who in the 5th century ravaged the empire and sacked Rome. He was so feared that he was named the scourge of God. He died suddenly in 453.

To ATTIRE, v. a. [attirer, Fr.] to adorn with clothes or dress. Figuratively, to embellish or adorn.

ATTIRE, s. clothes or dress to adorn or embellish a person. Among sportsmen, the attire of a stag are his antlers.

ATTIRER, s. one who attires or dresses another.

ATTITUDE, s. [attitude, Fr.] in Painting and Sculpture, the posture of a statue, whereby it expresses some action, or passion of the mind. Applied likewise to the stage, to imply the posture of an actor to express the sentiments of the poet.

ATTLEBURGH, Norfolk, 93 miles from London. Market; Thursday. Pop. 1959.

To ATTOLLENT, a. [attollens, Lat.] that raises or lifts up. In Anatomy, applied to those muscles which raise the parts they belong to.

ATTORNEY, s. [attornatus, law Lat.] a person appointed by another to do something in his stead. Attorney at law, is one retained to prosecute or defend a suit at law. In the Ecclesiastical Courts they are called Proctors. Attorneys are admitted to practice, by taking oath, after service of five years under articles to an attorney, and being enrolled, but must renew their certificates yearly. Attorney-General, is a great officer, created by letters patent, to exhibit informations, prosecute for the crown in criminal causes, and file bills in the Exchequer for any thing concerning the king, in inheritance or profits. To him come warrants for making out all patents, grants, pardons, &c.

To ATTORNEY, v. a. to perform or employ as proxy.

ATTORMENT, s. [attournement, Fr.] in Law, the agreement of a tenant for life to the transferring of property to another.

To ATTRACT, v. a. [attraho, Lat.] to draw forwards itself; to allure or invite.

ATTRACTIVE, s. attraction; the power of drawing. Obsolete.

ATTRACTICAL, a. that has the power of drawing something towards it.

ATTRACTION, s. [Fr.] the power of drawing to oneself. In Natural Philosophy, it signifies that force which every particle of matter exercises on every other particle in the inverse ratio of the square of its distance, and is named in astronomical and mechanical works, gravitation. Capillary attraction, is the force which causes fluids to rise in an open tube of minute diameter above the common level. Attraction of cohesion, is the force by which the particles of a body cohere, or stick together. Electric or chemical attraction, is that force which induces certain elementary substances, in certain proportions, to join in forming new compound substances. Magnetic attraction, is the force exerted by the lodestone, or iron that has been magnetized, in drawing to itself, and keeping by itself, other pieces of iron. The discoveries of late investigators have shown that this is in all probability but a modification of cohesive attraction, or attraction generally. Electrical attraction, is the force which draws together bodies, one of which is negatively and another positively electrified. Figuratively, the power of alluring, enticing, or engaging the affections of a person. SYNON. Attractions may be said to engage us, allurements to entice us, charms to seduce us.

ATTRACTIVE, a. [attractiv, Fr.] that has the power of drawing another to itself; inviting, alluring, engaging.

ATTRACTIVE, s. that which can draw or engage the affections; differing from allurement, as that is used in a bad sense, but attraction generally in a good one.

ATTRACTIVELY, ad. in the manner of a thing or person which draws or allures something.

ATTRACTIVENESS, s. the quality by which a thing attracts, or allures.

ATTRACTOR, s. that which draws toward itself.

ATTRAHENT, part. [attrahens, Lat.] that has the quality of drawing towards itself.

ATTRIBUTABLE, a. [attribuo, Lat.] that may be affirmed as belonging to a thing; that may be ascribed or imputed to a thing or person.

To ATTRIBUTE, v. a. [attribuo, Lat.] to affirm as belonging to a thing; to ascribe as a property; to impute, or charge, applied to a cause.

ATTRIBUTE, s. [attribut, Fr.] a thing attributed to another; quality adherent. In a general sense, it is that which agrees with some person or thing; or a quality determining something to be after a certain manner. Thus understanding is an attribute of mind, and extension an attribute of body. That attribute which the mind conceives as the foundation of all the rest, is called its essential attribute; thus extension is by some, and solidity by others, esteemed the essential attribute of body or matter. Attributes, in Divinity, are the several qualities or perfections of the Divine nature, and such as can be applied to God only. In Painting and Statuary, attribute is some distinguishing addition to the principal figure; as the club to Hercules, the peacock to Juno, the eagle to Jupiter, &c.

ATtribution, s. [attributio, Lat.] something ascribed; character or reputation.

ATTRITE, a. [attritus, Lat.] worn off by rubbing two bodies together.

ATTRITENESS, s. quality produced by the rubbing of two bodies together, so as to wear off some of their surfaces.

ATTRITION, s. [attritio, Lat.] the action of rubbing two bodies together, so as to wear away or rub off some particles on their surfaces.

To ATTUNE, v. a. to put an instrument into tune; to make the voice or any instruments accord together, and sound the same notes or key.

ATTWOOD, THOMAS, an eminent composer, and organist of St. Paul's cathedral, and the chapels-royal. His works are very numerous and much admired. He died in 1838, aged 73 years.

AVA, the present capital of the Burman empire, seated on the river Irawadi. The streets are very straight, and the houses are built with teak planks and bamboos. The town itself is mean, but is adorned with very many temples, which give it, at a distance, a very imposing appearance. It is 520 miles E. of Calcutta, and 276 E. N. E. of Aracan. Lat. 21.51. N. Long. 95. 58. E. Pop. about 25,000.

To AVAIL, v. a. [valoir, Fr.] to turn to one's own use, benefit, profit, or advantage; to promote or procure; to be of use or advantage.

AVAILABLE, a. applied to means, it signifies their suitability or efficacy to obtain the end; powerful, or proper.

AVANCHÉ, s. [Fr.] a mass of snow which, having accumulated near the summit of a mountain, suddenly becomes detached, and falls, through its weight, down the side. They are exceedingly destructive both to life and property in mountainous districts.

AVANTGUARD, s. [avantgarde, Fr.] in War, the first line or division of an army in battle-array; or that part which is seen by the enemy, and marches first against him.

AVARICE, s. [avarice, Fr.] an immoderate love and desire for riches, attended with fear as to future events, and excessive precaution against the instability of fortune, making a person rob himself of the necessary comforts of life, for fear of diminishing his wealth.

AVARICIOUS, a. that partakes of the nature of avarice.

AVARICIOUSLY, ad. covetously.

AVARICIOUSNESS, s. that quality which inclines a person to desire riches immoderately, to make no use of them when possessed of them, for fear of diminishing them, and denominates him an avaricious person.

AVAST, interj. [basta, Ital.] hold, stop; a sea-term.

AVATAR, s. [avatara, Sansc.] the incarnation or descent of a god to this world, amongst the Hindus. Applied figuratively to persons who hold with great enthusiasm and firmness any principles.

AVANT, interj. [avant, Fr.] begone! out of my sight!

AUBE, a department, corresponding with a part of the former province of Champagne, in France. It lies on the river Aube. The district was formerly called Poullouse, because of its infertility. There are considerable manufactures of cotton goods, and leather, glass, and wine. Troyes is its capital.

AUGUSTE, THOMPSON A. D. the famous historian of the Huguenots in the 16th century. He was engaged in the early affairs of his party, and fought on the side of Henry of Navarre. He remained faithful to his cause when Henry and most of the leaders deserted it, and was banished for a defence of it in the History of his own Times. He died in 1630, aged 80 years. His works contain, amidst many on graver subjects, a multitude of satirical pieces, which gained him few friends.

AUBURN, Wiltshire. It has a considerable manufacture of fustian. It is situated on a branch of the Kennet, 81 miles from London. Market, Tuesday.

AUBURN, a town of New York, United States, on the outlet of the Owasco Lake, near the Erie Canal. It has a state prison, which is considered a model for such institutions. There is also a flourishing theological seminary under the patronage and direction of the Presbyterians. Pop. 5626.

AUBURN, a. [aubour, Fr.] brown; tan-coloured.

AUCTION, s. [auctio, Lat.] a method of sale wherein goods are sold to the highest bidder.

AUCTIONARY, a. belonging to an auction.

AUCTIONEER, s. the manager of an auction.

AUDACIOUS, a. [audacicus, Fr.] applied to persons, impudent; bold, in a bad sense. Applied to actions, such as only an audacious person would do.

AUDACIOUSLY, ad. in such a manner as bespeaks a daring impudence.

AUDACIOUSNESS, AUDACITY, s. boldness; impudence; the disposition of mind manifested in undertaking actions which a proper regard for the approbation of others would deter most from undertaking.

AUDE, one of the departments of France, lying on the Mediterranean, named from the river Aude, which flows through it. On the northern boundary are the Black Mountains, and on the S. a range connected with the Pyrenees. It produces grapes, figs, and honey. Some coal, abundance of marble, and some of the metals, occur in the mountains. There are manufactures of woollens, and iron-works, with some of minor importance. Its capital is Carcassone.

AUDEANS, a sect classed amongst the heretics of the 4th century. As their doctrines are recorded only by their adversaries of a subsequent period, the account is not worthy of much credit; except in this particular, that Audéus, the leader, exposed the conduct of the clergy, and the system of church government. He was a learned and devoted teacher, according to the same accounts. Anthropomorphism appears to have been his great error.

AUDIBLE, a. [audibilis, Lat.] that is the object of hearing; that may be heard.

AUDIBLENESS, s. that which renders a thing the object of hearing, or to be heard.

AUDIBLY, ad. in such a manner as to be heard.

AUDIENCE, s. [audience, Fr.] that attention which is given to a person while he is speaking. In a court sense, the admission of ambassadors or public ministers to a king, in order to deliver the credentials of their sovereignty, and to open the intentions for which they are sent. In History, the tribunals or courts of justice established by the Spaniards in America. Persons assembled in order to hear a public speaker. Audience Chamber, a court belonging to the archbishop of Canterbury, wherein differences upon elections, consecrations, institutions, marriages, &c., are heard; of equal authority with the Court of Arches.

AUDIT, s. [Lat.] in Law, the hearing and examining the account of persons concerned in the receipt of money, by persons publicly appointed for that purpose.

To AUDIT, v. a. [audio, Lat.] to examine an account.

AUDITOR, s. [Lat.] one who hears; one who is present when any thing is delivered in public; who examines and passes either public or private accounts.

AUDITORY, a. [auditorius, Lat.] that conduces to hearing. In Anatomy, the auditory nerves are a pair of nerves arising from the medulla oblongata, and distributed, the one to the ear, and the other to the eye, &c.

AUDITORY, s. [auditorium, Lat.] a place where persons assemble to hear any discourse; a collection of persons so assembled.

AVEBURY, or A'BURY, Wiltshire, the site of one of the most extensive remains of a Druidical temple in this country. The masses of stone, varying from 5 to 20 feet in length, and from 3 to 12 in thickness, are 650 in number, and are placed in circles within a circular ditch and vallum, with two avenues flanked in a similar way leading from it. The whole neighbourhood is rich with similar remains.

AVELLINO, a town of the kingdom of Naples, lying near the river Sabato, in the midst of the Apennines. It is 30 miles from Naples. Lat. 40. 55. N. Long. 14. 45. E. The filbert nut is named after it avellana.

AVE MARIA, s. [Lat. hail, Mary] a prayer used by the Romish Church, beginning with those words, in honour of the Virgin Mary.

To Avenge, v. a. [renger, Fr.] to punish in proportion to the enormity of crimes: and distinguished from revenge, because that is always used in a bad, but this in a good sense.

AVENGEMENT, s. the act of punishing for crimes.

AVENGER, s. one who inflicts punishments for crimes.

AVENS, s. in Botany, the herb bennet, or gem. It has upright yellow blossoms, lyre-shaped leaves, and husky raspberry-like fruit.

AVENTURE, s. in law books, a mischance, causing a man's death without felony.

AVENUE, s. [avenue, Fr.] a passage or opening. In Gardening, a walk of trees leading to a house. In Perspective, it is a passage, which is narrower at the end than at the beginning, in order to make it appear the longer, or straight, when viewed at the narrowest end. In Fortification, the opening, inlet to, or communication between, a fort and a bastion.

To AVER, v. a. [averer, Fr.] to affirm or assert a thing to be true with some degree of positiveness.

AVERAGE, s. [averagum, law Lat.] a medium; a mean proportion. In Law, a due or service which a tenant owed his lord by his beast or carriage. In Sea-commerce, the accidents or misfortunes which happen to a ship or cargo, divided into simple, large, common, or small: an allowance given to the master for his care of the goods above the freight.

AVERTMENT, s. in Law, the establishment of a thing by evidence; an offer to make good an exception pleaded in abatement of the plaintiff's action, and an actual doing it.

AVERNAT, s. a sort of grape.

AVERNO, the name of a lake near Naples, which, giving forth mephitic vapours, was fabled in ancient times to be the abode of the dead.

AVERROES, an Arabian philosopher of the 12th century, of Cordova, in Spain; who, studying medicine with some success, and not being wholly free from the dreams of the new Platonist school, has been injuriously represented as a mere charlatan. Some of his works on the Aristotelian philosophy were highly valued in the days of Scholasticism. He left many writings, and died about 1200, being about 50 years old.

AVEUSA, a city of the kingdom of Naples, of some importance, lying in a plain about 8 miles from Naples. An asylum for lunatics has been built here. Its population is about 13,000. Lat. 40. 57. N. Long. 14. 11. E.

AVERSION, s. [aversio, Lat.] a term alluding to the motion of a person who detests any thing, which is that of turning away from it.

AVE'USE, a. [acerus, Lat.] hostile or angry with; unwilling, abhorring.

AVE'USELY, ad. in a manner which shows great unwillingness.

AVE'USENESS, s. unwillingness; backwardness.

AVERSION, s. [aversion, Fr.] dislike, arising from the disagreeableness of an object; the cause of dislike.

To AVERT, v. a. [averto, Lat.] to turn aside; to keep off.

AVEYRON, a large department of France, so called from a river which passes through it. The Cevennes Mountains form its S. E. border, and a range connected with them and joining the mountains of Auvergne occupies the E. part. The other rivers are the Lot and Tarn. The land is mostly pasture. There are good coal mines, and mines of alum, and marble quarries, in the mountains. The trade consists in the produce of these, in silk, raw and manufactured, woollen goods, paper, &c. Rodez is its capital.

AUF, s. [af, Belg.] a person void of discretion or common sense; a fool.

AUGER, AU'GRE, s. [egger, Belg.] in Mechanics, an instrument used by carpenters and coopers to bore holes with, consisting of a handle and bit.

AUGEREAU, P. F. C., one of Napoleon's generals, who was distinguished for the part he took in the battles of Lodi, Castiglione, Arcole, Jena, and Eylau. He was an ardent republican, and so was opposed to Buonaparte's later career. He was afterwards reconciled to the Bourbons, and raised to the peerage. He died in 1816, aged 50 years.

AUGHT, pron. [auht, Sax.] any thing; applied to the extent of a person's knowledge, as far as.

To AUGMENT, v. a. [augmenter, Fr.] to increase the value or dimension of a thing by the addition of something else. SYNON. Our ambition augments with our fortune; and we are no sooner in possession of one hundred pounds, than we are eager to add to it another.

AUGMENT, s. [augmentum, Lat.] increase, applied to the dimension of a body or the progress of a disease.

AUGMENTATION, s. increase, enlargement, improvement. Also a court so called, erected by Henry VIII. on the suppression of the monasteries. In Heraldry, the additional charges to a coat of armour, frequently given as particular marks of honour, and generally borne either on the escutcheon or a canton; as have all the baronets of England, who have borne the arms of the province of Ulster in Ireland.

AUGSBURG, a considerable and ancient city of Bavaria. Under the old constitution, it was an imperial city. The Ulrich's buildings are magnificent. Besides the cathedral, St. Ulrich's church, the town-hall, and the halle, are worthy of mention. The manufacturing importance of this city has much declined, but it is still an emporium of trade. Its population is about 80,000. The celebrated Confession of the Lutheran faith, called the Augsburg Confession, was presented to a diet which was held here. It is 40 miles from Munich. Lat. 48, 17. N. Long. 10, 53. E.

AUGUR, s. [Lat.] a minister of religion among the ancient Romans, appointed to take presages concerning futurity, from birds, beasts, and the appearances of the heavens.

To AUGUR, v. n. to foretell; to guess at; to presage.

To AUGURATE, v. n. [auguro, Lat.] to produce by signs, after the manner of an augur.

AUGURATION, s. the practice of determining future events in the manner of augurs.

AUGURIAL, a. according to the principles of an augur.

AUGURY, s. [augurium, Lat.] in Antiquity, a species of divination, or the art of foretelling future events, and distinguished into five sorts, namely, augury from the heavens; from birds; from chickens; from quadrupeds; and from portentous events.

AUGUST, a. [augustus, Lat.] that may claim reverence on account of its dignity or rank, or expect awe from its appearance.

AUGUST, s. [Augustus] the eighth month of the year, called by the Romans Sextilis, or the sixth month from March; but named August from Augustus Caesar.

AUGUSTA, capital of Georgia, United States, seated on the S. W. bank of the river Savannah. It is handsomely built, and has a court-house, city hall, &c. It has a rich back country, and a very active trade. Pop. 6403.

AUGUSTA, capital of the state of Maine, United States, situated on the Kennebec river. It contains a state-house and arsenal, a lunatic asylum, a high school, &c. The state-house is a fine building of white granite, and before it is a spacious park. There is a splendid dam erected across the river, with locks, which creates an immense water power. It is 163 miles from Boston. Pop. 5314.

AUGUSTINE, ST., the celebrated bishop of Hippo, in Africa, in the fourth century. He was a most untiring preacher and writer against the adversaries of the doctrines of the church in his day, particularly against Pelagius. His own doctrines bear a close resemblance to those now known as Calvinism. He died in 430, aged 76 years.

AUGUSTINE, ST., commonly called St. Austin, was the first preacher of Roman Catholicism to the Anglo-Saxons of England, being sent hither by St. Gregory, in the sixth century. He was the first archbishop of Canterbury, and died in 604.

AUGUSTINES, a religious order of the Church of Rome, who follow the rule of St. Augustine, prescribed them by Pope Alexander IV. Among other things, this rule enjoins to have all things in common; to receive nothing without the leave of the superior; and several other precepts relating to charity, modesty, and chastity. The Augustines are clothed in black, and make one of the four orders of begging friars. There are likewise nuns of this order.

AUGUSTNESS, s. that quality which renders a person an object of reverence, awe, and homage.

AUGUSTUS, the first regularly enthroned emperor of Rome. He was grand-nephew of Julius Caesar, and on his assassination came forward at once as a claimant for the chief power in the state, being but 18 years old. He formed a compact with M. Antonius and Lepidus, which gained them the name of the Triumviri. But afterwards defeating his rivals in power, he assumed the purple. His reign was prosperous and popular; and literature found in him a liberal patron. He died at Nola in the year 14 n. c., aged 49 years.

AVIARY, s. [aviarian, Lat.] a place enclosed for keeping a collection of birds. Figuratively, the collection of birds kept in such a place.

AVICENNA, a famous philosopher of Persia, who lived in the tenth century. He studied medicine with great success, and practised under the patronage of princes. His writings treat of mathematics, his own art, and the philosophy of the day, which was Aristotelian. He died in 1036, aged 56 years.

AVIDITY, s. [aviditas, Lat.] greediness, eagerness, an insatiable love of money.

AVIGNON, a large city in the dept. of Vaucluse, France. Before the French revolution it was the capital of a little sovereignty, subject to the pope, whose legate resided here. It stands on the Rhone, in a pleasant valley, and has very many religious and charitable institutions. Petrarch's Laura was buried in one of the churches, which has been destroyed. Lat. 43, 55. N. Long. 1, 53. E.

AVILA, an ancient city of old Castile, with a university, and a manufactory of fine cloth. It is seated in a large plain, surrounded by mountains, and covered with fruit-trees and vineyards, 50 miles N. W. of Madrid.

AVISO, s. [Ital.] in Commerce, notice or information given by letter.

AUKLAND, BISHOP, a large well-built town in Durham, chiefly remarkable for one of the palaces of the bishop of Durham. A manufactory of calico and muslin has lately been established here. It is situated 12 miles from Durham, and 250 from London. Market, Thursday. Pop. 11,137.

AUKWARD, a. See AWKWARD.

AULCESTER, an ancient town of Warwickshire, with a manufactory of needles. It is situated at the union of the rivers Aln and Arrow, 7 miles W. of Stratford-upon-Avon, 14 from Warwick, and 102 N. W. of London. Market, Tuesday. Pop. 2409.

AULIC, a. [aulicus, Lat.] belonging to the court. In History, applied to the highest court of the emperor of Germany, originally instituted to determine the disputes between the emperor and his subjects.

AUNT, (ant), s. [tante, Fr.] a female relation, who is a sister either to a person's father or mother.

AVOCADO, s. [Span.] a tree that grows in great plenty in the Spanish West Indies. The fruit is of itself very insipid, for which reason they generally eat it with the juice of lemons and sugar, to give it poignancy.

To AVOCATE, v. a. [avoco, Lat.] to call a person from a thing he is engaged in.

AVOCATION, s. [avocatio, Lat.] the diverting a person's attention from something he is already engaged in.

To AVOID, v. a. [vider, Fr.] to forbear; to shun; to quit, or leave.

AVOIDABLE, a. that is possible to escape the effects of a thing; that may be escaped or shunned.

AVOIDANCE, s. the act whereby one frees himself from the effects of any cause; the act of emptying or carrying off.

AVOIDER, s. the person who shuns, escapes, or carries away; the vessels used to carry things away in.

AVOIDLESS, a. inevitable, that cannot be avoided.

AVOIRDOIS, s. [avoir du pois, Fr.] a weight, supposed to be borrowed from the Romans, a pound of which contains 16 oz., bearing the same proportion to 1 lb. Troy as 14 to 16. All coarser commodities are bought by this weight.

AVOLATION, s. [avolo, Lat.] the flying away; flight, or escape.

AVON, a British word meaning river, which is the name of several in England, the largest of which springs near Naseby, in Northamptonshire, and falls, after a gently winding course of about 100 miles, into the Severn.

AVOSET, s. in Zoology, a bird which frequents the marshes of Norfolk and Lincolnshire, and is remarkable for having its bill turned upwards.

To AVOUCH, v. a. [avouer, Fr.] to prove by voucher or proper authorities; positively to maintain the truth of a thing; to justify or vindicate. Vouch is in use at present, in its stead.

AVOUCH, s. proof, witness, evidence.

AVOUCHABLE, a. that may be proved by evidence or vouchers.

AVOUCHER, s. he that proves the truth of an assertion by proper vouchers, or evidence.

To AVOW, v. a. [avouer, Fr.] to profess openly, without any dissimulation.

AVOWABLE, a. that may be publicly owned without dissimulation, and sometimes without shame.

AVOWAL, s. a public confession, without the least dissimulation.

AVOWEDLY, ad. in a public, open manner; professedly; publicly.

AVOWEE, s. [avoué, Fr.] the person to whom the representation of any benefice, or the right of advowson, belongs.

AVOWER, s. one who openly professes, asserts, or declares, without dissimulation.

AVOWRY, s. in Law, the avowing or confessing the having taken a distress for rent, when the person distrained sues for a reprieve.

AVOWTRY, s. adultery.

AVRANCHES, s. a very ancient city in the department of Manche, in France. It stands on a mountain, at the foot of which flows the river Sée, one mile and a half from the English Channel, and 30 E. of St. Malo. Pop. about 7000.

AURELIA, s. [Lat.] See CHIRYALIS.

AURELIAN, s. a name sometimes applied to one who breeds and describes the various states of moths and butterflies.

AURELIANUS, LUCIUS DOMITIUS, a Roman soldier, who, in 270 A. D., was, by the legions on the Danube, made emperor. He lives in history as the conqueror of Zenobia of Palmyra. He was assassinated after a reign of five years.

AUREUS, s. [Lat.] the name of the common Roman gold coin, valued at 100 sesterii, and equal in worth to about 15 of our shillings.

AURICLE, s. [auricula, Lat.] in Anatomy, the external ear, or that which is prominent from the head.

AURICULA, s. in Floriculture, the bear's ear, allied to the primrose, a native of the Alps; of which there are many varieties.

AURICULAR, a. [auricularis, Lat.] that belongs to the ear; secret or private, as if whispered in a person's ear. Auricular confession, in the Romish Church, is the private confession a person makes of his sins to a priest, in order to receive absolution.

AURICULARY, ad. in a private or secret manner.

AURIFEROUS, a. [aurifer, Lat.] that produces gold.

AURIGA, in Astronomy, the Waggoner, a constellation in the northern hemisphere.

AURIGATION, s. [auriga, Lat.] the driving a vehicle or carriage.

AURIPIGMENTUM, s. See ORPIMENT.

AURORA, s. [Lat.] in Geography, that faint dawn which appears in the E. when the sun is within 18 degrees of the horizon. In Mythology, the goddess who presides over day-break, the daughter of Hyperion and Thea, or of the Sun and Earth. Aurora borealis is a luminous appearance in the night in the northern parts of the heavens, consisting of a glow, like the dawn in the E., or of arches, beams, flashes, often of a red colour, and very brilliant. It is now attributed to electricity.

AURUM FULMINANS, s. [Lat. thundering gold,] in Chemistry, precipitate of gold, a powder which, by heat or friction, explodes very loudly. Aurum musivum, mosaic gold, a combination of white oxide of tin with sulphur, by means of mercury.

AURUNGABAD, a city of the Nizam in Hindustan, with a considerable trade. The Mausoleum of a daughter of Aurungzebe, and the ruins of his palace, are here. It is 1022 miles from Calcutta, and 284 from Bombay. Lat. 19. 54. N. Long. 75. 33. E.

AURUNGZEBE, the celebrated Mogul of the 17th century. He was engaged in war during the greater part of his reign, to secure himself in the possession of the throne, and died in 1707, aged 90 years.

AUSCULTATION, s. [ausculto, Lat.] a hearkening, or listening to. In Medicine, the method of inquiring into diseases by observing sounds produced naturally or artificially in the body.

AUSPICE, s. [auspicium, Lat.] the art of divination, confined to the flight or singing of birds; a prosperous event, or the favour and protection of a lucky person.

AUSPICIAL, a. relating to prognostics.

AUSPICIOUS, a. that promises success; favourable, fortunate, kind, propitious, applied to persons.

AUSPICIOUSLY, ad. in such a manner as to promise success.

AUSTER, a. [austerus, Lat.] applied to morals, rigid and mortified, opposed to effeminate or luxurious. Applied to tastes, rough, sour, and astringent, like that of unripe fruits.

AUSTERELY, ad. in a rigid, mortifying manner.

AUSTERITY, s. a state of rigid severity and mortification, sometimes including the secondary idea of sourness or moroseness; severity or harshness of discipline.

AUSTLE, ST., Cornwall. It has a fine church, with a richly ornamented tower. In its neighbourhood are mines of tin and copper, and works for porcelain clay. Market, Friday. 243 miles from London. Pop. 10,320.

AUSTRAL, a. [australis, Lat.] that is towards the south; as, the austral signs.

AUSTRALASIA, or AUSTRALIA, a name by which the great island of New Holland, and others surrounding it, are classed together as a fifth great division of the world. It includes the Bonin, Ladrone, and Carolina Islands, New Guinea, the Sandwich Islands, and all the groups of the Pacific between these and New Zealand, and Van Diemen's Land. But by the French the E. Pacific islands are classed by themselves under the name of Oceania. The Australian continent is but imperfectly explored; most of its coast has been surveyed, but of the interior little is known. A range of mountains runs N. from Wilson's Promontory, and probably extends to the N. part of the island. Some of the peaks rise to the height of about 7000 feet, and are covered with perpetual snow. Between this mountain-chain and the sea is a terraced plain. The chief rivers known are the Macquarrie, the Murray, the Morumbidgee, and the Swan River on the W. coast. The climate, except on the E. coast, is not very healthy for Europeans. The soil of course varies, but the interior furnishes richest pastures: iron and coal have been found. The Zoology and Botany of Australia are quite peculiar. More than half of the known quadrupeds are of the Kangaroo and Opossum tribe. The aborigines of the country seem to have reached the lowest grade of barbarism, and their intercourse with the colonists has, as must necessarily happen, communicated to them only the worst vices and diseases of the civilized world. They are of a dark brown colour, and gentle in their habits; and have a simple, child-like religion. On the E. coast, at Botany Bay, has been established a penal colony for convicts from Great Britain. But apart from this, which has been of great injury both to the regular colonists and to the convicts themselves, there is a flourishing colony. Van Diemen's Land is also in a prosperous state. There are other settlements of less note.

AUSTRALIS PISCIS, the southern Fish, a constellation of the southern hemisphere, not visible in our latitude.

AUSTRIA, an empire of Europe, lying on the Gulf of Venice, between the Italian States, Switzerland, Germany, Prussia, Russia, and Turkey. It comprises Austria, Styria, and Tyrol; the kingdom of Bohemia, Moravia, and Silesia; the kingdoms of Galicia (formerly part of Poland) and Hungary; Illyria and Dalmatia; the kingdom of Lombardy and Venice; Transsylvania, and the military frontier districts on all sides; comprising in all 255,226 square miles. Its mountains are, the Alps, the Carpathians, and the mountains of Bohemia and Moravia. Its rivers are, the Danube, and the great streams that flow into it, as the Inn, the Drave, and the Theiss; the Vistula and the Oder, flowing into the Baltic; the Elbe and the Rhine; and in Italy, the Po and Adige. There are scattered throughout this vast and varied country many extensive lakes, some of which are very remarkable, and those of Lombardy celebrated for their beauty. The forests and woods are very numerous; and the greater proportion of the country available for cultivation has been used. Its produce of corn and grain is very abundant. Pepper, ginger, tobacco, hops, &c., are also grown for commerce. Abundance of wine, and amongst the various kinds, Tokay is made. Cattle, &c., are reared in great numbers; and in the Italian territory great attention is given to breeding silk-worms. In mineral productions the empire is remarkably rich, almost all the metals, some in profusion, salt, coal, &c., are plentiful. The population, which is necessarily very various in its character, is about 40,000,000 in number; and the total force available in war is about 500,000 men. The manufactures of linen, glass, silk, leather, metals, &c., are very considerable; but foreign trade is much hindered by the want of a commanding and accessible coast. The state religion is Romanist, but there is toleration for Protestants, Armenians, &c., under certain conditions. Vienna is the capital of the empire, and the other chief places are Venice, Presburg, Cracow, Prague, Salzburg, Milan, &c.

AUTHENTIC, AUTHENTICAL, a. [authenticus, Lat.] of established authority; that is attended with full proof, and attested by persons who deserve credit.

AUTHENTICALLY, ad. in such a manner as to procure credit.

To AUTHENTICATE, v. a. to establish a thing by the necessary proofs of its genuineness.

AUTHENTICITY, s. the genuineness of a thing, supported by proper proofs and authorities.

AUTHENTICLY, ad. in such a manner as to evince a thing to be genuine.

AUTHOR, s. [auctor, Lat.] in its more proper sense, one who creates and produces any thing; the original inventor or discoverer of any new art or principle; one who writes upon any subject, opposed to a translator or compiler.

AUTHORITATIVE, a. that has an influence over another; that commands or obliges.

AUTHORITATIVELY, ad. in such a manner as to bespeak proper authority or licence.

AUTHORITATIVENESS, s. that quality which shows a person to be properly licensed, or to have authority for the doing any thing.

AUTHORITY, s. [auctoritas, Lat.] a power which leaves a person the liberty of choice, arising from superiority of rank or reason; includes the secondary idea of respect, and is applied to God with respect to his creatures, and to parents with respect to their children; applied to arguments, it denotes their strength.

SYNON. There appears in the idea of authority something just and respectable; in the idea of power, something strong and active; and in the idea of dominion, something great and elevated.

AUTHORIZATION, s. the act of communicating authority.

TO AUTHORIZE, v. a. [authoriser, Fr.] to give a person licence or authority to perform a thing; to encourage; to justify; to give credit.

AUTOCRACY, s. [autos and kratos, Gr.] independent power.

AUTO-DA-FÉ, [Port.] or act of faith, the public burning of persons convicted of heresy by the holy office of the Inquisition, in Spain and Portugal.

AUTOGRAPHICAL, a. [autos and grapho, Gr.] that is written by a person's own hand.

AUTOGRAPHY, s. a person's own hand-writing; an original, opposed to a copy.

AUTOMATICAL, a. that has the quality of an automaton; that is endued with a power to move itself. In the animal economy, applied by Boerhaave to express those motions which arise purely from the structure of the body, and over which the will has no power.

AUTOMATON, s. [autos and maimai, Gr.] in Mechanics, an engine which has the principle of motion in itself.

AUTOMATOUS, a. [automatos, Gr.] that has the power of motion in itself.

AUTOPSY, s. [autos and optamai, Gr.] the seeing a thing with one's own eyes. Applied by the ancients to the communications which the soul was supposed to have with the gods in the Elysian mysteries.

AUTOPTICAL, a. that is seen by one's own eyes.

AUTOPTICALLY, ad. in such a manner as a person may be an eye-witness.

AUTUMN, (autum) s. [autumnus, Lat.] the third season of the year, wherein the fruits are gathered in, commencing astronomically on the 23rd of September, and ending on the 21st of December; popularly including August, September, and October.

AUTUMNAL, a. that belongs to autumn; that is produced in autumn. In Astronomy, the autumnal point, is that point of the equinoctial line from whence the sun begins to descend toward the south. The autumnal signs are Libra, Scorpio, and Sagittarius. Autumnal equinox, the time when the sun enters the autumnal point, which is about the 23rd of September.

AUTUN, anciently AUGUSTODUNUM, a city in the dept. of Saône and Loire, situated near the river Arroux, at the foot of three mountains. The cathedral is very fine, as are the ruins of Roman temples, &c., which are very numerous. They have manufactures of tapestry from cows' hair and thread, carpets, coverlets, and delf ware. It is 102 miles from Paris. Lat. 46. 57. N. Long. 4. 23. E. Pop. about 9000.

AUTULSION, s. [autulus, Lat.] the act of pulling asunder two bodies already united, implying the secondary idea of some exertion or force.

AUXERRE, a city in the department of Yonne in France, containing a very fine cathedral. The chief trade is in wine, and in its neighbourhood chablis is made. It is 102 miles from Paris. Pop. about 12,000.

AUXILIAR, AUXILIARY, s. [auxiliaris, Lat.] a person who assists another, whether in war, peace, works of strength, or the products of the understanding.—a. that affords help or assistance. In Grammar, applied to such verbs as are prefixed to others, and help to conjugate certain tenses, which are on that account named compound ones.

TO AWAIT, v. a. to expect a thing in future; to be reserved, or designed for.

TO AWAKE, v. a. pret. awoke, [reccian, Sax.] to raise from sleep. Figuratively, to rouse a thing in a dormant or latent state into action.—v. n. to cease to sleep; to be cautious; to be on one's guard; to take such measures as not to be surprised by an approaching calamity or enemy.

AWAKE, a. not being asleep; not sleeping.

TO AWAKEN, v. a. pret. awakened. See AWAKE. This seems to be the best word.

TO AWARD, (awærd) v. a. [weardig, Sax.] to pass sentence, or determine a controversy, as an arbitrator. Figuratively, to give one's opinion.

AWARD, s. the judgment or opinion of a person chosen by contending parties to determine a difference between them.

AWARE, ad. perceiving; cautious; or upon one's guard.

AWAY, ad. [aweg, Sax.] after the verb go, or be, it implies absent, or out of sight. Used sometimes as if it were a verb, meaning, leave this place. "Away, old man!" Shakl. Sometimes joined to a verb it implies to lose, including the idea of lavishing, squandering, or profusion.

AWE, s. [ege, or ega, Sax.] a respect mixed with terror, including the idea of superior rank, authority, or parts.

TO AWE, v. a. to influence a person by one's authority, dignity, or age.

AWE, the name of a lake of Argyle in Scotland, 25 miles in length, and about a mile in breadth. The scenery on the lake and around is very beautiful.

AWFUL, a. that causes respect, joined with fear, on account of its dignity, authority, or age.

AWFULLY, ad. in such a manner as to command respect, joined with fear; including the secondary ideas of authority and dignity.

AWFULNESS, s. that quality which attracts respect mixed with fear.

AWHILE, ad. applied to time, space, interval; some time.

AWKWARD, a. [æward, Sax.] applied to the mind, perverse; applied to the behaviour, clumsy; unhandy; clownish.

AWKWARDLY, ad. in a clumsy manner.

AWKWARDNESS, s. that quality which shows a person not to have been conversant with the elegances of polite life; and denotes him to be clownish and clumsy.

AWL, s. [ale, or ale, Sax.] a sharp-pointed instrument used by shoemakers to make holes, in order to expedite their work.

AWLESS, a. irreverent; without the power of causing reverence.

AWL-SHAPED, a. in Botany, applied to the leaves, threads, or seeds, slender, and becoming finer towards the end, like an awl.

AWME, AWME, s. a Dutch liquid measure, containing equal to the tierce in England, or to one-sixth of a tun in France.

AWN, s. the slender sharp substance, growing to the valves of corn or grass, and frequently called a beard.

AWNING, s. [awne, Fr.] the hanging a sail or tarpauling over any part of a ship to keep the sun off.

AWRY, (ary) ad. out of a straight line; out of a perpendicular direction; on one side; not even. Figuratively, erroneously.

AX, AXE, s. [æx, Sax.] a carpenter's instrument to hew wood; its edge tapers to the middle of the blade, and it has a long handle to be used with both hands.

AXBRIDGE, Somersetshire. It is seated under Mendip-hills, which are rich in lead mines, and proper for feeding cattle. It is a corporate town, consisting of one principal street, which is long but narrow. 130 miles from London. Market, Thursday. Pop. 1045.

AXILLA, s. [Lat.] the cavity under the upper part of the arm, called the arm-pit.

AXILLAR, AXILLARY, a. [axillaris, Lat.] belonging to the arm-pit.

AXIOM, s. [axio, Gr.] a plain, self-evident proposition, incapable of demonstration. Used principally in Mathematics; elsewhere most frequently called a maxim.

AXIS, (plural, axes) s. [Lat.] in Geometry, Astronomy, &c., is an imaginary line passing through the centre of any figure or orbit. Thus the axis of the earth, is a line conceived to pass through the centre of the earth from one pole to the other, about which it revolves daily. The axis of the earth, during its revolution round the sun, remains always parallel to itself, and is inclined to the plane of the ecliptic, making with it an angle of about 66 degrees. In conic sections, axis is a right line, dividing the sections into two equal parts, and cutting all its ordinates at right angles. In Mechanics, the axis of balance, is that line about which it moves, or rather turns about. Axis of oscillation, is a right line parallel to the horizon, passing through the centre, about which a pendulum vibrates. In Optics, axis is that ray, among all others that are sent to the eye, which falls perpendicularly upon it, and which consequently passes through the centre of the eye. In Architecture, spiral axis is the axis of a twisted column drawn spirally, in order to trace the circumvolution without. Axis, in Anatomy, is the second vertebra of the neck, so called from the head's turning on it like an axis.

AXIS, s. a very beautiful animal of the deer kind, which has its horns divided into three branches. It is a native of India.

AXLE, AXLE-TREE, s. [axse and trewe, Sax.] a piece of wood, &c., which passes through the centre of a wheel, on which it turns.

AXMINSTER, Devonshire. It is seated on the river Ax, near the edge of the county, and was a place of some note in the time of the Saxons. The church is ancient, and the town irregularly built, but with airy streets. Here is a small manufactory of broad and narrow cloths; but its chief manufactory is for carpets, in which it has equalled those made in Turkey. It is 147 miles from London. Market, Saturday. Pop. 2860.

AY, ad. [perhaps aiō, Lat.] yes; used to affirm the truth of a thing.

AYE, ad. [ovsa, Sax.] generally used after for, and implies time without end; for ever; to all eternity.

AYLESBURY, Buckinghamshire, the county town, where are the county gaol and hall. The manufactures of the town are of lace. Market, Saturday. 38 miles from London. Pop. 5429.

AYLESFORD, Kent. It is seated on the Medway. Near it is Kit's Coty-house, and other like relics, which seem to be attributable to the earliest Saxon invaders of England. 32 miles from London. Pop. 1344.

AYLSHAM, Norfolk, seated on the Bure. Market, Tuesday. 120 miles from London. Pop. 2448.

AYR, a sea-port of Ayrshire, in Scotland, situated on a sandy plain, and built on both sides of the river Ayr, which rises on the borders of Lanarkshire, and crossing the county, to which it gives name, runs into the Clyde. There is a considerable trade in coals and grain, and a profitable fishery of cod and haddock on the coast: there are also manufactures of cotton, iron, &c. The market-cross is very ancient. It is 75 miles from Edinburgh. Pop. 8264.

AYRSHIRE, a large commercial county of Scotland, lying on the W. coast between Renfrew and Wigtown. It is about 60 miles in length, and from 20 to 25 in breadth. It has coal, iron, limestone, &c. It has also manufactures of woollen and cotton goods; and is a good grazing county. Its connexion with the name of Burns is not its least claim to notice. Pop. 164,356.

AYRY, AERY, s. a nest or company of hawks, so called from the old French word aie, which signified the same.

AZERBAIJAN, a province of Persia, lying next to Armenia. The mountains of Sahend which belong to it are nearly 13,000 feet high. The Araxes is its chief river. Tabriz is its capital.

AZIMUTH, s. [Arab.] an arch of the horizon, comprehended between the meridian of the place and any given vertical, and is the complement of the eastern and western amplitude to a quadrant. The magnetical azimuth, is an arch of the horizon contained between the sun's azimuth circle and the magnetical meridian. Azimuth compass, is an instrument used at sea for finding the sun's magnetical azimuth. Azimuth dial, is one whose stile or gnomon is at right angles to the plane of the horizon. Azimuth circles, called Azimuths, are great circles of the sphere, intersecting each other in the zenith and nadir, and cutting the horizon at right angles in all the points thereof. The azimuths are represented by the rhumbs on common sea-charts, and on the globe they are represented by the quadrant of altitude when screwed in the zenith. On the azimuth is reckoned the height of the stars, and of the sun, when not in the meridian.

AZORES, a group of islands in the Atlantic Ocean, between 25 and 32 degrees W. of longitude, and between 37 and 40 N. latitude; 900 miles W. of Portugal, and as many E. of Newfoundland. All these islands enjoy a very clear sky, and salubrious air; they are extremely fertile in corn, wine, and a variety of fruits; and they breed large quantities of cattle. St. Michael is the largest, which gives its name to a fine kind of orange. They are of volcanic origin; and the Peak of Pico is about 7000 feet high. Their population is about 200,000.

AZOTE, s. [a and zao, Gr.] in Chemistry, a name of nitrogen gas, because it will not support life.

AZOTIC, a. in Chemistry, belonging to azote, or nitrogen.

AZTECS, the name of a tribe found by the Spaniards in Mexico. They were addicted to war, and in their religious rites offered human sacrifices under circumstances of great cruelty. Yet, in many respects, they showed considerable progress in the arts of civilization; as in their language, constitution, laws, &c., and especially in their chronology, and corrections of the calendar. Their written language was hieroglyphical, and read from the bottom at the right hand, upwards and to the left. They preserved amongst them some remarkable traditions of physical changes in the world; and had authors who treated of history, morals, religion, &c.

AZURE, s. in the general sense, signifies the blue colour of the sky. Among painters, it is the blue colour, with a greenish cast, prepared from the lapis lazuli, generally called ultramarine. It likewise signifies that bright blue colour prepared from the lapis armenus. This colour is called Lambert's blue. In Heraldry, azure is the blue colour in the coat of arms of any person below the rank of a baron. In the escutcheon of a nobleman, it is called Sapphire; and in that of a sovereign prince, Jupiter. In engraving, this colour is expressed by lines or strokes drawn horizontally.

AZURE, a. that is of a sky or faint blue colour.

B

B IS the second letter of the alphabet. It is pronounced by pressing the lips together. It is used as an abbreviation: thus, in Music, B stands for the tone above A, as Bb or Bb does for B flat, or the semi-tone major above A; B also stands for bass, and B, C, for basso continuo, or thorough bass. As a numeral, B was used by the Greeks and Hebrews to denote 2; but among the Romans it stood for 300, and with a dash over it thus B for 3000. The same people used B for Brutus; B. F. for bonum factum. They likewise used B and V indifferently for each other. B in the chemical alphabet signifies mercury. B. A. stands for Bachelor of Arts; B. L. for Bachelor of Laws; and B. D. for Bachelor of Divinity.

BA/A, s. a sound borrowed from, and expressive of, the bleating of a sheep.

To BA/A, v. a. to bleat like a sheep.

BA/AL, s. a god of the ancient Phœnicians. Baal signifies Lord, and was applied to the sun.

BA/ALBEC, or HELO/PO/IS, a city of Syria, which was anciently very splendidly adorned with temples, &c. It is situated in the plain of Bocal, near the range of Antilibanus. It was an emporium for the trade of Tyre with India and Palmyra. The ruins which remain are almost all of Roman origin. Only a few poor people inhabit the spot now.

BA/ALIM, s. inferior deities among the Phœnicians.

To BA/BBLE, v. n. [babbelen, Belg.] to prate like a child, without sense; to betray secrets; to talk without regard to place or circumstances.

BABBLE, s. [babli, Fr.] senseless prating.

BAB/LEMENT, s. See BABBLE.

BAB/BLER, s. one who talks without any fund of sense, or without proper ideas of the words he makes use of.

BABE, BA/RY, s. [baban, Brit.] a young child of either sex. Sometimes applied to a creature which can neither walk nor speak.

BABEL/MA/NDEB, STRAITS or, the narrow strait between the Red Sea and the Indian Ocean.

BAB/ER, the founder of the Mogul or Tatar empire in Hindustan, in the beginning of the 16th century. His conquests reached from the Indus to the Ganges. He devoted the latter part of his life to the establishment of his empire, and died in 1530, aged 47 years.

BA/BERY, s. finery to please a babe or child.

BA/Y/ISHI, a. that resembles the choice of a very young child; that belongs to a very young child; childish.

BABOON, s. [baboin, Fr.] in Zoology, a genus of the monkey or ape tribe, which more closely resembles the other animals.

Their face and jaws are like the dog, and being short and stout in their bodies, they are less fitted for climbing than other genera of their tribe. Their tails are not so long as monkeys' generally are. They have often been domesticated, but are naturally very fierce. They have manifested a capability of acquiring singular habits, such as smoking and porter-drinking, when domesticated.

BABYLON, the capital of Babylonia, a province of Assyria in Asia, which stood on the Euphrates, in Lat. 33. N. Long. 42. 53. E. Semiramis is said to have founded this city on the site of Nimrod's Tower of Babel, and it was finished by Nebuchadnezzar. The walls, which surrounded the city, were 87 feet thick, 350 feet high, and 480 furlongs (60 miles) in length, according to Herodotus. They formed an exact square, each side of which was 120 furlongs (15 miles) in length, and were built of large bricks, cemented together with bitumen. Without the walls was a vast ditch, filled with water, and lined with bricks on both sides. There were 100 gates, made of solid brass; and on the walls were 250 towers. The city, or town, within the walls, was regularly built; from each gate there was a straight street, extending to the corresponding gate in the opposite side; so that the city was divided into squares, round which stood the houses, and the intermediate space within each of them was occupied as gardens, either for pleasure or convenience. A branch of the river Euphrates divided the city into two parts. The other wonders of the place were, the Tower of Belus, the hanging gardens, the artificial lake, and the canals. After the Christian era it gradually declined, and now only a few ruins are left, that hardly tell where it stood.

BABYLONIA, or CHALDEA, a kingdom of Asia, and the most ancient in the world, being founded by Nimrod, the grandson of Ham, who is supposed also to have founded Nineveh, the capital of the kingdom of Assyria. The history of these kingdoms is greatly involved in obscurity. It was overthrown by Cyrus, when he took the city of Babylon, in 538 B. C.

BABYROUSSA, s. in Zoology, an animal of the hog kind, distinguished by four remarkable tusks, two belonging to the lower, and two to the upper jaw; the latter pair growing to a great length, and turning backward, towards the ears. It inhabits the Indian islands.

BACCHANALIA, (Bakkandlia) s. [Lat.] the feasts of the god of wine, Bacchus, which were celebrated with every species of debauchery. At Rome, being practised secretly by night, they were suppressed in 186 B. C.

BACCHANALIAN, (Bakkandlian) s. one who attended the feasts of Bacchus. Figuratively, a riotous, drunken person.

BACCHANALS, (Bakkandals) s. See BACCHANALIA.

BACCHUS, s. in heathen Mythology, the son of Jupiter and Semele, and the god of wine, in Greece called Dionysus.

BACCIFEROUS, a. [baccifer, Lat.] in Botany, such plants as bear berries.

BACH, JOHANN SEBASTIAN, the name of an eminent composer, and performer on the organ, of Germany in the last century. He held official stations at Weimar, Dresden, and Leipzig. His works are very numerous, and his vocal compositions are particularly admired. He died in 1750, aged 65 years. Almost all his family were engaged in the musical profession; one of his sons in the service of Frederic the Great.

BACHELOR, s. a man who still continues in the state of celibacy, or who was never married. Anciently, it was a name given to those superior in quality to esquires, but had not a number of vassals sufficient to have their banner carried before them in the field of battle. It was also a title given to young knights, who, having made their first campaign, received the military girdle. It was likewise used to denominate him who had overcome another in combat the first time he ever engaged. In universities, Bachelors are those who have taken the first degree in the liberal arts and sciences.

BACHELORSHIP, s. the state of an unmarried man; the state, dignity, and office of a graduate, or bachelor, at a university.

BACK, s. [bac, bæc, Sax.] in Anatomy, the hind part of the human body, from the neck to the thighs. Applied to the hands, that part opposite to the palms. Applied to the array of an army, the rear. Applied to situation, the hind part, or that which is not in sight. Applied to an edge-tool or instrument, the thickest part of the blade, opposed to the edge. A large square trough or cistern, used by brewers to hold liquor in. Figuratively, a supporter, or one who will second another in an attempt.

BACK, ad. applied to motion, to the place from whence a person came. Applied to action, to retreat. Applied to time, that which is past. After keep, applied to the increase of plants, to stop or hinder the growth.

To BACK, v. a. to mount a horse; to break him for the saddle; to make him go backwards by pulling the reins. Figuratively, to second, support, or assist.

To BACKBITE, v. a. to speak against a person in his absence. BACKBITER, s. one who censures the conduct, or vilifies the actions, of a person in his absence.

BACK-BOARD, s. the board in a boat for passengers to lean their backs against; also the stiff milled paper put into the covers of books to preserve them from injury; also a flat board, used to keep the arms back, by teachers of calisthenics.

BACKBONE, s. the bone of the back.

BACKDOOR, s. a door or passage out of a house behind, opposed to the front. Figuratively, a private passage.

BACKED, part. having a back. Forced to go backwards.

BACKFRIEND, s. a false friend, or secret enemy.

BACKGAMMON, s. a game played with dice and draughtsmen on a board or table, divided into two parts, at the ends of which are twenty-four points, half white and half black.

BACKHOUSE, s. the building which lies behind a house.

BACKSIDE, s. the hinder part of any thing; the hinder part of an animal. Figuratively, a yard or ground behind a house.

To BACKSLIDE, v. n. in Divinity, to return to idolatry, after having quitted it; to apostatize; to quit the true mode of worship.

BACKSLIDER, s. one who quits the true religion in order to embrace a false one; an apostate.

BACKSTAFF, s. an instrument used at sea to take the sun's altitude. This instrument, commonly called Davis's quadrant, from the name of the inventor, and by the French the English quadrant, is not so accurate as could be wished; and a large, heavy, brass astrolabe is to be preferred before it.

BACKSTAIRS, s. the private stairs of a house, generally appropriated to the use of servants.

BACKSTAYS, s. in Ship-building, the ropes belonging to the main and fore-masts, which keep them from pitching overboard.

BACKSWORD, s. a sword with only one sharp edge, and blunt back. Used figuratively for a cudgel, or the art of defending oneself with a cudgel.

BACKWARD, ad. [back and weard, Sax.] applied to motion, it signifies the going from a person with the face towards him, the legs being moved towards the hind instead of the fore part of a person; towards the back, or behind upon the back. "Backwards and forwards," Newton. Applied to the success of an undertaking, it implies, not to prosper or advance; to want success. Applied to time, some period that is past; or a portion of time already past.

BACKWARD, a. unwilling, in allusion to making advances, anticipating or meeting a person's wishes; reluctant; slow; dull; not quick; or apprehensive.

BACKWARDLY, ad. applied to the motion whereby a person retreats or goes from another with his face towards him; in a perverse, unwilling manner; reluctantly.

BACKWARDNESS, s. that quality which proceeds from a dislike of the measures a person is to put in practice, the undertaking he is to accomplish, or the person he is to oblige, including the idea of slowness; dulness; want of apprehension.

BACON, s. [bacon, Brit.] the flesh of a hog salted, and sometimes dried. To save one's bacon, is a low phrase for preserving oneself from hurt or mischief.

BACON, ROGER, a learned Franciscan of the 13th century, who was the first experimental natural philosopher of England. His investigations, which display great acuteness and power, and led him to anticipate the discoveries of gunpowder, spectacles, and the telescope, were directed to most of the branches of natural science, and are recorded in his famed Opus Majus, and other treatises on chemistry, optics, &c. He successfully studied metaphysical and mathematical science, and in the former stands in favourable contrast to the dogmatists on Aristotle of his day. He was a believer in alchemy and astrology, though on grounds which further inquiries would have easily shown him the futility of. Amongst his friends he numbered the celebrated Bishop Grôstée, of Lincoln, the opponent of the arrogant claims of Rome. Roger Bacon experienced to the full the malice of ignorance invested with authority. His studies were interfered with, his writings suppressed, himself accused of diabolical magic, and imprisoned for many years together. Tardy justice has been sparingly shown him in later times. He died in 1292, about 78 years old.

BA'CON, FRANCIS, Lord Verulam, Viscount of St. Albans, one of the brightest luminaries in the history of English Literature and Philosophy, was youngest son of Sir Nicholas Bacon, Lord Keeper of the great seal to Queen Elizabeth. He was carefully instructed by his mother, a woman of great and varied learning, and at 13 entered Cambridge. There he first indulged in dreams and resolutions of framing a method, by which the futile philosophy in vogue should be displaced by one whose fruits would be blessings to mankind in all departments of life, and which should have such vitality as would make a possession for ever to man. During his long and active life, he, with indefatigable perseverance, accomplished twice a survey and examination of the then state of knowledge, and almost completed the development of his magnificent scheme for the instauration of science. And to these works he added others which have made his name eminent equally as a profound observer of men, a wide and clear-seeing jurist, a grave and philosophical historian, and a gay and imaginative wit. In his great labour he strove like a man possessed by an idea, but not possessed of it; for his observations and experiments, and especially the illustration of his own method, are superficial and unscientific. He rightly called it the "birth of time," and subsequent ages have reaped, and will never cease to reap, the abundant harvests, which are owing as much to his preparation of the soil, as to the goodly seed which the Newtons, and Davys, and Watts have sown. His ethical "Essays," and his religious writings, show his knowledge of truth for the soul was sufficient to have made his life beautiful. His life itself was a compound of every fault that could degrade man. He suffered his love of tawdry show to lead him into dishonest debt; and his love for princely favour, into sycoophancy that surpassed in meanness the sycoophancy of the meanest age in English story. For the sake of that he took bribes as a judge; for the sake of this he courted the vile, and lent himself as a tool to convict and behead and vilify his most generous friend, and begged with sickening flattery for place after place till he gained the great seal of England, and recanted the frank-spoken declaration of popular rights, and sat and witnessed the torture of an aged and exemplary minister of religion. His "name and memory" he left, in his will, "to men's charitable speeches, and to foreign nations, and the next ages," and died in 1626, aged 65 years.

BA'CON, JOHN, an eminent English sculptor of the last century. The monument of Lord Chatham in the Guildhall, and that in Westminster Abbey, with many other well-known sculptures, are his work. He died in 1799, aged 59 years.

BA'CTRIA, an ancient kingdom of Asia, which occupied the country of the present Bokhara. Its history is very obscure, and the coins of the kings are the chief clue to a meagre outline of it. Greek monarchs ruled it after the conquest of Alexander the Great; and it was destroyed, as an empire, by the Scythians in about 130 B. C.

BACULE, v. [Fr.] in Fortification, a kind of portcullis, or gate, made like a pit-fall, with a counterpoise supported by two stakes, placed before the corps du garde, advanced near the gate.

BACULO/METRY, s. [baculus and metreo, Gr.] the art of measuring accessible or inaccessible heights by means of staves or rods.

BAD, a. a relative term. Confined to natural agents, that which lessens or destroys the happiness of ourselves or others. Applied to moral agents, that which they voluntarily perform, in order to lessen or destroy their own happiness or that of others. Applied to persons, one who habitually transgresses the laws of duty prescribed by the Deity. Applied to actions, that which is performed contrary to any moral law. Applied to things, that which is prejudicial to our health, happiness, &c. Prov. A bad shift is better than none. Where bad's the best, naught must be the choice. A bad bush is better than the open field; that is, better to have any, though a bad, friend or relation, than to be quite destitute and exposed to the world.

BADAJOS, a city of Spain, capital of Estramadura. It is strongly fortified, and stands on an eminence on the S. side of the Guadiana, over which there is a bridge, built by the Romans. It is 175 miles from Madrid. Lat. 38. 49. N. Long. 6. 47. W.

BADE, BAD, the preter tense of Bui.

BA'DEN, a grand-duchy of Germany, on the Rhine, and abutting on Switzerland, about 150 miles in length, and at its greatest breadth 100 miles. It is hilly, but has abundance of fertile land. The Black Forest forms one of its principal physical features. It contains part of Lake Constance. Corn, wine, cattle, timber, are abundant; and in the mountains, the metals, coal, salt, &c. are found. The manufactures are various, but of no great importance. Its name, and the name of the next places, are derived from a German word applied to mineral springs, which abound.

BA'DEN, the name of three towns possessing mineral springs, one in the grand-duchy of Baden, 18 miles from Carlsruhe, called at times Baden-Baden; another in Austria, 15 miles from Vienna; and the third in Aargau of Switzerland, 13 miles from Zürich.

BADGE, s. a mark worn by a person to denote his dignity, profession, trade, rank, &c.

To BADGE, v. a. to set a mark on a person; to stigmatize.

BA'DGER, s. [badger, Fr.] in Law, one who is licensed to buy corn in one place and sell it in another, and is exempted from the punishment of an engrosser, by 6 Ed. VI. In Natural History, a wild animal about the size of a fox, feeding on fruits and flesh, formerly baited for sport in this country.

BA'DLY, ad. not agreeably to a person's wishes; in a manner inconsistent with a person's undertakings. Applied to health, sickly. Applied to the execution of any thing, not suitably to the ideas of taste, elegance, or proportion.

BA'DNESS, s. a quality which denotes a person habitually to transgress against the laws of his nature. Applied to things, it denotes that they are inconsistent with the good, ease, or pleasure of rational or irrational beings. Applied to roads, it signifies that they cannot be travelled with ease or pleasure. Applied to weather, it denotes a want of serenity, calmness, or sunshine. Applied to health, that it is infirm, and interrupted with sickness.

BAFFIN'S BAY, a gulf of North America, separating Greenland from the Arctic part of the continent, discovered by Wm. Baffin, an Englishman, in 1622, who attempted to find out a north-west passage to China and the East Indies.

To BA'FFLE, v. a. [baffle, Fr.] to render the care of another insignificant; to frustrate the intentions of another.

BA'FFLER, s. the person, or thing, which defeats, or renders any thing abortive.

BAG, s. [bag, Sax.] in its primary sense, a receptacle made of linen, silk, or leather, to contain any thing, in the shape of a long square when empty, and open only at one of its ends, which is called the mouth. In Natural History, the thin membrane, or cyst, containing the poison of vipers; that which contains the honey in bees, &c. In Commerce, a term of quantity; as, a bag of pepper, of anised, almonds, &c. In Botany, a distended bladder-like seed-vessel, opening on one side, as in bladder seed. To BAG, v. a. to put into a bag; to load with a bag.—v. n. to swell, so as to resemble a full bag.

BAGATE/LE, s. [Fr.] a trifle; a toy.

BAGDAD, or BAGDAT, a celebrated city of Asia, the capital of a province of the same name, on the banks of the river Tigris. This city, for many years the capital of the Saracen empire, was founded by Caliph Al Mansur, the second of the house of Al Abbas, and improved by the famous Haroun Alraschid. It has belonged to the Porte since the 17th century. The mosques are very splendid, and the caravanseras, or inns, and bazars, are numerous, but the rest of the city is beggarly and filthy. The climate is healthy, but the plague is a frequent visitant. Its population is about 30,000. Lat. 33. 20. N. Long. 44. 24. E.

BA'GGAGE, s. [baggage, Fr.] the utensils of an army, so called from their being packed up in bags. Bag and baggage, a low phrase, to signify all a person's goods. A woman of no character.

BAGNÈRES, the name of two towns in France, possessing mineral springs: one named de Bigorre, in the department of Haute Pyrénées; and the other de Luchon, in Haute Garonne.

BA'GNIO, (badno) s. [bagno, Ital.] a house for bathing; a brothel.

BA'GPIPE, s. a musical instrument, consisting of a leathern

bag, which is filled with wind by means of a little tube fixed to it, and stopped by a valve; and three pipes or flutes; the first called the great pipe, or drone; and the second the little one, which pass the wind out only at the bottom; the third has a reed, and is played on by compressing the bag under the arm when full, and opening or stopping the holes, which are eight, with the fingers. It is three octaves in compass. It is the national instrument in Scotland.

BAGUETTE, s. [Fr.] in Architecture, a little round moulding, less than an astragal; sometimes carved and enriched.

BAHAMA ISLANDS, or LUCA'YA ISLANDS, situated between 21 and 28 degrees of N. latitude, and 71 and 81 of W. longitude. They extend along the coast of Florida to the isle of Cuba, and are said to be 300 in number, mostly mere rocks; but 12 of them large and fertile: Providence, one of the least of these, is reckoned the most valuable. The island of Bahama, which is the largest, and gives name to the rest, is about 63 miles long, and 9 wide. Lat. 26, 40, to 27, 5. N. Long. 78, 10, to 80, 24. W. They belong to the English, and are fertile, producing mahogany and other woods, cotton, dyes, &c., which with turtle form their trade.

BAHAR, a province of Hindustan, bordering on Nepal, between Bengal and Oude. It is very fertile and well cultivated; and has a considerable cotton manufacture. The population is estimated at more than 10,000,000. It has a district and a town of the same name, the latter of which, 297 miles from Calcutta, is much fallen in importance.

BAHA, a province of the Brazilian empire, on the Atlantic, between Pernambuco and Rio Janeiro. It is very mountainous, but the plains about the river S. Francisco are fertile and healthy, and exhibit all the most enchanting peculiarities of a tropical climate. The S. Francisco is the largest river, the others are of less note. The great and staple productions of this province, the metals used for coin, have almost ceased to be of any consequence. Its trade consists in cotton, coffee, fruits, &c., drugs, and spices. St. Salvador is its capital.

BAI'A, a town on the Bay of Naples, opposite to Pozzuoli, which was the fashionable watering-place in the palmy days of ancient Rome. The country round abounds in mineral springs. Many interesting relics of the Roman town remain.

BAJAZET, the celebrated Turkish sultan of the 14th century, who, by skill and courage, raised the dominion of his family beyond all precedent, overcoming the European armies assembled by Sigismund of Hungary in a battle near Nicopolis, and gaining all the modern Turkey in Europe. He himself fell before the power of Timour, the Tatar monarch, and, according to the common report, was by him confined in an iron cage till his death in 1403, in his 56th year.

BAIKAL, a lake amidst the mountains of Siberia, in Asia, about 400 miles long, and between 20 and 50 miles wide. It receives the waters of nearly 200 streams of different magnitudes. It yields abundance of fish, which are the chief support of the inhabitants of the vicinity, since the severe climate and inhospitable soil almost prevent agriculture. It lies in the route by which the trade of Russia with China is carried on. The surrounding mountains contain iron ore and salt.

BAIL, s. [probably from bailler, Fr.] an act of freeing or setting a person at liberty who is arrested or imprisoned for an act civil or criminal, under security taken for his appearance; likewise the person who gives such security. Bail is either common or special. Common bail, is in actions of small concern, and is so called because any securities are taken. Special bail, is in cases of greater weight, as debts amounting to £10, where the sureties must be subsidy men, answerable to the value.

To BAIL, v. a. to deliver a person from arrest or imprisonment by being surety for his appearance at a certain day; to admit to bail.

BAIFABLE, a. that may be set at liberty by proper bail or sureties.

BAILIFF, s. [baillie, Fr.] an inferior officer of justice, appointed to execute writs, and other processes directed to the sheriff, and to summon county courts, sessions, assizes, and the like. There are also bailiffs of forests, and of manors, who direct husbandry, fell trees, gather rents, pay quit-rents, &c. A water-bailiff, is an officer appointed in port-towns, for the searching of ships, gathering the toll for anchorage, &c., and arresting persons for debt, &c., upon the water. Bailiff is likewise the chief magistrate of several corporations. Governors of some of the king's castles are likewise called bailiffs.

BAILLWICK, s. the place or jurisdiction of a bailiff, within his hundred, or the lord's franchise.

BAILLIE, MATTHEW, Du., an eminent physician of the last century, nephew to the celebrated Drs. Hunter. He pursued the study of anatomy with great zeal, and made that collection which now belongs to the College of Physicians at London. His works on medical subjects are esteemed. He was physician to George III., and others of the royal family, and died in 1823, aged 63 years.

BAILLIE, ROBERT, a Presbyterian divine, who, as one who opposed the introduction of Episcopacy into Scotland in 1637; as army chaplain on the rising of the Scots, in 1639; as commissioner to the king on behalf of the Scotch, in 1640; as a member of the Assembly of Divines at Westminster, under the Long Parliament; and above all, as a persevering though prejudiced recorder of all that fell under his notice during those turbulent times, has acquired some celebrity. He was a Professor of Divinity at Glasgow under Cromwell, and also after the Restoration, and has left many polemical and theological works. He died in 1662, aged 60 years.

BATILLY, JEAN SYLVAIN, a French astronomer of some note, who, on the summoning of the states-general by Louis XVI., was elected the representative of Paris. During the earlier period of the Revolution he took a prominent part on the popular side, and was elected mayor of Paris. But losing the favour of his admirers by his promptitude in suppressing a murderous tumult by martial law, and being disgusted at the execution of the king, he sought to escape from France, and being seized, was guillotined in 1793, aged 57 years. His fatal connexion with history, and not his scientific eminence, has preserved his name.

BAILEMENT, s. in Law, is a delivery of goods in trust, upon a contract, expressed or implied, that the trust shall be faithfully executed on the part of the bailee. As if cloth be delivered, or (in our legal dialect) bailed to a tailor to make a suit of clothes, he has it upon an implied contract to render it again when made, and that in a workmanly manner.

BAILEY, FRANCIS, one of the first practical English astronomers of the present century. He was one of the warmest and most active promoters of the Royal Astronomical Society; and his investigations respecting annuities, his catalogue of the stars, and his suggestions for the improvement of the Nautical Almanac, in addition to his experiments on the pendulum, have made him more serviceable to his age than others of far more brilliant parts and greater fame. He died in 1844, aged 70 years.

BAIRAM, s. amongst Mohammedans, a yearly festival, which they keep after the fast of Ramadan. It is concluded with a solemn prayer against the infidels, to extirpate Christian princes, or to arm them against one another, that they may have an opportunity to extend their law.

BAIRD, SIR DAVID, Bart., a British officer, who distinguished himself in India, and other scenes of war; having led the storming party at Seringapatam, served under Lord Cathcart at the bombardment of Copenhagen, and succeeded to the command of the army in the Peninsula, on the death of Sir John Moore at Corunna. It was his lot to experience in his post of command the full degradation of a soldier's life, being the object of continued neglect, even after most faithful service. He died in 1820, aged 72 years.

BAIREUTH, a principality of Bavaria in Germany. Its former capital, of the same name, stands on the Red Main. It is a fortified town, and is regularly and pleasantly built, with squares, gardens, &c. It has some small manufactures, and its principal trade is in corn. Lat. 49, 57. N. Long. 11, 40. E.

To BAIT, v. a. [batan, Sax.] to put meat on a hook, &c., in order to catch fish or other animals; to refresh oneself or cattle by eating on a journey; to attack with violence; to set dogs upon.

BAIT, s. [baizze, Teut.] a piece of flesh, or other lure, made use of to catch fish, or insnare animals. Figuratively, an allurements, or enticement; any thing which, under a specious appearance, contains mischief in itself, or produces it by its consequences. A refreshment on a journey, generally applied to cattle.

BAIT, WHITE, s. a small fish which is caught in great plenty, during the month of July, in the river Thames.

BAITING, s. an attack made by smaller or weaker beasts upon those which are larger and stronger. Bull-baiting is a sport peculiar to the English, and highly disgusting to moral and humane persons.

BAIZE, s. a coarse open woollen cloth.

TO BAKE, v. a. [bacan, Sax.] to dress or heat any thing in an oven. Figuratively, to harden with heat.

BAKEHOUSE, s. a place where bread is made, rendered eatable by the heat of an oven, and exposed to sale; and where other meat or pastry is dressed.

BAKER, s. one who subsists by making bread and baking.

BAKER, HENRY, a clever observer of the nature and habits of microscopic animals, and general cultivator of microscopic observation. His books contain much valuable information. He died in 1774, aged 77 years.

BAKER, SIR RICHARD, a writer of the 16th century, whose History of England, with the title of The Chronicle of the Kings of England, is well known. He died in 1645, aged about 75 years.

BAKEWELL, Derbyshire. It is seated on the river Wye, among the hills, and the market is good for lead and other commodities. It lies in a deep valley, and has a large church with a lofty spire. It is 151 miles from London. Market, Monday. Pop. 10,363.

BAKING, s. the art of preparing bread, and of cooking any victuals in an oven. In Otaheite, and many other islands of the South Seas, they bake their meat by means of hot stones.

BAKU, a district and a city in Persia. The whole region abounds in volcanoes and volcanic phenomena, and the earth itself seems to be saturated with naphtha, of which there are springs, which yield a considerable revenue. It oftentimes ignites, and then presents a most wonderful appearance.

BALA, Merionethshire, North Wales. It is seated on a flat near Plemberle, by the Welch called Lhyn Tegid, which is 13 miles in length, and 6 in breadth, and abounds with a fish called a guinad, resembling a salmon in shape, and in its taste is like a trout. The river Dee runs through this lake. It is 195 miles from London. Market, Saturday. Pop. 1255.

BALANCE, s. [TR.] equipoise. In Commerce, the amount, either in goods or money, which makes the two sides of an account even. In Mechanics, an accurately constructed pair of scales, which are a species of lever, with straight and equal arms, so poised upon the fulcrum as to indicate the least additional weight on either side. In Astronomy, one of the twelve signs of the zodiac, into which the sun enters at the autumnal equinox; also, the constellation, which gave its name to the sign. In a watch, it is the wheel whose vibrations regulate and equalize the motions of the rest. Balance of Power, a phrase used to indicate that position amongst the states of the civilized world, in which no one can violate the rights of another, without an immediate corrective being applied. Balance of Trade, in Political Economy, is the difference between the whole amount of the imports and exports of any state; or between the imports and exports of any state to and from any other state. Hydrostatic Balance, in Hydrostatics, an instrument for determining the specific gravity of any bodies, by comparing their weight in water with their weight in air.

TO BALANCE, v. a. [balancer, Fr.] to weigh in a pair of scales; to bring two bodies to an equipoise in a pair of scales. In mercantile affairs, the making the creditor and debtor side of an account equal by the addition of as much as the one is less than the other. Figuratively, to atone for former failings by one's future conduct; to be in a state of suspension.

BALANCEE, s. the person who weighs any thing, or makes weight in opposite scales.

BALANCING, among seamen, the contracting a sail into a narrower compass, in a storm, by folding up a part of it at one corner: distinguished from reefing, which is common to all the principal sails.

BALBI, GASPAR, a Venetian merchant, who has left us a record of his travels in Syria, Persia, India, the Burman Empire, &c., which is curious and valuable as a representation of the mercantile aspect of those countries during the 16th century.

BALBINUS, DECIMUS CELIUS, one of the emperors of Rome in the latter and troubled times of its existence. He reigned but a year, and was assassinated in 242 A. D.

BALBOA, VASCO NUNEZ DE, one of the Spanish adventurers, who, on the discovery of America, hastened under the sanction of their government to enrich themselves and spread the Spanish empire. He was the first European who beheld the Pacific Ocean. He was put to death in 1517, under a charge of treason against Spain, in the use of his power at Darien, in his 42nd year.

BALCONY, s. [balcon, Fr.] in Architecture, a projecture beyond a wall or building, generally before a window, supported by pillars or consoles, and surrounded by banisters or balustrades.

BALD, (bauld) s. [bal, Brit.] that hath lost its hair. Figuratively, mean, naked, bare. Applied to trees, stripped of their leaves. Applied to style in writing, unadorned; void of elegance.

BALDACHIN, s. [baldachino, Ital.] in Architecture, a canopy, supported with columns, serving as the covering to an altar. It properly signifies a rich silk, and was a canopy carried over the host.

BALDERDASH, (bailderdash) s. any thing jumbled together without taste, judgment, or discretion; i. e. baldray.

BALDLY, (baillily) ad. without hairs, applied to animals; without leaves, applied to trees; without ornaments, or elegance, applied to writings or buildings.

BALDNESS, (balddness) s. applied to animals, the want of hair; applied to trees, loss of leaves; and applied to writings, paintings, and buildings, want of ornament or elegance.

BALDOCK, Hertfordshire, seated between the hills, in a chalky soil, 37 miles from London. Market, Thursday. Pop. 1807.

BALDRICK, s. [bale and ric, Sax.] a belt worn hanging from the shoulder across the breast, on which the sword was formerly hung, not unlike that worn by our soldiers at present, to which they fasten their pouches.

BALDWIN, a name which often occurs in the history of Europe. It was borne by eight Counts of Flanders, one of whom married a daughter of Alfred the Great. Four Christian kings of Jerusalem have also borne it. The first was one of the confederated chiefs, who, under Godfrey de Bouillon, went on the first crusade. He distinguished himself through that arduous campaign, and when Godfrey, who was elected king of Jerusalem, died, succeeded him, and died in 1118. Two emperors of Constantinople were so named. The first was engaged in the fourth crusade, when they took Constantinople. He died in captivity amongst the Bulgarians, in 1206.

BALE, s. [valle, Fr.] a quantity of goods or commodities, packed in cloths, corded round very tight. Bale goods, are such as are exported in bales.

BALE, s. [bal, Sax.] something which deprives a person of happiness, or health; misery, anguish, calamity.

TO BALE, v. n. to pack goods up in a bale. Used by sailors for emptying water out of a vessel with buckets.

BALEA/RIC ISLES, the ancient Roman name by which the islands Majorca, Minorca, and Jirca, were known.

BALEFUL, a. full of anguish, pain, misery, mischief, and grief; very fatal, or destructive to health.

BALEFULLY, ad. in such a manner as produces sorrow, anguish, calamity, and sickness.

BALFOUR, SIR JAMES, one of the parties in the struggles and convulsions in Scotland at the time of the Reformation. He sided at first with the Reformers, and shared the slavery of Knox, but renounced his creed on his liberation. He was a parish-priest after this, and, as the custom was, was appointed to several legal offices. He was concerned in the murder of Darnley, and narrowly escaped punishment. It was through his contrivance that Mary's enemies gained possession of her letters, on which were rested the proofs of her guilt. After a career of plots and infamy, he died in 1583.

BALIZE, a town in Honduras, N. America, lying on the Gulf of Mexico, at the mouth of the river Balizo. It is surrounded by swamps, and communicates with the interior only by the river. Its trade is chiefly in mahogany, logwood, cochineal, and the other native productions. The population is about 5000. Lat. 17. 29. N. Long. 88. S. W.

BALK, (baulk) s. [balk, Teut.] a large piece of timber; a beam; a raft or pole over one out-house or barn. In Husbandry, a ridge of land left unploughed between two furrows, or at the end of a field. Figuratively, the disappointment of a person's curiosity or expectation, after having excited them.

To BALK, (haul) v. a. to disappoint a person's expectations after exciting them; to render a person's endeavours ineffectual; to frustrate; to miss, omit, when the contrary is expected.

BALKAN, a chain of mountains in European Turkey, which, connected with the E. extremity of the Alps skirting Dalmatia, crosses to the Black Sea, to Cape Eminah. Only that part of the chain which lies between the Black Sea and the junction of the Despot Dag, (the ancient Rhodope,) and which was anciently called Mount Hæmus, is properly the Balkan. In this portion, Mons Scardus is about 10,000 feet high; and Mons Scornius, 9000. Several tributaries of the Danube flow from the N. side; and between Rhodope and it, on the S., flows the ancient Hebrus.

BALKERS, (balckers) s. in Fishery, persons who stand on a cliff to inform the fishermen which way the shoal of herrings go.

BALKH, a town of Bokhara, formerly of considerable extent and importance, when it was under the government of Aurangzeb; but now in a state of decay, with fewer than 3000 inhabitants. Lat. 36. 48, N. Long. 67. 18, E.

BALL, (ball) s. [bol, Dan.] any thing of a round form. Ball and socket, in Mechanics, consists of a ball or sphere of brass, fixed in a concave semi-globe with an endless screw, that it may be movable horizontally, vertically, and obliquely, and is generally added to surveying instruments, to fix them in any position. An entertainment wherein people are assembled to dance. The public dances, wherein masters display the abilities of their scholars in this qualification, go by this name.

BALLAD, s. [balade, Fr.] a popular song containing the recital of some action or adventure; words set to music, and performed by a singer. At present the word is appropriated and confined to trifling pieces set to music, and sung about the streets.

To BALLAD, v. n. to make a person the subject of a ballad.

BALLAD-SINGER, s. one who sings ballads in the public streets; including the secondary idea of something very mean.

BALLAST, s. [ballaste, Belg.] a quantity of stones, sand, or gravel, laid in a ship's hold, to sink it to a proper depth, i. e. to make it draw more water, to sail upright, and to prevent its oversetting; and a ship is said to be in ballast when it has no other lading. Figuratively, that which is used to keep a thing steady.

To BALLAST, v. a. to lade a ship with stones, sand, &c., to keep her steady. Figuratively, to add something to keep any thing steady.

BALLETT, s. [Fr.] a stage dance, which is mixed with dramatic characters, and alludes to some actions in real life or fabulous history.

BALLIAGE, s. a small duty paid to the city of London by aliens and denizens, for certain commodities exported by them.

BALLIOL, the name of two kings of Scotland who held the crown as a fief of England. John Balliol having claimed to be king in opposition to Robert Bruce, on the failure of the direct line, Edward I. was appointed arbitrator, who decided in favour of Balliol, whom he easily made his vassal. Three years afterwards, the king (named Toom-tabad, empty jacket, by his subjects in derision) leagued with France against his superior, and was dethroned and imprisoned, but afterwards permitted to retire to his baronies in Normandy. He died in 1314. His son Edward, who shared the imprisonment and retirement of his father, after his death made a descent on Scotland, and, in spite of overwhelming opposition, gained the crown, but he kept it only by the help of Edward III., and eventually retired on a pension from the English king, and died in 1363.

BALLIOL COLLEGE, one of the colleges of Oxford, founded in the 13th century.

BALLOON, s. [balon, Fr.] in Aerostatics, a machine consisting of a large bag, enveloped in a net, and furnished with valves, which being filled with hydrogen gas, is specifically lighter than common air, and therefore ascends, and will carry with it a car, capable of seating one or more persons, suspended to it. The first balloons were inflated by means of a fire maintained below them. No particular use has yet been made of them. In Architecture, a ball or globe on the top of a pillar, &c., by way of a crowning. In Fire-works, a ball of pasteboard, filled with combustibles, which mounts to a considerable height, and bursts into stars.

BALLOT, s. [ballote, Fr.] a method of voting at elections, by which the individuals' votes are kept secret. It is done commonly by depositing a black or a white ball into a prepared box. But it may be secured by other plans.

To BALLOT, v. n. [balloter, Fr.] to choose by ballot.

BALLOTATION, s. the act of voting or electing by ballot.

BALLY, a small island lying near Java, in the Eastern Archipelago, which is about 70 miles long, and half as many broad, and produces rice, cotton, and the usual fruits of the East. The island is under the government of native rajahs; and the religion of the greatest part of the inhabitants is Brahminical.

BALLYCASTLE, Antrim, in Ulster, 113 miles from Dublin. It is noted for its adjacent collieries, and near it there is a chalybeate spring. It is a sea-port. Pop. 1607.

BALLYSHANNON, Donegal, Ulster, 101 miles from Dublin. It has a good harbour S. E. of Donegal Bay, and a bridge of 14 arches over a river which runs out of Lough Erne, and falling from a ridge of rocks about 12 feet, at low water forms a most beautiful and picturesque cascade. It is a great salmon-leap, and great quantities of that fish are got here. Pop. 3513.

BALM, (in pron. the l is dropt,) BA'LSAM, s. [baume, Fr.] an oily, resinous substance, flowing either spontaneously or by means of incision from plants possessed of medical properties. There are many kinds of balsams, but the most noted are these: 1. Balsam, or Balm of Gilead, so much valued in the country where it is produced, that it is esteemed a rich present to the Grand Signior. In Medicine, it opens obstructions of the lungs, and heals the worst kind of ulcerations. It is prescribed in asthmas, pleurisies, and whatever requires expectoration, &c. 2. Balsam of Peru, which is distinguished into two sorts, white and black. The former is called the Balsam of Incision, is of a white colour, and is excellent for wounds. The black is obtained by boiling the wood of the tree which produces it. The best is of a dark red colour, and of admirable fragrant. It heals, dries, and discharges, and is much used externally, not only in wounds, but in palsies, and rheumatic pains, and by perfumers for its scent. 3. Balsam of Tolu, is produced from a tree, a species of pine, which grows in New Spain; is of a deep yellowish colour, and of a most delicate scent. It flows from the tree in the consistency of turpentine, but by keeping becomes brittle. Its properties are the same, in general, with those of the Peruvian and Gilead kinds. 4. Balsam of Cypri, or of Cypaiba, is likewise the produce of a tree. It is of a thinner consistence than the common turpentine, but much more fragrant and detersive. 5. Balsam of liquid amber. It drops from a tree of Mexico, called liquid-amber styraciflua, by an incision in the bark. It is a resinous liquor, of a reddish yellow colour, and an acid aromatic taste, and of the consistence of Venice turpentine. Its essence strengthens the head and nervous system, and its oil is of singular efficacy both for external and internal uses. There are also many sorts of factitious or artificial balsams, made up by apothecaries and chemists, which it would be endless to specify. In Botany, balm is a species of mint.

To BALM, v. a. to anoint; to soothe; to mitigate.

BALMY, a. having the qualities of balm; soothing; fragrant; mitigating.

BALNEARY, s. [balnearium, Lat.] a bathing room.

BALNEATORY, a. [balnearius, Lat.] belonging to a bath or stove.

BA'LSAM. See BALM.

BALSAMICS, s. in Pharmacy, medicines that soften, restore, heal, and cleanse; of gentle attenuating principles, very friendly to nature.

BALSAMINE, in Botany, a genus of plants, to which the garden balsams belong.

BALTIC SEA, a large inland sea, in the N. of Europe, having Denmark and Sweden on the W., Russia and Poland on the E., Prussia and Germany on the S., and Sweden on the N. It has no tides, but there is always a superficial current sets through the Sound into the ocean, while the water, at a considerable depth, keeps rushing in. It receives the water of a vast number of rivers, and its water is not very salt. There are no considerable fisheries; but on its S. shore is found great quantities of amber. The Baltic is generally frozen in the winter.

BALTIMORE, Cork, Munster, with a good harbour; it stands on a headland, which runs into the sea 5 miles N. E. of the island of Cape Clear. It is 168 miles from Dublin. Pop. 168.

BALTIMORE, the third city in population, and the fifth in commerce, in the United States. It is in Maryland, and is seated on the Patapsco, 14 miles from Chesapeake Bay. The streets are regular and spacious, and the harbour, which is divided into three parts, is very fine. Among the public buildings, the city hall, the court-house, the Washington monument, and the column commemorating the defence of the city in 1814, are worthy of observation. There are four colleges in the town, and it is the seat of the university of Maryland. Its commerce is great. It is the greatest tobacco market in the States, and the greatest flour market in the world. It has numerous cotton factories, and other manufactories of cloth, iron, &c. Pop. 102,313, of whom 3199 are slaves. Lat. 39. 17. N. Long. 76. 36. W.

BALTIMORE, LORD, an Irish Romanist, who, in the reign of Charles I., founded the colony of Maryland, now one of the United States. It was at a time when penal statutes were in force against Romanists and others; this colony therefore tolerated all sects. Lord Baltimore died in 1676, never having seen his flourishing plantation.

BALTINGLASS, Wicklow, Leinster. It has extensive manufactories of linen, woollen, and diaper. It is situated on the river Slaney, 29 miles from Dublin. Pop. 1928.

BALUSTER, s. (balustr, Fr.) in Architecture, a small column or pilaster, from 1 3-4ths of an inch to 4 inches square, or diameter, sometimes adorned with mouldings, and placed with rails on stairs, and in the fronts of galleries and churches.

BALUSTRADE, s. in Architecture, an assemblage of one or more rows of balusters, high enough to rest the elbow on, fixed on a terrace, bridge, or building, by way of security, or for separating one part from another.

BALZA'C, JEAN LOUIS, a French writer of great excellence, who has the reputation of having formed the present polished language of France. Some of his works are deserving of notice for the kind and sound feeling they exhibit. He died in 1655, aged 61 years.

BAMBARRA, that district of W. Africa, lying on the Joliba, or Niger, inhabited by the tribe of Bambaras. It was first explored by Mungo Park, and has since that been visited by other adventurers on the Niger. The country has good pastures, and the soil is fertile in respect of common and needful vegetables. The gigantic baobab tree is a native of this district. Alligators are found in the river; and the termites or white ants abound. The trade of the country is almost monopolized by Moors, who have introduced Mohammedism, and exercise great influence.

BAMBERG, a large, populous, handsome city of Bavaria in Germany. It is 30 miles N. of Nuremberg. It is built in a pleasant situation, and has a fine cathedral and 9 churches. Population above 20,000. Lat. 49. 53. N. Long. 10. 59. E.

BAMBOO, s. in Botany, a genus of jointed reeds, that grow up to great height and considerable thickness; most of which are found in Hindustan, China, &c. Few plants are serviceable to man in so many and such various ways. It is a vegetable, a weapon, a building material; it is made into ropes, paper, sails, &c.; it will serve for bedsteads, chairs, pails, tiles, &c. &c.

To BAMBOO'ZLE, v. a. to trick or impose on a person, under the appearance of a friend; to confound, under pretence of assisting. A word of low and ludicrous use, and never found in polite writers.

BAMBOO'ZLER, s. one who, under specious pretences, tricks another; a cheat or sharper.

BAMBURGH, Northumberland. It stands on the sea-coast, and on the tall cliff still stands King Ida's castle, in which is a well cut 145 feet through the solid rock. It is now used in part for school-rooms, and in part as a look-out and signal tower. It is 329 miles from London. Pop. 4237.

BAMPTON, Devonshire, seated on a branch of the river Ex, in a bottom surrounded by hills, 164 miles from London. Market, Saturday. Pop. 2049. Also, a town in Oxfordshire, trading largely in fellmongers' wares, as leather jackets, gloves, breeches, and stockings. It is seated on the Isis, where it is navigable by boats, on the borders of Berkshire. It is 70 miles from London. Market, Wednesday. Pop. 2734.

BAMPTON LECTURE, an endowment at Oxford, for the preaching and printing of eight sermons yearly, on certain given theological subjects.

BAN, s. in its primary signification, any thing publicly proclaimed, commanded, or forbidden. In Church Government, a proclamation of the intention of two parties to enter into matrimony, which is done thrice in the church they belong to, before the marriage ceremony can be performed; a curse, or excommunication. The ban of the empire, is a public act or proclamation, whereby a person or town was suspended of all the rights of members of the German empire.

To BAN, v. a. [bannen, Belg.] to curse or devote to destruction; to excommunicate.

BANANA TREE, s. in Botany, a species of plantain which grows in Africa, and is exceedingly useful to the inhabitants. Its fruit is very delicious and nourishing; its leaves, which are very long, are used for umbrellas, and other purposes, and its trunk is encompassed with several sprigs, of which the negroes make cords.

BANBURY, Oxfordshire. It is a large, well-built town, and its markets are well served with provisions. It is the second town for beauty in the county, and seated on the river Charwell. The houses are generally built with stone, and the church is a large, handsome structure. It has been long noted for its cakes and cheese, and is 78 miles from London. Market, Thursday. Pop. 7303.

BANCA, an island of the Indian Archipelago, lying near Sumatra, on the N. E. It is about 130 miles long, and about 40 miles broad. It has mines of tin, which are exceedingly valuable. It produces good timber. Population about 15,000.

BAND, s. [band, Sax.] that which ties or keeps a person to a certain place, without liberty of going further; that by which a person or animal is kept from exerting their natural strength; the same as a bond. Figuratively, that which allies or connects persons; a company of persons so united; that which is bound round a person or thing, applied to dress; a linen neckcloth, or an imitation of the ends of one, worn by clergymen and lawyers. In Architecture, any flat, low member, or moulding, that is broad. In Surgery, a fillet, or piece of cloth, to surround or swathe certain parts that need assistance, called likewise a roller. Band of Pensioners, 140 gentlemen, who have £100 a year each, for attending the king on solemn occasions.

To BAND, r. a. to unite together by some common tie; to cover or bind with some narrow cloth, fillet, or band.

BANDA ISLANDS, a cluster of nine small islands, lying S. of Ceram, in the Indian Archipelago. They produce nutmegs, rice, oil, &c.

BANDAGE, s. [bandage, Fr.] a fillet, roller, or swathe, to bind up wounds, dislocated bones, &c.

BANDANA, s. a kind of silk handkerchief, first made in Hindustan, now manufactured in England.

BANDBOX, s. a light box made of pasteboard, designed for keeping bands, ribands, head-dresses, and other light and small pieces of dress in.

BANDELET, s. [bandelette, Fr.] in Architecture, any little band or moulding, like that which crowns the Doric architrave.

BANDEROL, s. [banderolle, Fr.] a little flag, in form of a guidon, extending more in length than breadth, and formerly hung out at the top of vessels.

BANDITTI, s. [Ital.] a name given to outlaws in Italy, and generally applied to those who live in companies, and support themselves by plunder.

BANDOG, s. a large, furious species of dog.

BANDOLEER, s. [bandoliers, Fr.] a large leathern belt, thrown over the right shoulder, and hanging down under the left arm, worn by the ancient musketeers, both for the sustaining of their fire-arms, and the carriage of their musket charges, which were put in twelve wooden cases coated with leather:—now out of use.

BANDON, Cork, Munster. A corporate town on the river Brandon, over which there is a bridge, whence this place is sometimes called Bandonbridge. The manufacture of linen is not so great here as formerly. Market, Saturday. Pop. 9049.

BANDROL, s. See BANDEROL.

BANDY, s. [bander, Fr.] a crooked piece of wood, towards the bottom broad, flat on one side, rounded at the other and at the handle, used in a game played with a ball.

To BANDY, v. a. to beat or toss to and fro; to give and take; to exchange; followed by will, to contend.

BANDY, v. c. crooked. Thus, bandy leg, is a crooked leg; and bandy-legged is applied to one that has crooked legs.

BANE, s. [baana, Sax.] that which destroys life. Figuratively, poison, ruin, destruction.

To BANE, v. a. to destroy, kill, or poison.
 BANEFUL, a. abounding with qualities destructive to life; poisonous.

BANEWORT, s. in Botany, a name of the deadly nightshade.

BANFF, a shire of Scotland, bounded on the S. by Aberdeenshire, on the N. by the Bay of Cromarty, on the W. by Murray, and on the E. by the German Ocean. It is 32 miles in length, and 30 in breadth. The highest mountains in Britain are in this shire; Cairngorm is 4080 feet high. There is good pasturage, and this, with the fisheries, is the chief trade. Agriculture has reached a very high degree of improvement here. Pop. 49,679.

BANFF, Banffshire, Scotland. It is well built on the declivity of a hill, with a harbour, often stopped by the shifting of the sands at the mouth of the Deveron, over which there is a handsome bridge of seven arches. It is 130 miles from Edinburgh. Pop. 3058.

To BANG, v. a. [Sax.] to cudgel; a low, familiar word. Figuratively, to use a person roughly, applied either to words or actions.

BANG, s. a blow with a stick or cudgel.

BANGALORE, a town of Mysore, Hindustan. It has fallen away from its former importance, and its fort, which was strong, is in ruins. It still has, however, a good trade, arising from its central position. It is 215 miles from Madras. Lat. 12. 57. N. Long. 77. 38. E. Its population is about 70,000.

BANGOR, Caernarvonshire, North Wales. This place was so considerable in ancient times, that it was called Bangor the Great, and defended by a strong castle. Its situation is low; the principal buildings are the cathedral and the bishop's palace; it is 255 miles from London. Market, Wednesday. Pop. 7232.

BANGOR, a city of Maine, United States. It is situated on the Penobscot river, and has a good harbour, though 60 miles from the sea. Its principal article of trade is lumber. The city occupies a pleasant and commanding situation, affording a fine view of the river and surrounding country. The buildings, both public and private, are not only neat, but many of them elegant. The theological seminary here is under the direction of the Congregationalists. Pop. 5627.

BANGUE, s. a species of opiate, in great use throughout the East. It is the leaf of a kind of wild hemp, growing in the countries of the Levant.

BANIA/NS, [Sansc.] the name by which travelling merchants from Hindustan are called. They have settled in most of the cities and ports of Persia, Arabia, and Egypt, in considerable numbers. They were thought, from their observance of the religious customs of their country, to be a separate sect.

BANIAS, the present name of the ancient Caesarea Philippi, a town of Palestine, at the foot of the Anti-libanus. It is a small place, and of no commercial importance.

To BANISH, v. a. [benir, Fr.] to make a person quit his own country. Figuratively, to drive from the mind; to expel.

BANISHER, s. one who expels from, or causes another to quit, his native country.

BANISHMENT, s. the state of a person banished. In Law, a kind of civil death, whereby a person is cut off from all benefits arising from the society or country in which he was born, obliged to quit it, and live in a foreign country. Oftentimes the punishment of capital crimes is remitted and converted into banishment for life; but it is then termed transportation.

BANK, s. [banc, Sax.] a great shoal of sand in the sea; a rising ground on each side of a river, washed by its waters, which it hinders from overflowing; earth cast up on one side of a trench between two armies; a bench where rowers sit, in vessels. In Commerce, an establishment for money transactions solely; at which traders, &c., deposit their money for security, or for interest, and from which they obtain temporary loans; and which, on the security of their deposits, issue promissory notes called bank notes, which can be exchanged for the legal money on demand. Almost all the dealings in money throughout the world are managed by them. Bank of England, is a chartered banking company, who manage the money affairs of the government, and enjoy special privileges in return. Joint-Stock Banks, are banking establishments whose capital is raised by shares, interest on which is paid from the profits. Savings Banks are establishments for receiving small sums as deposits, and allowing interest on them, under the control of the Commissioners for the Reduction of the National Debt.

To BANK, v. a. to enclose with banks. In Commerce, to place money in a bank.

BANKBILL, s. a promissory note given by the bank for money placed there, which is payable on presenting it.

BANKER, s. a private person intrusted with the cash of others, payable on demand.

BANKOK, the name of the capital of Siam. It stands on the river Menam, and is of considerable size, though neither well nor substantially built. On the river many persons live in houses built on rafts, in which they carry on their trades, and sell their goods. The palace is a collection of buildings enclosed by a wall, which is fortified according to the skill of the country. The temples are the only public buildings that pretend to ornament, and they are conspicuous from their numerous spires and decorations. The population, which is alleged to be above 400,000, consists chiefly of Chinese. It has a brisk trade with China. Lat. 14. 21. N. Long. 100. 50. E.

BANKRUPT, s. [banqueroute, Fr.] in Law, one who lives by buying and selling, and who, being unable to meet the demands of his creditors, and having concealed himself from them, or by some other act brought himself under the operation of the Bankrupt laws, has his effects seized and sold, or otherwise disposed of for their benefit. On compliance with these laws, the bankrupt may claim a certificate, which releases him from any further claims on the part of those creditors, and which is signed by a certain number of the creditors. The laws relating to bankruptcy for Scotland differ in some respects from those in force in England.

To BANKRUPT, v. a. to break; to disable one from satisfying his creditors.

BANKRUPTCY, s. the state of a person declared a bankrupt; wherein his goods are sold, and a dividend made to his creditors, in proportion to the amount of their respective debts.

BANKS, SIR JOSEPH, a botanist of great celebrity during the last century. He went out on several voyages for the purpose of gratifying his taste for botanical discovery, to Newfoundland, and to the Pacific Ocean, and to Iceland, under the auspices of the government. He promoted many other such voyages, and, by papers published in the periodicals of various societies, sought to advance his favourite science. His library and most of his collections are now in the British Museum. He died in 1820, aged 77 years.

BANKS, THOMAS, a distinguished English sculptor, whose monuments for Sir Eyre Cooke, and Captains Burgess and Westcott, are well known. Many others of his works which gave freer scope to his imagination, such as his alto-relief of Achilles consoled by Thetis and her nymphs, are placed very high by connoisseurs. He died in 1805, aged 70 years.

BANKSIE, s. in Botany, a genus of flowering shrubs, indigenous to Australia, some species of which are common in England now.

BANNER, s. [bannir, Brit.] a square flag, standard, colour, or ensign of an army.

BANNERET, s. an ancient order of the knights, or feudal lords, who, possessing large fees, led their vassals to battle under their own banner, when summoned by the king. The last knight banneret was created by George III., after the victory of Admiral Duncan over the Dutch.

BANNIAN, s. a morning gown, or undress.

BANNOCK, s. a cake made with oatmeal and peas, mixed with water; common in the north countries.

BANNOCKBURN, Stirling, Scotland, a village near which Robert Bruce completely defeated the English army of Edward II., in 1314. It now manufactures woollen cloths and leather. It is 29 miles from Edinburgh. Pop. 2206.

BANQUET, s. [fr.] a feast, or great entertainment.

To BANQUET, v. a. to entertain or give a feast to one or more persons; to feast or regale.

BANQUETER, s. a person who entertains another at a sumptuous feast; one who lives sumptuously, or keeps a good table.

BANQUETING-HOUSE, s. a house where public feasts are given. The banqueting-room at Whitehall, intended for the king to feast in, was designed by Inigo Jones; but is now used as a chapel, and is called Whitehall chapel. Here twelve clergymen of Oxford and twelve of Cambridge university preach alternately.

BANQUETTE, s. [Fr.] in Fortification, a small bank for soldiers to mount upon, when they fire behind an intrenchment.

BANSTICKLE, s. a very small species of fish, common in our rivers and brooks.

BANTAM, s. a district and city of the island of Java, in the Eastern Archipelago. It is in the possession of the Dutch, but has much declined in its importance as a trading place since Batavia became the seat of government. Lat. 6.2 S. Long. 106.9 E.

BANTER, s. the turning any thing to jest; the being pleasant; ridicule, or rallying.

To BANTER, v. a. to represent a person or thing in such a light, as to make them laughed at, or become objects of ridicule; to rally; to play upon.

BANTERER, s. one who represents the actions or expressions of another in a ridiculous light; one who plays on another on account of some fault.

BANTLING, s. a sucking child; an infant.

BANTRY, a barony, town, harbour, and bay of Cork, Munster. The barony is large, but barren and desolate; the bay, 20 miles long, a league broad, and in the middle 40 fathoms deep, is one of the finest in the world, being capable of holding all the shipping of Europe; the town is seated at the bottom of the bay, 104 miles from Dublin. Pop. 4082.

BAPTISM, s. [baptizmos, Gr.] a rite practised by all Christian communities, as the initiation of members to churches, except the Society of Friends. It was observed in the admission of a proselyte amongst the Jews. John, the forerunner of our Lord, practised it in his ministry. And our Lord's disciples baptized those who received him as the Messiah. It has been the theme of most fierce and unchristian controversy between different denominations of professed Christians; and is so at the present hour. The mode of administering it, the parties who should receive it, and its signification, or the privilege it confers, have been discussed for centuries, and the various opinions are maintained as hotly as ever.

BAPTISMAL, a. relating to, or done at, our baptism.

BAPTIST, s. [baptistes, Gr.] one who administers baptism, applied by way of eminence to St. John, our Saviour's forerunner; the name of a denomination of professed Christians who hold that baptism ought to be administered only to adult persons, on confession of faith.

BAPTISTERY, s. [baptisterium, Lat.] the place in the church where baptism is administered; the font.

To BAPTIZE, v. a. [baptizo, Gr.] to perform the ceremony of baptism; to christen.

BAPTIZER, s. one who administers the sacrament of baptism.

BAR, s. [barre, Fr.] a piece of wood or iron, made use of to secure the entrance of any place; a rock or sand-bank, at the entrance of a harbour or river, which keeps off ships of burthen; the part of a court of justice where the criminal generally stands, and within which the counsel and judge sit to try causes, so called from a wooden bar being placed there to keep off the crowd; an enclosed place at a tavern, coffee-house, &c., wherein a person sits to take care of and receive the reckoning. Figuratively, any obstacle, or thing which hinders; any thing which keeps the parts of a thing together. In Law, a peremptory exception against a demand or plea brought by a defendant in an action, that destroys the action of the plaintiff for ever; also the whole body of pleaders, or barristers. A bar of gold or silver is a lump of either, melted and cast into a mould without ever having been wrought. In Music, the straight strokes drawn perpendicularly across the lines in a piece of music, dividing it into portions according to the time; also, the portions so divided. In Heraldry, an ordinary resembling the fess, differing from it in narrowness, and that it may be placed in any part of the shield. Bar-shot, two half-bullets joined together by an iron bar, used in sea engagements for cutting down masts and rigging. Also a new French measure of weight, consisting of 204lb. 4oz. 4d. 54gr.

To BAR, v. a. to fasten or secure any entrance by a piece of iron or wood. Figuratively, to exclude, except against; to hinder, or put a stop to.

BAR, the name of three towns of France. Bar-sur-Aube lies on the river Aube, and is the capital of the department of that name. Its situation is agreeable, and its trade consists of the wine produced in its vicinity, and its manufactures of brandy, oil, &c. It is 125 miles from Paris: and its population is about 4000.

Bar-sur-Ornain, so named from the river on which it lies, is capital of the Meuse department. It has manufactures of cotton, woolen goods, gloves, hats, &c., and confectionery. It is 152 miles from Paris, and has a population of above 12,000. Bar-sur-Seine, in the department of Aube, lies on the Seine, over which it has a good bridge. Iron is found in the neighbourhood, and there is a marble quarry also. It is 113 miles from Paris, and has a population of less than 3000.

BARB, s. [barba, Lat.] in its original signification, a beard. In its secondary, any thing that grows in its place, or resembles it. The piece of wire at the end of a fish hook, which makes an angle with the point, and hinders it from being extracted; likewise the pieces of iron which run back in the same manner from the point of an arrow, and serve for the same purpose.

BARB, s. [a contraction of Barbary,] a horse brought from Barbary, esteemed for its beauty, vigour, and swiftness. Also a variety of pigeon having a red circle round their eyes.

BARBACAN, s. [barbacane, Fr.] in Architecture, a long narrow canal, or passage for water, in walls, where buildings are liable to be overflowed; likewise to drain off water from a terrace; an aperture in the walls of a city, to fire muskets through at an enemy. In Fortification, a fort at the entrance of a battery; an outward defence or fortification to a city; a watch-tower.

BARBADOS, the easternmost of the Windward Islands in the W. Indies. It is in general a level country, though not without hills; is 21 miles in length, and 14 in breadth. It had formerly a good deal of wood, which is now almost all consumed with carrying on the sugar-works. The commodities which they export are, sugar, rum, cotton, indigo, and ginger; and they have most of the fruits common to the climate. They have no manufactures, nor do they breed many cattle; receiving their corn, cattle, flesh, and clothes and furniture from the United States and England. The hurricanes are not so violent here as in the other Caribbees, and the trade-winds make the climate comparatively healthy. There are some remarkable bituminous springs in this island, which yield a kind of tar. It is 60 miles E. of the island of St. Vincent, and 84 S. E. of Martinico. The capital town is St. Michael, or Bridge-town, which lies in Long. 59.36 W. Lat. 13.10 N. The population is above 100,000.

BARBARIAN, s. [barbarus, Lat.] in its primary sense, applied by the Greeks and Romans to all that were not of their own nation, i. e. a foreigner; but in process of time it acquired a secondary idea of cruelty, and was used to denote a person void of all the elegant embellishments of life, and the social affections of benevolence, good-nature, and humanity.

BARBARIC, a. [barbaricus, Lat.] foreign; brought from countries at a great distance.

BARBARISM, s. [barbarismus, Lat.] in Grammar, an offence against the purity of style or language; uncultivated ignorance. Applied to manners, rudeness; want of politeness; savageness; cruelty.

BARBARITY, s. [barbaritas, Lat.] incivility, unpoliteness. Applied most commonly to manners, cruelty, savageness, want of pity, kindness, and humanity.

BARBAROSSA, a name given to two famous Turkish corsairs, who were the first Turkish rulers of Algiers. The elder, Arrojé, by his skill and daring as a pirate, acquired power sufficient to seize on a portion of the Mediterranean coast of Africa, whence he continually made irruptions by sea and land on his neighbours, till he took Algiers, and became so formidable that the emperor Charles V. sent out an army against him, surprised by which, he fell in the year 1518. His brother Káradin was chosen his successor, who, to maintain his sovereignty, obtained the title of viceroy from the Porte, and aid in the way of soldiers. He gained great fame in the wars, which, as admiral to the Porte, he carried on, in conjunction with France, against the emperor and his allies. He died in 1546.

BARBAROSSA, a surname given to the celebrated Frederic I., emperor of Germany. He was nephew to Conrad III., his predecessor, and on his death was elected emperor by his recommendation. His reign was one of the most splendid in the history of Germany. By his firmness and moderation he preserved the internal peace of his empire, establishing the duchy of Austria almost as an independent state, and taking from Henry the Lion all his fiefs except Brunswick and Lüneburg. He made no fewer than six irruptions into Italy, with a view to suppress the spirit of insubordination to imperial mandates which Arnould of Brescia preached at Rome, and all the great trading cities cherished as their life. He entered Rome as a conqueror twice; Tortona, Crema, Milan, Spoleto, fell before his arms; Ancona successfully defied him; a similar check at Alexandria, and a defeat received from the Milanese at Lignano, led him to treat with the republics, and after six years to the treaty of Constance, by which their independence was fully recognised. Frederic's career ended on the frontiers of Syria, whither, impelled by the military fanaticism of his times, he went on a crusade, in conjunction with Philip Augustus and Richard Cœur de Lion. Near Selenicia, a cold mountain-spring tempted him to bathe, and he died in his 69th year, in 1190.

BARBAROUS, a. [barbarus, Gr.] applied to learning, ignorant; unacquainted with the polite arts and sciences. Applied to manners, void of benevolence, pity, or compassion; cruel; savage; inhuman.

BARBAROUSLY, ad. in such a manner as shows a mind unpolished with learning; a stranger to politeness, pity, compassion, or humanity.

BARBAROUSNESS, s. incivility of manners; cruelty.

BARBARY, that part of Africa which extends along the Mediterranean from Egypt to the Atlantic, and contains Tripoli, Tunis, Algiers, and the empire of Morocco. It was known to the ancients by the name of Mauritania, Numidia, and Proper Africa. It is fertile in corn, maize, wine, citrons, oranges, figs, almonds, olives, dates, and melons. Their chief trade consists in their fruits, in their horses called barbs, Morocco leather, ostrich-feathers, indigo, wax, tin, and coral. The inhabitants are chiefly Mohammedans; and there are some Jews, but few Christians, except the slaves. See ALGERIA, MOROCCO, &c.

BARBAULD, Mrs. ANNA L., a well-known writer of works intended for the young, in conjunction with her brother, Dr. Aikin. Her husband, who was a Unitarian minister, kept, for many years, a school at Palgrave, Suffolk, in which she aided, with great success. The Evenings at Home and Early Lessons have not yet lost their popularity. Her other writings were of a more general character. She died in 1825, aged 82 years.

To BARBECUE, v. a. [Ind.] to dress a hog whole, by splitting it to the back-bone, and broiling it upon a gridiron, raised two feet above a charcoal fire.

BARBECUE, s. hog dressed whole after the West Indian manner.

BARBEL, s. [barbus, Lat.] in Zoology, a large, strong, but coarse river fish; so called from its having a barb or wattle under its chin.

BARBER, s. [barbier, Fr.] one who shaves.

BARBER SURGEON, s. one who, in olden time, practised bleeding, drawing of teeth, &c., together with the trade of a barber.

BARBERINI, the name of an ancient Italian family, from whom the Barberini Palace at Rome derives its name. The Portland Vase in the British Museum is also known by this name.

BARBERRY, s. in Botany, a bush, which grows in hedges to the height of eight or ten feet, with pretty yellow flowers, whose berries have an agreeable acid flavour, when preserved.

BARBUDA, one of the Leeward Islands, in the West Indies, possessed by the English, about 21 miles long, and 12 broad. The land is low, but fertile. The inhabitants are chiefly engaged in raising corn, and breeding sheep, kids, fowls, and other stock, for the neighbouring islands. They likewise cultivate citrons, pomegranates, oranges, raisins, Indian figs, pepper, indigo, &c. Here is no harbour, but a well-sheltered road on the W. side. It is near 20 miles N. E. of St. Christopher's. Lat. 17. 36. N. Long. 61. 46. W. Population less than 600.

BARCA, an inland district of Tripoli, in Africa. Its inhabitants are all Arabs, and it is governed by their sheikh. It has two small towns, of which Bengazzi is the chief.

BARCAROLLE, s. [Ital.] a name by which the popular songs of the boatmen, &c., at Venice, are designated.

BARCELONA, the capital of Catalonia, in Spain. It is the see of a bishop, and has a good harbour protected by a mole. It is divided into the New and Old Towns, which are separated from each other by a wall and a ditch. The inhabitants carry on an extensive trade, chiefly in the wines produced by the province. It is strongly fortified by walls and a citadel; and its population exceeds 160,000. Lat. 41. 21. N. Long. 2. 9. E.

BARCELO'NA, a town of Columbia, S. America. It stands on the Neveri, a short distance from the sea. It is protected by a fortress, and has some trade, as it is in the line of communication between the interior of the Columbia and the chief W. Indian Islands. It has, besides, some fisheries. Its population is about 10,000. Lat. 10. 10. N. Long. 64. 47. W.

BARCLAY, ALEXANDEI, one of the old English writers, whose works helped in the formation of our language. He was a Franciscan monk, and after the suppression of the monasteries held livings in the English Church. He died in 1552, aged about 70 years.

BARCLAY, JOHN, the author of the well-known poetical romance, Argenis, and other works. He was a Romanist, and spent the greater part of his life away from his native country, Scotland; and died at Rome in 1621, aged 40 years. The Argenis has been translated out of its original Latin more than once, but the translations are antiquated, and do not express the clearness and force of the original. Amongst its admirers, Coleridge, Cowper, and D'Israeli, in modern days, are to be ranked.

BARCLAY, ROBERT, of Ury, near Aberdeen, Scotland, author of the learned and masterly Apology for the Quakers, was the son of one of the royalists of the times of the civil wars of the 17th century. He was educated at Paris, and became attached to Romanism; but on his return, after a few years, he adopted the views his father had already espoused, and joined the Society of Friends. In connexion with this change he studied the original Scriptures, and the works of the Fathers and of eminent theologians, with great assiduity; and the result was the exposition and defence of his doctrinal and ritual views, with great clearness and logical acumen. He frequently engaged in journeys for the interest of his denomination, and was well received at the court of Charles II. and James II. He died in 1690, aged 42 years.

BARCOCHÉBAS, a Jew, who, in the second century, pretended to be the Messiah; and being a man of great intrepidity, and his fellow-countrymen being cruelly harassed by the Romans, he was able to collect such a force that he took Jerusalem, and made himself a king. The Rabbi Akiba, and others of the most learned of the nation, were deceived respecting him, and fell with him when the Romans recaptured the city in 135.

BARD, s. [bardd, Brit.] among the ancient Britons, Danes, and Irish, an order of men who used to sing the great exploits of heroes to the harp, were persons in the highest esteem among all ranks of people, and treated with peculiar reverence by kings, &c., as persons whose calling was sacred. Even in the present times, the word implies a poet.

BARDSEY, or the island of the Bards, called also the Isle of Saints, is a small island in the Irish Sea, connected with Caernarvonshire, Wales, and near Cardigan Bay. It is about two miles long and one broad; and has fertile soil in some parts, which produce good corn; though the higher parts are barren. The sea-cliffs are the resort of water-birds, whose eggs are part of the trade of the island. Pop. 50.

BARE, a. [bare, Sax.] uncovered; without any dress; naked. Figuratively, without ornament; destitute, or in want of necessities; not joined with any thing else; alone; solitary; very much worn; that has lost its knap; threadbare.

To BARE, v. a. to strip.

BARE, BORE, the preter. of To BEAR.

BAREFACED, a. with the face uncovered. Figuratively, without dissimulation or disguise; with great effrontery or impudence. Generally used in a bad sense.

BAREFACEDLY, ad. in such a manner as shows a bold, daring impudence.

BAREFOOT, a. without shoes, or any covering to the feet.

BAREHEADED, a. without a hat, or any covering to the head.

BAREILLY, an extensive town of Delhi, in Hindustan, standing on the banks of the Joach and Sungkra rivers, which are tributaries of the Ganges. It has manufactories for cutlery, furniture, &c.; and its population is about 70,000. Lat. 28. 23. N. Long. 79. 16. E. 805 miles from Calcutta, and 142 from Delhi.

BARELY, ad. without clothes, applied to dress; without any thing else, or only, applied as an expletive.

BARENESS, s. applied to dress, either total nakedness, or a want of some necessary part of attire; meanness, with respect to the quality of clothing.

BARETTI, JOSEPH, an Italian who settled in England, and conducted the foreign correspondence of the Royal Academy. He was the author of a good Italian and English Dictionary, and of some entertaining volumes of letters, describing his travels on the continent, besides other works. In his controversies, into which he fell in Italy, with other authors, he evinced by far too great asperity, which made it needful for him twice to leave his country. He died in England, in 1789, aged 75 years.

BARGAIN, (bargain), s. [bargen, Brit.] a voluntary agreement made between traders to deliver or sell a commodity at a price agreed on; the thing bought or sold; the conditions of sale. SYNON. Bargain is more limited, relating to sale. Agreement and Contract are more general, implying any sort of stipulation; with this difference between them, that Agreement seems to denote a verbal one; Contract, one that is written.

To BARGAIN, v. a. to agree to, or make terms for, the sale of any thing.

BARGAINEE, s. the person who agrees to the condition of a bargain or purchase.

BARGAINER, s. one who proposes the conditions of a bargain.

BARGE, s. [bargie, Belg.] a large flat-bottomed vessel used for the carriage of goods in rivers; likewise a state or pleasure-boat, built with a room capable of containing several persons.

BARI, a town, in a province of the same name, part of the Sicilian dominions in Italy. It is on the sea-coast of the Adriatic, 140 miles from Naples, and has a harbour protected by two moles. It is a very ancient town, and abounds in relics of former times. The church of St. Nicholas, and the castle, are very interesting from their architecture. It has a royal college; and a population of about 20,000. Lat. 41. 8. N. Long. 16. 55. E.

BARILLA, s. in the glass trade, a sort of potash imported from Spain, being the ashes of a plant called saltwort, which is collected from the coasts.

BARIUM, s. in Chemistry, a metal discovered by Sir Humphrey Davy. It is of a dark-grey colour, and a lustre inferior to cast iron. It effervesces strongly when thrown into water, from the escape of hydrogen. It is the metallic base of the alkali, baryta.

BARK, s. [barck, Dan.] in Botany, the outside covering of those parts of a plant which are above the ground, and which is divided into the inner and living bark, which is renewed yearly, and the outer or dead bark, which separates from the plant when of no further use. Bark is also used in conversation for the Cinchona, or Jesuit-bark, a most valuable medicine in febrile diseases; it is the bark of a tree, originally growing in Peru, with the properties of which the natives were acquainted. Oak bark is used for tanning; and the bark of some foreign trees is used for dyeing. Cork is the bark of an evergreen oak found in the south of Europe. Bark-bed, is a bed formed of the refuse of tanyards, for the forcing of delicate plants in pots.

BARK, BARQUE, s. [barque, Fr.] a small vessel with one deck only, used in transporting merchandises either by sea or on rivers.

To BARK, v. a. to strip off the rind or bark of a tree.

To BARK, v. n. [biornean, Sax.] to make a noise like a dog, when he gives the alarm.

BARK-BARED, a. stripped or robbed of the bark.

BARK-BINDING, s. in Gardening, a disease incident to trees, wherein the bark is so close, that the vegetation, and circulation of the sap, is hindered. It is cured by splitting the bark, or cutting it along the grain.

BARKER, s. applied to a litigious, noisy, or clamorous person.

BARKER, EDMUND HENRY, of Thetford, Norfolk, was an indefatigable compiler and editor of works relating to the classics, and school editions of classic authors. Noah Webster's English Dictionary, Dunbar's Greek Lexicon, and Valpy's Stephens's Thesaurus, were edited either wholly or in part by him. He died in 1839, aged 50 years.

BARK-GALLING, s. in which the bark or rind of a tree is galled or fretted with thorns, &c., which is cured by binding clay on the galled places.

BARKING, Essex. It is seated on the river Roding, not far from the Thames, in an unwholesome air. It has been chiefly noted for a large monastery, now in ruins, there being nothing left standing but a small part of the walls and a gate-house. It is 7 miles from London. Market, Saturday. Pop. 8718.

BARLEY, or BARKLEY, Gloucestershire. It is seated on a branch of the river Severn; and formerly was of some note for a nunnery; and has still the title of a barony. It is 112 miles from London. Market, Wednesday. Pop. 4405.

BARKEY, Hertfordshire. 34 miles from London. Pop. 1291.

BARKEY, a. that consists of, or has the properties of, bark.

BARLETTA, a sea-port of the Adriatic, in the Sicilian dominions, 112 miles from Naples. The town is walled, and defended by a citadel. The harbour is sheltered by a mole, and there is a lighthouse on an island which in part protects it. It has a considerable trade, and a population of nearly 20,000. Lat. 41. 20. N. Long. 16. 18. E.

BARLEY, s. [bar, Heb.] in Botany, the grain whence beer is extracted. Pearl-Barley, is the kernel of barley stripped of its husk, and passed through a mill which grinds off the ends, giving the grain a round, pearly appearance.

BARLEY-BRAKE, s. a kind of rural play, which consists in swiftness of running.

BARLEY-CORN, s. a grain of barley; used in long measure, as the third part of an inch.

BARLEY-MOW, s. a heap of barley laid together, and formed into a rick or stack.

BARLOW, JOEL, a Congregational minister of Massachusetts, United States, who, during the war of Independence, served in the army as a volunteer and chaplain. Being in England after the peace, and having relinquished the ministry, he was deputed by the "Constitutional Society" to the National Convention of France. He was then sent as consul-general for the States to Algiers, and afterwards as minister-plenipotentiary to France. He died as he was seeking an interview with the emperor at Vienna, in 1812, aged 58 years. In his own country his poems and other writings have gained him fame as much notice as his diplomatic engagements.

BARM, s. [burn, Brit.] that which is put into drink to make it work, or into bread to swell it, and make it lighter; commonly called yeast.

BARMY, a. that has been well fermented or worked with barm or yeast.

BARN, s. [bern, Sax.] a place, or house, wherein any grain, hay, &c. is stored; also, the place where corn is threshed.

BARNACLE, s. [probably of bearn, a child, and aac, Sax. an oak.] in Natural History, a bird of the goose kind, common in the western isles of Scotland; also a kind of shell-fish which is found sticking to the bottoms and sides of ships in certain seas. It was formerly imagined that the barnacle grew on an oak, whence falling into the water it became first a shell-fish, and afterwards a sea-fowl.

BARNARD CASTLE, Durham. It takes its name from a castle (a large structure, situated on a rock by the river, a great part of which is still standing) built here by Bernard Balliol, great-grandfather of John Balliol, king of Scotland. Here are some manufactures of bridles, reins, belts, stockings, serges, and camlets. It is seated on the river Tees, 246 miles from London. Market, Wednesday. Pop. 4452.

BARNET, CHIPPING, Hertfordshire. It was a great thoroughfare, but now is known chiefly as the scene of the battle between the Roses, in which Warwick fell. It is 12 miles from London. Market, Monday. Pop. 2485.

BARNEVELDT, JOHANN VAN OLDEN, the distinguished champion of liberty in the United Provinces, in the 16th century. He was actively engaged against Philip II., and went as ambassador to the court of Elizabeth to obtain aid. He strove incessantly to avert the evils which the pride and incompetency of the Earl of Leicester threatened them with, and at length procured his recall. He succeeded in gaining such help from James I. and Henry IV., that at length a treaty with Spain was concluded. And now Barneveldt's trouble began. He opposed the ambition of Maurice, the son of the celebrated William of Orange; became embroiled by his adversaries in a theological controversy about the doctrines of Arminius; and at length was seized, tried, and beheaded in 1619, aged 72 years.

BARNSELY, Yorkshire, W. R. It is seated on the side of a hill, and has a manufacture of wire. It is commonly called Black Barnsley, and is 171 miles from London. Market, Wednesday. Pop. 12,310.

BARNSTABLE, Devonshire. It is a corporate town, and is seated on the river Tau, over which there is a good bridge; and the market is large for cattle, corn, and provisions. It is a sea-port, but has lost its importance. It is 191 miles from London. Market, Friday. Pop. 7902.

BARODA, a city of Gujerat in Hindustan, surrounded by a fertile and well-cultivated country. It is built carelessly, and fortified, but not strongly. The population is about 100,000. It is the residence of the Guicowar, or chief of the Mahtrats. Lat. 22. 21. N. Long. 73. 23. E.

BAROMETRICAL, s. [baros and metro, Gr.] a machine for measuring the weight of the atmosphere, and the variations in it, in order chiefly to determine the changes of the weather. It is a glass tube filled with mercury, hermetically sealed at one end; the other open, and immersed in a vessel of mercury; so that, as the weight of the atmosphere diminishes, the mercury in the tube will descend, and as it increases, the mercury will ascend; the column of mercury suspended in the tube being always equal to the weight of a column of the atmosphere of equal diameter.

BAROMETRICAL, a. relating to, or tried by the barometer.

BARON, s. [possibly from baro, Lat.] a term which formerly included all the greater nobility. It is now used as a degree of nobility next below that of a viscount, and above that of a baronet. Their coronet is a gold circlet with six pearls. Parliamentary barons are not barons by name only, but are all by birth peers, noblemen, and are summoned by the king "to treat of the weighty affairs of the nation, and to give counsel upon them." They have the following immunities and privileges: in criminal causes they are judged by their peers only, and are not put on oath, but deliver the truth upon honour; are not impanelled on a jury, nor liable to certain writs. Besides these, the two archbishops and all the bishops of England are parliamentary barons, and enjoy all the privileges of the others, excepting that they are not judged by their peers, but by a jury of twelve. Barons of the Exchequer, are four judges, who determine causes between the king and his subjects, in affairs relating to the revenue and the exchequer. Barons of the Cinque Ports, are members elected two for each, who have seats in the House of Commons. Baron and femme, in Law, are husband and wife. Baron and femme, in Heraldry, is when the coats of arms of a man and his wife are born pale in the same escutcheon.

BARONAGE, s. [baronagium, low Lat.] the body of barons; the dignity, or lands, which give title to a baron.

BARONESS, s. [baronessa, Ital.] the lady or wife of a baronet.

BARONET, s. [diminutive of baron,] a degree of honour next to a baron, created by King James I. to promote the plantation in Ulster, in Ireland, for which purpose each of them was to maintain 30 soldiers in Ireland, for three years; and they have precedence of all knights, except those of the garter, bannerets, and privy counsellors. They bear, as an honorary augmentation to their arms, the arms of Ulster, viz. argent, a hand gules; and they are addressed by the title, Sir.

BARONIUS, CÆSAR, a writer on Ecclesiastical History, whose numerous works are of considerable authority. He was made a cardinal by Clement VIII., and died in 1607, in his 69th year.

BARONY, s. [baronie, Fr.] the lordship or fee of a baron, whether spiritual or temporal.

BAROSCOPE, s. [baros and skopeo, Gr.] an instrument to show the alteration of the weight of the atmosphere.

BARRA, the name of a district occupied by a tribe of Mandingoes at the mouth of the Gambia, in W. Africa. It is fertile, and the inhabitants bestow great labour in its cultivation. They profess the Mohammedan religion, and are in number about 200,000.

BARRACAN, s. [barracan, or barracan, Fr.] a kind of stuff resembling camlet, but coarser, and used for surtouts, or upper garments against the rain. They are manufactured principally in England, Flanders, and the North of France.

BARRACK, s. [barracca, Span.] a small hut erected by the Spanish fishermen along the shore; likewise buildings raised to lodge soldiers in.

BARRA'S, PAUL JEAN F. N., COUNT DE, one of the prominent actors during the French Revolution. He was amongst the commissioners from the Convention who sat in Toulon after its evacuation by the English; and during the tumults preceding the fall of Robespierre, was appointed General-in-chief by the Convention, in opposition to the party of the Commune. On the insurrection of the 13th Vendémiaire, he was again put at the head of the military, and Napoleon Buonaparte under him suppressed it. He was a member of the Directory, and on the appointment of Buonaparte, retired from public employment, in which he never afterwards appeared. He died in 1820, aged 74 years.

BARRATOR, s. [barat, old Fr.] a litigious person, or one who is fond of quarrels and law-suits.

BARRATRY, s. in Common Law, the moving or maintaining of suits in the disturbance of the peace; and the taking and detaining houses, land, &c. by false pretences.

BARRY, one of the western isles of Scotland, eight miles in length, and three in breadth, rocky on the east side, and arable land on the west. There is plenty of cod and ling near this island, and the fisheries are very productive. Pop. 1977.

BARREL, s. [baril, Brit.] a cylindrical wooden vessel, which serves for holding several sorts of wares and merchandise. The English barrel, wine measure, contains 31 and a half gallons; beer measure, 36 gallons; and ale measure, 32 gallons. It denotes also a certain weight of several merchandises, which differ according to the several commodities. The barrel of herrings ought to contain 32 gallons wine measure, which amount to about 28 gallons old standard, making about 1000 herrings. The barrel of salmon must hold 42 gallons; of eels, the same; and of soap, 256 pounds. In Mechanics, it is the cylinder of a watch, about which the spring is turned. In Gunnery, it is the cylindrical tube of a gun, pistols, &c., through which the bullet is discharged. In Anatomy, it is a cavity behind the tympanum of the ear, about four or five lines deep, and five or six wide, lined with a fine membrane, on which are several veins and arteries. In this cavity are four small solid bones, not covered with the periosteum as the rest of the bones of the body are.

To BARREL, v. a. to put into, or enclose in a barrel.

BARREN, a. [bare, Sax.] applied to animals or soils, not able to produce its like. Applied to genius, not able to produce any thing new.

BARRENLY, ad. in an unfruitful manner.

BARRENNESS, s. that imperfection in any animal or vegetable that renders it incapable of bringing forth, or propagating its kind. Also want of invention, sterility of thought, &c.

BARRICADE, s. [barricade, Fr.] any defence in the military art raised against an enemy hastily, made with vessels, carts, baskets of earth, trees, or palisades. Figuratively, any thing which obstructs or hinders the motion of any thing.

To BARRICADE, v. a. [barricader, Fr.] to stop up a passage; to hinder the advance or motion of any thing.

BARRICAADO, s. [barricada, Span.] in Fortification, a defence made with stakes shod with iron, crossed at the top with battons, and erected in passages or breaches.

To BARRICAADO, v. a. to block up a passage; to hinder an enemy from passing any defile or place.

BARRIER, s. [barrière, Fr.] that which keeps an enemy off, or hinders him from entering into any country; a fence made at a passage, entrenchment, &c., to stop up its entry. Figuratively, an obstruction or hindrance; a boundary or limit.

BARRISTER, s. one who is qualified, from his having performed his exercises at the inns of courts, and by licence from the lord high chancellor, after a proper standing, to plead the cause of clients in a court of justice.

BARROW, s. [berewe, Sax.] any carriage moved or set in motion by the hand; hence a hand-barrow is a frame of boards on which things are carried by handles at its extremities between two men. A wheel-barrow is that with one wheel at the head, by which it moves when pushed forward by the handles at the other end.

BARROW, s. [beorg, Sax.] a hill or mound raised in honour of warriors who died in the field of battle, by the ancient Britons, and the Saxons.

BARROW, ISAAC, D. D., an eminent theologian and mathematician of the English Church. He was connected with Cambridge through all the changes of the 17th century; but during the years immediately preceding the Restoration, he was travelling through the south of Europe. He held on his return several of the professorships in succession, and was Master of Trinity when he died in 1677, aged 47 years. He was greatly extolled during his life for his mathematical attainments, which were considerable, but have been completely obscured by the discoveries and inventions of Sir Isaac Newton, for whom he entertained a very warm affection. His theological works are esteemed for their clearness and vigour of thought.

BARROW, a river in Ireland, which rises in King's county, and after a course of about 90 miles, flows into the sea at Waterford harbour. By means of a canal from Athy, which lies on this river about 60 miles from the sea, there is an inland navigation from Waterford to Dublin.

BARROW, POINT, a low sandy spit, of but a few miles in breadth, projecting into the Arctic Ocean, and formed apparently by the force of the icebergs, which, running aground in the shallow water, have forced up the loose soil thus. Lat. 71. 23. N. Long. 156. 20. W.

BARROW'S STRAITS, the name now given to what was called Lancaster Sound. They lead from Baffin's Bay to the Arctic Ocean. Lat. about 74. N.

BARRY, s. in Heraldry, when an escutcheon is divided from side to side, into an even number of portions, consisting of two or more tinctures, interchangeably disposed, the number of pieces being specified; but if the divisions be odd, the field must be first named, and the number of bars expressed. Barry-bendy, is when an escutcheon is divided equally, by lines drawn transversely and diagonally, interchangeably varying the tinctures by which it consists. Barry-pily, is when an escutcheon is divided by lines drawn obliquely from side to side, where they form acute angles.

BARRY, JAMES, an eminent English painter, whose picture of the Diogenes victors at Olympia, is so justly celebrated. During the whole course of his life, whilst studying at Rome, as well as whilst in England, he was engaged in disputes with other artists, which not only imbibed his spirit, but prevented him from enjoying the reward his art merited. He died in 1806, aged 65 years.

BARTAS, SIEUR GUILLAUME DU, a once famous poet of France, whose celebrity rests now solely in the eminent names of his admirers. His poems are in the style of Blackmore, immortalized by Pope's Bathos. He was of some note as a soldier and a politician, and was attached to the court of Henry IV. He died of the wounds he received at the battle of Ivry, in 1590.

BARTER, s. in Commerce, the purchasing one commodity by another, or exchanging one ware for another. In Arithmetic, the rule for determining such exchanges. SYNON. Barter is a mercantile expression, and intimates the exchange of different commodities by way of traffic.

To BARTER, v. a. [baratle, Fr.] to exchange one thing for another; the original manner of carrying on all trade and commerce till the invention of money.

BARTERER, s. he that trades by exchanging one commodity for another.

BARTHELEMY, JEAN JACQUES, the author of the well-known Travels of Anacharsis the Younger. He was for the times profoundly versed in the languages, manners, customs, history, &c., of the peoples of antiquity, and was a member of the French Academy. The French Revolution deprived him of the resources which the munificence of his patrons had given him. He was arrested once, but released by Danton. He died in 1795, aged 89 years.

BARTHOLOMEW, the name of one of the apostles, supposed to be the same with Nathanael, of whose history nothing remains but an uncertain tradition of his having journeyed into India. St. Bartholomew's day, is rendered notorious by the massacre of the French Huguenots in 1572, by the order of Charles IX.; and the ejection of the Nonconformist ministers in England in 1662, for refusal to subscribe to the new edition of the Book of Common Prayer.

BARTHOLOMEW, ST., the name of one of the hospitals in London, in Smithfield, a very valuable institution; whose buildings, &c., are worthy of observation for their architecture, &c.

BARTHOLOMEWS, ST., one of the smaller Caribbee Islands; being about 60 square miles in extent. It has one good harbour, near the principal town, Gustavia. Its trade consists in timber, limestone, and the products of the soil, which are those common to the W. Indies. It belongs to Sweden, and its population is under 10,000.

BARTOLI, DANIELE, the historian of the Jesuits, and author of works on subjects connected with natural philosophy, and language; was admired as a preacher in his order. He died in 1671, aged 77 years.

BARTOLOZZI, FRANCESCO, a much-admired engraver during the last century. He worked in several places in Italy, in England, and in Portugal. Some of the plates in Boydell's Shakspeare which he engraved are well-known specimens of his ability. He died in 1818, aged 88 years.

BARTON, s. [barton, Sax.] the demesne lands of a manor; a manor-house; the fields, out-houses, &c.; a term in great use in the west of England.

BARTON, ELIZABETH, was a servant at an inn in Kent, subject to fits, which the Romanists thought could be turned to advantage against the growing Reformation. She was therefore received into a convent, and called the "Holy Maid of Kent." Fisher and Sir Thomas More were deceived by her pretensions, and sanctioned her exhibitions. Attempting prophecies, however, in matters too high for her, she drew on herself, and some of her accomplices, the displeasure of Henry VIII., and was beheaded in 1534, aged about 30 years.

BARTON, Lincolnshire. It is seated on the river Humber, where there is a considerable ferry to pass over into Yorkshire, of great advantage to the town, which is a large, straggling place, 166 miles from London. Market, Monday. Pop. 3475.

BARUCH, a scribe, who assisted Jeremiah in his task of teaching and warning the Jewish people. A book, not reckoned canonical, containing historical records relating to the Jews during the captivity, and some prophetic passages, exists. It is found only in the Greek language, and is received only by the Church of Rome.

BARYTES, s. an alkaline earth, formed by the oxidation of barium with air or water. Sulphate of barytes is very plentiful in the Derbyshire lead mines, where the workmen call it cauk.

BASALT, one of the rocks of igneous or volcanic origin, and of very frequent occurrence, both in the form of veins or dykes, cutting through the substance of other rocks, and in masses lying on their surface, as if extruded from beneath them. It is a very close-grained, hard rock, of a dark-brown colour, usually composed of silica, alumina, and oxide of iron, with a small proportion of some other earths. It very commonly assumes a columnar structure, of which Fingal's cave and the Giant's Causeway are familiar and beautiful instances. The whole mass of the rock is composed of jointed, angular columns; which, according to Mr. G. Watts, are formed by a peculiar process during the cooling of the rock in its state of fusion.

BASE, a. [bas, Fr.] applied to actions, proceeding from a mean, narrow, abject, and sordid disposition. Applied to rank, low, mean, and void of dignity. Applied to birth, descended from mean parents. Applied to metals, counterfeit or adulterated. Applied to sounds, deep, grave.

BASE, s. [bas, Fr. basis, Lat.] in Architecture, the lower part of a column or pedestal, being the same to a column as a shoe is to a man. In Fortification, an imaginary line drawn from the flanked angle of a bastion to that which is opposite to it. In Geometry, the lower part of a figure; in a triangle, it is properly that side parallel to the horizon. In Anatomy, the broader or upper part of the heart, to which the two auricles are fixed. Base fee, is tenure in fee at the will of a lord. In Chemistry, the alkali, alkali, or metal which is combined with an acid to form a salt.

To BASE, v. a. [basier, Fr.] to lower the value of a thing by mixtures; to debase; to adulterate.

BASELY, ad. meanly, dishonourably. In bastardy.

BASEMENT, s. [Fr.] in Architecture, the ground floor of a building, the external appearance of which, both in temples, churches, houses, &c., is contrived to give the impression of strength and solidity.

BASENESS, s. applied to actions, that which is void of generosity, magnanimity, or nobleness of soul, and proceeds from a narrowness or meanness of spirit. Applied to metals, their want of the standard value. Applied to birth, dishonourable, or illegitimate. Applied to sound, low, grave.

BASE-VIOL, s. See Bass-viol.

To BASH, v. n. to be ashamed.

BASHAW, s. [Turk.] a Turkish governor of a province, city, or district, who has two horse-tails carried before him.

BASHFUL, a. easily put out of countenance.

BASHFULLY, ad. in a timorous, sheepish manner.

BASHFULNESS, s. timorousness, fear, or shame.

BASHKURS, the inhabitants of the province of Orenburg, lying on the Caspian Sea, between Tobolsk and Astrakhan. They are of Tatar origin, but have embraced Mohammedism, and retain in dress and manners traces of their ancestry. The province of Orenburg is fertile and rich in all manner of wealth; but the people subsist partly by hunting, and partly as herdsmen. The gold mines are very productive. They are subjects of the Russian empire. Although the winters are Siberian in their character, in summer the heat is intense; and the sirocco is a frequent and a fatal visitant, especially on the E. border.

BASIL, Basile, or Bale, the capital of the canton of Basil, in Switzerland. It is a large, rich, populous city, with a bishop's see, and a famous university. It is divided into two parts by the river Rhine; the largest of which is on the side of Switzerland, and the least on that of Germany; but they are joined together by a handsome bridge. The cathedral is a very fine building, and has two towers above 200 feet high. The town-house, and fine paintings in fresco, (particularly one by Holbein, which represents the passion of Christ,) are much admired by travellers. The library contains a prodigious number of books, as well in manuscript as printed; and there is a rich collection of medals, among which there are several exceedingly scarce. The manufacture of ribbons furnishes the chief support to the place. The population is near 20,000. Long. 7. 31. E. Lat. 47. 40. N. The canton lies amongst the Jura Mountains, and is watered by the Rhine and the Birs. It is about 20 miles long, and 15 broad; and produces wine and corn, and affords good pasturage for cattle. The Hauenstein is almost 3000 feet high.

BASIL, (bázil) s. the sloping edge of a carpenter's or joiner's tool, which varies according to the work it is to do; the skin of a sheep tanned. In Botany, a plant scientifically called climodopium.

BASIL, (bázil) v. a. to grind away the edge of a tool to a certain thickness or angle.

BASILIC, BASILICAL, a. in Anatomy, belonging or relating to the basilical vein.

BASILICA, s. (basílique, Gr.) in Anatomy, the middle vein of the arm; so called by way of pre-eminence.

BASILICA, s. (Gr.) in Architecture, the name given to a class of Roman public buildings, which were used as courts of justice, and halls of commerce; and were erected most commonly near the fora of cities. They consisted of a long and lofty building, with two lower buildings on its sides, divided from it by rows of columns, and with galleries over them open to the central part. The most complete specimen was discovered at Pompeii. In Italy, modern buildings for similar purposes are similarly constructed, and called by the same name. The consecration of many of those at Rome as churches, on the establishment of Christianity there, led to the adoption of that form for churches generally.

BASILICON, s. (Gr.) in Pharmacy, an ointment called likewise tetrapharmacum, from its being composed of four ingredients, viz. resin, wax, pitch, and oil of olives; by some, of Burgundy pitch, turpentine, resin, and oil.

BASILISK, (bázilisk) s. (basilískos, Gr.) a fabulous serpent, said to kill by its look; also a species of lizard.

BASILUS, ST., commonly called St. Basil, one of the Fathers of the church in the fourth century. He was a learned man, and had travelled much, and was appointed bishop of Caesarea on the death of Eusebius. He resisted the Arians, and founded a monastic order, which was named after him, and flourished in the Eastern church. His works are voluminous. He died in 379, aged 50 years.

BASINGSTOKE, Hampshire. It is a corporate town, and is seated on a small brook, 47 miles from London. Its chief trade is in corn. Market, Wednesday. Pop. 4000.

BASIS, s. (basís, Lat.) the foundation, or that on which any thing is established or supported. See BASE.

TO BASK, v. a. (bacqueren, Belg.) to warm by exposing to or lying in the heat of the sun.—v. n. to lie in a warm place.

BAKERVILLE, JOHN, a noted printer of the last century. He greatly improved the form of the letters, and his Italic type is particularly admired. He died in 1775, aged 50 years.

BAKNET, s. (bageset, Brit.) a vessel made with twigs, rushes, &c., woven together.

BAKNET-HILT, s. a hilt of a weapon so made as to contain the whole hand, and defend it from being wounded.

BASNA, a. French family, many members of which have attained to literary eminence. The most famous of which is Jacques Basnage, who, in the 17th century, was a Protestant clergyman at the Hague, and was engaged in several diplomatic undertakings on behalf of France, being greatly confided in by the government. He was intimate with most of the great scholars of his day. His works are very numerous, and are chiefly on theological objects. He died in 1723, aged 71 years.

BASON, Basin, s. (basin, Fr.) a small vessel to hold water or other liquids; a hollow place which contains water; a pond; a dock for repairing or building ships; a concave piece of metal made use of by opticians to grind their convex glasses in; a round shell, or case of iron, placed over a furnace, wherein hatters mould their hats; a tract of country surrounded by high ground, in which is a lake, or a river which effects the drainage of the whole. In Anatomy, a round cavity in the form of a tunnel, between the anterior ventricles of the brain, the pituitary glands, and the veins. Basons of a balance are the same as scales, one of which contains the weight, and the other the commodity whose weight is required.

BASQUE PROVINCES, three provinces of Spain, Guipuscoa, Alaya, and Biscay, usually included in the designation Biscay. They lie on the Bay of Biscay, between Asturia and Navarre. One branch of the Pyrenees runs through them, and supplies them with many mines of copper, tin, iron, &c., and with quarries of sandstone, marble, &c. The Ebro has its rise on the S. side of these mountains, and waters Alaya; on the N. side are a few small streams only. They produce corn, oil, and a common kind of wine. The chief towns are Bilbao, San Sebastian, and Vittoria. The population is about 400,000.

BASQUE LANGUAGE, the dialect of the district lying about the angle of the Bay of Biscay, partly in France, and partly in Spain. It differs considerably both in its etymology and syntax from the languages derived from the Roman, and from the Celtic, and in many particulars is nearly related to the Semitic dialects.

BASS, (pron. base, which way it is frequently spelt,) s. (basso, Ital.) Music, the lowest of all the parts, serving as a foundation to the others. That part of a concert consisting of the gravest, deepest, and most solemn sounds. Counter-bass is the second, when there are several in the same concert. Thorough-bass, is that which proceeds without intermission from the beginning to the end, and is the harmony made by bass instruments playing both while the voices sing and other instruments perform, and also filling the intervals when they stop; the science of harmony. Also a mat used in churches to kneel on, made of rushes, in a cylindrical form, and stuffed with hay; commonly called a bass.

BASS' STRAITS, the arm of the sea dividing Van Diemen's Land from New Holland, which is above 100 miles across; and is occupied at each end by groups of islands.

BASSANO, a town lying on the Brenta, in the Venetian territory of Italy. There is a fine bridge over this river. It has a considerable trade, exporting silk, woollen goods, leather, &c. &c. It has a population of about 10,000, and is about 20 miles from Padua.

BASSANO, a name assumed by two painters, born here, whose proper name was Il Ponte. The churches of their native place, and of Vicenza, are adorned with their works; and some are known in England. They did not attain to a high degree of excellence, except in a very few instances. They flourished in the 16th century; the father dying in 1592, and the son in 1591.

BA'SSET, s. (basset, Fr.) a game at cards.

BASSO, s. (Ital.) in Music, sometimes extended to the bass universally, and at other times restrained to that only which is sung. Basso concertato, the figure or thorough bass, going through the whole piece, playing chords, or whatever can convey harmony to the ear. Basso ripieno, the bass of the grand chorus, which is heard only or comes in at intervals, in order to make the composition have a greater effect.

BASSOON, s. (basson, Fr.) in Music, a wind instrument, blown with a reed, nine inches diameter at the bottom, with eleven holes, stopped like those of a flute, dividing into two parts, and used for the bass in concerts with hautboys.

BASSORA, or BA'SRA, a considerable town of Persia in the province of Bagdad. It stands on the Shat-el-Arab, which is formed by the junction of the Euphrates and the Tigris, about 70 miles from the Persian Gulf. Large vessels can come quite up to the town, which is thus a sea-port of considerable importance. It is the emporium for all the trade between Turkey and India. Its population is about 60,000. Lat. 30. 25. N. Long. 47. 35. E.

BASSO-RELIEVO, BAS-RELIEF, s. [Ital.] in Sculpture, a work the figures of which do not stand out much from the ground or plane on which they are formed, as upon coins, medals, &c.

BASS-VIOL, s. a musical instrument of the same form as the violin, but much larger; is played upon in the same manner, and has the same number of strings and stops.

BASTARD, s. [bastard, Brit.] in Law, a person born of parents which have not been lawfully married, and cannot inherit land as heir to his father.

To BASTARD, v. a. to convict of getting a bastard; to prove a person not begotten in lawful wedlock.

To BASTARDIZE, v. a. to prove a person not begotten in lawful marriage; to get a bastard.

BASTARDLY, ad. like a bastard; in a degenerate, spurious manner.

BASTARDY, s. in Law, an unlawful state of birth, wherein a person is produced from a couple not married, and is therefore disabled from succeeding to an inheritance.

To BASTE, v. a. [bastoner, Fr.] to beat with a stick. In Cookery, to moisten meat, while roasting, with butter or dripping. Among sempstresses, from baster, Fr. to stitch, to sew two selvages together.

BASTIA, a sea-port, the capital of Corsica, with a good harbour, but fit for small vessels only. At the entrance of the harbour is a singular rock, quite isolated, which, without any assistance from art, bears a very close resemblance to a lion couching, and raising its head. It is situated on the N. E. coast of the island. Lat. 45. 36. N. Long. 9. 30. E. Its population is about 10,000.

BASTILLE, a royal castle built by Charles V. in 1369, for the defence of Paris, formerly used as a place of confinement for state prisoners, but totally demolished by the populace, at the commencement of the Revolution, in 1789.

BASTINA'DE, BASTINA'DO, s. [bastonnade, Fr.] the act of beating with a stick or cudgel; the punishment inflicted by the Turks, of beating the soles of a person's feet with a heavy piece of wood, having a large knob or round head at the end.

To BASTINA'DE, BASTINA'DO, v. a. [bastonner, Fr.] to beat with a stick or cudgel.

BASTION, s. [bastion, Fr.] in Fortification, a large mass of earth, faced with sods, seldom with brick or stone, standing out from a rampart.

BASTON, BATTON, s. [Fr.] in Architecture, a mould at the base of a column, called a toze. In Heraldry, a kind of bend not reaching quite across the shield; a sign of bastardy, and ought not to be removed till the third generation.

BAT, s. any large club; particularly one flat on one side, used in the game of cricket. In Natural History, a quadruped whose extremities are expanded into membranaceous wings, which appears only in the evening.

BATABLE, a. in Law, applied to grounds whose property is disputable.

BATAVIA, a handsome, large, and very strong town, in a district of the same name, in the island of Java; the capital of all the Dutch settlements and colonies in the East Indies. The place is very beautiful, and built with white stone; and they have canals in the principal streets, planted on each side with evergreen trees. The fortifications are rendered very strong by the nature of the ground, and the shallowness of the bay. It has a handsome hospital and arsenal; and all the goods brought from other parts of the East Indies are laid up here till they are exported to the places of their destination. The harbour is excellent, and lies on the N. E. part of the island, S. E. of Sumatra, and N. W. of Borneo. The population is about 60,000, of whom about 15,000 are Chinese. Long. 106. 50. E. Lat. 6. 10. S.

BATCH, s. the quantity of bread baked at one time. Any quantity of a thing made at once, so as to have the same qualities.

BACHELOR, s. See BACHELOR.

BACHELOR'S BUTTONS, s. in Botany, the common white and red campion.

To BATE, v. a. [contracted from abate,] to lessen a demand or lower the price of a commodity; to abstain or refrain from a thing; to except or take away.

BATEMENT, s. the lessening the quantity of stuff: used by carpenters and mechanics.

BAT-FO'WLING, s. a method of catching birds in the night, practised by lighting straw, or carrying a lantern near the bushes, which being beat with a stick, they fly towards the light, and are caught in nets provided for that purpose.

BATH, s. [Sax.] a vessel or place containing hot or cold water, in which the whole person may be bathed or washed. In Medicine, the use of such a bathing is recommended for disorders of the assimilative organs. There are at many places in England, as well as in other countries, springs possessing medical properties, whose waters are used for bathing. In Chemistry, baths are vessels for distillation, contrived to transmit heat gradually and regularly. They are of two kinds, sand-baths and water-baths. Sand-baths are vessels filled in part with dry sand, in which those retorts are placed which require a greater heat than can be given by boiling water. Water-baths are vessels of boiling water, in which other vessels, containing the matters to be distilled, are put, in order that the same heat may be kept up throughout the whole of any particular process. Knights of the Bath, a military order in England, instituted by Richard II., who limited their number to four; but his successor, Henry IV., increased them to forty-six. Their motto was tres in uno, signifying the three theological virtues. This order received its denomination from the custom of bathing before the ceremony of creation. This order, after remaining many years extinct, was revived under George I.

BATH, Somersetshire. This city, which is beautifully situated on the river Avon, has been famous from the times of the Romans for its hot springs; but it has not lately been so much resorted to, owing to the more recent celebrity of other springs in this country, and on the continent. It is built almost entirely of stone, and laid out in squares, crescents, terraces, &c., which rise above each other, from the Avon to the summit of the hill. The abbey church, the general hospital, and the dispensary, are fine buildings. Considerable manufactures of cloth and paper are carried on near Bath. It is 107 miles from London. Market, Saturday. Pop. 38,304.

BATH, a sea-port of Maine, United States, situated on the west bank of the Kennebec river, 12 miles from the ocean, with great advantages for navigation. It is one of the principal commercial towns in Maine. Ship-building is the most extensive business. Pop. 5141.

To BATHE, v. a. [bathian, Sax.] to wash in a bath; to soften or supple by the outward application of liquors; to wash any thing.

BATH-KOL, s. [Heb. the daughter of the voice,] a name whereby the Jewish writers distinguish the revelation which God made of his will to his chosen people, when, upon the death of Malachi, all prophecies had ceased in Israel.

BATH-METAL, s. mixed metal, otherwise called Prince's Metal.

BATHURST, an English settlement at the mouth of the Gambia, in W. Africa. It is a place of considerable trade, and except during the rainy season not unhealthy.

BATHURST, the chief town of a district of the same name in New South Wales, on the Macquarrie river, 120 miles from Sydney. The population of the district is under 5000.

BATTING, prep. except.

BATTALIA, s. [battaglia, Ital.] the drawing up an army in order of battle.

BATTA'LION, s. [battailon, Fr.] a small body of infantry drawn up in order of battle. A battalion seldom falls short of 700, or exceeds 1000 men. It is generally ranked in six ranks.

BATTAS, the name of a native tribe inhabiting the greater part of the island of Sumatra. Their religion resembles that of the Hindus, but in their language they resemble the Malays. Cannibalism and slavery prevail amongst them.

BATTEN, s. a name given by workmen to a long thin piece of wood, of an inconsiderable breadth, seldom exceeding four inches; it is generally about an inch thick.

To BATTEN, v. n. [batten, Teut.] to glut or satiate oneself; to grow fat, to live luxuriously. Applied to land, to make fruitful.

BATTER, s. in Cookery, a mixture of flour, eggs, and milk; beaten together with some liquor.

To BATTER, v. a. [batre, Fr.] to beat, to beat down. Most commonly applied to the battering of walls by engines, cannon, &c.

BATTERY, s. [batterie, Fr.] in Fortification, a place where artillery is planted, in order to play upon the enemy. In Law, the beating any person unjustly. In Electricity, a combination of electrical or Leyden jars, arranged so as to enable an experimenter to use their accumulated force, being dischargeable by one conductor. In Galvanism, a vessel containing a plate of zinc and a plate of copper, with diluted acid, so connected that an electrical current is generated for the purpose of experiments, &c.

BATTLE, Sussex, so named from an abbey, called Battle Abbey, erected on the spot where the decisive battle was fought between Harold and William duke of Normandy, Oct. 14th, 1066. The gate-house of the abbey (which was a stately pile, nearly a mile in circumference) remains almost entire, and serves for the sessions, and other public meetings. The town consists of one good street, and has a harbour for barges, and a manufacture of gunpowder. It is 57 miles from London. Market, Thursday, for provisions, and every second Tuesday in the month for cattle, corn, &c. Pop. 3039.

BATTLE, s. [bataille, Fr.] a fight between two numerous bodies of men. SYNON. The fight of two individuals is frequently, but improperly, called a battle instead of a combat, for a battle supposes a number on both sides. We use the word battle when speaking of the conflict between two armies. Engagement is applied to the encounter between two fleets.

To BATTLE, v. a. [battailer, Fr.] to engage in battle, or contend in any manner whatever.

BATTLE-ARRAY, s. arrangement or order of battle; the proper disposition of men in order to engage an enemy.

BATTLE-AXE, s. a weapon made use of in former times.

BATTLEDOOR, s. an instrument used to strike a shuttlecock; it consists of a handle and broad blade.

BATTLEFIELD, Shropshire, 5 miles N. of Shrewsbury, where a victory was gained by Henry IV. over the rebels under Henry Percy, surnamed Hotspur. It is governed by a constable, and has a large church, and one long street paved; but no manufactory. Pop. 64.

BATTLEMENTS, s. indentations in a wall, parapet, &c., to look through, or to annoy an enemy.

BATTOLOGY, s. [batulos and lego, Gr.] a tedious circumlocution, or the frequent repetition of the same word without any reason.

BATTON, s. in Merchandise, a name given to certain pieces of wood or deal for flooring and other purposes.

BATTOON, s. [baton, Fr.] a truncheon or staff, borne by a marshal as a mark of his dignity; likewise, any short stick or club.

BAVARIA, one of the German kingdoms, adjoining to Switzerland and France. It is a mountainous country, and some peaks of the Alps belonging to it exceed 9000 feet in height. Its principal rivers are the Rhine, the Danube, the Main, the Saale, and their tributaries. Lake Constance in part belongs to it, and it has many other lakes. The forests are very extensive, but the soil, so far as it is cultivated, is abundantly fertile. Iron, quick-silver, and copper are found in abundance; and gold, silver, lead, &c. more rarely. There are also coal mines, and mines of black-lead, with salt-works, which are very productive. All species of grain, flax, tobacco, the vine, hop, &c., &c., are grown for consumption, and for trade. The climate and soil are favourable to the rearing of cattle, and wild animals, excepting game, are fast disappearing. Its manufactures are inconsiderable, but it has, by means of its great rivers, a very extensive trade, exporting, besides natural productions, linen goods, beer, glass, &c. Its capital is Munich, and its population is between 4 and 5,000,000, of which above 60,000 are Jews.

BAVAROY, a kind of cloak or surcoat.

BAUBLE, s. [baubellum, barbarous Lat.] a play-thing; and figuratively, any thing of a trifling, insignificant nature.

BAUHIN, the name of two eminent French botanists of the 16th century. They were of great service to the science of botany by their zeal in collecting, describing, and engraving drawings of the plants of their country, and in gathering together observations of other botanists. The elder brother, John, died in 1613, aged 72 years, and Gaspard in 1624, aged 84.

BAVIN, s. a sort of brush faggots, used by bakers to heat their ovens, and by others for other uses; in war, they are used to fill up ditches.

BAUMGARTEN, ALEXANDER G., a German philosopher, who harmonized the systems of Wolff and Leibnitz, and developed the principles of Aesthetics. He died in 1757, aged 43 years.

BAWBEE, s. in Scotland, a halfpenny.

To BAWL, v. a. [ballo, Lat.] to cry or speak any thing with a loud voice.

BAWSIN, s. in Natural History, a badger.

BAWTRY, or BRAUTRY, Yorkshire, W. R. It is seated on the river Idle, near the borders of Nottinghamshire. Its chief trade is the produce of the neighbourhood, and the mile stones and grind stones manufactured in the town, which are conveyed to Hull by the canal joining the Don and the Ouse. It is 150 miles from London. Market, Wednesday. Pop. 1083.

BAXTER, RICHARD, one of the best known of the nonconformist ministers of the 17th century. His first step in active life was an attempt to gain favour by playing the courtier to Charles I. Disgusted with his experience at Whitehall, and deeply moved by religious impressions, he became a preacher and minister. During the wars he was engaged as chaplain in the parliament's army, and by his influence much mitigated its polemic spirit. At the Restoration he was one who suffered through the Act of Uniformity and its companion Acts of oppressive tyranny. He was fined and imprisoned by the infamous Judge Jeffries; but lived till 1691, when toleration was established. He was 76 years old when he died. He wrote very many works, of which the History of his Times, his Method of Theology, and Saints' Everlasting Rest, are the most widely known.

BAXTERIANISM, a name given by Calvinists to that system of theology taught by Baxter, and which seeks to reconcile Calvinism and Arminianism, by harmonizing some parts of these schemes and rejecting other parts.

BAY, s. [badius, Lat. baye, Belg.] applied to the colour of a horse, is that which inclines to red, and approaches near to a chestnut. The light and gilded bays have a greater cast of the yellow; the dun, scarlet, and bloody bay, a greater mixture of red; and the chestnut bay, that which resembles the colour of a chestnut. In Geography, a part of the sea which runs into the land, and is broader in the middle than at its first entrance, called the mouth. A stag is said to be at bay when he turns round to defend himself with his horns against the dogs which have chased him; and hence, figuratively, this term is employed to signify the state of one surrounded by enemies, who cannot be escaped, and against whom active opposition alone is of avail. In Architecture, used to signify the largeness of a building; thus a barn, which has a floor and two heads, is called a barn and two bays. In Botany, the laurus, a kind of evergreen, which used to be formed into wreaths, as a reward for poets, &c. Hence it is used as a token of honour, and a mark of merit.

To BAY, v. a. [abbayer, Fr.] to bark at; to surround, in the same manner as hounds do their prey.

BAY-SALT, s. salt made of sea-water, which receives its consistence from the heat of the sun, and is so called from its brown colour.

BAY-WINDOW, s. a window which swells or projects outwards.

BAYARD, s. a horse of a bay colour: originally, a horse's name derived from a celebrated French knight.

BAYARD, the Chevalier, celebrated as the faultless mirror of knighthood. Under Charles VIII., Louis XII., and Francis I., he served with great distinction, at the famed Battle of Spurs, saving the French army by his skill and resolution. He fell in an engagement with the forces of the emperor Charles V., at the Sesia, in 1524, aged 50 years.

BAYEUX, a town near the north coast of France, 150 miles from Paris, on a stream named Aure. The cathedral is very old, and its architecture and style of ornament are of the Norman period. In it has been preserved an ancient piece of tapestry, said to have been worked by Matilda, the queen of William the Conqueror. It represents the Norman account of the conquest of England. The town is not of so much consequence as it was, but great quantities of lace are still manufactured here. The population is about 10,000.

BAYLE, PETER, the celebrated author of the Historical and Critical Dictionary. He was the son of a Protestant minister, but whilst studying at a Romanist college at Toulouse, he en-braced Romanism. In the following year he renounced it, and though during the rest of his life outwardly a Protestant, his writings show a sceptical spirit respecting all religion. He was for some years a Professor at Sedan, and afterwards he occupied the philosophical chair at Rotterdam. He died in 1706, aged 60 years. His controversy with his friend Jurieu, and that which arose respecting his Dictionary, gave rise to many of his writings, which have stamped him as a lover of polemics. Fondness for paradox was the root of his most serious errors.

BAYONET, s. [bayonette, Fr.] a short, broad dagger made lancet-fashion, with a round hollow iron handle, which goes over the muzzle of a musket, and fixes it to it.

BAYONNE, a large commercial city in the department of the Basses Pyrenées, France. It stands on the confluence of the rivers Nieve and Adour, not far from the Bay of Biscay. It is very strongly fortified, and both the streets and public buildings are handsomely built. It is noted for hams and chocolate, and its export trade consists chiefly of masts brought from the Pyrenées by the rivers. It is 525 miles from Paris. Its population is about 18,000. Lat. 43. 30. N. Long. 1. 30. W.

BAY-YARN, s. yarn proper for making bawe.

BAZAR, s. [Pers.] the name of the buildings used in the East for trade; appropriated in this country to buildings divided into stalls, which are used as retail shops.

BAZA, a small city in the dept. of Gironde, France. It was once a bishop's see, and its cathedral is still admired. It is 409 miles from Paris. Its population is about 3000.

BDELLIUM, (in pronunciation the b is generally dropped.) s. [Jedellion, Gr.] a gum-resin, somewhat resembling myrrh in appearance, brought from the Levant; it is met with in single drops of an irregular size, some of which are as large as a hazel-nut. Its colour is dusky, and its taste bitterish. The bdellium of the ancients is thought to have been of mineral origin.

To BE, v. n. [beon, Sax.] to exist. It is used also as a relational verb, or as the copula in simple sentences. In English the passive form of all verbs is made by the use of this verb with their past participles.

BE, in Grammar, a verbal prefix, indicating, when used with verbs, the greater completeness of the action signified;—when used with nouns, that the thing signified by them is turned into action.

BEACH, s. that part of the sea-shore which is washed by its waves.

BEACHED, a. that is exposed to the sea waves.

BEACHY, a. that abounds in beaches.

BEACHY-HEAD, a promontory on the coast of Sussex, between Hastings and Shoreham, with a telegraph and lighthouse on it. Lat. 50. 44. N. Long. 0. 15. E.

BEACON, s. [beacon, Sax.] a signal, or combustibles raised on an eminence, to be fired as the signal of an enemy's approach; a signal or mark erected at sea, for the security of vessels.

BEACONAGE, s. a tax paid for the use and maintenance of a beacon.

BEACONSFIELD, Bucks. It stands on an eminence on the old high-road between London and Oxford, and derived great advantage formerly from its position. Edmund Burke is buried here. 23 miles from London. Market, Wednesday. Pop. 1732.

BEAD, s. [beade, Sax.] a small round piece of glass or other substance, moving on a string which runs through it, used by those of the Romish Church to count their sins and prayers. Likewise used as ornaments for women, and worn round their necks in necklaces. In Architecture, a round moulding, or astragal, carved so as to resemble a necklace.

BEADLE, s. [bygel, Sax.] a public crier, herald, or messenger.

In Law, one who cites people to appear at a court, one whose office is to punish or apprehend strollers, vagrants, and petty offenders in a parish. At the university, one who walks before the masters in public processions. Squire beadle is one who attends peculiarly on the vice-chancellors, give notice of convocations at each college, and are generally Masters of Arts.

BEADPROOF, s. among distillers, a fallacious way of determining the strength of their spirits, from the continuance of the bubbles or beads raised by shaking a small quantity of the spirit in a phial.

BEADROLL, s. a list or catalogue of a certain number of prayers for souls of the dead, which are generally counted by the members of the Romish Church on their beads.

BEADSMAN, s. one who devotes himself entirely to prayer, one who undertakes or professes to pray for another.

BEAGLE, s. [bigle, Fr.] in Natural History, an English hound, or hunting dog, of a small size, known by its deep bark, and used in hunting hares.

BEAK, s. [bec, Fr.] the bill of a bird, or any thing which resembles it.

BEAKED, a. sharp-pointed, resembling the beak of a bird.

BEAKER, s. a cup or glass with a spout.

BEAL, s. a pimple, or any eruption in the skin, which rises or protrudes beyond it.

BEALT, BEALTH, or BULTH, Brecknockshire, South Wales. It is pleasantly seated on the river Wye, and its inhabitants have a trade in stockings. It is 171 miles from London. Market, Monday for cattle, Saturday for provisions. Pop. 1203.

BEAM, s. [Sax.] in building, a large piece of wood lying across the walls of a building, supporting the principal rafters of the roof. Applied to a balance, that piece of iron, &c., which supports the scales. Among weavers, a cylindrical piece of wood, placed lengthways on the back part of the loom, on which the threads of the warp are rolled, and unrolled as the work advances; likewise the cylinder, or round piece of wood, on which the stuff is rolled as it is weaved, placed on the forepart of the loom. A ray of light emitted from any luminous body. Applied to an anchor, the straight part or shank.

To BEAM, v. n. to emit or dart rays.

BEAMINSTER, BE'MINSTER, or BE'MSTER, Dorsetshire. It is a pretty place, seated on the river Bert, 137 miles from London. Market, Thursday. Pop. 3270.

BEAMY, a. that darts rays; shining, radiant.

BEAN, s. [bean, Sax.] in Botany, a common genus of leguminous plants, used very extensively as an article of food.

To BEAR, v. a. [beoran, beran, Sax.] primarily, to support, stand under, or carry; to sustain, or keep from falling; to endure, permit, or suffer without resentment; applied to name, to go by that name; joined with price, to sell at a certain price, to have a particular value; followed by down, to overcome, or carry along with one; by off, to carry away by force; by out, to support or maintain any particular opinion advanced; by upon, to stand firm, to be related to. To bear a head, in Distillery, &c., when a liquor shows its quality by a persistent froth when shaken. To bear a hand, colloquially, to render assistance readily. To bear body, in Painting, used of colours capable of being well ground down, and mixing intimately with oil, so as to be opaque, and not show any other colours through them. To produce, to bring forth young; to produce fruit.

BEAR, s. [Sax.] in Natural History, the name of a genus of flesh-eating quadrupeds, distinguished by their feet, which have soles like man's feet. They have six cutting teeth in each jaw, and their claws are strong and hooked. Some species may be taught various tricks, but their ferocity has seldom been wholly subdued. The common black bear is a native of Europe, and was formerly a native of England also. Both Asia and America have many peculiar species, especially the former. In the northern regions of America and the old continent lives the white bear, which is larger than any other kind. It lives and feeds on seals, &c., on the great fields of ice which cover the Arctic Ocean, and is frequently found floating on detached pieces of ice, very many miles from land. In Astronomy, the name of two constellations, called the Greater and the Lesser, in the N. hemisphere. The last star in the tail of the Lesser Bear is called the Pole Star, because it lies but a little distance from the imaginary point in the heavens called the N. Pole. The Great Bear Lake is a lake of N. America lying near the Arctic Circle. The length of it is about 150 miles, and its depth is very great.

BEAR-ALSTON, Devonshire. The name of a former market town and borough, in the parish of Beer-Ferris. It is beautifully situated by the Tamar; and was formerly rendered more valuable by a silver mine, which is not worked now. It has lost all its importance since its disfranchisement. It is 212 miles from London. Pop. of the whole parish, 2142.

BEARD, s. [beard, Sax.] the hair which grows on the cheeks, lips, and chin of most varieties of the human species, respecting the wearing and adornment of which, the most remarkable and diverse customs have prevailed in different ages and nations. It is cultivated with religious care amongst the Mohammedans; but amongst civilized nations of the present day, it is worn only by soldiers and fops;—the Chinese wear false beards rather than appear destitute of this appendage. Applied to vegetables, it signifies the awns of ears of corn. In an arrow, it is the barb of the head. In Astronomy, the tail of a comet is sometimes called its beard.

To BEARD, v. a. to take a person by the beard, including the idea of strength and contempt in the agent.

BEARDED, a. an epithet applied to a person that has a beard. Applied to vegetables, that has long awns like those growing on the ears of barley. Applied to instruments, that is forked like a fish-hook, not easily to be pulled out; jagged.

BEARDELESS, a. without a beard. Figuratively, young, or not arrived at the state of manhood.

BEARER, s. one who carries or conveys a thing from one to another; one who supports, or sustains, applied to dignity; that which produces or yields fruit, applied to vegetables.

BEAR-GARDEN, s. a place wherein bears were formerly kept for diversion. Figuratively, any place where low diversions are exhibited, and tumult and confusion are customary.

BEARING, s. the act of supporting a weight; the carrying a burthen. In Geography, and Navigation, the situation of one place in respect of another, with regard to the points of the compass. In sea language, when a ship sails towards the shore before the wind, she is said to bear in with the land or harbour. To let the ship sail more before the wind, is to bear up. To put her right before the wind, is to bear round. A ship that keeps off from the land, is said to bear off. When a ship to the windward comes under another ship's stern, and so gives her the wind, she is said to bear under her lee.

BEARN, one of the ancient provinces of France, lying on the Pyrenees. On account of its mountainous character, wine, and the usual mineral products of such districts, were its natural wealth. The people, who were of Basque origin, were distinguished by their vivacity and simplicity. Pau, its capital, was the birthplace of Henry IV. of France.

BEAKS-FOOT, s. in Botany, a plant, called also the stinking heliobore.

BEAST, s. [bestia, Fr.] an animal not endowed with reason; generally applied to quadrupeds. Figuratively, a person who acts inconsistently with the character of a rational creature.

BEASTLINESS, s. that which is unworthy of a man; that which is indecent and disgusting.

BEASTLY, a. that resembles a beast, either in its form, or other of its peculiar qualities.

To BEAT, v. a. preter. beat, part. pass. beat or beaten; [battere, Fr.] to strike a person; to pound, to reduce to powder; to forge; to subdue, overcome, or vanquish; to mix together by violent stirring. Used with the particle down, to lessen the price. Used with brains or head, to apply one's thought to a difficult subject. "To beat his brains about things impossible," Hayne. "Waste his time, and beat his head about the Latin Grammar," Locke. Used with up, it signifies to sail against the wind by tacking; and to raise recruits for an army.—v. n. applied to the throbbing of the heart and arteries, to pulsate. SYNON. In order to beat, we must redouble the blows; but to strike, we give only one. We are never beaten without being struck; but we are often struck without being beaten.

BEAT, s. a stroke; the sound made by a drum, when struck by the sticks; the stroke or throb of the pulse or heart; a division of a bar, in music.

BEATER, s. an instrument by which blows or strokes are given; a pestle.

BEATIFIC, BEATIFICAL, a. [beatificus, Lat.] that can render a person completely happy. An epithet used by divines for the bliss of heaven.

BEATIFICALLY, ad. in such a manner as to make a person perfectly happy.

BEATIFICATION, s. in the Romish Church, an acknowledgment that a person is in heaven, and may be esteemed as blessed; but not allowed the honours of saints, conferred by canonization.

To BEATIFY, v. a. [beatifico, Lat.] to make perfectly happy; to bless with a place in the heavenly mansions.

BEATING, s. a punishment inflicted with blows.

BEATITUDE, s. [beatitudo, Lat.] in Divinity, a state of perfect happiness, free from defect or interruption, applied to that of the deceased saints and angels in heaven.

BEATON, DAVID, Archbishop of St. Andrews, Scotland, whose cruelty in persecuting the adherents of the Reformed religion, has rendered his name infamous in that country. He was made a cardinal and legate by Pope Paul III.; and on the death of James V., after being defeated in a plot to obtain the government of the kingdom, was appointed lord chancellor, in which office he made his name terrible and hateful to all. He was assassinated in 1546, in his 52nd year.

BEATS, s. in Clock or Watch work, the strokes made by the pallets of the spindle of the balance. In Music, pulsations observed in the sound produced by two strings or pipes, not in perfect tune with each other. The intervals of these beats are the same in tuning instruments.

BEATTIE, DR. JAMES, a well-known Scotch poet, and writer on metaphysical subjects. He was one of the antagonists of Hume, and created some stir in the controversy by his Essay on Truth, which is little read now. His other philosophical works are marked by clearness and elegance, but are possessed of no depth, nor originality; they are mostly the lectures which he delivered from the chair of moral philosophy, at Marischal college, Aberdeen. Of his poems, the Minstrel is still deservedly admired, the minor poems are poor. He died in 1803, aged 67 years.

BEAU, (be) s. plural beaux, [Fr.] an effeminate person of the male sex, who is passionately fond of dress.

BEAUCALRE, an ancient town in the department of Gard, France, lying on the Rhone. It is pleasantly situated, and has great advantages from its position for trade, but it is not well built. It is most celebrated for a great yearly fair, held for a week at the end of July, to which merchants and traders from all Europe come. It is well arranged, almost all the wares of each particular kind being exhibited in one street or spot. The usual nuisances of such gatherings abound, and in addition, the excitement is so strong that the town remains in a state of stagnant inaction, without the commonest conveniences of trade, till the next year's fair. Lat. 43. 48. N. Long. 4. 36. E. The population is under 10,000.

BEAUDESERT, or BE'LDERSERT, Warwickshire. Market, Monday. Pop. 205.

BEAVER, s. [bevere, Fr.] in Natural History, an animal connected with the rat tribe, whose social habits, and extraordinary sagacity and skill in constructing its dwellings, are well known. It is a native of North America, and of the central parts of the continent of Europe. Its hair is either brown, white, or black; that on the belly is a very fine down, about an inch long, and is used for hats. Its tail resembles that of a fish more than any land animal, serves it instead of a trowel in building, and of a rudder in swimming; and its teeth serve either as a saw or chisel.

BEAUFET, BU'FET, BU'FET, s. an anciently a little apartment separated from the rest of the room by slender wooden columns, for the disposing china and glass ware, &c., called also a cabinet. It is now properly a large table in a dining-room, called also a side-board.

BEAUFORT, CARDINAL, a great party leader during the reign of the imbecile Henry VI. He was son of John of Gaunt, and succeeded William of Wykeham in the see of Winchester. He was one of the regents appointed by Henry V. for his son, and was opposed to the Duke of Gloucester; after various successful schemes against him, he felt his power departing, and Gloucester was arrested and put to death in prison. Beaufort died a few weeks afterwards, in 1447, aged about 80 years.

BEAUCHARNON'S, the name of a noble of France, who espoused the popular cause at the Revolution, and served honourably under Dumouriez, but was beheaded in 1794. His widow, Josephine, was married in 1796 to Napoleon Buonaparte, and in 1804 was crowned as his empress, but divorced in 1810, when he entertained the scheme for consolidating his power by alliance with Austria. His children were treated with great affection by Napoleon; Eugène being adopted by him, and after having served with distinction under him, made viceroy of the kingdom of Italy. He died in 1824, aged 45 years.

BEAU'ISH, (bo-ish) a. resembling a beau; effeminately nice; foppish.

BEAUMARCHAIS, PIERRE AUGUSTE CARRON DE, a play-writer, who, just before the Revolution of France, produced The Marriage of Figaro, and The Barber of Seville, which enjoyed unbounded popularity. He was forced to fly the country shortly after because of the failure of some speculations for supplying the city of Paris with arms, &c., and did not return till the end of the reign of terror. He was originally a watchmaker. He died in 1799, aged 67 years.

BEAUMARIS, Anglesea, North Wales. It stands on the Menai Straits, and was fortified with a castle by Edward I. The castle, the chapel dedicated to St. Mary, and the town-hall, are fine buildings. It lies on the road from Chester to Holyhead, and was formerly a place of good trade by means of its excellent harbour. Here is plenty of corn, butter, and cheese. It is 254 miles from London. Pop. 2299.

BEAUMONT, FRANCIS, one of the most famous of the ancient dramatists of England. In his works his name is always associated with that of Fletcher, who was his most intimate friend, and who was joined with him in writing those plays. They display great poetic and dramatic power, but the licentiousness of the times has so thoroughly infected their writings, that though they were deemed paragons of purity by their contemporaries, they could not be read generally now. Beaumont was trained for the law; and he died in 1615, aged 29 years.

BEAUNE, a large town in the dept. of Côte d'Or, in France. It is 206 miles from Paris. The country round it produces good wine, and there are manufactures of common woollen goods, cutlery, &c. The Dukes of Burgundy formerly held their courts here; and the ruins of their castle yet remain. The population is about 10,000.

BEAUTEOUS, (beauteous) a. that is formed with so much elegance and symmetry, as to raise an agreeable sensation in the mind.

BEAUTEOUSLY, (beauteously) ad. in such a manner as to convey the idea of beauty.

BEAUTIFUL, (beautiful) a. that has all the symmetry of parts necessary to convey the idea of beauty, applied both to persons and things.

To BEAUTIFY, (beautify) v. a. to recommend any thing to the love or approbation of a person, by heightening or increasing its charms.

BEAUTY, (beauty) s. [beauté, Fr.] a certain peculiarity of colour or figure, which gives delight and approbation in the beholder. Figuratively, applied to music, painting, architecture, statuary, and literary compositions, implying excellence in the object, capable of raising delight in the mind. A person blessed with all that symmetry of features, &c., that raise delight in the mind of a beholder, and extort approbation by its excellences. SYNON. By a handsome woman, we understand one that is graceful and well shaped, with a regular disposition of features; by a pretty, we mean one that is delicately made, and whose features are so formed as to please; by a beautiful, a union of both. When applied to other things, beautiful relates to something more serious and engaging; pretty, to somewhat more gay and diverting; this is the reason why we say a beautiful tragedy, but a pretty comedy.

BEAUTY-SPOT, (beauty-spot) s. something artfully made use of to heighten the charms of a person; a patch.

BEAUVAIS, a city in the dept. of Oise, in France. It is seated on the river Thesin, 42 miles from Paris. It has manufactures both of woollen and of linen goods, and of other articles. The cathedral and the church of St. Stephen are fine buildings. Before the Revolution it abounded in religious houses, and was the capital of the district named Beauvaisis. Its population is nearly 15,000.

To BECALM, v. a. to reduce a storm or tempestuous commotion of the elements to rest and quietness. Figuratively, to pacify the turbulent passions that disturb the mind.

BECAFTCO, s. [Sax.] in Ornithology, a bird allied to the nightingale, feeding on figs and grapes, which sings very sweetly, and visits England in the summer; a fig-pecker.

BECAUSE, conj. [be, Sax. and cause], used to imply a reason, or cause of an assertion or truth which comes before it.

BECCLES, Suffolk. It is a large town with a handsome church, and a tall steeple, seated on an eminence, some distance from the church, 100 miles from London. Pop. 4083.

BECK, an external sign, generally such as is made with the hand; also a small stream of water. Hence the term Hellbecks, which are little brooks in the rough and wild mountains about Richmond near Lancashire.

BECKET, ST. THOMAS A. archbishop of Canterbury in the reign of Henry II., and chancellor of England. According to old tales, his mother was a Turkish princess, who fell in love with his father whilst a prisoner in her father's keeping, and followed him after his release to London, and married him. Thomas was an accomplished, courageous, magnificently disposed man, the companion and brother-in-arms to the king. When Henry, after having effected many wise reforms in the country, desired to reform the church, he appointed Becket to the see of Canterbury, who instantly devoted himself with all his energy to the interests of the church, and to the acquisition of a reputation for sanctity. After a long and fluctuating contest with Henry, during which Becket made himself popular amongst the lower orders, who were almost in a state of slavery, in 1170, four knights in Henry's train, overhearing some hasty expressions respecting Becket, went to Canterbury and assassinated him at the high altar, in about his 57th year. He was canonized by Pope Alexander III., and people believed that miracles were wrought at his tomb.

BECKFORD, WILLIAM, author of the beautiful tale called Vathek, was one of the richest commoners of England at the beginning of the present century, and amassed a most extraordinary collection of paintings, books, works of art, and curiosities of all descriptions. He died in 1844, aged 82 years.

To BECKON, v. a. to make signs to a person to approach or come to one.

To BECOME, v. n. [pret. I became, comp. pret. I have become.] To be made; to grow; to alter or change from one state to another. Used with of, to happen, to fall out, to be the end of.

To BECOME, v. a. applied to persons, to appear worthy of, to adorn, or grace. Applied to things, to suit; to be proper for; to agree, or be so adapted to the circumstances of a person as to be graceful.

BECOMING, part. that acquires a grace from its suitableness or propriety.

BECOMINGLY, ad. in such a manner as to suit the circumstances, rank, and character of a person.

BED, s. [bed, Sax.] a place designed for a person to sleep or lie on, made of a sacking covering, stuffed with feathers, flock, &c. Figuratively, lodging; marriage. In Gardening, a piece of made ground, enriched with dung, &c., for raising plants and other vegetables; the channel of any river. In Geology, a range or layer of earth or mineral substance, a stratum. To be brought to bed of a son, to be delivered of, &c. To make a bed, to shake it, lay the clothes smooth, and make it fit to be lain on. Bed, in Gunnery, a solid piece of oak, hollowed in the middle, to receive the breech and half the trunnions. Hydrostatic bed, an ingenious and most serviceable invention of Dr. Arnott, consisting of a trough of water, on which floats a sheet of india-rubber cloth, upon which a mattress or bed can be laid. The surface of the water yielding to every impression, and the property of fluids being to receive equally throughout whatever pressure is exerted on them, this is the most comfortable bed for an invalid, the weariness and soreness of lying being wholly prevented. Bed of Justice, the name by which those meetings of the parlements of France used to be called, at which the king attended in person for the purpose of having his edicts enrolled, in order to their becoming law. At the Revolution, which commenced on the occasion of one of these beds of justice, parlements and edicts and royal sessions were swept away.

To BED, v. a. to place in a bed; to go to bed. Neuterly, to cohabit.

To BEDDABLE, v. a. to wet, so as to occasion inconvenience or uneasiness.

To BEDDAGGLE, v. a. to daub, dirt, or splash the bottom of a garment, by walking carelessly in wet weather, and not holding it up.

BEDAL, Yorkshire, N. R., 220 miles from London. The Roman causeway, leading from Richmond to Barnard's Castle, which for 20 miles together is called Leeming Lane, passes through this place. All the adjacent country is full of jockeys and horse-dealers, here being some of the best hunting and road horses in the world. Market, Tuesday. Pop. 2803.

To BEDASH, v. a. to wet a person with water by beating it with a stick, or casting a stone in for that purpose.

To BEDDUB, v. a. to cover a thing with dirt. Figuratively, to apply or lay on paint in a rough and ignorant manner.

Bedfordshire

To BEDAZZLE, v. a. to overpower the sight by too much brightness or lustre.

BEDCHAMBER, s. a room furnished with a bed, and set apart for sleeping in. Lords of the bedchamber, are twelve of the first rank, who attend in their turns one week in the king's bedchamber, lying on a pallet-bed all night, and waiting on him whenever he eats in private. The first of them is called the groom of the stole, but he attends upon the king only on great state occasions.

BEDCLOTHES, s. the blankets, quilt, coverlid, &c., which are spread over a bed.

BEDDING, s. [bedding, Sax.] the bed, blankets, quilt, coverlid, &c., which are on a bedstead.

BEDDE, called the Venerable, an English ecclesiastical of the eighth century. He devoted his leisure in his monastery at Jarrow, near Durham, to works on Ecclesiastical History, &c. His great work on that subject is one of considerable value, although it contains much that is of doubtful authenticity. He translated some portions of the Scriptures into Saxon. Alfred the Great translated his Great History into Saxon. Bede's works which remain are all published. He died in 735, in about his 60th year.

To BEDECK, v. a. to embellish; to adorn; to grace.

BEDHOUSE, s. [bede and house, Sax.] an hospital, or almshouse.

BEDD, WILLIAM, bishop of Kilmore, in the Church of Ireland, in the beginning of the 17th century. He was one of the opponents of the High-church party in the Church, although not strictly belonging to the Puritans. His zeal in his diocese exposed him to displeasure on the part of the court, but he lived it down. On the occurrence of the Irish rebellion and massacre, he was seized by the rebels, and confined in irons, but afterwards liberated. He died soon after, in 1642, aged 71 years. He was the author of many esteemed evangelical works, and he translated the Old Testament into the Irish language.

To BEDEW, v. a. to moisten by sprinkling; in allusion to the manner in which the dew moistens the earth and vegetables.

BEDFELLOW, s. one who lies in the same bed with another.

BEDFORD, Bedfordshire. It is seated on the river Ouse, which divides it into two parts, united by a bridge with two gates, one at each end, to stop the passage occasionally. It has five churches, of which St. Paul's is a very noble building, and formerly had a strong castle. The charitable institutions are very numerous, and the lunatic asylum, the infirmary, the grammar school, and some others are handsome buildings. Markets, Monday, for pigs; Saturday, for corn, &c. 50 miles from London. Pop. 9178.

BEDFORD, JOHN, DUKE OF, brother to Henry V., and appointed by him regent of France, during the minority of his son, Henry VI. He was thwarted in his victorious career by the conduct of the Duke of Gloucester, and his rivalry with Cardinal Beaufort; by the domestic circumstances of the Duke of Burgundy; and finally, by the appearance of the Maid of Orleans as leader of the French forces. When she was taken, Bedford was mainly instrumental in accomplishing her death. His second marriage having displeased the Duke of Burgundy, a treaty of peace was effected between him and the king of France; which so damaged the English power, that Bedford died of chagrin, in 1435, aged about 45 years.

BEDFORD LEVÉL, the name of the vast expanse of marshland lying between the counties of Norfolk, Suffolk, Cambridge, Huntingdon, Northampton, and Lincoln, and the sea. It was during the reigns of the Saxon monarchs of England a tidal estuary, with one or two fertile islands, surrounded by the sea at high water, and by broad rivers with immense banks of mud at low water; and crossed by one or two Roman roads on embankments. At the Conquest it was so far laid dry, that many of the Saxons retreated to it, as the last security from the Normans, and here the camp of refuge was formed. In the 15th century the feasibility of draining this barren and pestilential tract was discussed; various attempts were subsequently made, the most successful being in the troublous times of the 17th century, by Francis, Earl of Bedford; from whom it is named. The drainage may now be regarded as almost complete, and by a wonderful combination of embankments, dikes, new river-courses, with locks, and draining mills, many thousands of acres have been reclaimed, and added to the pasture and arable land of the country.

BEDFORDSHIRE, a county in England, about 36 miles in length, and 22 in breadth. It contains 9 hundreds, 10 market towns, 124 parishes, and 107,936 inhabitants, and sends four members to parliament. The Ouse and the Ivel are its chief streams; and the Lea has its source here. The great range of chalk hills passes through this county, whence it arises that it is more noted for pastures, than for arable or wood land. It is a pleasant inland county, and diversified with fruitful plains and rising hills, abounding in cattle, corn, and rich pastures; it is noted for barley, bone lace, and a manufacture of straw goods.

To BEDIGHT, v. a. to set off with dress, or other external ornaments.

To BEDIM, v. a. to darken; to obscure by great brightness.

To BEDIZEN, v. a. to dress out.

BEDLAM, s. [formerly spelt Behlehem, a religious house near Moorfields in London, converted into an hospital for mad people,] a house set apart for the abode and cure of mad people.

BEDLAM, a. belonging to a mad-house.

BEDLAMITE, s. an inhabitant of bedlam; a mad person.

BEDMAKER, s. a person in the universities, whose office it is to make the beds, and clean the chambers.

BEDMINSTER, Somersetshire, one of the suburbs of the city of Bristol, containing 17,862 inhabitants. See BRISTOL.

BEDDOINS, or BEDDOENS, the general name of the nomade Arabs who are found throughout the whole of the countries lying on the E. and S. of the Mediterranean Sea, from Arabia to Morocco.

To BEDRAGGLE, v. a. to dirt or soil the lower part of a garment, by letting it drag in the dirt.

To BEDRENCH, v. a. to soak with an abundance of any fluid.

BEDRIDDEN, a. unable to quit one's bed, through age or sickness.

BEDRITE, s. the privilege of the marriage-bed.

BEDSTEAD, BEDSTED, s. the frame on which a bed is laid.

BEDSTRAW, s. in Botany, a genus of common English plants, the prettiest of which has clustered flowers of a bright yellow colour, and covers hedges and pastures in July.

To BEDUNG, v. a. to cover with dung.

To BEDUST, v. a. to sprinkle with dust.

BEDWIN-MAGNA, Wiltshire. This village was a considerable place in the time of the Saxons, traces of whose fortifications are still remaining. It is 70 miles from London. Pop. 2171.

BEE, s. [Sax.] in Natural History, the name of a large class of well-known insects, of which nearly 300 species have been found in England. They vary much in their habits and modes of life; some building waxen combs, and living in communities, feeding their young on some preparation of the honey or farina of flowers; others living solitary, and digging a hole in dry earth, or in old walls, or cutting one out in the wood of a tree or beam; some, again, lining these rude nests with leaves of plants with great skill, and storing these receptacles with flies and caterpillars, for their young to feed on when hatched. The honey-bee, or hive-bee, is the only one kept by man for the sake of its product, is the most remarkable of all insects in its habits, &c. It lives in societies, composed of one female, called the queen, on whose presence or life the existence of the society depends; several hundred males, called drones, who are put to death when their functions are discharged; and some thousands of undeveloped females, which are neuters in sex, and are called labourers, since on them rests the whole work and management of the community. They build, either in hives or in hollow trees, combs, perpendicularly downwards, which are composed of two sets of cells, placed one at the back of the other. The cells are hexagonal in shape, made as exactly as if by mathematical instruments. These combs are made of wax, which is a natural secretion of the bee's abdomen. In them the queen lays, and the labourers hatch and rear the young, and store the honey, which they never touch till the winter. For the nurture of queens, particularly formed cells are built, and particular food provided. When they are about to come to maturity there is great commotion in the hive, and after a few days the old queen, having collected a swarm round her, quits the hive to found another community. The other queens, to the number of three or four, lead off swarms in like manner. Bees collect honey from the nectaries of flowers by their proboscis, which is very singularly and delicately constructed. The dust from the anthers of flowers, which they carry in a hollow of the hind legs, is used only for the purpose of feeding the young bees. They also gather from the leaf-buds of some trees a kind of resin or gum, which they use to stop all the chinks of the hive, and occasionally to cover up any offender, such as a snail, who may have ventured within their domain. The labourers are armed with a barbed sting, which conveys a very acrid poison into the wound it makes. The queen has a sting, but the drones have none. Bees sometimes make a foray on neighbouring hives, to carry off their stores. The death's head hawk moth, and some others, which lay their eggs in the comb, and whose caterpillars construct sting-proof nests in it, with wasps and hornets, are insect foes to bees. The works of Hüber contain minute and accurate observations of most of their wonderful economy.

BEECH, s. [bece, Sax.] a well-known tree, which has a white, hard, dry wood, useful for the felloes of cart wheels, and for a variety of utensils. An oil is prepared from its mast, which is much esteemed by the French for salads, &c.

BEECHEN, a. [bucene, Sax.] consisting of beech; belonging to beech.

BEE-EATER, s. in Zoology, a bird that feeds upon bees, which occasionally visits England.

BEEF, s. [boef, Fr.] the flesh of oxen dressed for the markets.

BEEFEATER, s. a yeoman of the guards. The word is derived from beaufetier, one who attends at the sideboard, which was anciently placed in a beaufet. The business of the beefeaters was, and still partly is, to attend the king at meals.

BEEHIVE, s. the straw case, or box, in which bees are kept.

BEEL, s. a kind of pick-axe, used by the miners for separating the ores from the rocks in which they lie. In Cornwall it is called a tubber.

BEEN, part. pret. of TO BE.

BEER, v. [bero, Sax. or bir, Brit.] a liquor prepared from malt and hops, and rendered vinous by fermentation. A kind of beer appears to have been made by the ancient Germans and Egyptians.

BEE-R-SHEBA, a city in the south of the Holy Land, called so from a well near which Abraham made a treaty with Abimelech of Gerar. It is frequently named in the Old Testament as one of the extremities of the country.

BEESTINGS, s. See BISTINGS.

BEE-T, s. [beta, Lat.] in Botany, the name of a genus of plants, of which two species are generally cultivated, one in gardens for the purpose of being used as greens are; the other, which has a thick, fleshy root, in fields, as turnips are, for winter food for cattle, and as an alternate crop with wheat. In France and Germany, very good sugar is made from the juice of this last kind of beet.

BEE-TLE, s. [bytel, Sax.] in Natural History, the name popularly given to the whole of that class of insects which have their wings, when closed, protected by horny coverings, or sheaths, resembling the covering of the rest of their bodies; more properly assigned to one family of that class, which are mostly of a black or dark colour, which fly chiefly in the evening, and abound in low, damp places. Also a great sledge, used to beat down pebbles, stakes, wedges, &c.; a wooden mallet made use of in beating hemp.

TO BEE-TLE, v. n. to jut out; to hang over.

BEE-TLEHEADED, a. having a dull, stupid, or unthinking head.

BEEVES, s. [the plural of beef] oxen, cattle, bullocks.

TO BEFA'LL, (befall) v. n. to happen. This word is most commonly taken in a bad sense.

TO BEFIT, v. a. to suit; to tally with.

TO BEFOOL, v. a. to delude; likewise to deride, and treat a person as a fool.

BEFORE, prep. [biforan, Sax.] further onward in place; in the front of, not behind; in the presence of; in sight of; under the cognizance of; in the power of; preceding in time; in preference to; prior to; superior to.

BEFORE, ad. earlier in time; in time past; previously to; to this time, hitherto.

BEFOREHAND, ad. in a state of participation, or pre-occupation; previously, by way of preparation, in a state of accumulation, or so that more has been received than expended.

BEFORETIME, ad. formerly.

TO BEFORTUNE, v. n. to betide.

TO BEFOUL, v. a. to daub, smear, or dirt.

TO BEFRIE'ND, v. a. to do a kindness to a person; to confer a favour.

TO BEG, v. n. [beggeren, Teut.] to pray, entreat, petition, or crave charity, favour, or assistance.

TO BEGET, v. a. preter. I begot, or begat, I have begotten; [be-gelten, Sax.] to generate, or bring forth; to produce as effects or accidents.

BEGETTER, s. he that generates, or gets a child.

BE'GGAR, s. one who lives upon alms; one who assumes what he does not prove; as, to beg the question.

TO BE'GGAR, v. a. to reduce a person from plenty to want.

BE'GGARLINESS, s. a quality which would permit a person to submit to any meanness for the sake of a subsistence.

BE'GGARLY, a. poor; mean.

BE'GGARLY, ad. meanly, despicably.

BE'GGARLY, s. extreme poverty.

TO BEG'N, v. n. pret. I began, or begun; I have begun; [begin-nan, Sax.] to enter upon something new; to commence any action or state; to enter upon existence; to have its original; to take rise.—v. a. to do the first act of any thing; to trace from any thing as the first ground. To begin with; to enter upon.

BEG'NNER, s. he that gives the first cause or original to any thing; an unexperienced attempter.

BEG'NING, s. the first original or cause; the entrance into an act or being; the state in which any thing first is; the rudiments or first grounds.

TO BEG'RD, v. a. preter. I begird, or begirded; I have begird; to bind with a girdle; to surround; to encircle; to shut in with a siege; to beleague.

BE'GLEBEG, s. [Turk.] the chief governor of a province among the Turks. He is also called a bashaw of three tails, from having three ensigns, or staves, trimmed with horse-tails, as the mark of his dignity.

BEGONE, interject. go away; hence, away.

TO BEGU'LE, v. a. [begalim, Sax.] to cheat, impose upon, or deceive.

BEGU'NS, religious societies composed of females, who devoted themselves to prayer and religious exercises, and maintained themselves by manual labour. They were decided mystics. They flourished most in the 13th and 14th centuries, though much persecuted, in Flanders, France, Holland, and Germany, where some societies subsist to this day. This name, or Beghards, was also used to designate certain religious who adopted what was known as the third rule of St. Francis, and who were most numerous during the 13th century in France, Italy, and Germany.

BEHALF, s. interest; side; party. To speak on a person's behalf.

TO BEHA'VE, v. a. to demean, act, or conduct oneself. BEHAV'IOUR, s. a manner of behaving oneself; elegance of manners; conduct; demeanour; course of life. To be upon one's behaviour, a familiar phrase, implying such a state as requires great caution.

TO BEHA'D, v. a. to cut off a person's head. In Europe, this is the punishment of the great and nobly born. In China, it is the punishment of the lowest sort of people, while their superiors are hanged on account of their quality.

BEHEM, MARTIN, the famous map-maker, who accompanied the Portuguese expedition for exploring the E. shore of the Atlantic Ocean, in the 15th century. He was a native of Nuremberg, and many vain tales are told respecting him, which make it very difficult to ascertain his genuine discoveries; some suggesting that Columbus, who was acquainted with Behem, owed to him his great discovery. He died in 1506, aged about 70 years.

BEHEMOTH, s. [Heb.] a monstrous creature mentioned by Job, which some imagine to be the whale; others, the sea-calf, or ox. Some of the fathers thought it to be the devil, and others the elephant. In the Hebrew language, it signifies a beast in general, and particularly those larger sorts that are fit for service.

BE'HEN, s. in the Materia Medica, the name of two roots, the one white, the other red, both accounted cordials and restoratives, but neither is received into the present practice.

BEHEST, s. [be and hes, Sax.] the positive commands of a superior to an inferior.

BEH'ND, prep. [be and hindan, Sax.] at a person's back; backwards; following; remaining after a person's departure, or death. Applied to motion, at a distance from that which moves or goes before, used with the verb leave. "It leaves our sense behind." Dryd. Used comparatively, it implies great inferiority, or less worth. Used adverbially, it implies something not yet discovered or perceived by the mind.

BEHIND-HAND, ad. applied to persons who live beyond their income, and in debt.

BEHMEN, JACOB, the celebrated Teutonic philosopher, or theosopher, and shoemaker, of Görlitz in Lusatia. He was a profound mystic, but amongst his writings may be found thoughts which show that not all his raptures and ecstasies were passed through in vain. He was opposed by the clergy of his town, but he was and is highly esteemed by some of the greatest scholars and philosophers of all lands. In England, during the days of the Long Parliament, the merits of his theosophy were discussed with great heat. He died in 1624, aged 49 years.

TO BEHOLD, v. a. pret. I beheld; I have beheld, or beholden : [behealden, Sax.] to take a view of a person; to have a person in sight, including the idea of attention, or looking on him for some time. SYMON. We see whatever strikes the sight; we look at an object when we designedly cast our eye upon it; we behold it, when we look with attention; viz. when we survey it.

BEHOLD, an interjection of the same force with lo.

BEHOLDEN, part. indebted to; lying under an obligation to a person.

BEHOLDER, s. one who casts his eyes upon an object.

BEHOLDING, s. obligation. This word is seldom used by elegant writers.

BEHOOF, s. [behifts, Sax.] an obligation which a person lies under; also the profit, benefit, or advantage, which may accrue from any thing.

TO BEHOVE, v. n. [behofen, Sax.] to be incumbent on a person as a duty; to be fit and suitable in point of convenience.

BEHRING, VITUS, a Russian naval officer, employed by Catherine I. to conduct an exploring expedition, which she dispatched to the most north-easterly portion of her dominions. In a second expedition, his ship was wrecked, and he perished from the cold, in 1741.

BEHRING'S STRAITS, the name given from their discoverer to the narrow seas which divide Asia from N. America, in about 66. N. lat., and join the Arctic and Pacific Oceans. They are about 50 miles across, and it is not certainly known whether they are ever blocked up with ice, or frozen over during the winter.

BEJAPORE, a province of Hindustan, lying on the Indian Ocean, and to the S. of Aurangabad; with a city of the same name, which was once its capital. The fortifications of this city were very extensive, and the religious buildings and tombs are very remarkable. Lat. 16. 48. N. Long. 75. 26. E.

BEING, the participle of the verb to be.

BEING, s. an abstract term, signifying the existence of a thing; thus we say, the Supreme Being: a finite being, &c.

BEING, conj. since.

BEIRA, a province of Portugal, bounded on the W. by the Atlantic; on the N. by Tras os Montes, and Entre Douro e Minho; on the E. by Leon and Spanish Estremadura; and on the S. by Portuguese Estremadura and Alentejo. It is divided into 11 jurisdictions, called Comarcas. This province is nearly square, being about 120 miles in extent each way; it is well watered, and fertile, at least in corn and fruits; but the people are indolent, and much given to begging.

BEIROUT, a Syrian town on a bay of the Mediterranean Sea. It is pleasantly situated, and the country round produces abundance of wine and fruits; and which, with silk, form its export trade. Its population is about 5000. Lat. 33. 50. N. Long. 35. 27. E.

TO BELA-BOUR, v. a. to beat a person severely. A low and vulgar expression.

TO BELACE, v. a. in Navigation, to mend a rope, by laying one end over another.

BELATED, a. belighted; used to express something which ought to have been done, but was omitted at a period past.

TO BELA-Y, v. n. to lie in ambush, or to lie in wait for.

TO BELA-Y, v. a. [beleygen, Belg.] in Navigation, to fasten.

TO BELCH, v. a. [belcan, Sax.] to break wind upwards.

BELCH, s. the act of breaking wind upwards.

BELDAM, [belle dame, Fr.] a name given in derision to an old woman.

TO BELEAGUER, v. a. [belleguer, Belg.] to block up, or besiege a place.

BELEAGUERER, s. one that besieges a place.

BELEMNITES, s. [belemnion, an arrow, Gr.] vulgarly called a thunderbolt, arrow-head, or finger-stone. These stones, about which so many absurd and superstitious tales were told, are known now to have been the bone of a kind of cuttle-fish. They are found in most of the secondary strata, and in the gravel, and other beds above them. There are several species, some of which are exceedingly elegant in their forms.

BELFAST, a large town and sea-port, of increasing importance, in the county of Antrim, Ulster, seated on Carrickfergus Bay, at the mouth of Lagan river, with two bridges over it. A navigable canal, connecting the harbour with Lough Neagh, was completed in 1793. Here are considerable manufactures of cotton, cambric, sail-cloth, and linen, with others of glass, sugar, earthenware, a large export of provisions, &c. It is 80 miles from Dublin. Pop. 75,308.

BELFAST, Maine, United States. It is beautifully situated at the head of Belfast Bay, on the Penobscot river. It has a spacious and safe harbour, sufficiently deep for vessels of the largest class. It is extensively engaged in the shipping trade, ship-building, and fisheries. Pop. 4186.

BELFORD, Northumberland, situated on the ridge of a hill, 2 miles from the Lear, and 319 from London. Market, Tuesday. Pop. 1789.

BELFRY, s. [perhaps from beffroi, Fr.] that part of the steeple wherein the bells are hung, particularly that timber work to which they are fastened.

BELGIUM, a kingdom of Europe, established in 1830, comprising the provinces of Antwerp, S. Brabant, E. and W. Flanders, Hainault, Limbourg, Liège, and Namur; and bounded by Holland, Germany, France, and the N. Sea. In general it is a level tract of country, but in the inland parts there are some hills, amongst which are some good coal-fields. The rivers are the Meuse, the Scheldt, the Ourthe, and some smaller streams. Some canals it has, and excellent railroads. It is fertile, and produces corn and wine, and furnishes good pastures. Its manufactures of lace and woollen goods have been long famous; it has, besides these, others of less consequence. Its population is nearly 5,000,000, of whom the greatest part are Romanists.

BELGRADE, a large, and formerly a strong, city of Turkey in Europe, the residence of a sangiac, and chief place of Servia. It is seated on a low hill, which reaches the Danube, a little above its confluence with the Save. It is still a place of considerable trade, being resorted to by merchants of different nations. It is 265 miles from Vienna, and 440 from Constantinople. Population about 25,000.

BELIAL, s. [Heb.] the devil. A son of Belial, is a wicked man, who will endure no constraint.

BELIEF, s. credit, persuasion, opinion; faith, or firm assurance of the truths of religion; the creed, or form, containing the articles of faith.

TO BELIEVE, v. a. [gelifan, Sax.] to assent to the truth of a proposition founded on probable arguments; to put confidence in the veracity or truth of any one.

BELIEVER, s. one who gives assent or credit to a thing; one who assents to the truth of Christianity, upon the probable arguments produced in its favour.

BELIKE, ad. perhaps, probably.

BELISARIUS, a famous Roman general under the emperor Justinian I. He was engaged in several campaigns against the Persians, and was generally successful. At Constantinople he put down a revolt which threatened the throne of the emperor. He had a triumph awarded him for his victories over the Vandals in Africa. He was equally prosperous in his war in Italy against the Goths. After other campaigns, in which he sustained various fortune, and more than once saved the empire, he was discarded by the emperor, and died in indigence in 565. Procopius, the historian, was his secretary.

BELL, s. [bel, Sax.] a vessel made of a compound metal, of tin and copper, or pewter and copper, in the proportion of 20 lb. of pewter, or 23 lb. of tin, to 100 wt. of copper; yielding a musical sound on being struck by a hammer, or by a metallic bar suspended within it, called the tongue, or clapper; hung in steeples of churches, and in houses. Those of the Egyptians are made of wood. The Turks have a very great aversion to bells, and prohibit Christians the use of them in Constantinople, pretending that the sound of them would be troublesome to the souls of the departed. Bells are said to have been first introduced into churches by St. Paulinus, bishop of Nola in Campania, about the year 400. To bear the bell, is to surpass others, or to be the first in merit. The passing bell is the bell rung on the death of any person, which used to be rung while the soul was passing away, to call for the prayers of the people. The curfew bell was the bell rung at 8 o'clock p. m., as a notice for all persons to put out their fires and candles.

TO BELL, v. n. in Botany, to grow in the shape of bells.

BELL, JOHN, and SIR CHARLES, two distinguished anatomists and surgeons of the latter part of the last, and the beginning of the present century. Both were remarkable for the zeal with which they applied their knowledge of anatomy to their surgical practice, particularly military surgery. John published several works on his favourite subjects, and also some observations made in a tour in Italy. His surgical works are still much esteemed. Sir Charles was first engaged in the Middlesex Hospital, and afterwards was senior Professor of Surgery in the College of Surgeons. He was the discoverer of the existence of two kinds of nerves, one for purposes of motion, the other for sensation. He was connected with his brother in some of his works; besides which, his Bridergrater Treatise, and Notes to Paley's Natural Theology, with his Animal Mechanics, have gained him a deserved popularity. He died in 1842, aged 68 years.

BELL, JOHN, of Anternomy, Scotland, has gained some notoriety by various travels in which he was engaged as physician to embassies from the emperor of Russia. He travelled to Ispahan, to Peking, to the Caucasus, to Constantinople, and at length settled in his native country. He died in 1780, aged 89 years.

BELL, DR. ANDREW, the author of the Madras System of Education, and establisher of National Schools. He was engaged as chaplain by the East India Company, and had his attention drawn to the subject of popular education during his superintendency of the Asylum for Males at Madras. On returning home he published his scheme, for the carrying out of which the National School Society was established. Considerable controversy arose from the circumstance of another scheme of popular education having been at the same time set on foot by Joseph Lancaster, under the sanction of George III. But as this was adopted chiefly by Dissenters, the excitement was soon mitigated. Dr. Bell accumulated a large fortune, of which he left the greater part for educational purposes. He died in 1832, aged 79 years, and was buried in Westminster Abbey.

BELL ROCK, a formerly dangerous rock, opposite the mouth of the Tay, Scotland. All round it is deep water, but it was covered during a gale. The Abbot of Arbroath, or Aberbrothich, fixed over it, on a raft, a bell, which the waves swung, and so sounded, in old times. There is now a light-house erected on it, and bells are sounded continually during foggy weather from it, and bells are sounded continually during foggy weather from it.

BELLADONNA, s. in Botany, a name of the deadly nightshade, which bears berries which are the most poisonous of any native plants of England.

BELLARMINE, CARDINAL, the celebrated controversialist of the order of Jesuits. His works, which are very numerous, treat principally of the subjects of difference between Romanists and Protestants, and are esteemed an authority of the highest order in his own communion. He died in 1621, aged 79 years.

BELLE, s. [the feminine of beau, Fr. pron. bell,] a person who dresses with elegance, behaves with gentility, and has all the polite accomplishments that can adorn a lady.

BELLE-ISLE, a small island on the W. coast of France, near the mouth of the Loire. It is about ten miles long, and six broad. The soil is fertile, and climate temperate; its grazing land and fisheries supply the materials for its export trade. Palais, its chief town, has a population of about 2000. The population of the island is under 10,000.

BELLES-LETTRES, s. those branches of education that polish and adorn the mind. Languages, classical learning, both Greek and Latin, Geography, Rhetoric, Chronology, and History, may be accounted the chief parts of learning contained under this term.

BELLFASHIONED, a. that resembles a bell in its shape.

BELLFLOWER, s. in Botany, a genus of plants, so called from the shape of their blossoms. The species are very numerous.

BELLFOUNDER, s. a person who casts bells.

BELLIGERENT, part. [bellum and gero, Lat.] that is at war; that is engaged in war.

BELLIGEROUS, a. engaged in, or waging war.

BELLING, part. [a corruption of bellowing or bellan, Sax.] applied to the noise made by a doe at rutting time.

BELLINGHAM, Northumberland, 300 miles from London. Markets Tuesday and Saturday. Pop. 1730.

BELLMAN, s. a superior kind of watchman, with a bell, which he rings at certain places in his parish, before he repeats some verses on the eve of a festival. In country towns, applied to the crier, who bears a bell, which he rings to give notice to the neighbourhood before he makes his proclamation.

BELLMETAL, s. the metal of which bells are made, being a composition of tin and copper.

BELLYON, BELLAND, in Medicine, a distemper very common in Derbyshire, and other countries where they melt lead ore. It is attended with an intolerable pain in the bowels.

BELLOONA, in Mythology, the sister of Mars, and goddess of war. When war was proclaimed, the herald set a spear upon a pillar before her temple; the priestesses, in their devotions to her, used to cut themselves with knives to render her propitious.

TO BELLOW, v. n. (bellan, Sax.) to make a very loud noise; applied to that of a bull, the sea in a storm, or the outcries of human creatures.

BELLOWS, s. [bilig, Sax.] an instrument into which air is alternately drawn and expelled, rushing in at some apertures in its bottom called feeders, and rushing out of a metal tube called its muzzle.

BELLLUINE, a. [belluinus, Lat.] beastly; brutal.

BELLY, s. [balg, Belg.] that part of the body which reaches from the breast to the thighs, and contains the entrails both in men and beasts; used figuratively, for gluttony, or luxury in eating.

TO BELLY, v. n. to swell; to protuberate, applied to the thing which grows larger in one part than it is in another.

BELLYACHE, (belly-ake) s. a pain in the belly, arising from wind, or other flatulencies; the colic.

BELLYBOUND, a. affected with costiveness.

BELLYFUL, s. a sufficiency of food, or what takes away the sensation of hunger, and satisfies the appetite.

BELLYGOD, s. a glutton; one who makes a god of his belly.

BELLYPINCHED, a. denied or in want of sufficient food; hungry.

BELLYROLL, s. in Husbandry, a roller, or cylinder, made use of to roll the ground after it is ploughed.

BELLYTIMBER, s. food, or that which suffices hunger, and supports the human fabric, in the same manner as props of timber do a building. A low word.

BELLYWORM, s. a worm which feeds in the belly or entrails.

BELLOMANCY, s. [belos and manteia, Gr.] divination by arrows.

TO BELONG, v. n. [belangen, Belg.] to be the property of a person; to be the province or business of, to have relation to, applied to the heads of a discourse; to be dependent on as a subject or domestic; to be appropriated to; to have for its peculiar object.

BELOOCHISTAN, a country of Asia, lying on the Indian Ocean, between the Indus and the Straits of Ormuz, having Hindustan on the E., Persia on the W., and Cabul or Afghanistan, on the N. Almost the whole of the N. frontier is desert; and there are ranges of mountains, which do not, however, attain any great elevation, both on the E. and W. frontiers. There are no rivers of any consequence in this country. That part which lies along the coast is a flat, and not very productive, district. The climate varies from the tropical heat of the S. and desert regions, to the temperature and climate of the N. of Europe, which prevails in the mountainous parts. A very small proportion of the whole surface is reclaimed, either as arable or pasture land. All descriptions of corn, &c. and fruits of all kinds, including both European and Asiatic species, abound here. The trees are mostly tropical in their species, and some yield good timber. Sheep, camels, horses, and the usual domestic animals, are plentiful; with some domestic birds. The usual wild animals of Asia abound also. Beloochistan has also much mineral and metallic wealth. The people belong in part to the Tatar variety of the species, and in part apparently to the Caucasian: the language and customs of the two races differ. The most powerful authority is that of the khan of Khelat, but his sway is checked by the power of his chiefs. In other parts a kind of republicanism seems to prevail. Khelat, Gundava, Bhaug, and Bela, are the chief towns. Its population is estimated at about 4,500,000.

BELOVED, part. [from belove, which is hardly ever used, though nothing can be more frequent than the use of the participle; thus we say, you are beloved by me, but never, I belove you;] regarded with the greatest warmth of affection: used substantively for the person so regarded.

BELLOW, prep. [to and lo, or loh, Belg.] applied to a place, not so high as another object. Applied to dignity or excellence, inferior to. Applied to character, or rank, unbecoming, on account of its meanness; unfit, or degrading, on account of its baseness or viciousness. Used adverbially, in a low situation, or nearer to the earth.

BELSHAM, THOMAS, an eminent Unitarian minister of London. He was educated as a Calvinistic Dissenter, and was a minister, and principal of an academy in that connexion. But he is best known, from his polemical and other writings, as an uncompromising Unitarian. He was the editor of the Improved Version of the New Testament. He died in 1812, aged 63 years.

BELSHAZZAR, the king of Babylon who was conquered and slain by Cyrus when he took the city. It was this king who was warned by the vision of the hand-writing on the wall, during one of his banquets, which was interpreted by the prophet Daniel, who, with his fellow-countrymen the Jews, was at that time in captivity. Babylon was taken in the year 538 B. C.

BELSWAGGER, s. one who makes a noise, and puts on an air of importance.

BELT, s. [Sax.] a girdle fastened round a person's middle. When a sword is hung to it, it is called a sword belt. In Astronomy, those parallel bands or girdles surrounding the body of the planet Jupiter. In Geography, certain straits between the German Ocean and the Baltic. The belts belong to the king of Denmark, who exacts toll from all ships passing through them, except those of Sweden: the greater belt, is the strait between the islands of Zealand and Funen, forming a communication between the Cattegat and Baltic; and the lesser belt, that between Funen and Jutland.

BELTANE, a festival amongst the Celtic races of Scotland and Ireland, held on May 1st, and June 21st, when large fires were kindled with great ceremony, and cattle were driven into them as expiatory offerings, and the flocks and herds driven between them, to preserve them from murrain, &c. The minor arrangements of the feast differed in different localities, but its religious character is the same every where, and marks its high antiquity.

BELUGA, s. in Natural History, a fish of the genus sturgeon.

BELVIDERE, s. [Ital.] in Architecture, an erection on the top of a palace or dwelling-house for the sake of a prospect; a small summer-house built in a park or garden for the same purpose.

BE/LWETHER, s. a sheep which keeps the rest of the flock together, and draws them after him by the sound of a bell hanging to his neck.

To BELYE, BE/LYE, v. a. to invent a falsehood; to feign; to calumniate; to misrepresent.

BELZONI, GIOVANNI, an Italian celebrated for his discoveries amongst the pyramids and tombs of Egypt, and the great skill with which he secured and shipped some most bulky and ponderous antiquities for the British authorities. He attempted subsequently to reach Timbuctoo, but was attacked by dysentery in Benin, and died in 1823, aged 45 years.

BEMBO, CARDINAL, one of the famous patrons and promoters of literature at the revival of learning under Pope Leo X. He was by birth a Venetian, and of good family. Although he was inclined to the church, he did not actually enter it, till he was made a cardinal by Paul III. He was one of Leo's secretaries; and he wrote poems in Latin and Italian, a history of his native city, a work on his native tongue, &c. He died in 1547, aged 78 years.

To BEMIRE, v. a. to daub or smear with dirt.

BEM/RED, part. covered with dirt. Figuratively, stuck or sinking in a dirty or boggy place.

To BEMOAN, v. a. [beemoene, Sax.] to express sorrow for any disaster or calamity.

BEMO/ANER, s. one who pities, laments, or is affected with sorrow, on account of the disasters of another.

To BEMO/VL, v. a. [of be and moil; from moiller, Fr.] to daub; to fall, to be rolled in, or encumbered with dirt.

To BEMON/STER, v. a. to make a thing hideous, horrible, or monstrous.

BEM/STER, or BE/MINSTER. See BEAMINSTER.

BEMU/SED, a. given to rhyming or poetry. A term of ridicule.

BEN/ARES, a district of Allahabad, in Hindustan, lying on the Ganges; with a capital of the same name, which is rich, populous, and celebrated as the ancient city of Brahminical learning. It stands on the Ganges, and is deemed sacred by the natives. It is badly built and filthily kept. A magnificent mosque exists, built by Aurungzebe, used by the great numbers of Mohammedans who resort hither for trade. The college and schools of this city now existing are of modern date. It has a population of above half a million. It is 425 miles from Delhi, and 435 from Calcutta. Lat. 25. 20. N. Long. 83. 1. E.

BENCH, s. [ben, Sax. banc, Fr.] a seat made of a long board, distinguished from a stool by its length. Used for the prison or liberties of the King's Bench, which see. The seat whereon judges sit. Figuratively, the persons sitting in the trial of causes. Free-bench signifies that estate in copyhold lands, which the wife, being espoused a virgin, has, after the decease of her husband, for her dower, according to the custom of the manor.

To BENCH, v. a. to furnish with, erect, or make benches in any place; to place, seat, or prefer a person to a seat or bench.

BENCHERS, s. in Law, the senior barristers of an inn of court, intrusted with the government and direction of it, out of which is annually chosen a steward.

BENC/OOLEN, a town on the S. W. coast of the island of Sumatra, in Asia. It is not badly built, but is reckoned unhealthy. It belongs at present to the Dutch, and has a good trade in pepper and other spices. The population of the town with its district is estimated at 100,000. Lat. 4. 10. S. Long. 102. 50. E.

To BEND, v. a. pret. and part. bended or bent, [bendan, Sax.] to force from a straight line to a curve; to draw the string of a bow in order to shoot with it. Figuratively, to apply the mind to the consideration of any object; to be disposed to; to make submissive. To bend the brow, to knit the brow. To bend the knee, &c., to acknowledge superiority, with respect or submission. v. n. to become curved. Used with on, it signifies earnest resolution of mind to bring about a particular thing.

BEND, s. the part of a line, &c., which is not straight, and forms an angle. In Heraldry, bend is one of the nine honourable ordinaries, containing a third part of the field when charged, and a fifth when plain. It is sometimes, like other ordinaries, indented, ingrained, &c. Bend dexter is formed by two lines drawn from the upper part of the shield, on the right, to the lower part of the left, diagonally. It is supposed to represent a shoulder belt, or a scarf. Bend sinister, is that which comes from the left side of the shield to the right. In bend, is when any things borne in arms are placed obliquely from the upper corner to the opposite lower, as the bend lines.

BENDABLE, a. that may be forced from a straight to a crooked line; that may be bent.

BENDER, s. one who bends any thing; an instrument by which any thing may be forced from a straight to a crooked line.

BENDER, a town of Russia in Europe, lying on the Dniester, on the Turkish frontier. It is strongly fortified, but not well built, or kept. The population is about 5000. Its history and importance lie in its being a military post. Lat. 46. 50. N. Long. 29. 35. E.

BEN/DETS, s. [bandelet, Fr.] in Heraldry, marks or distinctions in a shield, of the same kind, but only half the breadth of a bend.

BENDS, s. in a ship, are the wales, or the outmost timbers of a ship's side, on which men set their feet in climbing up.

BENDY, s. in Heraldry, is the field divided into four, six, or more parts, diagonally, and varying in colour.

BENE/PEAD, a. [be and neap, from neapte, Sax.] a sea-term, implying that a ship has not depth of water enough to set her anchor, bring her over a bar, or out of a dock.

BENE/ATH, prep. [beneath, Sax. beneden, Belg.] applied to situation, not so high as, or under, something else. In Botany, applied to a blossom when it includes the seed-bud, and is attached to the part immediately below it, as in the sage, borrago, convolvulus, polyanthus, &c.; applied also to the seed-bud when the blossom is above it, and therefore not connected therewith, as in the honeysuckle, currant, hawthorn, &c. Joined with sink, it implies the pressure of something heavy on a person. Applied to rank or dignity, inferior to. Applied to actions, not becoming, unworthy of a person. Adverbially, in a lower place, below, as opposed to heaven.

BENEDICT, the name assumed by fourteen popes and one antipope; the most worthy of mention amongst whom is the last, who was consecrated in 1740, and distinguished his pontificate by the encouragement of learning and art, and the reformation of abuses at home, and conducted himself towards foreign powers in a wise and conciliatory manner, interfering only for the relief of the oppressed, as became his character, and the age he lived in. He died in 1758, aged 81 years. Some of his works are much esteemed.

BENEDICTINES, or Black Friars, a religious order, following the rules of St. Benedict, an ascetic of the beginning of the 6th century, who made himself famous by his austerities, and the zeal wherewith he overturned idolatry in Monte Cassino. The habit for monks prescribed in his Regula Monachorum, and worn by his order, was a loose black gown, with large wide sleeves, and a capuche, cowl, or hood of the same colour; and a white flannel dress under their gown. The dress for nuns of this order was the same, with the exception of the cowl, which was worn only in their public service in the church. The regulations for monasteries of the Black Friars were of the strictest character, and submission to their abbots was the prominent feature. Before the dissolution in England, this order was the most widely spread and the richest; St. Augustine is believed to have introduced it into the country.

BENEDICTION, or BLESSING, s. [benedictio, Lat.] among the Hebrews, signifies the present usually sent from one friend to another; as also the blessing conferred by the patriarchs, on their death-beds, on their children. It was also one of those early instances of honour and respect paid to bishops in the primitive church. The custom of bowing the head to them, and receiving their blessings, became universal. In the western churches there was anciently a kind of Benediction, which followed the Lord's prayer; and after the communion, the people were dismissed with a Benediction.

BENEFACTION, s. [benefactio, Lat.] a good and benevolent action; generally applied to charitable gifts for the relief of persons in distress.

BENEFACITOR, s. a man who confers a benefit or does an act of kindness to a person in want.

BENEFACTRESS, s. a woman, or female, who contributes to the relief of the indigent by some charitable gift.

BENEFICE, s. [beneficium, Lat.] a word borrowed from the Romans, who used to distribute the lands conquered on the frontiers to their soldiers; they were called beneficarii, and the lands themselves beneficia, which were at first given for life only, but afterwards were made hereditary. Hence benefice, in the church, signifies either a church endowed with a reward or salary, for the performance of divine service, or the salary itself given on that account. All church preferments, except bishoprics, are called benefices; and all benefices are styled by the canonists sometimes dignities; but now dignity is usually applied to bishoprics, deaneries, archdeacons, and prebends; and benefice to parsonages, vicarages, rectories, and donatives. A benefice in commendam, is that which is given to a person on a vacancy for a certain time, or till it is provided for.

BENEFICED, a. possessed of a church living.

BENEFICENCE, s. [beneficentia, Lat.] a disinterested inclination to do a good action, or to promote another's welfare.

BENEFICENT, part. [beneficus, Lat.] performing acts of kindness and assistance without any views of interest.

BENEFICIAL, a. [beneficium, Lat.] that assists, relieves, or is of service to.

BENEFICIALLY, ad. in such a manner as to relieve, assist, or be of service to a person.

BENEFICIARY, a. that holds any dignity as dependent on, and tributary to, another. Used substantively, it implies one who is in possession of a church living or benefice.

BENEFIT, s. [beneficium, Lat.] that which turns to the profit of another; an act of kindness or love done, to help or assist another. Among players, the whole takings of the theatre, which are applied to their own use. In Law, benefit of clergy, was an ancient liberty of the church; whereby any priest might on his petition, even in case of murder, be delivered to his ordinary, in order to purge himself. Afterwards it was confined to signify a person's being burned in the hand, whipped, or transported, instead of suffering capitally, if he could read. It is now abolished.

To BENEFIT, v. a. to do something to or for another, whereby he may receive advantage or improvement; to promote, increase, or render better. Used neuterly, to improve. Applied to the mind, to reap advantage from.

BENEVENTO, anciently BENEVENTUM, a large and rich city of Naples, capital of the Principato Ultra. It is seated in a fertile valley, near the confluence of the Sabato and Caloro, 30 miles from Naples. The country round is fertile; but the city is not remarkable for its general appearance or for its public buildings. Its population is under 20,000.

BENEVOLENCE, s. [benevolentia, Lat.] a disposition to do good; kindness; the good done; the charity given. A name given to those compulsory loans or contributions, by which the kings of England in former days, in violation of their coronation oath and the liberties of the people, obtained the means for supporting their prodigal expenditure on favourites and in wars. The troubles of Charles I. began respecting benevolences. They were abolished distinctly by the Bill of Rights in 1688. SYNON. Of the two words beneficence and benevolence, one is the intention, the other the act; benevolence being the desire of doing good; beneficence, actual goodness.

BENEVOLENT, part. [benevolens, Lat.] inclined to do good from an affectionate regard to a person.

BENGAL, a province in the E. part of Hindustan, extending from E. to W. upwards of 400 miles, and from N. to S. above 300. It is bounded on the W. by Orissa and Bahar; on the N. by Nepal and Bootan; on the E. by Assam and Meckley; and on the S. by the Bay of Bengal. The country consists of one vast plain, which, in common with other parts of Hindustan, annually renders two, and in some parts even three crops. Its principal products are sugar, silk, cotton, fruit, pepper, opium, rice, saltpetre, lac, and civet. The rivers Ganges and Brahmaputra, with their tributaries, and other large streams, water this province, and by their yearly inundations maintain the productiveness of its soil. Lions, tigers, jackalls, monkeys, deer, &c., infest the jungles; and the rivers abound with alligators. Iron and coal are its chief mineral wealth. The exports of Bengal are indigo, silk, sugar, &c., to England, and to China opium, and to other parts cotton goods. The English have had possession of this province since 1755; and it is the seat of the highest authorities in British India. Its population is about 25,000,000. Calcutta is the capital.

BENGAL, s. [from Bengal in the East Indies] a sort of thin light stuff, made of silk and hair, for women's apparel.

BENGALI, the name of the language spoken in Bengal. It resembles the old language of the country, the Sanscrit, as our English does the Saxon. It was not much used in literature till the translations of the Bible, the Pilgrim's Progress, and other religious works, by the Baptist Missionaries, at Serampore.

BENGAZI, a town of Barbary, Africa, belonging to the pasha of Tripoli. It stands on the shore, about 15 miles from the Cyrenian Mountains. The port is not now so good as it used to be. The town is badly built, and pestilentially filthy. It is, in appearance, fortified. Its population is above 2000, most of whom are Jews and slaves. The remains of the ancient city of Berenice, which occupied the same site, are numerous. Lat. 32. 7. N. Long. 20. 3. E.

BENGL, JOHANN ALBERT, an eminent German divine in the beginning of the last century. After having been engaged as tutor at Tübingen and Denkendorf, he was appointed prelate at Wirtenburg. His chief and best fame arises from his writings, which have always been held in the highest esteem by pious men; one of which, his Gnomon of the New Testament, was adopted by Wesley as part of the creed or articles of his society; and from his edition of the Greek Testament, which biblical critics have held to be of considerable worth. He died in 1752, aged 65 years.

BENGUE/LA, a region on the W. coast of Africa, bounded on the W. by the ocean; on the N. by Angola; on the E. and S. E. by parts unknown; and on the S. by Mataman, or Matapan. The productions are manioc, palms, dates, vines, cassia, and tamarinds; and from the humidity of the soil, they have two fruit-seasons in the year. The country abounds in lions, tigers, hippopotami, alligators, and formerly in elephants. The district is held by the Portuguese, who have a governor resident at the capital, St. Philip de Benguela. The slave-trade was its chief commercial engagement. It is said that there are silver mines and salt mines there. This country has been but imperfectly explored.

To BEN/GHT, v. a., to be overtaken by darkness in a journey; to be without light; to wander in the dark. Applied literally to the eyes, and figuratively to the mind.

BEN/GN, (benine) a., (benignus, Lat.) having a disposition that inclines a person to do a good action to another; kind, generous, or liberal. In Medicine, wholesome, gentle.

BEN/GNITY, (the g is retained in the pronunciation of this word, though dropped in the former,) s. (benignité, Fr. benignitas, Lat.) a disposition of mind inclining one person to be kind to another.

BENIGNLY, (benignely) ad. in such a manner as to show kindness and condescension.

BEN/GNNESS, (benineness) s., that which inclines a person, or fits a thing, to do good to another.

BENIN, the name of a river and a bay of Nigritia, in W. Africa. The river has not been very carefully explored, its atmosphere being so pestilential; but it is known to be in reality not so fine a stream as its mouth, which is more than two miles across, would indicate. On its banks are various towns, as two New Towns, Salt Town, Reggio Town, &c., built apparently for the sake of the trade, which once flourished with the Dutch, Portuguese, and English. The Bight of Benin lies between Cape Formosa and Cape St. Paul's, and is above 300 miles across. The shore is little better than a morass, being in fact part of the great delta of the Quorra, or Niger river, and the river Benin, or Formoso, and others. On the coast are several establishments of the Danes, the Portuguese, the French, and the English. The trade, which is carried on chiefly by barter, is in ivory, gold dust, palm oil, and (which has been of the greatest injury to the people) slaves. It is during the rainy season that the climate and the country are most fatal.

BENISON, s. (benir, Fr.) a blessing, applied to the benediction of a parent.

BEN-LA/WERS, a mountain of Perth, Scotland, about 3950 feet in height, on the N. of Loch Tay.

BEN-LE/DI, a mountain of Perth, Scotland, which attains the height of nearly 3000 feet.

BEN-LON/MOND, a mountain of Stirling, Scotland. It is the S. end of the Highland, and abounds in fine prospects. Its height is about 3200 feet.

BEN-M/DHU', a mountain between Aberdeen and Inverness, Scotland, 4300 feet high, on the S. of Loch Avoon.

BENNET, s. in Botany, a name of the common geum, or avens.

BEN-NEVIS, a mountain of Inverness, rising 4300 feet above the level of the sea. Its summit affords one of the most extensive and beautiful prospects in Scotland.

BEN-VE/NU, a mountain of Perth, Scotland, celebrated for its romantic beauty by Scott, in his Lady of the Lake. It lies on the S. of Loch Katrine, and is not much more than 2000 feet high.

BEN-VOIR/LICH, a mountain of Perth, Scotland, S. of Loch Earn, 3300 feet in height. This is one of the most romantic mountains of Scotland.

BENT, s. that which forms an angle, or crookedness, in opposition to straightness; the declivity or slope of a hill; application of the mind; disposition or inclination towards something; determination; fixed purpose; turn of the temper or disposition; tendency; flexion. In Botany, a kind of grass.

BENTHAM, JEREMY, the well-known politician, jurist, moralist, and philosopher, of the beginning of this, and the end of the last century. He studied at Oxford, was destined for the bar, travelled through Europe, and passed the latter part of his life as a bench of Lincoln's Inn. The events of his life were his thoughts and his books; and, so measured, his life was most eventful. His works on the laws, and on the principle of law, are of the utmost value, though but little prized hitherto. In his ethical writings, he took as his foundation, (a principle akin to Paley's,) that that was right which secured the happiness of the greatest number, thus making utility the test of virtue, and sagacity the sovereign of the conscience. His own benevolent life was the best reply to his theory. In practical matters, he has yet the greatest part of his work for mankind to perform. He died in 1832, aged 85 years.

BENTIVOGLIO, the name of a noble and distinguished family at Bologna; the most eminent of whom, Cardinal Guido Bentivoglio, in the end of the 16th and beginning of the 17th centuries, was much occupied in the affairs of Europe. He was papal nuncio to the Netherlands during the religious wars there, and to France in the time of Louis XIII. His writings, which relate principally to affairs in which he took part personally, are admired for their style, and valued for candid expositions of the views and feelings of Romanists in such exciting and perplexed times. He died in 1644, aged 65 years.

BENTLEY, RICHARD, a most famous English classical critic and scholar of the last century. He was in succession master of the grammar school at Spalding, Lincolnshire; tutor to the son of Dr. Stillingfleet; prebendary of Worcester; keeper of the king's library; Master of Trinity, Cantab.; and Regius Professor of Divinity at the same University. No scholar was ever engaged in more numerous and less dignified quarrels, than Bentley. No one has so mixed a fame. He has, in his writings, powerfully defended religion; helped largely the study of the New Testament Scriptures; and established canons of criticism, and accumulated immense stores of most curious and valuable erudition. But he has, by his impetuosity, and by his foible of editing every classic writer, brought on his canons and himself undeserved ridicule. He died in 1739, aged 77 years.

To BENUMB, v. a. (benumen, Sax.) to take away or destroy the sense of feeling, applied to the effect of cold upon the extreme parts of the body; or the approach of death, and stupefying violence of any disorder.

BENZO/ATES, in Chemistry, salts formed by the combination of any base with the benzoic acid.

BENZOIC, in Chemistry, belonging to benzoïn. Benzoic acid, is the acid obtained from benzoïn; it is found in other vegetables, as bitter almonds, the essential oils of many plants, &c.

BENZOIN, (vulgarly called Benjamin,) s. a dry and solid resin, brought from the East Indies. It should be chosen fresh, is of a quick pungent smell, easily broken, and full of the white almond-like granules. It is a powerful expectorant, and is given with success in disorders of the lungs and inveterate coughs. The leaves of the tree, from which it is procured by incision, resemble those of the lemon-tree.

To BE/PAIN, v. a. to cover with artificial colours. Figuratively, to change the colour of the complexion.

To BE/QUEATH, v. a. to leave a person any thing by will.

BE/QUEATHMENT, s. the leaving something, or the thing left by will. Seldom used.

BE/QUEST, s. something left by will; a legacy.

BERAR, a province of the S. part of Hindustan, bounded on the N. and E. by the presidency of Bengal; on the S. by Arunabad; and on the W. by the territory of the Nizam. It is elevated table land, accessible by the defiles of the surrounding mountains. It has some considerable streams, one only of which is navigable. This lack of means of trading renders its commerce very poor. The usual plants and vegetables of India grow here.

To BE/RATTLE, v. a. to make a noise at, including the idea of contempt; to scold.

BERBERRA, a trading town on the Gulf of Aden, in Africa, by means of which good part of the trade of Aden with the interior parts of Africa is carried on. The constant residents are very few, but from November to May the population is considerable.

BERBERS, one of the aboriginal tribes of the N. W. coast of Africa. They are found, under various names, throughout all the different states of that part, and far into the Great Desert.

BERBICE, one of the English settlements in the W. Indies. It is in Guiana, on the continent of S. America; and with Demerara and Essequibo, forms British Guiana. New Amsterdam is its capital, which stands on the Berbice river, which is navigable for large vessels 50 miles from its mouth. The population is about 25,000, of whom more than five-sixths are negroes and of negro blood. Coffee, cotton, sugar, rum, are its exports.

To BEREA'VE, v. n. pret, beraeved, or bereft: [beraeftan, Sax.] to take away by force, including a want of pity; to spoil; to rob; to strip a person of his property.

BERE'AYEMENT, s. the act of taking away, or leaving a person destitute of any thing.

BERENGER, one of the schoolmen of the 11th century. He may be regarded as one of the founders of the scholastic theology. He was engaged in a trying controversy respecting transubstantiation, in which his opponents used their customary arguments, anathemas, book-burnings, forced recantations, and were out of the life of the despiser of authority. He died in 1088.

BERE'RE/GIS, Dorsetshire. It is a small place, 113 miles from London. Market, Wednesday. Pop. 1394.

BERES'NA, a tributary river to the Dnieper, which rises in the province of Minsk, and after flowing for about 250 miles, joins the Dnieper near Horwale.

BER'GAMO, s. [Fr.] a coarse tapestry, manufactured with several sorts of spun thread, or of flocks of wool, silk, or cotton, ox, cow, or goat's hair.

BER'GAMO, a province and city of Lombardy, under the Alps and the Grisons. The city is fortified, and its churches and cathedral are splendid buildings. There are several galleries of paintings here. It has also good educational institutions. Its population is about 30,000. It is 25 miles from Milan. Lat. 45. 42. N. Long. 9. 37. E.

BERGAMO'T, s. [bergamotte, Fr.] in Gardening, a fine juicy pear, of a globular form, and a coat of an olive colour, mixed with brown. An essence or perfume, drawn from the fruit of a lemon-tree, ingrafted with the stock of a bergamot pear-tree. Likewise a kind of snuff, of a large grain, said to be only pure tobacco, with some of this essence rubbed into it.

BER'GEN, a handsome and ancient sea-port of Norway, capital of the province of Bergenhus. The harbour is excellent, and well fortified. Their exports are skins, timber, tallow, fish, &c.; but their wheat is brought from other places. It is 350 miles from Copenhagen. Lat. 60. 10. N. Long. 7. 14. E. Population about 20,000.

BER'GEN-OP-ZOOM, a very strong town of Dutch Brabant, 18 miles from Amsterdam. Its population is above 5000; but the trade is wholly domestic.

BERG-GRU'EN, s. the name of an earth used in painting, and sometimes called green-ochre.

To BERHYME, v. a. to make a person or thing the subject of a poem; used by way of contempt.

BER'KLEY, Gloucestershire. A small town on the Avon, once of considerable importance and wealth. It has now a trade in coals. The castle, which is near the town, was the scene of the murder of Edward II. Market, Tuesday. Pop. 4405.

BER'KLEY, GEORGE, bishop of Cloyne, Ireland, the celebrated metaphysical writer, and parent of Idealism. He was educated at Dublin; was secretary and chaplain to the Earl of Peterborough; travelled in Europe; was made dean of Derry; went on a missionary expedition to Rhode Island, N. America; and was forced to return; was made bishop of Cloyne, and died at Oxford in 1753, aged 69 years. His writings are various, but his renown rests on his philosophy, in which, contrary to the usually received opinion, he adhered to the reports of the senses, and discarded merely the addendum of reasoners, matter. He has never been fairly answered, though there have been many replies published.

BERKHAM'PSTEAD, Hertfordshire. It had formerly a strong castle, built by the Normans, and has now a good free school, founded by John Incent, dean of St. Paul's. Its trade is chiefly in malt. It is 26 miles from London. Market, Saturday. Pop. 1820.

BERKSHIRE, a county of England, bounded on the N. by Oxford and Buckingham, on the W. by Wilts., on the S. by Hants. and Surrey, and on the E. by Middlesex and Bucks. It is about 40 miles long, and 25 broad. The great chalk range, which reaches, at the White Horse Hill, nearly 900 feet in height, rises nearly due W. through it. It has good pastures on these hills, and the lower land is fertile and woody. The Thames is its chief river; it has also the Kennet, the Loddon, the Aburn, &c. It is mainly an agricultural county; but some woollen cloth is manufactured. The White Horse Hill and Vale are named so from the figure of a horse rudely made on the side of the chalk hill by cutting away the turf from the chalk below; it is nearly 400 feet long, and may be seen from many miles, and is believed to be of great antiquity. Reading, Abingdon, Windsor, Wallingford, &c., are its chief towns. It returns nine members to parliament. Pop. 161,147.

BERLIN, a large, strong, and handsome city of Germany, and capital of the kingdom of Prussia. It lies on the river Spree, and by canals to the Elbe and the Oder, has communication with both the German and Baltic Seas. It is nobly and regularly built, with many squares, &c., and is divided into six quarters; and has fourteen gates, of which the Brandenburg gate is the most magnificent; and forty-two bridges, some of which are very fine. The public buildings are very numerous, palaces, churches, hospitals, asylums, schools, varying in style, and vieing with each other in splendour. The royal museum is a remarkably noble structure. There are also the university buildings, several theatres, some fine manufactories, and public and military monuments. Berlin has a university of the highest order of excellence. It is also famous for its manufactories of China, woollens, silks, and cottons, and other articles. Its trade, by means of the inland navigation, is also considerable. Its population exceeds considerably a quarter of a million. Lat. 52. 31. N. Long. 13. 22. E. Berlin is the name a kind of travelling chariot.

BERME, s. [Fr.] in Fortification, a space of ground three, four, or five feet wide, left without, between the foot of the rampart and the side of the moat, to prevent the earth from falling down into the moat; sometimes palisaded.

BERMU'DA ISLANDS, a cluster of very fine islands, nearly in the form of a shepherd's crook, and surrounded with rocks, which render them almost inaccessible to strangers. They lie in the Atlantic Ocean, nearly 600 miles E. of Carolina. They are inhabited by the English, enjoy a pure and temperate air, and have plenty of flesh, fish, and garden stuff. The pastures are very fine, and the soil abundantly fertile. Arrow-root of the finest quality is produced here; and they supply England and America with turtle. The common employment of the inhabitants is in building sloops, and the making of straw plait for women's hats. Population about 10,000.

BERN, the largest canton of Switzerland, bounded on the N. by the cantons of Basle and Soleure, and Germany; on the E. by the cantons of Zurich, Lucerne, Unterwalden, and Uri; on the S. by the Valais and Italy; on the W. by the cantons of Fribourg and Neuchâtel, and France. The Jura mountains, which are 5000 feet in height, are in this canton. Its principal Alpine heights are, the Finsteraarhorn, 14,110 feet high; the Jung-frau, 13,716 feet high; the Schreck-horn, 13,380 feet in height; the Wetterhorn, above 12,000 feet high, &c. Immense glaciers occupy the valleys amongst these lofty mountains, and of these the glaciers of Grindelwald and Lauterbrunnen are most known. The Aar with its tributaries, and a few small tributaries to the Rhine, are the rivers of Bern; and its lakes are those of Thun, Bienne, and Neuchâtel. The population is almost wholly agricultural, but grafting is their chief occupation. There are also manufactories of linen, gunpowder, &c. &c. Its population is nearly 400,000. The chamois, marmots, bears, wolves, and eagles are met with in the mountains.

BERN, the capital town of the canton of Bern in Switzerland. Here is a celebrated school, and a rich library, and twelve companies of tradesmen, in one of which every inhabitant is obliged to be enrolled before he can enjoy any office. It is a strong place, and is seated in a peninsula formed by the river Aar, almost in the middle of the canton. It is elegantly built, and well ornamented. The cathedral, the prison, the hospital, and other public buildings, are very fine. Its population is about 15,000. Lat. 46. 56. N. Long. 7. 26. E.

BERNADOTTE, JEAN BAPTISTE JULES, was born at Bearn in France, entered the army early, and rose at the beginning of the Revolution. He served with great distinction in many campaigns, was present at Austerlitz and Wagram, and was employed both by the Directory and by Buonaparte on many honourable missions. Although one of Napoleon's marshals, and made Prince de Pontecorvo by him, he was not submissive enough for the emperor's taste. Being chosen Prince Royal of Sweden, and driven to war by Napoleon, he took his part with great skill and courage, and helped at Leipzig. He had to appeal to the sword to enforce on Denmark the observation of the treaty at Kiel, by which Norway was appended to

RESOURCES TO THE RESOURCES

1. Reading
2. Newbury
3. Charlton
4. Compton
5. Reading
6. Gosham
7. Farnham
8. Garsfield
9. Boreham
10. Reading
11. Reading
12. Reading
13. Reading
14. Reading
15. Reading
16. Reading
17. Reading
18. Reading
19. Reading
20. Reading

The cheap return to the Scale of Miles
0 1 2 3 4 5 6 7 8 9 10 11 12 13 14 15 16 17 18 19 20 21 22 23 24 25 26 27 28 29 30 31 32 33 34 35 36 37 38 39 40 41 42 43 44 45 46 47 48 49 50 51 52 53 54 55 56 57 58 59 60 61 62 63 64 65 66 67 68 69 70 71 72 73 74 75 76 77 78 79 80 81 82 83 84 85 86 87 88 89 90 91 92 93 94 95 96 97 98 99 100

Reading of the map

Reading of the map

Reading of the map

Reading of the map

Reading of the map

Reading of the map

Reading of the map

Reading of the map

Reading of the map

Reading of the map

Reading of the map

Reading of the map

Reading of the map

Reading of the map

Reading of the map

Reading of the map

Reading of the map

Reading of the map

Reading of the map

Reading of the map

Reading of the map

Reading of the map

Reading of the map

Reading of the map

Reading of the map

Reading of the map

Reading of the map

Reading of the map

Reading of the map

Reading of the map

Reading of the map

Reading of the map

Reading of the map

Reading of the map

Reading of the map

Reading of the map

Reading of the map

Reading of the map

Reading of the map

Reading of the map

the Swedish crown. In 1818 he succeeded to the throne as Charles (XIV.) John; and devoted himself during his long reign to the administration of the affairs of his kingdom, and the promotion of its prosperity. He died in 1844, aged 90 years.

BERNARD, ST., abbot of Clairvaux, a famous churchman of the 12th century. His zeal for orthodoxy was very warm, and the fame and influence he acquired by his ascetic life very great. His great deeds were his preaching and heading the second crusade; and his condemnation of Abelard, the celebrated teacher of logic, &c. He died in 1153, aged about 60 years.

BERNARD, SAINT, the name of one of the Alpine passes from the Valais to Piedmont. It is named from a monastery built in it by St. Bernard of Clairvaux, where are kept numbers of a breed of dogs unequalled for sagacity and gentleness of disposition, who are employed by the monks to search for travellers who may lose their way and endanger their lives amongst the mountain snows. This monastery occupies the loftiest position used as a constant habitation in all Europe. The pass is occupied by a narrow lake, at its highest part, which is about 8000 feet above the sea. It is not passable throughout, except by mules, or on foot.

BERNARDINES. See CISTERCIANS.

BERNBURG, a small duchy of Germany, lying between the Prussian dominions and those of the duke of Brunswick, watered by streams which flow into the Elbe, and varied in its surface, and enriched with mineral wealth, by the Harz mountain. In some parts it is fertile, and supplies good pastures for rearing of cattle. Its manufactures are insignificant. Bernburg, Balenstedt, Koswig, Harzgerode, are its principal towns. Its population is about 50,000.

BERNINI, GIOVANNI LORENZO, a sculptor of the 17th century, in Italy. He executed many works yet to be seen at Rome, as the front of the college of the Propaganda, the Barberini Palace, several fountains, some of the interior ornaments of St. Peter's, and the piazza and staircase leading from it to the Vatican, &c. &c. He visited France late in his life, and executed some works there. He was held in the highest honour during his life, and has not lost his fame. He died in 1680, aged 82 years.

BERNOULLI, a celebrated family of mathematicians, of which three occupy very distinguished positions as the fellow-labourers of Leibnitz and Newton, and Euler and Clairaut. James Bernoulli, and his brother John, seized eagerly on the newly-discovered calculus, and by their investigations materially aided its application to the sciences. They both espoused the side of Leibnitz in his controversy with Newton; and they were engaged in a controversy with each other, in which the latter appeared to great disadvantage. Daniel Bernoulli, the son of John, prosecuted the study of the calculus in conjunction with his illustrious contemporaries, and was the first to apply it to many scientific questions. James died in 1705, aged 51 years; John in 1748, aged 81 years; and Daniel in 1782, aged 82 years.

To BEROB, v. a. to steal; to take away the property of a person. Seldom used.

BEROSUS, the author of a History of the Chaldeans, of which only a few fragments remain, quoted by Josephus, Eusebius, &c. He lived at the time of the overthrow of his country by the Macedonians, and travelled into Greece, where he received many honours. There was a Chaldean astronomer of the same name, but the accounts existing respecting both are so extravagant, that it is impossible to determine respecting their identity or diversity.

BERRI, an ancient province of France, comprising nearly the departments of Cher and Indre; which see.

BERRY, s. (berig, Sax.) a small fruit, containing one or more seeds in a soft pulp, covered with a skin.

To BERRY, v. n. to produce berries. In the North, it signifies to strike, [from ber, Isl.] to beat or thrash.

BERTHER, ALEXANDER, one of Napoleon's generals, enabled by him with the titles of Prince of Neufchatel and of Wagram. He was proxy for the emperor at the marriage of Maria Louisa. He entered the service of Louis XVIII. at the Restoration; and retired, at the return of Napoleon from Elba, to Bamberg, where he died in the same year, 1815, aged 62 years.

BERTHOLLET, CLAUDE LOUIS, an eminent French chemist of the last century. He early embraced the antiplogistic doctrines of Lavoisier, but with differences from his views in some points. He recommended the use of chlorine for bleaching; and superintended the manufacture of gunpowder, and the discovery of saltpetre for that purpose, during the first wars of the Revolution. He accompanied Napoleon's expedition to Egypt; and was ennobled on his return, which honour he retained after the Restoration. He died in 1822, aged 74 years. Recent chemical investigation has left Berthollet's views in many things quite behind.

BERVIE, Kincardine, Scotland. A small sea-port and fishing town, on the mouth of a stream of the same name, where some hempen manufacture is carried on. It is 83 miles from Edinburgh. Market, Saturday. Pop. 1342.

BERWICK-UPON-TWEED, a town on the borders of England and Scotland. It is a town and county of itself, and is a place of great strength, as well by art as nature, being defended with walls, a castle, and other fortifications. It is large, populous, and well built, and has a good trade in corn, coal, and salmon. It is seated on the river Tweed, over which there is a very handsome bridge of 16 arches, and the harbour's mouth is protected by a fine stone pier, with a light-house on the end of it. It is 336 miles from London. Market, Saturday. Pop. 8484.

BERWICK, a shire in Scotland, bounded by the river Tweed on the S.; by Lothian on the N.; by the German Ocean on the E.; and by Tiviotdale on the W. It abounds with corn and grass, and is hilly on the N. and E. Coal is found in small quantities in it. The principal rivers are the Tweed, the Whiteadder, Blackadder, Eye, and Ednel. The principal place is the town and castle of Dunse, the best place for trade in the county. Greenlaw, Lauder, and Coldstream, are also of some note. It sends one member to parliament. Pop. 34,438.

BERWICK, NORTH, Haddington, Scotland, seated on the Frith of Forth. It is a rural place, with but little trade. It is 22 miles from Edinburgh. Pop. 1708.

BERYL, s. (beryllus, Lat.) a precious stone of a bluish green, found in the East Indies, and about the gold mines of Peru.

BESANCON, a city in the depart. of Doubs, France. It was formerly the capital of Franche-Comte, and is situated on a peninsula formed by the river Doubs, 235 miles from Paris. It is a well-built place, and is very strongly fortified. It has some fine buildings; and its manufactures in thread, carpets, watches, &c., are of some importance. Population above 30,000.

BESANT, BEZANT, s. a. coin of pure gold, of an uncertain value, struck at Byzantium in the time of the Christian emperors; hence the gold offered by the king at the altar is called besant. In Heraldry, besants are representations of round flat pieces of money or bullion, introduced into coat armour by those who were at the holy war.

To BESCREEN, v. a. to conceal or hide any thing. Seldom used.

To BESEECH, v. a. preter. I besought; I have besought; [secan, Sax.] to entreat with great earnestness; to ask as a favour, in a humble and suppliant manner.

To BESIEGE, v. n. (besiegen, Belg.) to sit, applied to a means; to become, or be worthy of, applied to character or dignity.

To BESIEGE, v. a. preter. I beset; I have beset; [besitten, Sax.] to surround, so as not to be able to escape without difficulty, alluding to an enemy's surrounding a body of men, or some fortified place. Followed by with, to endanger, to encompass.

To BESHREW, v. a. [beschryen, Teut.] to wish any thing unhappy or miserable to a person.

BESIDE, BESIDES, prep. [be and side, Sax.] by the side, or near, applied to situation. "To sit down beside him," Bacon. "Beside him hung his bow," Par. Lost. In the enumeration or detail of particulars, something more, over, and above. "In man there is a nature found beside the senses," Davies. "Great numbers beside those whose names are in the Christian records," Addison. Inconsistent with; not relating to; not discoverable by.

"A method beside, and above the discoveries of man's reason," South. "It is beside my present business," Locke. Before a reciprocal pronoun, as himself, &c., it implies the loss of reason, or madness. "Thou art beside thyself," Acte. Used adverbially, it implies an additional circumstance, or something more than what has been mentioned. "Besides, you know not," Dryden. The rest; or that which has not been already spoken of, or mentioned. "Hast thou here any besides," Gen. xix. 13.

To BESIEGE, v. a. to surround or attack a place with an army, in order to conquer and get master of it.

BESIEGE, s. a person who attempts to take a town by encamping against it.

To BESLU/BER, v. a. to daub or smear with any thing that raises a disagreeable idea.

To BESME/AR, v. a. to cover or daub with any thing which alters the colour of a thing, and raises the idea of something not cleanly. Figuratively, to tarnish, to deprive of its lustre, applied to character, &c.

To BESMURCH, v. a. to soil, blacken, discolour.

To BESMOK/KE, v. a. to soil; to foul, or dry in smoke.

To BESMU/T, v. a. [be and smitan, Sax.] to smear with any thing black; especially applied to discolour a thing by smoke, soot, &c.

BESOM, s. [besm, besma, Sax.] an instrument consisting of a long handle, to which birch or rushes are fastened, used by housewives to sweep their floors from sand or dust.

To BESORT, v. a. to suit; to fit.

BESORT, s. company; attendance; train.

To BESOT, v. a. to stupefy with glutty or drunkenness. Used with the particle on, to date, or be extremely in love with.

BESOUGHT, (besaüt) part. pass. of BESECH.

To BESPA/NGLE, v. a. to make a thing glitter, by means of some small shining object.

To BESPAT/TER, v. n. to wet, by casting small quantities of water. Figuratively, to soil or tarnish the character of a person.

To BESPE/AK, v. a. preter. I bespoke, or I bespake; I have bespoken; [be and spakan, Sax.] to give orders for the making of any thing, in order to prevent others from buying it; to engage beforehand; to discover beforehand, or forebode; to address in discourse; to speak to; to declare; to show.

BESPE/AKER, s. he that gives orders for the making of any thing to an artificer or manufacturer.

To BESPECKLE, v. a. to mark with spots.

To BESPI/CE, v. a. to season with spices, generally applied to liquors.

To BESPI/T, v. a. to wet with spittle; to spit upon.

BESPOKE, preter. and part. from BESPEAK.

To BESPO/T, v. a. to mark with spots.

To BESPRE/AD, v. a. [be and spreádan, Sax.] to extend a thing at full length over another; to cover with.

To BESPR/INKLE, v. a. [be and sprinke, Sax.] to spurt, to throw water upon a thing, so as to make it fall upon it in drops.

To BESPU/TTER, v. a. to wet any thing, by forcing spittle in drops from between the lips.

BESSARA/BIA, a province of Russia, on the Black Sea, bounded by the Dniester, Moldavia, the Pruth, and the Danube. Its surface is beautifully varied, and promises to be, on cultivation, of great fertility. All species of corn, and the vine, have been cultivated there lately with great success. At present its pastures are its chief source of wealth; and its timber, which in the N. is excellent. Bender, Khotin, and Akkerman are its chief towns. Its population is about 600,000.

BEST, a. the superlative degree of good; the comparative better; [bet, betera, betat, good, better, best, Sax.] the highest degree of good. Used with the word do, the utmost exertion of power or ability. Taken adverbially, the highest degree of goodness.

To BESTA/N, v. a. to mark with stains; to spot.

To BESTE/AD, v. a. to profit; to accommodate.

BESTIAL, a. [bestia, Lat.] that has the nature of a beast. Applied figuratively to one who seems to have no regard for reason, delicacy, virtue, shame, or humanity.

BESTIALITY, s. that quality which is contrary to the right use of reason; opposite to every principle of humanity.

BESTIALLY, ad. in such a manner as to resemble a beast, and below the dignity of humanity.

To BESTICK, v. a. preter. I bestuck, or have bestuck; to fix darts, or any pointed thing or mark, upon a subject.

To BESTYR, v. a. to exert one's power vigorously. Generally used with the reciprocal pronouns, him, her, himself, &c.

To BESTOW, (the o in the last syllable is pronounced like o long) v. a. [besteden, Belg.] to give a person a thing which he had no right to demand; to give in marriage, used with the preposition upon, before the receiver; to apply; to lay out upon; to place.

BESTO/WER, s. he that gives a thing; he that confers a favour.

To BESTREW, v. a. part. bestrewn, or bestrown; to scatter, or sprinkle over; to cover with.

To BESTRI/DE, v. a. preter. I bestrid, or bestrode; I have bestriden; to stand over any thing, so as to have it between our legs, or a leg on each side of it. As this posture is that of a person on horseback, it is put figuratively for a person riding.

To BESTU/D, v. a. to adorn with shining dots, marks, or studs.

BET, s. [betan, Sax.] the money deposited by each of the parties who lay a wager, to be given to him who wins.

To BET, v. a. to lay a wager.

To BETAKE, v. a. preter. I betook, part. passive, betaken; [betæcan, Sax.] to apply; to have recourse to, with the reciprocal pronouns him, her, himself, &c., and the particle to; to take to, fly, or go, applied to motion.

BETCHOUA/NA, or BECHUA/NA, the name of one of the native races of S. Africa, lying N. of the Great Orange river, and composed of many different tribes, agreeing in language, customs, &c., in the main. They are sunk very low in barbarism, and yet in the style of their building, in working metals, &c., they are superior to many barbarous nations. Their language has been reduced to writing and system by the Protestant missionaries, whose influence has also been exerted with some success to raise them, by the introduction of education, and more refined customs. Their numbers cannot be ascertained until Europeans have greater intercourse with them; but two of their towns, Lattakoo and Kuruman, are supposed to have a population of about 10,000 each.

To BETEEM, v. a. to bestow or give; to produce, alluding to the teeming time of animals.

To BETHINK, v. a. preter. I bethought; [be and thencan, Sax.] to recall back something past into the mind; to recollect oneself; to suspend our thoughts.

BETHLEHEM, s. [the house of bread, Heb.] the name of a city in Judea, famous for being the birth-place of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. It is now reduced to a poor village. Applied, according to its etymology, to an hospital; and at present appropriated to that where lunatics are confined, near Moorgate, London. See BEDLAM.

BETHLEHEM, the name of eight places in the United States; the most important of which is in Pennsylvania, and was settled originally by the Herrnhutters. It is a neat town, and stands on the Lehigh river, over which is a bridge 400 feet long. It has a stone church, and a good female school. It is 48 miles from Philadelphia. Pop. 2980.

BETHLEHEMITE, s. a person confined, or fit to be confined, in a mad-house, called a Bedlamite. Also an order of monks, subsisting principally in South America, who are reputed great politicians.

To BETHRA/L, (bethraül) v. a. to bind and fetter as a captive. Seldom used.

To BETHUMP, v. a. to bang, or beat. A ludicrous word.

To BETIDE, v. n. preter. it betided, or betid; [from tid, Sax.] to happen to a person; to befall; used both of good and bad events.

BETIME, BETIMES, ad. [be and tima, Sax.] in season; without delay; soon; in a short time. Joined with morning, early.

BETLE, BETEL, BETRE, s. [Ind.] a kind of pepper, whose leaves are of great use throughout the East, for the purpose of dyeing the teeth black and the lips red, and of sweetening the breath; and producing an intoxicating excitement.

BETLEY, a town of Staffordshire, 156 miles from London. Market, Tuesday.

To BETOKEN, v. a. to declare, to show, to discover, by marks or signs.

BETONY, s. [betonica, Lat.] a plant with gaping blossoms, found in woods and heaths. It was formerly much used in medicine, but is at present discarded. It is often smoked as tobacco, and the roots provoke vomiting. Paul's betony is the same with the smooth speedwell, and the yellow betony is a sort of stachys.

BETOOK, preter. from BETAKE.

To BETOSS, v. n. to be tossed about; to be agitated, disturbed, troubled, or tormented.

To BETRAY, v. a. [trahir, Fr.] to deliver a person up to his enemies, though bound to the contrary; to disclose a secret intrusted to one; to discover some failing; to discover.

BETRAY, v. the person who treacherously delivers another into the hands of his enemies; one who discloses a secret.

To BETRIM, v. a. to adorn or embellish the person with dress; applied with great beauty to the flowery creation.

To BETROTH, v. a. [betrouwen, Belg.] to promise a person in marriage.

To BETRUST, v. a. to trust or rely on the fidelity of another, applied to persons and things.

BETTER, a. the comparative degree of good, of which best is the superlative; [betera, Sax.] that exceeds, is better, or preferable to the thing it is compared with. Used as a substantive, a person of rank or authority superior to ourselves.

BETTER, adv. in a more perfect, exact manner; in a more advantageous or profitable manner or way.

To BETTER, v. a. to improve; to increase the value of a thing; to amend by change; to surpass; to excel; to strengthen, or add strength to.

BETTER, s. one who lays a wager.

BETWEEN, prep. [betwecnan, betwinnan, Sax.] applied to situation, it signifies the middle, or the having one of the two things mentioned on each side of us. Applied to time, the middle space, or that which is included within the periods mentioned. Applied to qualities, partaking of each. Applied to things opposite or contrary to each other, it implies separation, or the idea of difference acquired by comparison. A reciprocation on both sides, applied to friendship. By themselves, privately, exclusive of any others. Synon. Between is properly used of only two persons; but among, when more are included.

BETWIXT, prep. [betwyz, Sax.] used indifferently for between; which see.

BEVEL, BEVIL, s. among joiners, a kind of square, one or both legs of which are crooked, according to the sweep of an arch, or vault. Bevil angle is that which is not square, whether it be obtuse or acute.

To BEVEL, BEVIL, v. a. to form a bevil angle, in opposition to a right one.

BEVÉRAGE, s. [bevere, Ital.] any common drink, or any thing drinkable; a treat at putting on, or first wearing, a new suit of clothes; a treat at a person's first coming to prison, called likewise garnish; but these last meanings are vulgar.

BEVERIDGE, WILLIAM, bishop of St. Asaph at the beginning of the last century. He was a man of great learning and piety; and in the several parishes which were under his care successively, in his archdeaconry, and in his diocese, he distinguished himself by the indefatigable zeal with which he applied himself to the discharge of his numerous and varied duties. The works which he published were on Chronology, the Oriental Languages, and the Ancient Ecclesiastical Canons. After his death, his well-known Private Thoughts, and other works on practical theology, were published. He died in 1708, aged 71 years.

BEVERLY, Yorkshire, E. R. It is a large, well-built town, having two parish churches, besides the minster, which is a large structure that was founded by king Athelstan, but consumed by fire in 1188, and afterwards rebuilt. Its other public buildings are the grammar school, and the prisons and court-houses of the riding. It stands near the river Hull, and has some trade in corn, coals, leather, &c. It is 183 miles from London. Markets, Wednesday and Saturday. Pop. 8730.

BEVY, [beva, Ital.] a flock, or number of birds collected together; an assembly, or company.

To BEWALT, v. a. [from wa, grief, Sax.] to grieve for any calamity.

To BEWARE, v. a. to act with so much caution as to provide against any future obstacle, or misfortune.

BEWCASTLE, Cumberland. Formerly a market town, but now a small village only. It abounds in relics of Roman, Saxon, &c. origin. In the church-yard is a Runic pillar, with carvings, and an inscription which scholars have as yet failed to decipher. Pop. 1274.

BEWDLLEY, Worcestershire. It is pleasantly situated on the river Severn, is neat and well built, and enjoys a good trade for malt, leather, and caps, but not to such an extent now as formerly. It is 125 miles from London. Market, Saturday. Pop. 3400.

To BEWET, v. a. to make moist or wet.

BEWICK, THOMAS, an eminent wood-engraver of the end of the last and beginning of the present century; whose British Birds, Quadrupeds, Gay's Fables, Fishes, Illustrations to the British Poets, and especially his tail-pieces, are so well known and so justly admired. He was a kind and generous spirit, and full of humour, as all his works show. He died in 1828, aged 75 years.

To BEWILDER, v. a. to lose in a place or wood, which has no certain path. Figuratively, to puzzle and perplex the mind with difficulties.

To BEWITCH, v. a. to injure by, or subject to, the power of diabolical charms and incantations. In a secondary sense, to operate so powerfully on the mind by personal or mental charms, as to captivate and be irresistible.

BEWITCHERY, s. a power which persons dealing with magic, or with evil spirits, have over others. In its secondary sense, a charm, either personal, mental, &c.

To BEWRAY, (in pronunciation the w is dropped,) v. a. [bevragan, Sax.] to discover a thing that is hid, or secret, either through simplicity or treachery.

BEWRAYER, (in pronunciation the w is dropped,) s. a person who discovers a thing which should be concealed; a divulger of secrets.

BEY, s. among the Turks, the governor of a country or town; the Turks write it Begh, or Bec, a lord or sangiac.

BEYOND, prep. [beyond, Sax.] a word used to signify excess in anything. Applied to a place, the farther side of any thing, or that which is at the greatest distance from us; farther than; across, or over; too great for, or out of the reach of; exceeding, above; superior.

BEYRA, a province of Portugal, bounded by the Tagus, and the Serra de Louzao; the Douro; Spain, and the Atlantic. Some of the peaks of the Serra de Estrella, which cross it, are above 7000 feet high. The Mondego is its principal river; the rest are small streams, on the coast, or else tributary to the larger rivers. In its valleys are grown, corn of all kinds, fruits, and vines. Agriculture is the chief occupation, except on the coast. Coimbra, which has a university, Guarda, Linco, Viseu, are its chief towns. Its population is about a million and a half.

BEZA, THEODORE, one of the leaders of the Reformed Church in Switzerland, in the 16th century. He was by birth a French noble, and was educated for the law; afterwards being pressed to enter the church, he joined the Reformed Church at Geneva. He was for ten years Greek Professor at Lausanne, and both there and at Geneva distinguished himself for the zeal and learning with which he defended and promoted the Reformation. On the death of Calvin, Beza succeeded to his office and influence, which he used to the satisfaction of all. He died in 1605, aged 86 years. He wrote many works; his Latin version of the New Testament, published with his edition of the Greek Testament, which is believed to have formed the basis of the text whence our common English version was made, is well known.

BEZIERS, a town in the dept. of Hérault, France, most pleasantly situated on a hill above the river Orb, and commanding a most enchanting prospect. The town is well built, and has an old and strangely-built cathedral, and has the ancient fortifications round it. In the neighbourhood, wine, spirits, and silk are produced; and the town itself has manufactories of silken goods, and woollen cloth of different kinds. It is 480 miles from Paris. Its population is about 15,000. Lat. 43. 21. N. Long. 3. 13. E.

BEZIL, BEZEL, s. that part of a ring in which the stone is fixed.

BEZOAR, [pa and zahar, Persic.] a stone moderately hard and heavy, generally of a round form, and its size between that of a horse bean and a small walnut, of a dusky olive or green brown. It is always smooth and glossy; but when broken is found to consist of several coats or crusts of stony matter, laid over one another, on a piece of stick, or seed of a fruit, for a nucleus or basis. It is a calculus found in goats, in Persia and the E. Indies. Others are found in the W. Indies. The calculi in other animals are also called bezars. They were esteemed as specifics against poisons and malignant fevers; but have ceased to be of any account, except in the East, where artificial bezars are prepared from various metals.

BEZOARDIC, a. an epithet applied to medicines compounded with bezoar.

BHU/RTPOOR, a district in the W. of Agra, Hindustan. It is not naturally very fertile, but by great care and constant irrigation, it yields excellent corn, sugar, and cotton. Bhurtpoor, Comber, Deeg, Kurnau, are its chief towns.

BIARA, BIGHT OF, a bay in the Gulf of Guinea, W. Africa, divided by Cape Formosa from the Bight of Benin. It is nearly 600 miles across, and nearly 300 in depth. One branch of the Quorra, or Niger, empties itself in this bay, and some other large streams. This part of the coast is not very thickly inhabited, owing to its very unhealthy character. Elephants abound, and other wild animals. Iron is plentiful, and this, ivory, and palm wine, are the chief articles of trade.

BIANCHINI, FRANCESCO, a learned astronomer and historian of Italy, at the close of the 17th century. He wrote respecting the calendar; examined the rotation of Venus, and published the results; attempted to draw a meridian line throughout Italy; began a Universal History; published an interesting account of the Sepulchral Chamber of some members of the household of the emperor Augustus; communicated many papers on different subjects to the transactions of learned societies; and died in 1729, aged 67 years.

BIANGULATED, BIANGULOUS, a. [binus and angulus, Lat.] that has two angles.

BIAS, s. [bias, Fr.] the weight lodged in one side of a bowl to direct or regulate it in its course, and to turn it from a straight line. Figuratively, an influence, propensity, or any thing which directs the course of a person's actions to a particular end. SYNON. These words rise gradually; inclination implying something less strong than propensity; propensity, than bias: the first leads us to an object, the second draws us, the third drags us. Inclination is generally owing to education, propension to custom, bias to constitution.

To BIAS, v. a. to influence a person to any particular measures of conduct.

BIAS, one of the Wise Men of Greece. He was a native of Priene, a Grecian city of Asia Minor, and gained his reputation by kindness, sagacity, and a happy power of embodying in pithy sayings the results of much shrewd observation and thought. He spent the greater part of his life, and died, in his native city. He was flourishing in 540 B. C.

BIB, s. [bibo, Lat.] a piece of linen put under the chin of infants when feeding, to keep the victuals which are spit from their clothes; likewise a piece of linen pinned on the front of the stay of those of more advanced years.

BIBACIOUS, a. [bibax, Lat.] much addicted to drinking; or drinking to excess.

BIBACITY, s. [bibacitas, Lat.] the quality of drinking too much.

BIBBER, s. [bibo, Lat.] a person who drinks to excess.

BIBBLE, s. [biblion, Gr.] the name given to the collection of ancient writings which are received by the Christian world as the revelation of God's will to man. It consists of two parts, the former called the Old Testament, or Covenant, and the latter the New. The Old Testament comprises all the books held sacred by the Jews, and contains, 5 books written by Moses, (called the Pentateuch, and the Law) in which the history of the Jewish nation is given from the very beginning to their arrival at the borders of Canaan; and also the whole of that system of ritual observances which constituted the worship of the Jews; —12 other books, which carry on the history of the Jews to their reinstatement in Judea on their return from captivity —16 books of Prophecies, delivered at various times to the Jews; —and lastly, 5 poetical books, one being a relation of the trials of an ancient patriarch; another, a collection of hymns, odes, and elegies, composed by various parties on various occasions, public and private; and the others, practical maxims, &c., chiefly the embodiments of the observation and wisdom of the wisest of the Jewish kings. These all (with the exception of some few passages in some of the latest of them, which are in Chaldee) are written in Hebrew. The New Testament, which is written in Greek, contains, 4 distinct histories of the ministry, and deeds, and death of our Lord Jesus Christ, two being written by eye-witnesses, and two by the intimate companions of those who were so; —a history of the first efforts made to proclaim the gospel, chiefly those made by the most eminent of the first preachers, the apostle of the Gentiles; —13 letters, or essays in the epistolary form, written to various churches and persons in Europe and Asia, by the apostle of the Gentiles, unfolding with great clearness the truths of the gospel, and showing their bearing upon common life; —a letter written to the converted Hebrews, which is commonly ascribed to Paul; —7 other letters on the same subject, but written with various scope, one by James, one by Judas, two by Peter, and three by John; —and lastly, a half-poetical book of visions, embodying the subsequent course and fortunes of the church. Various parts of this collection of writings were translated into the common tongue of this country in very early days. Wicliffe translated the whole of the Scriptures into English. After the Reformation, four different translations were made and printed; and in 1611, that version which is now most generally received and used, was printed under the patronage of the king, at the cost of the Stationers' Company. Many other translations into English have been made since, but they are used only by particular sects, or by scholars merely. There were translations of the whole or part made very early into many Oriental languages, Greek, Latin, and other tongues, some of which are exceedingly valuable. Since the great effort began to diffuse the Scriptures and the gospel into every land, the Bible has been translated, wholly or partly, into about 200 different languages and dialects. Bible monopoly, the exclusive right conferred by letters patent on the printers to the sovereign of Great Britain, to print the Scriptures, &c.; now abolished in Scotland, and in England confined to the Authorized Version, without note or comment, but shared with the printers to the universities of Oxford and Cambridge. Bible Societies, institutions for diffusing the Scriptures by sale and gift.

BIBLIOGRAPHER, s. [biblos and grapho, Gr.] one who writes or copies books.

BIBLIOGRAPHY, s. knowledge of books; the study of the authors, editors, printers, &c., of books.

BIBLIOMANCY, s. a kind of divination performed by taking passages of Scripture at hazard, and drawing indications there concerning things future. It was much used at the consecration of bishops.

BIBLIOMANIA, s. an extravagant passion for accumulating books.

BIBLIOTHECAL, a. [bibliotheca, Lat.] belonging to a library.

BIBULOUS, a. [bibulus, Lat.] that sucks or drinks any fluid or moisture.

BICE, s. in Painting, a blue colour prepared from capis armenus.

BICESTER, or BU'RCESTER, Oxfordshire, noted for its excellent malt liquor. Here is a manufacture of slippers and lace. It is situated on the road between Oxford and Buckingham, 56 miles from London. Market, Friday. Pop. 3022.

BICÊTRE, a public building near Paris, in France. It was originally a castle belonging to one of the bishops of Winchester, in England; which, after various changes, came into the hands of the crown, and was used as an hospital. It is at present used as a place of confinement for some criminals, and a poor-house also.

BICHA'T, MARIE FRANÇOIS XAVIER, a very distinguished young surgeon of France, who during the time of the Revolution, by his enthusiastic pursuit of anatomical and physiological studies, and by his public lectures and writings, greatly promoted the study of these sciences throughout the civilized world. He died from an accident in 1800, aged but 31 years.

BICIPITAL, BICIPITOUS, a. [biceps, Lat.] having two heads. It is also applied to one of the muscles of the arm.

To BICKER, v. n. [bicare, Brit.] to skirmish or quarrel; to tremble, quiver, or move backwards and forwards.

BICKERER, s. one who is quarrelsome.

BICKERING, s. a quarrel, skirmish, or sudden attack, opposed to a set or pitched battle.

BICORNE, BICORINUS, a. [bicornis, Lat.] that has two horns.

To BID, v. a. preter. I bid, bad, bade, I have bid, or bidden; [bidan, Sax.] to order or command; to request, or invite a person as a guest; to offer a sum for the purchase of a thing; to publish or proclaim. SYNON. To bid, intimates direction to perform, whether or not the person directing has any authority for so doing. To order, implies the exercise of authority.

BIDAL, BID'AL, s. [bid and dale] in our ancient customs, denotes the invitation of friends to drink ale at some poor man's house, who in consideration hereof expects some contribution for his relief. This custom still obtains in the west of England.

BIDASO/A, or VIDASO/A, a river of Spain, which rising in the Navarrese Pyrenees, after a course of about 70 miles, enters the Bay of Biscay, near Fontarabia. It is very near the boundary between France and Spain; and its fisheries supply the markets of Madrid, &c.

BIDDEN, part. pass. of To Bid.

BIDDER, s. one who offers a price for any commodity.

BIDDING, s. command, and order, including generally the idea of a superior.

BIDDLE, JOHN, a theological scholar who lived during the troubles of the 17th century. He was educated at Oxford, and was chosen master of a school at Gloucester. A publication of his drew on him the charge of heresy, and he experienced hard measure from the Parliament, and the Assembly of Divines, who obtained an act making the profession of Socinianism a capital offence. This was frustrated by the army, and at length, (after having been released by Cromwell, and re-imprisoned by Bradshaw,) after nearly seven years' drudgery, he was set at liberty, and continued so till the fall of the Commonwealth, when he was again incarcerated, and died in prison, in 1662, aged 47 years.

TO BIDE, v. a. [bīdan, Sax.] to endure, or suffer.—v. n. to dwell, live, remain, or continue in a place.

BIDEFORD, Devonshire. A well-built, populous town, seated on the river Touridge, over which there is a very long bridge of 24 arches. It has a noble quay, and carries on a considerable trade in coarse earthenware, Irish wool, &c. They also send ships to America and the West Indies. It is 203 miles from London. Market, Tuesday. Pop. 5211.

BIDENTAL, a. [bīdens, Lat.] that has two teeth. Figuratively, that has two prongs.

BIDET, s. a nag or little horse, formerly allowed each trooper and dragoon, for his baggage and other occasions.

BIDING, s. constant stay or residence in a place.

BIENNIAL, a. [biennis, Lat.] that continues, or has been, for two years.

BIER, (beer) s. [beer, Sax.] a frame of wood on which dead persons are carried to the grave.

BIESTING, s. [bīsting, Sax.] in Farming, the first milk given by a cow after calving.

BIFA-RIOUS, a. [bīfarius, Lat.] double, two-fold, that may be understood two ways.

BIFEROUS, a. [bīferens, Lat.] bearing fruit twice a year.

BIFID, a. [bīfidus, Lat.] cut, cleft, or divided into two parts.

BIFOLD, a. two-fold, double.

BIFORMED, a. [bīformis, Lat.] compounded of two forms; that is double-shaped.

BIFOROUS, a. [bīnus and forum, Lat.] opening with double doors.

BIFURCATED, a. [bīnus and furca, Lat.] with two forks or prongs.

BIG, a. applied to dimensions, large, immense, swelling out. Joined to with, or of, pregnant; swelling or distended with grief. Applied to a person's looks or words, proud; haughty. SYNON. The word great is a general term, signifying any thing considerable in bulk, extent, quality, number, &c. Thus we say, a great house, a great road, a great weight, a great many, a great famine, a great happiness. The words big and large are more circumscribed; big implies greatness of bulk; large, greatness of extent. Thus we say, a big man, a big stone; but a large room, a large field.

BIGAMIST, s. [bīgamus, low Lat.] one who has married another before the death of his first wife.

BIGAMY, s. [bīgamia, low Lat.] a double marriage, or the having of two wives at the same time; which is felony by law.

BIGBE-LIED, a. swelling out, applied to sails filled with wind; with child; pregnant.

BIGGIN, a. [boggin, Fr.] the close-fitting under cap of an infant, covering the hind part of its head.

BIGGLESWADE, Bedfordshire. It is seated on the Ivel, (which is navigable for boats, and brings up coals, timber, merchandise, &c., from Lynn,) 45 miles from London. Its market is one of the greatest in England for barley, peas, and horse corn. Market, Wednesday. Pop. 3807.

BIGHT, s. [bygan, Sax.] the circumference of the coil of a rope, opposed to its ends or extremities.

BIGNESS, s. largeness with respect to quantity, bulk, or dimensions.

BIGOT, s. [supposed to be derived from Rollo's refusing to kiss the foot of Charles V. of France, when he received his daughter in marriage, and the investiture of the dukedom from him, with this Gothic expression, Ne se by God, on which account he was called by the king a bigot,] a person strongly attached to any religious opinion or custom, notwithstanding the strongest reason urged to convince him by a contrary party. Used in a bad sense.

BIGOTED, a. obstinately prepossessed in favour of a person or opinion.

BIGOTRY, s. unreasonable firmness, obstinacy, or attachment to any party or opinion.

BILANDER, s. [belandre, Fr.] a small ship or vessel, broad and flat, used for conveying goods from place to place.

BILBERRY, s. in Botany, a plant producing a small purple berry, of a sweetish and sharp taste, used sometimes for tarts.

BILBO, s. a rapier or sword.

BILBO/A, or VILVA/O, a healthy sea-port town of Spain, capital of Biscay, with four parish churches and seven convents. Here is a good, well-frequented harbour, the town is well supplied with water, provisions, fish, &c., and the environs are fertile in leguminous plants and fruits. The chief exports are wool, sword blades, and other iron and steel wares. It is seated on the river Ibaicabel, 220 miles from Madrid. Lat. 43. 23. N. Long. 3. 10. W.

BILBOES, s. a sort of stocks for punishing offenders on board a ship.

BILDESTON, Suffolk. This is a small town, but it has a handsome church. It is 63 miles from London. Market, Wednesday. Pop. 857.

BILE, s. [bilis, Lat.] in Anatomy, a yellow bitter liquor or fluid, separated from the blood in the liver, collected in the gall-bladder, and discharged into the lower end of the duodenum. A red inflammatory swelling or tumour, very sore, and cured by suppuration, from bile, Sax. Figuratively, concealed or suppressed anger.

BILEDULGERID, the ancient Numidia, an inland country of Africa, s. TUNIS. The air is hot, but the soil, though dry, yields a considerable quantity of barley. The country in some parts is covered with large woods of date-palm trees, with which the inhabitants carry on a considerable trade. The inhabitants are Africans, and roving tribes of Arabs. It lies between 28 and 32 degrees N. lat., and between 5 and 11 E. long.

BILGE, s. [bīlg, Sax.] that part of a ship's bottom on which, together with the keel, she rests, when aground. Bilge-water, that which rests on a ship's bottom, on account of its flatness, and cannot go to the well. Bilge-pump, is that which is applied to the side of a ship, to exhaust or pump out the bilge-water.

TO BILGE, v. n. a sea-term, to damage, to break the boards of a ship or vessel against a rock, so as to make a passage for the water to enter; to spring a leak.

BILIARY, a. [bilis, Lat.] in Anatomy, that belongs to or conveys the bile.

BILIMBI, s. a fruit of the East Indies, used there medicinally, but here only as a pickle.

BILINGUOUS, a. [bilinguis, Lat.] an epithet applied to one who speaks two languages. In Law, applied to a jury which passes upon a foreigner for a crime committed in England, whereof part are English, and part foreigners.

BILIOUS, a. [bilis, Lat.] consisting of bile; subject to biliary disorders.

TO BILK, v. a. [bīlken, Teut.] to cheat; to defraud; to contract a debt, and run away without paying it.

BILL, s. [bīle, Sax.] the horny mandibles which are the termination of the jaw in birds, used by them in procuring food; a beak. In Husbandry, a kind of axe, with a hooked point, used to lop trees. If the handle be short, it is named a hand bill; but if long, a hedge bill. An old English weapon. In trade, a written or printed account of goods delivered to, or work done for, a person. In Commerce, bill of credit, that which is given by one person to another, empowering him to take up money of his correspondents in foreign countries. A bill of entry, an account of goods entered at the custom-house, either inwards or outwards, mentioning the person exporting, &c., the quality or species of the goods, where exported to, and whence. Bill of exchange, an order given by a person to another in a different place, to pay money to a third person, at a specified time. Bill of health, a certificate signed by a visiting physician that a ship's crew have been in quarantine, and are free from contagious diseases. Bill of lading, a memorandum or acknowledgment, under the hand of a master of a vessel, of his having received goods on board, together with a promise to deliver them as consigned. Bills of parcels, an account given by the seller or buyer of the several goods bought, and their prices. Bill of sale, a contract, by which a person empowers his creditor to sell the goods of which he gives him an inventory, unless the sum borrowed be repaid with interest at the time appointed. Bill, in Law, a single bond without a condition; a declaration in writing, expressing some grievance or wrong done by the person complained of. In Parliament, a writing containing some proposals offered to the House to be passed into a law. A bill of mortality, a bill giving an account of the number of persons dying within certain limits and times. A bill of fare, an account of the dishes of an entertainment, or of the provisions in season. In History, The Bill of Rights, the bill appointing William III. king of England, at the same time laying down the limits of the monarchy, and settling the succession.

To BILL, v. n. to join bills together. Figuratively, to coarsen with great fondness, in allusion to the manner of doves joining their bills together.

BILLERICAY, Essex. It is seated on a hill, 23 miles from London. Pop. 1284.

BILLESDON, Leicestershire, 9 miles nearly E. of Leicester. Market, Friday. Pop. 878.

BILLET, s. [billet, Fr.] in Heraldry, a bearing in form of a long square. They are supposed to represent pieces of gold and silver; but Guillim thinks they represent a letter sealed up; and others take them for bricks. Also a log of wood cut for fuel, from bilet, Fr. Also a note or ticket given by the constable of a parish or hundred, to quarter soldiers at public-houses. Billet-doux, [Fr.] a love-letter.

BILLIARDS, s. has no singular, [billiard, Fr.] a kind of game played on an oblong table, fixed exactly horizontal and covered with a cloth, with little ivory balls, which are driven by the opposite parties into hazards, holes, or pockets, placed at the end and sides of the table.

BILLINGHAM, Durham. It is 297 miles from London. Markets, Tuesday and Saturday. Pop. 1653.

BILLINGS-GATE, a gate, port, or stairs, on the river Thames, where a considerable fish-market is held. Figuratively, low abuse and scurrilous language, alluding to that which is made use of by those who frequent this place.

BILLION, s. [Fr.] in Coinage, a base metal, either of gold or silver, in which copper is predominant. In Arithmetic, a thousand thousand millions, expressed in figures thus 1,000,000,000,000.

BILLOW, s. [bilge, Teut.] a large, high, swelling wave. Synon. We cut through the waves; are lifted by the surges; tossed and dashed by the billows.

To BILLOW, v. n. to swell or grow tempestuous; to raise in large heaps like the appearance of billows.

BILLLOWY, a stormy, tempestuous, swelling into large waves.

BILSTON, Staffordshire. A town which has risen lately to considerable importance through the productiveness of the coal and iron mines, by which it is surrounded. It has iron-works, and manufactories for all kinds of iron goods, and for common earthenware. It has two churches, and a fine Methodist meeting. It is inhabited chiefly by miners and labouring men; and from the nature of their work, and the character of the country round it, is far from that cleanliness needful for health: the ravages of the cholera were dreadful. Some of the mines run under the town, and, by the falling in of the galleries, many of the houses are broken in pieces. The earth in many places in the neighbourhood, sinking in where an old mine has been, in which the coal and shale is smouldering, smokes constantly, as if on fire. It is 113 miles from London. Markets, Monday and Saturday. Pop. 20,180.

BIN, s. [binne, Sax.] a long square frame, or chest of wood, wherein corn, bread, &c. are put.

BINARY, a. [binarius, Lat.] two; double.

BINBROKE, or BINBROOK, Lincolnshire. It is seated in a bottom, and has two parish churches. It is 158 miles from London. Market, Wednesday. Pop. 1187.

To BIND, v. a. preter. bound; [bindan, Sax.] to deprive a person of the free use of his limbs by bonds; to surround, to encompass, confine, fasten together; to fix a bandage on; to compel, force, restrain. In Physic, to make coactive. To bind a book, to sew the sheets together, and place them in a cover. With the word over, to oblige, under a certain penalty, to appear at a court of justice. Synon. We bind the feet and hands of a criminal; and we tie him to a stake. In the figurative sense, a man is bound when he is not at liberty to act; and he is tied when he cannot change his party, or quit it. Authority and power bind; interest and love tie.

BINDER, s. one who binds books; one who ties sheaves together. In Surgery, a fillet used to keep on the dressings of a sore, and rolled several times about it.

BINDING, s. that which is bound, wound, or tied round any thing; a bandage.

BINDWEED, s. in Botany, a plant, the same with the convolvulus.

BINGHAM, Nottinghamshire, seated on the vale of Belvoir, now a mean place, and its market is small. It is 130 miles from London. Market, Thursday. Pop. 1998.

BINNACLE, s. a frame in the steege of the ship, in which the compass is placed.

BINOCLÉ, s. [binus and oculus, Lat.] in Dioptrics, a telescope fitted with two tubes, so that distant objects may be seen by both the eyes.

BINOCLULAR, a. [binus and oculus, Lat.] that has two eyes or sights.

BINOMIAL, a. in Algebra, the name of an expression which consists of two terms. Binomial theorem, one discovered by Sir Isaac Newton, by which any power or root of a binomial expression may be obtained without performing the actual involution or extraction.

BIOGRAPHER, a. [bios and grapho, Gr.] one who writes the lives of particular persons.

BIOGRAPHY, s. writing the lives of men; the lives so written. BION, a Greek pastoral poet, born near Smyrna, who lived much in Sicily; he was a friend of two other poets, Theocritus and Moschus, with whose poems his are usually associated. He flourished about 200 B. C.

BIPAROUS, a. [binus and pario, Lat.] bringing forth two at a time.

BIPARTITE, a. [bipartitus, Lat.] having two parts answering to each other; divided into two.

BIPARTITION, s. the act of dividing into two.

BIPED, s. [bipes, Lat.] an animal with two feet.

BIPEDAL, a. [bipedalis, Lat.] two feet in length.

BIPENNATE, a. [binus and penna, Lat.] having two wings.

BISQUADRATE, BISQUADRA'TIC, a. [bis and quadra, Lat.] the next power above the cube, or the square of the square. Biquadratic equation, in Algebra, an equation which contains the fourth power of the unknown quantity. Biquadratic power, the fourth power of a number, or the square squared. Biquadratic root of a number, the square root of the square root.

BISQUINTILE, a. [bis and quintus, Lat.] in Astrology, an aspect of the planets, wherein they are 144 degrees from each other.

BIR, (pron. beer.) a town of Turkey in Asia, in Mesopotamia, standing on the Euphrates, which is navigable there to the sea. It is not well built, and stands on the side of a very steep hill. Its population is estimated at about 3000. Lat. 36. 59' N. Long. 38. 7' E.

BIRCH, s. [bir, Sax.] in Botany, betula; a very elegant and common English tree, whose wood is used for making ox-yokes, hoops, small screws, panniers, brooms, wands, bavin bands, withies for faggots, arrows, bolts, shafts, dishes, bowls, ladles; also for fuel. In Russia and Poland, they cover houses with the bark of the birch-tree instead of slate and tile. There are several different species. Birch-broom, is a broom or besom made with the small twigs of the birch-tree. See BESOM.

BIRCHEN, a. made of birch.

BIRD, s. [bird, or brid, Sax.] the second class of vertebrate animals; its body is covered with feathers, and has two wings, two legs, and a bill of a firm horny substance; and the females are all oviparous. Bird of Paradise, a genus of very splendid birds, natives of China and the Eastern Islands, which were believed by old travellers to have no feet. Prov. Birds of a feather flock together.—He's in great want of a bird that will give a groat for an owl.—One bird in the hand is worth two in the bush.—

'Tis an ill bird that bewrays its own nest.—Every bird must hatch her own egg.

BIRDBOLT, s. [bird and bolt, Sax.] a small shot or arrow, used in killing birds.

BIRDCAGE, s. a receptacle made with wire, &c. to keep birds in.

BIRDCATCHER, B'r'der, s. one who lives by catching and selling birds.

BIRD-CHERRY, s. in Botany, a common English shrub or small tree, which bears very pretty long spikes of flowers in the spring.

BIRDLIME, s. a viscid, glutinous substance, prepared differently, but that in common use with us is made of holly bark, or mistletoe. It is spread upon twigs, upon which the birds lighting, are entangled.

BIRD'S-EYE, s. in Botany, the common name of a plant, the same with the mealy primrose; the wild carrot is called bird's-eye by some, and the common germander speedwell.

BIRD'S-EYE-VIEW, s. a mode of representing a landscape or scene which conveys the impression of being taken from such a height that it appears partly as a plan or map. It is usually employed for representations of towns and masses of buildings, of which a plan is required, without its formality and exactitude.

BIRD'S-FOOT, s. in Botany, the ornithopodium of Linnaeus, so called from the shape and arrangement of its pods or seed vessels.

BIRD'S-NEST, in Botany, the English name of a kind of orchis which grows in moist woods, but is not very common. Used in Sweden as a cattle medicine.

BIRD'S-TONGUE, s. in Botany, a plant, called also marsh groundsel.

BIRD, WILLIAM, one of the most eminent English composers of church music, who lived in the 16th century. He was, first, organist at Lincoln cathedral, and afterwards one of the organists to the queen. His works, which (with the exception of the Non nobis Domine, known to all) were almost forgotten, are gaining now the attention and esteem their merit deserves. He died in 1623, aged about 60 years.

BIRGANDER, s. in Natural History, the common name of a species of goose.

BIRKBECK, DR. GEORGE, the founder of Mechanics' Institutions, was a physician, who had always a great taste for practical science, and on various occasions had seen how much artisans stood in need of better information respecting their own crafts. He enlisted the advocacy and help of the leading scientific and literary men amongst his associates, and devoted his own time, and property, and pen to his favourite object, with great, but too temporary, success. He died in 1841, aged 65 years.

BIRKENHEAD, Cheshire. This town has risen lately on the opposite bank of the Mersey to Liverpool, at the termination of a branch of the Grand Junction Railway. There are two churches, a town-hall, market-house, a park, and docks of all kinds with every needful appendage, one of which exceeds in area all the docks of Liverpool. Pop. 8223.

BIRKET-EL-KEROUN, a large lake in Middle Egypt, on the W. of the range of mountains that form the W. side of the valley of the Nile. It lies by a plain which is well cultivated and covered with villages. It is about 40 miles long, and 5 broad.

BIRKET-EL-MAROUT, a large lake near Alexandria, in Egypt, communicating with the Nile and the sea. It is about 30 miles long, by about 15 broad.

BIRMAN EMPIRE, or BU'RNAH, a large country lying E. of the Bay of Bengal, adjoining to British India, and Aracan. The Gulf of Martaban is its S. boundary, and the kingdom of Siam its E.; which northerly it extends to the borders of Thibet. The Aracan mountains, and a branch of the Himmaleh mountains, which are its N. boundary, are included in it, and these latter attain a great altitude: from them flows the great river Irrawaddy, the principal stream of the country, running throughout its whole length; of its tributaries the largest is the Khyanderain; the Delta formed at its mouth is a triangle, each of whose sides are about 140 miles long. Of all the natural curiosities the springs of petroleum are the most wonderful: they are found by sinking wells of about 250 feet deep. This natural or mineral oil is much used in the country. Gold is found in the rivers, and mines of other metals exist in the inland parts. Precious stones, amber, and coal, also abound. The climate is such as is usual in those latitudes, modified by the peculiar conformation of the country. Amongst its forests the most valuable tree is the teak; and the usual kinds of corn and pulse, and drugs, occur. The only peculiarity of the wild animals is the comparative rarity of wolves, jackals, &c. The inhabitants seem to belong to several different tribes, though they are all of one variety of the human species. They are not so far advanced in civilization as their neighbours on either side. Buddhism is the most prevalent religion. The government of the country is by an absolute despot, the councillors acting only as agents of his will. The trade is chiefly internal, or with the countries E. of Burmah. Ava, Pegu, Amarapura, Sagain, and Pughain, are its chief cities. Its population is about 4,000,000.

BIRMINGHAM, Warwickshire. This is one of the largest of our manufacturing towns; it is finely and healthily situated on the slope of a hill, with a few small streams near it, which afterwards flow either to the North Sea, or by the Severn to the Atlantic. The coal and iron district terminates some miles from the town, and the strata in its vicinity are only sands, gravels, and clays, whence the soil is very poor. The wealth of the town consists in its varied manufactures, which consist of all kinds of steel and iron goods, from those made by the great rolling-mills, to the most exquisitely finished ornaments, and steel pens, glass, silver goods, papier-mâché articles, &c. There are several churches, built in a good style of architecture, and the newer parts of the town also are well built; the railway termini and some of the manufactures are fine erections. King Edward's school has been rebuilt in a most elegant Gothic style, and the town-hall (which contains one of the noblest organs in Europe) is a grand building, constructed after the model of a Roman temple, and placed in a most commanding situation. Market, Thuesday. Pop. 182,922.

BIRTH, s. in Natural History, a provincial name of the turbot.

BIRTH, s. [birth, Sax.] the act of bringing forth; the entrance of a person into the world; any production; rank of dignity inherited by descent. In sea affairs, a proper place for a ship to ride in; the distance between a ship when under sail, and the shore; a place separated by canvass, wherein the sailors mess, and put their chests. A good berth, good accommodations, wherein a person has every thing that is convenient.

BIRTHDAY, s. the day in which a person comes into the world and is born.

BIRTHNIGHT, s. the night in which a person is born.

BIRTHPLACE, s. the place wherein a person is born.

BIRTHRIGHT, s. the right which a person acquires by birth, generally applied to the first-born.

BIRTHSTRANGLER, a. strangled, choked, or killed by suffocation, in coming into the world.

BISCAY, a province of Spain, bounded on the W. and S. W. by Asturia and Old Castile, on the N. by the Bay of Biscay, on the E. by Navarre, and on the S. by Old Castile and Navarre. It is about 48 miles in length, and 30 in its greatest breadth. Biscay produces apples, oranges, citrons, corn, &c. They have timber for ship-building, and mines of iron and lead, which they also manufacture; the adjoining sea also supplies them with fish, and renders their trade very flourishing; their wine is accounted the best in Spain. The Biscayners are of the Basque nation, and still preserve their peculiar language, the Basque, which has no affinity with any other in Europe. Bilbao is the capital. Pop. about 140,000. Bay of Biscay, that part of the Atlantic which lies between Spain and France, Cape Ortegal and the Island of Usant being its natural boundaries. It is about 400 miles across, and as many deep. It receives the waters of some of the largest rivers in France; but only inconsiderable mountain streams empty themselves into it from Spain. The navigation of this bay is proverbially bad, from the continual roughness of the water, arising from its shape and position as to the Atlantic, and the current, which may be only a portion of the Gulf Stream.

BISCOTIN, s. [Fr.] a confection made of flour, marmalade, eggs, &c.

BISCUIT, (biskit) s. [bis, Lat. and cuit, Fr.] a kind of hard dry bread, made partly of wheat flour, and partly of pea flour, mixed with leaven and warm water, and well baked in the form of flat cakes. It is used on board ships as the common fare; otherwise as a sort of luxury. The great biscuit factory for the navy is at Gosport. This name is also applied to other kinds of plain cakes and confectionery. In the manufacture of earthenware, the goods after their first baking, before being glazed, are so called.

To BISE/CT, v. a. [bisus and seco, Lat.] in Geometry, to divide any thing into two equal parts.

BISE/CTION, Bisse/ction, s. in Geometry, the act of dividing a line, &c. into two equal parts.

BISHOP, s. [Sax. from episcopos, Gr.] an overseer, or superintendent. In Episcopal churches, a minister whose office it is to ordain, overlook, and direct the ministers of different parishes or congregations, in all spiritual matters; and who is himself under the control of an archbishop. In other churches it is used as equivalent to presbyter, or elder, and signifies the minister of any particular congregation. In the Church of England, there are 25 bishops for England and Wales; 23 of whom sit in the House of Lords by virtue of their baronies, and one as a titular lord-abbot; 12 for Ireland, 3 of whom sit as representative lords of the Irish Church; and 17 for the colonies, with one at Jerusalem, whose services are shared by the members of some other Protestant communions. The bishops of London, Durham, and Winchester take precedence of the rest, who rank according to the date of their consecration: and in Ireland, the bishops of Meath and Kildare rank first, and the rest in the order of consecration. All these sees are in the gift of the Crown, except Sodor and Man, which is in the gift of the Duke of Athol. Suffragan bishops, are those who are subordinates and assistants, and substitutes in case of absence of other bishops. The name is applied to all bishops of the English Church. Bishops in partibus infidelium, bishops without a see, or exercising actual episcopal authority in one place, under the title of another see where no such authority is exercised. This is in the Romish Church.

BISHOP, s. a liquor made of water, wine, sugar, and a Seville orange roasted.

BISHOP AND HIS CLERKS, some little islands and rocks on the coast of Pembrokeshire, near St. David's, dangerous to mariners.

BISHOPRIC, s. [bisepiscopie, Sax.] the province, district, or diocese, which belongs to a bishop.

BISHOPS-AUKLAND, Durham. It is pleasantly seated on the side of a hill, and noted for its castle, beautifully repaired about 100 years ago; for its chapel, whose architecture is very curious; and for its bridge. It is 257 miles from London. Market, Thursday. Pop. 3776.

BISHOPS-CASTLE, Shropshire, seated near the river Clun; and is much frequented by the Welch. It is 159 miles from London. Market, Friday. Pop. 1781.

BISHOPS-STORTFORD, Hertfordshire, seated on the side of a hill, and has several good inns. Its chief trade is in malt. It is 30 miles from London. Market, Thursday. Pop. 4681.

BISK, s. [bisque, Fr.] a soup, or broth, made of different sorts of flesh boiled, according to Johnson.

BISMUTH, s. in Chemistry, a metal, of a reddish white colour, a flaky texture, and moderately hard, but not malleable. It is generally found with cobalt; native bismuth, and sulphuret of bismuth, are also found upon the continent, but this is not an abundant metal. Bismuth is used with other metals, not only to form printers' types, but also to make pewter, and for some other compounds. It remarkably contributes to the fusibility of some alloys; hence it is employed to make solder. Bismuth is likewise given in medicines, though now very rarely. Pearl-white is a precipitate of bismuth.

BISON, s. in Natural History, the name of one or two kinds of wild ox, the most numerous of which occurs in N. America, where it is usually termed a buffalo. In the boundless prairies of the far-west, and high up towards the N., where only an occasional traveller or a wandering tribe of Indians is seen, these beasts are found in immense herds, which travel from place to place as want of pasture necessitates. The flesh is reckoned by some a delicacy; and the hide, and the long hair cut from it, are valuable articles of trade. The hunting of them is dangerous sport, as they are powerful and ferocious animals.

BISSEXTILE, s. [bis and sextilis, Lat.] a year containing 366 days, happening every fourth year, when a day is added to the month of February, to make up for the six hours by which the solar year exceeds the civil year. The name bissextile was given it at the reformation of the calendar by Julius Cesar, because the 6th cal. March (our 24th of February) was repeated twice on that year, to secure the necessary correction.

BISTORT, s. in Botany, a common marsh plant; a sort of snaukweed.

BISTOURY, s. [bistouri, Fr.] a surgeon's instrument, used in making incisions.

BISTRE, s. [Fr.] a colour made of the soot of wood, especially beech, boiled, and afterwards diluted, and made into cakes with gum water. It is used by painters to wash their designs, instead of Indian ink, &c.

BISULCOUS, a. [bisulcus, Lat.] cleft in two parts; cloven-footed.

BIT, s. [bitol, Sax.] the essential part of a bridle, which being put into the horse's mouth, the rider is enabled to manage him; the sharp end of a piercer, auger, or other iron instrument. The bit of a key is that part which contains the wards. Bit also means as much as a person generally bites off at once.

To BIT, v. a. to put a bit into a horse's mouth; to bridle.

BITCH, s. [bitgh, Sax.] the female of the dog, wolf, fox, and other kind.

To BITE, v. n. preter. bit, part. pass. bitten. [bilon, Sax.] to wound, pierce, or divide with the teeth; to affect with pain, applicable to the cold; to make a person uneasy, applied to satire or reproach; to wound by its sharpness, applied to a sword, &c.; to make the mouth smart, applied to the sharp taste of acid bodies. Figuratively, to cheat or defraud.

BITE, s. the incision or wound made in any thing with the teeth; a sharper; a cheat, trick, or fraud.

BITER, s. one that seizes with the teeth, applied to a dog; one that readily or quickly swallows a bait, applied to a fish; one who deceives or defrauds another by false appearances; a sharper.

BITHY'NIA, an ancient country of Asia Minor, lying on the Euxine Sea, extending easterly as far as the river Parthenius, and bounded by Mysia, Phrygia, Galatia, and Paphlagonia. Mount Olympus was partly within its borders; and Chalcedon, Nicæa, and Leuce were among its towns. It has had some interesting light thrown on it by the letters of Pliny, who was the Roman governor of it in the time of Trajan; and especially by those which relate to the persecutions of the Christians.

BITTACLE, s. [ha bitacle, Fr.] See BINACLE.

BITTEN, part. pass. of To BITE.

BITTER, a. [biter, Sax.] that excites a hot, pungent, and astringent taste, like that of wormwood. Figuratively, wretched, miserable, painful, disagreeable, unpleasant, and hurtful.

BITTER, s. in sea language, any turn of the cable round the bits, so that they may be let out gradually, or by degrees. When a ship is stopped by the cable, she is said to be brought up by the bitter.

BITTERLY, ad. with a bitter taste. Figuratively, in a sorrowful, painful, sharp, and severe manner; used sometimes to express the superlative or highest degree.

BITTERN, s. [butour, Fr.] in Natural History, a bird with a long bill and legs, which feeds on fish, and makes a remarkable noise. A very bitter liquor which drains off in making common salt, and used in the preparation of Epsom salt; from the adjective bitter.

BITTERNESS, s. a kind of savour, or sensation, the reverse of sweetness. Applied to manner, severity, austerity. Applied to reproach, keenness, sharpness, or extremity. Applied to the passions, sorrow, trouble, distress.

BITTERSWEET, s. in Botany, a plant, called also woody nightshade, whose berries are dangerously poisonous, and of a brilliant scarlet hue.

BITTS, s. [bitan, Sax.] two perpendicular pieces of timber in the forepart of a ship, bolted to the gun-deck: their heads are braced with a cross piece, and several turns of the cable are taken over them, for securing the ship when at anchor.

BITUMEN, s. [Lat.] in Chemistry, a natural tarry substance, more or less fluid, which has evidently resulted from the decomposition of wood or coal, by heat. One kind is elastic, and is called fossil india-rubber; this has been found in England, France, and the United States. The hard and inelastic kind is called asphalt; and the fluid, petroleum. See these words.

BITU/MINOUS, a. [bitumen, Lat.] having the nature and qualities of bitumen.

BIVALVE, a. [bis and valva, Lat.] in Natural History, applied to fish that have two shells, such as oysters; and in Botany, to plants whose seed-pods open their whole length, to discharge their seeds, as peas.

BIVATVULAR, a. that has two shells, or valves.

BIVOUACK, s. and v. [Fr.] in Military affairs, an encampment for a night without the shelter of tents; the soldiers sleeping on the ground, round fires, with their arms piled close by.

BYZANTINE, BYZANTINE, s. a large wedge of gold, valued at 15*l.*, which the king offers upon high festival days. See BESANT.

To BLAB, v. a. [blabberen, Belg.] to reveal a secret through heedlessness or want of caution.—v. n. To talk, or tattle.

BLAB, BLABBER, s. a tell-tale; one who discovers secrets through inconsideration, or too great a propensity to talking.

BLACK, s. [Sax.] absence or want of colour, owing to a body's reflecting no rays of light. Dyer's black, for stuffs of a high price, is composed of indigo, wood boiled with alum, tartar, or ashes of lees of wine, maddered with common madder, and mixed with gall-nuts of Aleppo, copperas, and sumach. The best black cloth should be first dyed blue. German black is made of the lees of wine, burnt bones washed afterwards, and ground with burnt ivory or peach-stones; that with ivory is the best. This is used by rolling-press printers. Ivory black is ivory burnt between two crucibles, and ground with water, used by painters and jewellers to blacken the bottom ground of the collets or bezels in which they set diamonds. Spanish black, invented by the Spaniards, is burnt cork. Lamp black is the sooty smoke or soot of resin, received in sheep-skins or pieces of coarse linen fixed at the top of a chimney, wherein it is burnt for that purpose. Currier's black is made with gall-nuts, sour beer, and cold iron, for the first blackening applied to the hides; but of gall-nuts, copperas, and gum arabic, for the second. Black, after the word look, and the preposition upon, implies sullen, unfriendly, and is a sign of displeasure. "Looked black upon me," Shaks. Joined with blue, it implies the colour of the skin, occasioned by a hard blow; livid. Prov. Black will take no other hue: this dyers find by experience. It may signify that vicious persons are seldom or never reclaimed. A black plum is as sweet as a white; signifying, that the prerogative of beauty proceeds from fancy. A black hen lays a white egg: I conceive the meaning of it is, that a black woman may bear a fair child.

To BLACK, v. a. to make of a black colour.

BLACK, v. a. to make of a black colour. Applied to despair, horrible; to moral action, excessively wicked.

BLACK, DR. JOSEPH, an eminent chemist, whose speculations concerning heat cast great light on that branch of physics. The discovery of latent heat was his. He was born in France, but studied in this country, and became a Professor at Edinburgh. He died in 1799, aged 71 years.

BLACKAMOOR, s. one whose complexion is naturally black. See NEGRO.

BLACKBERRY, s. the fruit of the bramble, which is ripe in September.

BLACKBIRD, s. in Natural History, a common English bird, and one of our sweetest songsters. It is very destructive to fruit, but it compensates for much of its harm by destroying snails, which in winter and spring are its chief food. Albinoes of this species are often met with, as of rooks, &c.

BLACK-BROWED, a. having black eye-brows. Figuratively, dark, gloomy, dismal, or threatening.

BLACKBURN, Lancashire, with large manufactures of calicoes, and other cotton goods, for printing. It is seated near the river Derwent, called sometimes Blackwater, 211 miles from London. Market, Monday. Pop. 71,711.

BLACKCAP, s. in Natural History, one of the warblers that migrate to England for the summer. Its song is very beautiful. It is a fruit eater, but also consumes caterpillars and other pests.

BLACK-CATTLE, s. in Husbandry, a general term, including oxen, bulls, or cows.

BLACK-COCK, s. in Natural History, a common name for the grouse, or heath-cock. It is found sparsely in the north of England, but most abundantly in Scotland, where it is the most common kind of game.

To BLACKEN, v. a. to make a thing black which was of a different colour before; to intercept the rays of light; to darken. Figuratively, to sully a person's character by defamation, or unmerited censure.

BLACK-FRIARS, a name of the Dominican order of monks, given them from the colour of their dress. See DOMINICANS.

BLACKGUARD, s. in low and familiar language, used to convey vey the idea of a person of mean circumstances, dirty and ragged dress, of base principles, and worthy of contempt.

BLACK-JACK, s. zinc mineralized with sulphur, a mineral employed till lately in Wales in mending the roads.

BLACKISH, a. [black and ish, Sax.] inclined to a black colour; somewhat black.

BLACK-LEAD, s. See PLUMBAGO.

BLACKMORE, SIR RICHARD, a poetaster of England in the beginning of the 18th century, who would have had the happiness of being forgotten, had not his critic's Bathos, or the Art of Sinking, kept his memory alive. His principles and objects in versifying were highly commendable, for he sought to recall his infidel and licentious age to the knowledge of God and of virtue. He was a physician by profession, and was attached to the court of more than one sovereign of England. He died in 1728, aged 78 years.

BLACKNESS, s. that quality of a body which arises from its reflecting few or no rays, and is owing to its porosity, the minuteness of its particles, and the rays of light suffering so many reflections in the inside, that few return to the surface; want of light, or darkness.

BLACKPOOL, Lancashire. A pleasant watering-place, near the mouth of the Ribble. The inhabitants are principally engaged in the fisheries of the coast. It is 235 miles from London. Pop. 714.

BLACK ROD, GENTLEMAN USHER OF THE, s. an officer of the House of Lords, whose duties resemble those of the sergeants of the Lower House.

BLACK SEA, formerly called the Euxine, is one of the boundaries of Europe, lying between Turkey in Europe and Russia, and Asia Minor and the Caucasian states. It is connected with the Mediterranean Sea by the Sea of Marmora, and the Egean or Archipelago. Its length is about 700 miles, and its breadth between 300 and 400. It receives the waters of the Danube, the Dniester, and the Volga, besides those of many smaller rivers. It has many good harbours, but the N. part is liable to be frozen in the winter. The first voyage of the Greeks, called the Argonautic Expedition, was made, according to the fable, over this sea.

BLACKSMITH, s. a person who forges large works in iron, and derives his name from their colour, which is generally black from their not being polished; opposed to the whitesmith, who forges small works, which are generally polished.

BLACKSTONE, SIR WILLIAM, the author of the standard work on English Law, was the first Vinerian Professor at Oxford, and afterwards one of the justices of the court of Common Pleas. He met with a formidable opponent in Bentham, who pointed out some fundamental errors and defects in his great work. They have not yet been rectified, since the reform in law has not yet been effected. He died in 1780, aged 57 years.

BLACKTHORN, s. in Botany, a common English shrub, the same with the sloe.

BLACKWALL, one of the suburbs of London; which see.

BLACKWATER, one of the principal rivers of Ireland. It rises near the county of Kerry, and flows into the Atlantic, after a course of about 70 miles, between the counties of Waterford and Cork.

BLADDER, s. [bladdre, Sax.] in Anatomy, a thin, dilatible, membranous body, which serves as the receptacle of the urine after its secretion from the blood in the kidneys, situated in the pelvis of the abdomen. It likewise signifies a pustule, blister, or the swelling of a membrane filled with any juice or fluid, such as that which arises after scalding or burning.

BLADE, s. [blad, or blad, Sax.] in Botany, the spire or leaf of grass before it grows to seed; the green shoots or leaves of corn, which rise from the seed. Hence that part of a sword or knife is called a blade, from the form's resembling a blade of grass. Figuratively, a bold, enterprising, brisk, fierce, and gay person.

BLADE, BLADE-BONE, s. in Anatomy, the scapula, or scapular bone, of a flat or triangular form.

To BLADE, v. a. to furnish with a blade; to fit a blade to a handle.

BLADED, a. that has leaves, spires, or blades.

BLAIN, s. [blagene, Sax.] a distemper incident to beasts, consisting of a bladder growing at the root of the tongue, against the windpipe, which at length grows so large as to stop the breath. Applied to human creatures, a pustule or blister.

BLAIR, DR. HUGH, a well-known writer on rhetoric, the professorship of which, at Edinburgh, he occupied during 20 years in the last century. He was a minister of the Scotch Church, and his sermons, as well as his lectures, are still esteemed for their elegant style, though he has failed to reach the philosophy of the subject. He died in 1800, aged 82 years.

BLAKE, ADMIRAL ROBERT, one of the most distinguished English naval commanders. He had a liberal education, and entered the service of the Parliament at the civil war. He commanded in Bristol during its siege by the Royalists; and was afterwards governor of Taunton, where he manifested his courage and skill, in enduring two sieges. Being appointed a commander of the fleet, his peculiar power soon appeared. He did in this capacity signal service against the Royalists' fleet; defeated Van Tromp, the famous Dutch admiral, in several engagements; and destroyed the Spanish fleet in the harbour of Teneriffe. He died in 1657, as he was returning from the last victory, aged 59 years.

To BLAME, v. a. [blamer, Fr.] applied to persons, to charge them with having done a fault.

BLAME, s. the charging with wrong measures or faults. Figuratively, the defect which merits censure. Used with to, it implies that which deserves blame, or blamable.

BLAMABLE, a. that may be found fault with, or censured.

BLAMABLENESS, s. that which renders a thing faulty, or liable to blame or censure.

BLAMABLY, ad. in such a manner as deserves censure or blame.

BLAMEFUL, a. that highly deserves to be found fault with, censured, or blamed.

BLAMELESS, a. that is no ways defective, or deserves no censure or blame; used sometimes, but very rarely, with the particle of.

BLAMELESSLY, ad. in such a manner as to be free from fault; so as not to merit censure.

BLAMELESSNESS, s. that quality which renders a person or thing by no means the object of censure or blame.

BLAMER, s. the person who censures, or charges a person or thing with defect, or being wrong.

BLAMEWORTHY, a. that deserves censure or blame, including the idea of something wrong or defective.

To BLANCH, v. a. [blanchir, Fr.] to whiten a thing which was before of another colour. Figuratively, to peel, applied to the peeling almond, which discovers their kernel of a white colour.

BLANCHER, s. one who makes any thing white; a whiteness. Also, the action, art, or method of making any thing white. In Coinage, the method made use of to give the pieces that brightness and lustre they have on their first coming out of the mint.

BLANC-MANGER, (blomange) s. (Fr.) a preparation of isinglass, milk, sugar, cinnamon, &c., boiled into a thick consistence, and garnished for the table with blanchéd almonds.

BLANC, MONT, one of the loftiest of the Alps, lying in the W. part of the chain, between the states of Piedmont and Savoy. It is upwards of 10,000 feet high, and the upper part is constantly covered with snow. It has frequently been ascended, but the journey is not without danger, from the shifting cracks in the mass of frozen snow.

BLANCO, CAPE, the name of a great number of capes in both hemispheres, the most note-worthy of which is in W. Africa, at the extremity of a chain of mountains, called the White Mountains, running into the Great Desert. It is above Cape Verde. Lat. 20. 46. N.

BLAND, a. [blandus, Lat.] soothing, mild, applied to language. Soft, temperate, applied to weather.

BLANDFORD, Dorsetshire. It is pleasantly situated on the river Stour, near the Downs, and has round it remarkably fine pastures. It has a considerable manufacture for shirt-burns. It has the title of a marquise. 103 miles from London. Market, Saturday. Pop. 3349.

To BLANDISH, v. a. to insinuate oneself into a person's favour; to soothe, or allure. Seldom used.

BLANDISHMENT, s. [blanditio, Lat.] an insinuating address; soft, mild, and kind expressions, by which a person steals into the favour of another.

BLANE, SIR GILBERT, an eminent physician, who, in the latter part of the last century, recommended the use of lemon-juice in the navy, as an antidote to the scurvy, whose ravages had been frightful. He published several works on subjects connected with his own science and others; and was highly esteemed. He died in 1834, aged 85 years.

BLANK, a. [blanc, Fr.] whitish or pale; that is not written on. Used with the word look, (either expressed or understood,) confused, dejected, or showing the signs of disappointment. Applied to verse, that has no rhyme.

BLANK, s. in Commerce, a void space, or that which has no writing on it, but is left so, in order to be filled up. In Lotteries, a ticket which has no prize drawn against it. Figuratively, the mark or point which an arrow or piece is aimed at.

To BLANK, v. a. figuratively, to confuse; to disappoint; to cease, bring to nothing, or render abortive.

BLANKENBURG, a city of Germany, capital of a principality of the same name. It stands amongst the Harz Mountains, near the Blankenstein, and at no great distance from the Regenstein, two castle-crowned eminences of that range. Lat. 51. 47. N. Long. 10. 57. E.

BLANKET, s. [blanchette, Fr.] a stuff made of wool, and used for beds.

To BLANKET, v. a. to cover or wrap in a blanket.

BLANKLY, ad. in such a manner as causes or shows confusion or insensibility; with whiteness, with paleness.

To BLARE, v. n. [blaren, Belg.] to bellow, to roar; to melt away, like a lighted candle blown by the wind.

To BLASPHEME, v. n. [Gr.] to speak ill of God, his messengers, or things relating to his service, and comprehended in his revelation. In Law, an indignity or injury offered to the Almighty, by denying what is his due, or attributing to him what is not agreeable to his nature.

BLASPHEMER, s. one who utters disrespectful or irreverent things, either of God, Christ, or any person in the Holy Trinity, God's messengers, or any thing relating to religion.

BLASPHEMOUS, a. that is disrespectful or irreverent with respect to God and heavenly things.

BLASPHEMOUSLY, ad. in such a manner as is inconsistent with that reverence we owe to the Deity; in such a manner as to speak ill of God and heavenly things.

BLASPHEMY, s. an offering of some indignity to God, any person of the Trinity, any messengers from God, his holy writ, or the doctrines of revelation.

BLAST, s. [blast, Sax.] a breath, puff, or current of wind; the sound made by blowing a trumpet or other wind instrument; a warm air, or other alteration in the atmosphere, which withers trees, or causes a pestilence.

To BLAST, v. a. to infect with some sudden plague or infection by means of the air; to cause a thing to wither; to ruin a person's character by spreading false rumours; to render an enterprise abortive.

BLASTING, s. in Mining, the blowing up the vein of a mine by gunpowder, which cannot be broken up by the spade, the gad, and the axe, or softened by fire. Galvanic apparatus is much used now in this operation, as it so greatly lessens the danger.

BLATTANT, a. [blattant, Fr.] bellowing like a calf. Seldom used.

BLAY, v. in Natural History, a small white river fish, called also a bleak.

BLAYE, a port of France, in dept. Gironde. It stands on the banks of the river whence the department is named. It is strongly fortified. A considerable trade, chiefly export, is carried on here. Its population is under 4000. It is about 350 miles from Paris. Lat. 45. 7. N. Long. 0. 40. W.

BLAZE, s. [blaze, Sax.] a flame, or the light of a flame. Figuratively, a spreading abroad; publication or extending a report; likewise, the white mark on a horse's forehead, reaching to his nose.

To BLAZE, v. a. used with upon, to shine, or give light. Figuratively, to make a thing universally known by report or rumour. Sometimes used with the words abroad and about.

BLAZER, s. one who spreads abroad any report or rumour. Not much in use.

To BLAZON, v. a. [blasonner, Fr.] in Heraldry, to name all the parts of a coat, in their proper and technical terms. Figuratively, to set out, deck, or adorn; to discover to advantage; to display; to spread abroad.

BLAZON, s. in Heraldry, the art of expressing the several parts of a coat of arms in its proper terms; all persons, beneath the degree of a noble, must have their coats blazoned by metals and colours; nobles by precious stones; and kings and princes by planets. Blazon is used figuratively for making any thing public; a pompous display of any quality.

BLAZONRY, s. the art of blazoning.

TO BLEACH, v. a. [bleichen, Teut.] to whiten a thing by exposing it to the air and sun.—v. n. to grow white in the sun or open air.

BLEACHING, s. the art of making a thing white, which was not perfectly so before, or which was of a different colour. It is now effected by various preparations of chlorine, instead of exposure to the sun and air.

BLEAK, s. a small river fish.

BLEAK, a. [bleac, Sax.] cold, sharp, chill; cheerless.

BLEAKNESS, s. extreme coldness, applied to the air.

BLEAKY, a. cold or chilly owing to the wind.

BLEAR, a. [blauer, Belg.] dim or sore with water or rheum. Applied to the eyes, that causes dimness of sight.

TO BLEAR, v. a. to occasion dimness of sight; to make the eyes sore with water or rheum. Figuratively, to blind, to prevent the mind from taking notice of things.

TO BLEAT, v. a. [blatan, Sax.] to make a noise like a sheep.

BLEAT, s. [from the verb] the cry of a sheep.

BLEB, s. [blauen, Germ.] a blister.

BLEB, part. pass. of TO BLEB.

TO BLEED, v. n. preter. I bled, or have bled; [bledan, Sax.] to lose blood by a wound, &c.; to die by bleeding. Figuratively, to drop like thick or rich blood. Used actively, to extract blood from a person by opening a vein with a lancet; to let blood.

BLEEDING, s. the surgical operation of letting blood, either by the lancet or cupping glasses.

TO BLEMISH, v. a. to mark with any defect; to spot, stain, or any other ways to rob a thing of its beauty, value, or perfection. Figuratively, to defame; to ruin a person's reputation.

BLEMISH, s. applied to personal charms, a scar, or any thing that diminishes their perfection. Applied to manufactures, a defect either in the making, or owing to some accident. Applied to moral conduct, a reproach, disgrace, defect, or fault.

TO BLEND, v. n. to shrink; to start back; to hinder; to obstruct. Seldom used.

TO BLEND, v. a. preter. I blended, anciently blentan; [blendan, Sax.] to mix or mingle things together imperfectly, or so as the several compounds may be discovered, applied to the mixing of colours.

BLEND, s. the ore of zinc mineralized by sulphur.

BLENDER, s. a person who mingles things together.

BLENHEIM HOUSE AND PARK, the demesne and mansion in the neighbourhood of Oxford and Woodstock, which were given to the Duke of Marlborough for his brilliant successes in the war against the French. It is named after Blenheim, a village lying on the Danube, near which the Duke and Prince Eugene, with the allied army, defeated the French and Bavarians, in August, 1704.

BLENNY, s. in Natural History, a genus of small fishes, several species of which are found on our coasts. Their fins are spiny, and they are without air-bladders.

TO BLESS, v. a. preter. I blessed, or blest; [blesian, Sax.] to pray for, or wish happiness or good to a person; to praise for happiness received, or ascribe our happiness to God; to confer every thing that can make a person perfectly happy, applied to God.

BLESSED, part. pass. of TO BLESS.

BLESSEDLY, ad. in a manner which communicates the greatest happiness that can be wished.

BLESSEDNESS, s. that quality which renders a person extremely happy; the state of consummate felicity in heaven. Figuratively, the Divine favour.

BLESSING, s. a declaration of future happiness in a prophetic manner; a prayer in which happiness is requested. Figuratively, the Divine favour; any means or cause of happiness; any great advantage or benefit.

BLEW, the preterite of TO BLOW.

BLEYME, s. in Farriery, an inflammation in the foot of a horse, between the sole and the bone.

BLIGH, CAPT. WILLIAM, the British naval commander, who, when on a voyage to the South-sea Islands, to obtain plants of the bread-fruit tree, &c., for transplantation to the W. Indies, so exasperated his crew by his tyrannical conduct, that they mutinied, and put him with eighteen others into an open boat, in which they sailed upwards of 3000 miles to one of the E. Indian islands. Some of the mutineers fell into the hands of an officer sent out to seize them; the remainder conducted the vessel, the Bounty, to Pitcairn's Island, where they settled. Bligh made another voyage to the Pacific with success. He was afterwards governor of New S. Wales, and was deposed for his arbitrary conduct. He died in 1817.

BLIGHT, s. [byche, Teut.] the common name for all diseases that affect trees and plants, whether in the whole, or in any of their parts. Some are occasioned by insects, and some by minute species of plants, and others by changes of atmospheric temperature. Figuratively, any thing which makes an undertaking miscarry, or disappoints the person's expectations.

TO BLIGHT, v. a. to stop the vegetation of a tree; to render it barren; to wither. Figuratively, to blast, destroy, kill, or wither.

BLIND, a. [blind, Sax.] not able to see; deprived of sight. Figuratively, ignorant, with the particle to before the object; dark, not easily to be seen or found. In Chemistry, applied to those vessels that have no opening but on one side. Prov. Blind men can judge no colours. A man were better to be half blind than have both his eyes out. Who so blind as he that will not see?

TO BLIND, v. a. to deprive a person of his sight, to prevent a person from seeing; to darken. Figuratively, to render a thing obscure, and not easily comprehended.

BLIND, s. something made use of to intercept the light. Figuratively, something made use of to divert the eye or mind from attending to the design a person is carrying on.

TO BLINDFOLD, v. a. to hinder a person from seeing, by folding or tying something before his eyes.

BLINDFOLD, a. with the eyes covered; with the eyes shut. Figuratively, without consideration; without using our reason.

BLINDLY, ad. without sight. Figuratively, scarcely or hardly to be perceived; without examination; implicitly.

BLINDMAN'S BUFF, s. a play wherein a person endeavours to catch some one of the company, after something is tied over his eyes to prevent his seeing.

BLINDNESS, s. loss of the faculty of seeing, arising from the loss or distemperature of the organs of the eye. Figuratively, ignorance or want of knowledge.

BLINDSIDE, s. used figuratively, to express the foibles or weakness of a person, which exposes him to the artifices of others.

BLINDWORM, s. in Natural History, the common English snake, so called from the smallness of its eyes. It is exceedingly harmless, and feeds on beetles, worms, &c. It is vulgarly, but wrongly, believed to be poisonous.

TO BLINK, v. n. [blinken, Dan.] to wink with one eye; to shut one eye; to be blind of, or to see obscurely with one eye.

BLINKARD, s. one who has bad eyes; one who sees but very dimly. Figuratively, one who discerns but very imperfectly.

BLISS, s. [blisse, Sax.] joy arising from the possession of some great and important good; a state of happiness, or of the highest felicity; most commonly applied to the happiness of the heavenly mansions. SYNON. Our happiness glares in the eyes of the world, and exposes us often to envy. Our felicity is only known to ourselves, and gives us continual satisfaction. The idea of bliss extends beyond a life temporal.

BLISSFUL, a. abounding with joy; possessed of the highest degree of happiness.

BLISSFULLY, ad. in such a manner as to show the greatest signs of joy, occasioned by the possession and enjoyment of happiness.

BLISSFULNESS, s. the quality or state of extreme joy, arising from the enjoyment of an important and immense good.

BLISTER, s. [bluyster, Belg.] a swelling of the skin, generally filled with a watery fluid, after burning, scalding, &c. In Medicine, such a swelling raised by artificial means, usually for the purpose of removing internal inflammation.

TO BLISTER, v. n. to rise in blisters; to be covered with blisters.—v. a. to raise blisters by burning; to apply a plaister, in order to raise a blister.

BLITH, or BLYTH, Nottinghamshire, 146 miles from London. Market, Thursday. Pop. 3488.

BLITHE, a. [blithe, Sax.] gay; airy; joyous; sprightly, owing to enjoyment of some good.

BLITHLY, ad. in a joyous, sprightly, or airy manner.

BLITHNESS, s. the state of joyful alacrity and sprightliness.

BLITHESOME, a. gay, airy, sprightly; cheerful.

To BLOAT, v. a. [blowen, Sax.] to swell with wind. Figuratively, to show pride by the looks or gesture. Neuterly, it implies to look as if swelled by wind; generally applied to a person growing lusty, but appearing at the same time of a weak constitution.

BLOATEDNESS, s. the state of a person or thing puffed up with fat, or swelled with wind.

BLOBBER, s. a bubble. Not in common use.

BLOBBERLIP, s. a thick lip.

BLOBLIPPED, BLOBBERLIPPED, a. that has thick lips, applied both to persons and things.

BLOCK, s. [block, Belg. blocc, Fr.] a heavy piece of timber, more thick than long; a piece of marble as it comes out of the quarry; any massy body; a piece of wood formed in the shape of a skull, made use of by barbers to make their perukes upon; a piece of wood used by hatters to form or dress their hats on; the wood on which criminals are beheaded; pieces of wood belonging to a ship, fitted with shives and pins for running rigging to go through. Figuratively, an obstruction or impediment; a person of dull parts, slow apprehensions, remarkable stupidity.

To BLOCK, v. a. [bloquer, Fr.] to stop up any passage; to enclose a town so as to hinder any one from going into or coming out of it. Generally used with the particle up.

BLOCKADE, s. [blockade, Teut.] a fortress or bulwark, erected to stop up or secure a passage. In War, a kind of siege, wherein all passages and avenues are seized and stopped up, so that the besieged can neither receive provisions, reinforcements, nor intelligence, and are reduced to the necessity of surrendering or starving; also the prevention of commerce by the obstruction of the ports.

To BLOCKADE, v. a. to seize upon and block up all the avenues to a place.

BLOCKHEAD, s. a figurative expression; used to imply a person of a dull apprehension, want of parts, and great stupidity.

BLOCKHEADED, a. remarkably stupid, dull, and incapable of improving.

BLOCKHOUSE, s. a fortress built to secure a passage, and hinder any one from going through.

BLOCKISH, a. stupid; dull.

BLOCKISHLY, ad. after the manner of a person remarkable for his stupidity; like a blockhead.

BLOCKISHNESS, s. great dullness of apprehension, or stupidity.

BLOCK-TY'N, s. tin which is pure or unmixed, and yet unwrought.

BLOCKWOOD, s. in Trade, the logwood brought from Honduras, and used in dyeing black.

BLOIS, an ancient and handsome city in the dept. of Loire and Cher, once the abode of the kings of France. The streets are disposed like the seats of an amphitheatre, one above another against the hill. Here are some fine fountains, and a new bridge over the Loire, on which the city stands. It has manufactures of serges and ticking, and a commerce in wines and brandy. It is 109 miles from Paris. Lat. 47. 35. N. Long. 1. 25. E. Its population is about 12,000.

BLOMARY, s. [bloma, Sax.] the first force in an iron work, through which the metal passes after it has been first melted from the mine.

BLOMFELD, FRANCIS, a country rector in Norfolk, the author of the only good county history we possess. He was a man of considerable learning in English antiquarian studies, and of great perseverance. He had printed and published the half of his great work at Fersfield, his parish, when he died, in 1751, aged 47 years. A friend of Blomefield's, C. Parkin, completed the history.

BLOOD, (blud) s. [blod, Sax.] the fluid which circulates, by means of the arteries and veins, through every part of the animal body. Blood, when cold, separates into two parts, the one red and fibrous, which forms into a mass, and is called the crux; the other, which is thin and transparent, retains its fluidity, and is called the serum. The red colour of blood is derived from small particles which it contains, and which form the solid part when it becomes cold. Blood is used figuratively for family-kindred, descent, life. Joined with hot or cold, a cold or warm disposition; a person of a warm and sanguine temper; a rake. Joined with flesh, used in Scripture, to signify human nature in its corrupt state, or the state of unassisted reason. The juice of vegetables.

To BLOOD, v. a. to stain with blood; to let blood.

BLOOD, THOMAS, an Irish adventurer in the times of civil war in the 17th century. He began his career in the service of the Parliament; engaged in desperate schemes at the Restoration, once nearly succeeding in an attempt to hang the Duke of Ormond; was at the defeat on the Pentland Hills; nearly carried off the regalia of England from the Tower; and then became a court favourite, all crimes pardoned and himself pensioned. He died in disgrace in 1680, aged about 50 years.

BLOODGUILTINESS, s. murder; the crime of shedding blood.

BLOOD-HOT, a. that has the same degree of heat as the blood.

BLOODHOUND, s. in Natural History, one of the varieties of the dog species, which has great power and is very fierce, and has, moreover, an extremely acute sense of smell. They are used in hunting, and in the apprehension of runaway slaves and criminals in some countries.

BLOODILY, ad. in a cruel, savage manner; inclined to murder or bloodshed.

BLOODINESS, s. the state or appearance of a thing stained with blood.

BLOODLESS, a. without blood; having no blood. Figuratively, dead; pale.

BLOODSHED, s. murder, occasioned by giving a person a wound by which he bleeds to death; slaughter.

BLOODSHOOTER, s. one who murders another.

BLOODSHOT, BLOODSHOTTEN, a. an epithet applied to a distemper in the eyes, wherein the blood vessels are so distended as to make them appear of a bloody colour.

BLOODSTONE, s. in Natural History, a mineral of a green colour spotted with a blood red, hard, ponderous, and generally found in iron mines. It is used by goldsmiths and gilders to polish their works.

BLOODVESSEL, s. a vessel whose purpose in the animal frame is the conveyance of the blood.

BLOODY, a. stained with blood. Figuratively, cruel; murderous.

BLOODY FLUX, s. See DYSENTERY.

BLOODY-MINDED, a. cruel; inclined to murder or bloodshed.

BLOOM, s. [blum, Teut.] in Botany, the flower on fruit-trees and plants, which precedes their fruits. The fine blue powder on plums, &c. In the iron works, a four-square mass of hammered iron, of about two feet length, and three quarters of a hundred weight, made from part of a sow of cast iron. Figuratively, a flourishing state, which may admit of increase and improvement.

To BLOOM, v. n. to produce blossoms or flowers. Figuratively, to flourish; to be in a flourishing state.

BLOOMFIELD, ROBERT, one of our uneducated poets. He was first employed in agricultural labour, and afterwards as a shoemaker. His sweetest poems relate to country scenes and life. He died in 1823, worn out with anxiety, aged 57 years.

BLOOMY, a. full of blossoms or flowers. Figuratively, being in a state of vigour or perfection; being in a flourishing state.

BLOSSOM, s. [blösme, Sax.] in Botany, the flower which afterwards turns to fruit on trees or plants; more particularly applied to the petals.

To BLOSSOM, v. n. to put forth flowers or blossoms, which afterwards turn to fruit.

To BLOT, v. a. [blottir, to hide, Fr.] to drop ink on a paper or other substance; to efface or dash out any word with ink; used with out. Figuratively, to render a thing imperceptible, or invisible; to efface; to stain, sully, or disgrace; to make black; to darken.

BLOT, s. a spot of ink dropped by accident on paper; a dash with a pen on a word, in order to efface it. Figuratively, a stain, or any thing which causes disgrace, applied to character.

BLOTCH, s. a sore, pustule, or any eruption of the skin, which conveys the idea of defect.

To BLOTE, v. a. [blösen, Belg.] to smoke, or dry with smoke; hence red herrings from Yarmouth are called bloters.

BLOW, (blow) s. [blow, Sax.] a stroke given with the fist or any weapon. Used with at, a single attempt; a sudden event, an unexpected evil. The act of laying or depositing eggs in flesh, applied to flies.

To BLOW, (blō) v. n. preter. blew, part. pass. blown; [blawan, Sax.] to move, applied to the action of wind. Used sometimes impersonally with the particle it. "It blows a happy gale," Dryd. To breathe upon; to sound by means of wind. "Let the prating organ blow," Dryd. To sound a musical instrument by the breath. Used with over, to pass or cease without producing damage. "When the storm is blown over—how blest is the swain!" Gran. Used with up, to mount in the air, applied to the effect of gunpowder. "Some of the enemy's magazines blew up," Tatler, No. 59.—v. a. to drive or move by the force of wind; to increase a fire by means of a pair of bellows; to breathe upon; to sound a wind instrument by the breath. "Their loud uplifted angel-trumpets blew," Milt. Used with out, to extinguish by the wind or breath. Used with upon, to become common; to become contemptible on account of its being universally known, even to the vulgar; to be stale.

To BLOW, (blō) v. n. [blowen, Sax.] in Botany, to bloom, to blossom, to flourish.

BLOWING, (blō-er) s. among miners, a melter of tin.

BLOWING, (blō-ing) s. the act of forming glass into its various shapes, by breathing or blowing with the mouth through the blowing pipe.

BLOW-PIPE, s. in Chemistry, an instrument consisting of a tube 8 or 9 inches long, with a very fine aperture at one end, and bent at right angles near that end, used by goldsmiths, &c., and by chemists to direct the flame of a lamp with increased intensity upon any substance they wish to fuse.

BLOWZE, s. a female of a healthy, ruddy countenance, or one whose hair is generally in disorder; a ruddy, fat-faced wench. Vulgar.

BLOWZY, s. a ruddy-faced, or with the hair disordered.

BLUBBER, s. the fat part of a whale, or other cetaceous fishes, which contains the oil.

To BLUBBER, v. n. [imbabolare, Ital.] to weep in such a manner as to make the cheeks swell.—v. a. to swell the cheeks with weeping.

BLUBBERED, part. a. swelled, big, or large, applied to the lips.

BLÜCHER, LEOPOLD VON, a daring and successful military commander of Prussia, during nearly half a century. He began his life in the Swedish service, and afterwards entered the army of the great Frederick. Retiring from this mode of life he turned farmer, but returned again to his occupation, and gained his fame and honours, at Jena, Lützen, Katzbach, and Leipsic. He visited England with the allied sovereigns in 1814, and fought at Ligny and Waterloo, which last battle he was the means of gaining. He died in 1819, aged 77 years.

BLUDGEON, s. a short stick, having one end loaded with lead, &c., used as an offensive weapon.

BLUE, a. formerly spelt blew; [blew, Sax.] of a blue colour. Used substantively for one of the primitive colours of the rays of light; and among dyers for one of the five simple or mother colours, of which they form the others. Blue is dyed chiefly with wood and indigo, and painted with ultramarine, blue ashes and smalt, and in oil and miniature with Prussian blue, indigo, blue vice, blue verditer, smalt, and litmus. To look blue upon a person, is to behold him with an unfavourable aspect, or forbidding countenance.

To BLUE, v. a. to make of a blue colour, to give linen a bluish cast by dipping them into cold water, wherein soap and indigo have been dissolved.

BLUE-BELL, s. in Botany, a genus of very pretty flowers, several species of which are indigenous to Britain.

BLUE-BIRD, s. in Natural History, a common American song bird, in habits resembling our robin.

BLUE-BOTTLE, s. in Botany, a common English flower, called also the corn-bottle. In Natural History, the common name of the flesh fly.

BLUE-BREAST, s. in Natural History, a common European bird, of very beautiful plumage and lively song, which very rarely is met with in England.

BLUE-JOHN, s. the common name of a beautiful Derbyshire spar.

BLUELY, ad. like a blue colour; bluish.

BLUE MOUNTAINS, a range of mountains in New South Wales, running from Cape Wilson in a N. easterly direction; but very partially explored. Its N. termination is unknown. Some parts of the chain are capped with perpetual snow, but the average height of the rest of it, which is known to the settlers, is about 4000 feet. Coal, and some metals, with granite and the older sedimentary rocks, are found in them.

BLUENESS, s. that quality which denominates a thing blue. BLUE RIDGE, the E. range of the Alleghenies, United States, branching off from the main range in N. Carolina, crossing the state of Virginia, and extending to the highlands on the Hudson, in New York. The Otter in this range is nearly 4000 feet high.

BLUFF, a. applied to the looks, big, swelling, surly.

BLUFF-HEAD, s. among sailors, a ship is said to be bluff-headed that has an upright stern.

BLUSH, a. somewhat blue.

BLUSHINESS, s. the quality of being somewhat blue.

BLUMENBACH, JOHANN FRIEDRICH, a distinguished Professor of Physiology at Göttingen. His Institutiones Physiologiae gained him great celebrity, as it was the first book on the subject capable of being used as a text-book. His other works were very numerous, and treated of particular subjects, as well as the science in general. He died in 1840, aged 88 years.

To BLUNDER, v. n. [blunderen, Belg.] to be guilty of a gross mistake, including the secondary idea of contempt.—v. a. to go in a confused manner in quest or search; to mix ignorantly and by gross mistake.

BLUNDER, s. a gross mistake, applied both to actions and words, and carrying with it the idea of gross and ridiculous stupidity.

BLUNDERBUSS, s. a kind of gun whose barrel is generally made of brass, and trumpet-mouthed, which may be charged with several bullets. Figuratively, a person guilty of gross and ridiculous mistakes, either in actions or words.

BLUNDERER, s. one who cannot distinguish one thing from another; one who is guilty of gross and ridiculous mistakes, either in action or language.

BLUNT, a. applied to the point or edge of a weapon, that will not pierce or cut, on account of its thickness, opposed to sharp; deficient in politeness of behaviour; void of ceremony or politeness; not easy to be penetrated.

To BLUNT, v. a. to spoil the sharpness of the edge or point of a weapon, so as to hinder it from piercing. Figuratively, to lessen the violence of any passion.

BLUNTLY, ad. applied to edge-tools, so as not to be able to pierce or cut. Applied to behaviour, without ceremony, politeness, or elegance.

BLUNTNESS, s. want of edge, point, or sharpness, applied to weapons. Plainness, abruptness, want of ceremony or politeness, applied to manners.

BLUK, s. [borra, Span.] a blot or stain. Figuratively, a defect.

To BLUR, v. a. to efface, erase, or render a thing imperceptible. Figuratively, to stain, applied to credit, behaviour, or reputation.

To BLURT, v. a. to speak, discover, or declare, without consideration, or notwithstanding caution to the contrary. Used with the particle out.

To BLUSH, v. n. [blozen, Belg.] to redder or grow red in the face at being charged with any thing that excites shame, or seeing any thing immodest. Figuratively, to bear the colour of a blush. Used with at before the cause.

BLUSH, s. a redness of the cheeks occasioned by the consciousness of some defect, or the sight of some unchaste object. Figuratively, any red colour. With the word first, a sudden appearance, or at first sight.

To BLUSTER, v. n. [blast, Sax.] to roar, applied to the noise of the wind in a storm. Figuratively, to make a noise, bully, hector, swagger, or be tumultuous through a vain persuasion or conceit of a person's importance.

BLUSTER, s. the roaring noise occasioned by the violence of the wind. Figuratively, the height or noisy turbulence of anger or vain conceit.

BLUSTERER, s. a person who makes a great noise from a conceited opinion of his own importance; a bully.

BLUSTROUS, a. applied to the wind, making a great noise from its violence. Applied to persons making a noise, and assuming the airs of those who are of some importance.

BO, interj. an onomatopoeic word, used to excite terror.

BOA, s. a genus of serpents, of which the boa constrictor is the most enormous. It is a native of America, and lays in ambush on the tops of trees, from which it darts down on any animal which passes underneath, and first crushes it to death by wrapping itself round it, and then swallows it at its leisure.

BOADICEA, the name of one of the queens of the Iceni, a tribe of ancient Britons, inhabiting Norfolk, Suffolk, and parts of the adjacent counties, who, with her two daughters, was left under the guardianship of the Roman emperor, who was also their co-heir. He seized the whole, and treated his wards with extremest insult, which roused the natives to arms. After successes marked by terrible revenge inflicted on the Romans, they were defeated near London, by Suetonius Paulinus. Boadicea destroyed herself, in 61 A. D.

BOAR, s. formerly spelt bore; [bar, Sax.] the male hog.

BOAR-SPEAR, s. a spear used in hunting wild boars.

BOARD, s. [bræd, Sax.] a piece of timber sawn thin for the use of building; when thick it is called a plank; a table; a table round which a council or committee sits: hence the council board; the board of works: the deck or floor of a ship. Figuratively, entertainment, diet, or food. Used with on, within the ship. Joined to without, as without board, out of the ship; with over, over the side of the ship, or out of the ship into the sea. Slept by the board, is to sleep by the sides of a ship. To make a board, is to turn the ship to the windward. To make a good board, is used of a ship when advanced much to the windward at one tack.

TO BOARD, v. a. to enter a ship by force; to attack or make the first attempt; from the French aborder quelqu'un; to cover with boards. To board it up to the wind, is to turn a ship to the windward.

TO BOARD, v. n. [burrd, Brit.] to live and diet at a house.—v. a. to place a person as a boarder at a house.

BO'ARD-WAGES, s. money allowed servants to find themselves in victuals.

BO'ARDER, s. one who diets or eats at another's table, at a settled rate; a scholar that lives in the master's house, and eats at his table.

BO'ARDING-SCHOOL, s. a school where the scholars live with, and are boarded by, the master.

BO'ARISH, a. [boar and ise, Sax.] of the nature of, or like a boar. Figuratively, fierce, cruel, savage, furious, and void of every principle of humanity.

BO'ARISHNESS, s. the furious savage quality of a boar. Figuratively, want of delicacy, kindness, pity, and humanity.

TO BOAST, v. a. [boast, Brit.] to display one's abilities in a proud, assuming, and vain manner; to magnify, exalt, or be proud of.—v. n. to brag; to exalt oneself.

BOAST, s. the thing a person is proud of; the cause of a person's pride; a vain and conceited display.

BO'ASTER, s. one who makes a pompous display of his advantages, whether they consist in power, wealth, learning, virtue, or religion.

BO'ASTFUL, a. inclined or subject to brag; ostentatious.

BO'ASTFULLY, ad. in such a manner as to brag of, or display with vain conceit and pompous expressions.

BOAT, s. [bat, Sax.] a small open vessel, commonly wrought or moved by oars, intended chiefly for rivers and lakes. Life-boat, a vessel built so as to be incapable of sinking or turning over, or being stove by the sea, and used to rescue crews of shipwrecked vessels.

BOATMAN, BO'ATSMAN, s. he that manages or works a boat.

BO'ATSWAIN, s. [boatswain, Sax.] an officer on board a ship, who has charge of all her rigging, takes care of the long boat and her furniture, steering her by himself; calls out the several gangs and their companies to their watches, and other offices; and punishes all offenders that are sentenced by the captain or a court-martial.

TO BOB, v. a. to catch eels with a line left to trail along the bottom.

TO BOB, v. n. applied to any body, which being hung or suspended by a string, plays backwards and forwards; to play or swing against a thing; to give a person a hunch or push with the elbow, by way of signal, or to make him take notice of any particular.

BOB, s. a jewel or other ornament which hangs loose from the ear; the word or sentence repeated at the end of every verse or stanza of a song; a blow, hunch, or push with the elbow. Also a short peck.

BOBAC, s. in Natural History, a species of marmot.

BOBBIN, s. [bobine, Fr.] a small piece of wood, turned in the form of a cylinder, with a little border jutting out at each end, and bored through its length to screw a small iron spindle, and to wind thread, worsted, silk, &c. upon; the small reed put in the hollow of a shuttle, round which the thread or silk is wound to make the woof; a small neat, turned stick, round which the thread is wound to make bone-lace with; likewise a round white tape, used by the ladies as a running string for their aprons, caps, &c.

BOBCHERRY, s. a game among children, wherein a cherry is suspended by a string, which they strive to bite, or get into their mouths.

BOBTAIL, s. a dog which has his tail cut off entirely, or very short; hence the adjective Bobtailed.

BOCASINE, s. a sort of linen cloth.

BOCCA'CCIO, GIOVANNI, one of the most celebrated Italian writers. He lived in the 14th century, and wrote the first poetical romance of chivalry which appeared in Italy. The most widely known of his writings is the Decamerone, a collection of tales, humorous and clever in their style, but full of gross licentiousness. He lived to lament his profligacy, and to condemn the character of his works. Petrarca was his intimate friend, and they are held amongst the first scholars of Italy at the revival of letters there, to which they greatly contributed. Boccaccio died in 1375, aged 62 years.

BOCHA'RT, SAMUEL, a French Protestant minister of great learning in the 17th century. He was acquainted with the Oriental languages, and could write in Greek as well as Latin with great elegance. He studied at the most celebrated universities of Europe, and so became acquainted with the most famous scholars of his day. At Caen he undertook the ministry to a congregation of Protestants. He visited Christina of Sweden, and then returned to Caen. His great works were on the Geography and Natural History of the Bible; but he wrote smaller treatises respecting other subjects. He died in 1661, aged 62 years.

BO'CKELET, BO'CKERET, s. in Natural History, a kind of long-winged hawk.

BOCKING, a very large village in Essex, adjoining to Braintree, from which it is separated only by a small stream. It is 42 miles N. E. of London. Pop. 3128.

BO'C-LAND, s. in the Saxon time was what we call freehold land, held by persons of rank by charter or deed in writing, by which name it was distinguished from Folk-land, or copy-hold land, held by the common people without writing.

TO BODE, v. a. [bodian, Sax.] to convey the knowledge of some future event, applied to an omen; to portend, used both in a good and bad sense.

BODEMENT, s. a sign or signs foreshowing some future event; both of good and bad events.

BODDICE, s. stays, or a kind of waistcoat laced before, made of leather.

BODILESS, a. [body and lease, Sax.] that has no body; incorporeal; immaterial.

BODILY, a. that consists of, or belongs to, matter; that belongs to the body; real, opposed to chimerical.

BODILY, ad. in such a manner as to be united to the body, or matter; corporally.

BO'DKIN, s. [bodkin, Brit.] an instrument with a small blade and sharp point, to make holes with; an instrument formed like a needle with a long eye, used by females to run a ribbon or string in an apron or other parts of their dress, and formerly used in confining and tying up their hair.

BO'DLEY, SIR THOMAS, the son of one of the Protestant families who retired to Geneva on the accession of Mary to the English throne, studied on his return at Oxford, and afterwards was engaged in the service of Queen Elizabeth. After he had played a distinguished part in the politics of the times, he retired from these stirring engagements, and devoted himself to the construction of the noble library at Oxford, which still goes by his name. James I. conferred knighthood on him, and he died in 1612, aged 68 years.

BO'DMIN, Cornwall. It is seated in a bottom between two high hills, which renders the air very unwholesome. It chiefly consists of one street, and the many decayed houses show it has been a place of greater note; it formerly had the privilege of the coinage of tin. It is 334 miles from London. Market, Saturday. Pop. 4643.

BO'DY, s. [body, Sax.] in Physics, a solid, extended, palpable substance, of itself merely passive, and indifferent either to motion or rest, but capable of any sort of motion, or any kind of form; composed of particles infinitely hard, so as never to wear or break into pieces. In Anatomy, that part of an animal composed of bones, muscles, nerves, &c. The real existence of a thing, or its completion, in opposition to an image, shadow, representation, or type; a collection of persons united by some common tie, or charter; substance; the main or chief part of a thing; a perfect system, or that which contains all the branches of a science; as, "a body of divinity;" "a body of laws." Applied to dress, that part which covers the body; the materials which compose a stuff or other manufacture. Applied to liquors, strength.

To BO'DY, v. a. to produce; to bring into being.
BO'DY-CLOTHES, s. the clothes which cover a horse's body, when dined, &c.

BOEOTIA, the name of one of the States of ancient Greece. It lay between the Opuntian and Corinthian Gulfs, and was bounded by Attica and Megaris on one side, and Phocis and the Opuntian Locrians on the other. Its rivers were the Cephissus and the Asopus, and the lake Copais lay in the centre of it. Mount Helicon was in its S. part. It was a fertile country, and its manufactures of linen and arms were much celebrated. The inhabitants seem to have been contented with undistinguished luxury, and never aspired to any place or name in Greece save under Epaminondas, for a few years. Oligarchy was the form of government which chiefly was adopted. Thebes, Orchomenus, Coroneia, Plateae, &c. &c., were its chief towns.

BOERHAAVE, HERMANN, a famous physician of the 17th and 18th centuries. He studied at Leyden, and intended to undertake the ministry; yet eventually he commenced the practice of physic, and became a public professor at Leyden. He now rose steadily in fame, and his published works crowned it. He was at once professor of theoretical and practical medicine, botany, and chemistry, and rector of the university. He was distinguished for his eloquence as well as for his learning, and maintained an intercourse with learned men all over the world. He died in 1738, aged 70 years. His works are very numerous, but are little read now.

BOETHIUS, ANNIUS MANLIUS T. S., a Roman writer and philosopher, whose name concludes the list of Latin authors. He studied at Athens, and soon after his return was raised to the consulate. But though engaged constantly in public affairs, he never ceased to study and to teach. The works of Aristotle and Plato he translated and explained, and wrote many other commentaries and original works. He displeased Theodoric by a work against the Arians, and was banished from Rome and imprisoned. Here he wrote his great work On the Consolation of Philosophy. He was beheaded in 526, aged 71 years.

BOETIUS, HECTOR, an eminent Scottish author and scholar of the 16th century. He studied at Paris, and had the friendship of Erasmus; on his return to Scotland he became Principal of the university of Aberdeen, which was then being remodelled. He wrote, beside the History of Scotland, the Lives of the Bishops of Aberdeen. He died in 1536, aged about 70 years.

BOG, s. [Irish,] a moist spot of earth, which sinks and gives way to the weight of the body, formed of grass or plants putrefied by some spring; a marsh or morass.

To BOGGLE, v. n. [bogil, Belg.] to start, run, or fly back at the sight of a terrifying object; to dissemble; to be guilty of prevarication; or to play fast and loose; used with the particle with. Used with the particle at, to hesitate; to doubt.

BOGGLER, s. a person full of doubts; a fearful or timorous person.

BOGGY, a. abounding in bogs; partaking of the nature or quality of a bog.

BOGLIPORE, a modern town of Hindustan, seated on the Ganges, the capital of a district of the same name, in the province of Bahar. There is a good public school here, and a Mohammedan college. The population is about 30,000. Lat. 25. 13. N. Long. 86. 58. E.

BOGMOSS, s. in Botany, a sort of moss generally found in bogs, whose botanical generic name is sphagnum.

BOGOTA, the capital of New Grenada, in S. America. It is situated near the mountains called Guadalupe and Montserrat, and not far from the river Bogota. It is handsomely built, and from its altitude enjoys a pleasant and salubrious climate. Like all other towns in that region, it is frequently visited by earthquakes. It has a fine cathedral, three colleges, an hospital, the necessary buildings for the seat of government, and a fine public walk at one entrance. Its population is about 40,000. Lat. 4. 30. N. Long. 74. 10. W.

BOG-TROTTER, s. one who lives in a boggy country.
BOHEA, s. [Chin.] one of the coarsest teas which comes from China, and is the second gathering. After it is gathered, it is dried in pans over a fire, and rolled up in the form we have it, by a person employed for that purpose.

BOHEMIA, a kingdom of Europe, now forming part of the Austrian empire. It is bounded on all sides by mountain ranges, and on the parts opposite to Austria adjoins Bavaria, Saxony, and Prussia. The mountains attain in many cases to a great height, some being near 5000 feet high; and they abound in metals, minerals, and building stone. Its rivers are the Elbe, and the Moldau which flows into it. The country is fertile, yielding all kinds of corn, flax, hops, nuts, &c. &c. It does not rear much stock. The population is about 4,000,000, most of whom are Romanists. The people are much occupied in manufactures. Its glass has always been famous. Prague, Toplitz, Rosenberg, and Carlsbad, are its chief towns.

BOHEMIAN BRETHREN, the ancient Protestants of Bohemia, including the Hussites, Taborites, &c.

BOHEMOND, one of the military leaders of the first crusade, was the son of the famous Norman conqueror of Italy, Robert Guiscard; and was himself Prince of Tarentum. He distinguished himself both by bravery and craftiness during the crusade, at Dorylaeum, and Antioch, which place was ceded to him as a principality. He was taken prisoner once, but regained his freedom, and had his title acknowledged by the emperor of Constantinople. He died in 1111.

BOIARDO, MATTEO MARIA, one of the classical Italian poets of the 15th century. He belonged to the nobility of Italy, and was lord of Scandiano. He was also at different times governor of Reggio and Modena. His great work is his Orlando Innamorato, but he wrote several other works, both sonnets and poems, and a history of the German empire during the earlier part of the middle ages. He died in 1494, aged 60 years.

To BOIL, v. n. [bouillir, Fr.] to be violently agitated with heat; to have its particles set into a violent motion by fire; and so to be able to scald any thing immersed into it, applied to water. Figuratively, to be hot; to move with a violent motion, like that of boiling water; to be placed in boiling water. To boil over, applied to water or other fluids, to have its contents so rarefied by heat, as to take up a larger dimension than before, and to run over the sides of a vessel.—v. a. to heat, by putting into boiling water; to seethe; to dress victuals by boiling.

BOIL, s. a species of abscess.

BOILEAU, NICHOLAS DESPREAUX, a French poet of the 17th century. He wrote satires, complimentary verses to royalty, &c. &c., some of which entitle him to be regarded as a poet; but all of which show him to be a man of purest morals, though living and writing in an age in which licence was esteemed modesty. He died in 1711, aged 74 years.

BOILER, s. one who boils any thing; a domestic utensil, commonly made of metal, used in cookery; that part of a steam-engine in which water is subjected to the action of fire, for the generation of steam.

BOILING, part of preceding v. the state of fluids subjected to the influence of heat enough to cause ebullition. Boiling point, that degree of the thermometer at which ebullition commences. See EBULLITION.

BOIOBI, s. in Natural History, a South American serpent, which is very poisonous, but does not bite unless when attacked.

BOIS-LE-DUC, a very strong city in N. Brabant, Holland. It is seated among morasses, between the rivers Dommel and Aa, 45 miles from Antwerp, and 42 miles from Amsterdam. It has a fine town hall, and some handsome churches, and is built in the usual style of Dutch towns, with canals in the streets. It has some manufactures, and by means of a canal to Maestricht, some trade. Its population is about 20,000.

BOISTEROUS, a. violent, furious, vehement, stormy, roaring, violent to wind. Figuratively, furious, warm, hot, outrageous, violent, applied to persons.

BOISTEROUSLY, ad. in a violent manner; furiously.

BOLSTEROUSNESS, s. the state or quality of being furious, tumultuous, turbulent, and stormy.

BOKHARA, or BUCHARIA, or UBESKISTAN, a country of Asia lying between Persia, Afghanistan, Tibet, Tatar, and the Caspian Sea. It is frequently spoken of as if divided into two parts, Great and Little Buchar. Some parts of the country are mountainous, but the greater part is a fine open plain, intersected by the rivers Amou or Oxus, Kurseshe, and Kohik or Sogd. In the vicinity of these streams agriculture is practised with some care; and corn, and grain of other kinds, with fruits of all kinds, are plentiful, as are cotton and other vegetable substances. Its pastures feed abundance of goats and sheep; and silk is plentifully produced. Its mineral wealth is not great, and it is not much troubled with wild beasts. It is inhabited by many different tribes, which appears to be the result of the many changes in the sovereign power in the country. There are some relics of the old Bactrians, Arabs, Turks, Tatars, and most numerous Uzbeks; in all about 3,000,000. The government is vested in a khan, advised by the learned and religious professions, as a standing council of state. The chief cities are Bokhara, Samar-cand, Balkh, Kurseshe. Bokhara, the capital, stands on the river Kohik, and is feebly fortified. It has a considerable trade, which arises chiefly from its position. It has a great many mosques and colleges, being a principal seat of Mohammedan learning. Its population is about 100,000. Lat. 39. 48. N. Long. 64. 26. E.

BOLD, a. [bold, Sax.] not hindered from an undertaking, either by the threats of others, or by the difficulties attending it; daring, brave, courageous, fearless. Impudent, rude, applied to the behaviour. Licentious, or too free, applied to words. Level, smooth, even, applied by sailors to situation. To make bold, to take the liberty or freedom.

To BOLDEN, v. a. to grow bold, to make bold; to dispel a person's fears or doubts.

BOLDFACED, a. impudent; not showing any signs of shame by the countenance.

BOLDLY, ad. confidently; with assurance; impudently.

BOLDNESS, s. courage, intrepidity, undauntedness; the power to speak or do what we intend before others without fear or disorder. In a bad sense, a resolution to do or speak any thing before others, though conscious of its being wrong or indecent.

BOLE, s. [bolus, Lat.] a particular sort of earth used by painters, moderately coherent, ponderous, soft, and in some degree ductile while moist, easily diffused in water, and freely subsiding from it. There are several sorts of boles, as the white, yellow, red, brown, and grey; which were prescribed in various distempers, but are now quite disused. Also the body or trunk of a tree. Likewise a measure of corn, containing six bushels.

BOLETUS, s. in Botany, a kind of fungus, distinguished from the mushroom class, by having pores underneath, instead of gills. Some species yield a particular kind of acid; many are useful as styptics; and one is converted into the tinder called amadou.

BOLLEYN, ANNE, the second wife of Henry VIII., and mother to Queen Elizabeth. She was in the train of Queen Katharine, and having attracted the regard of the king, which led to the controversy respecting his existing marriage, and so brought about the separation of England from the Papedom, she was eventually married to him. Henry, after a while, disappointed in his hopes of a son, and having been captivated by one of Anne's maids of honour, got up a charge of adultery and incest against her, and had her beheaded, in 1536, aged 29 years. She always favoured the Reformation, and has left a name that would have been remembered, had it not held so conspicuous a place in one of the most momentous movements recorded in English history.

BOLINGBROKE, or BULLINGBROKE, Lincolnshire. It is seated at the spring-head of a river, which falls into the Witham on a low ground, and is a very ancient town, though now but a mean place. King Henry IV. was born here. It is 128 miles from London. Market, Tuesday, Pop. 919.

BOLINGBROKE, HENRY ST. JOHN, VISCOUNT, an English statesman and author of the 18th century. He played a prominent part in the intrigues of Queen Anne's reign, and on the accession of George I., left England and joined the party and court of the Pretender. He was attainted, for non-appearance on his impeachment for high-treason; but at length, through the influence of his wife, and his money, he got his sentence reversed, except so far as the exclusion from the House of Lords. In the pamphleteering war during Walpole's reign, he actively engaged, and after an unsettled life, owing to his political character, he died in 1751, aged 73 years. His works are voluminous, and are excellent as a model of style; but as furnishing facts for the history of his times, or as containing any feasible scheme of philosophy, in his attack on Christianity, they are utterly worthless.

BOLIVAR, SIMON, the celebrated liberator of the Spanish dominions on the W. side of S. America. He was by birth one of the nobles of Venezuela, and received his education at Madrid. The political principles which the Independence of the United States and the French Revolution first proclaimed to the world, found their way into countries guarded as jealously and as diligently oppressed as these Spanish colonies were. The upshot was a revolutionary war involving the whole country in its horrors, and which lasted from 1810 to 1825, during which Bolivar, as one of the most skillful and determined leaders of the patriot party, was foremost in all dangers, and was now enjoying all the raptures of triumph, and now fleeing to other countries as an exile. Their liberation being effected, Bolivar drew up a code, and was put at the head of one of the states. But he was harassed with revolts and commotions till he died, in 1831, aged 48 years.

BOLIVIA, the name assumed by one of the republics formed out of the states liberated by Bolivar from the Spanish yoke. It extends from the Pacific to the river Paraguay, and from the river Madera in the N. to the parallel of 25° S.; being bounded by Peru, Brazil, Paraguay, La Plata, and Chili. The Andes run through it from N. to S., one of the highest peaks of which is about 22,000 feet high, and which contain the treasures of Potosi and Porco. Its rivers are the Mamora, the Madera, the Paraguay, &c. Lake Titicaca forms one of its natural features. The vegetation of the country and its wild beasts are those which are common to the continent. The population is about 1,000,000, the greater number of which are natives of the soil. Chuquisaca, La Plata, Potosi, La Paz, Cobiya, are its principal places. Its trade is not considerable, but it has good manufactures of various kinds.

BOLL, s. in Botany, a round stalk or stem; as a boll of flax. To BOLL, v. n. to rise in a stalk; "The flax was bolled," Ezod. ix. 31.

BOLOGNA, an ancient, large, rich, and very handsome town of the Papal States, Italy, an archbishop's see, and a university. It contains about 70,000 inhabitants, and has very many churches. It is a place of great trade, which is in some measure owing to a canal that runs from this city into the river Po. The Reno, which runs near Bologna, turns the mills, which are employed in the silk works; besides, they deal in wax, soap, hams, sausages, and even lap-dogs, which are greatly esteemed. The university is very celebrated, and there are libraries, academies, and other fine public institutions. It is seated at the foot of the Modena, 180 miles from Rome. Lat. 44. 30. N. Long. 14. 30. E.

BOLSOVER, Derbyshire, seated on an eminence, and overlooked by an old castle. It is an agricultural place, and was once a market town. Pop. 1512.

BOLSTER, s. [bolstre, Sax.] a long ticking sack filled with feathers, flocks, &c., made use of to support or raise a person's head in bed. Applied to dress, a pad made use of to hide some deformity. In Surgery, a compress, or piece of linen doubled, laid or bound upon a wound.

To BOLSTER, v. a. to support, or raise a person's head with a bolster. In Surgery, to force or keep the lips of a wound close by means of a compress. Figuratively, to support or maintain.

BOLT, s. [bout, Belg.] a dart shot from a cross-bow; lightning; a thunderbolt; a short piece of iron made to fasten doors; an iron pin made to secure the shutters of windows, and to fasten the planks of ships; a spot; obstacle, impediment. Bolt upright means upright as an arrow.

To BOLT, v. a. to fasten with a bolt; to fling out. Figuratively, to fasten. [From blutir, Fr.] to separate the fine from the coarse parts of a thing with a sieve; to separate truth from falsehood by rigorous examination.—v. n. to spring out with suddenness; to start out with the quickness of an arrow; to come in a hurry, or without due consideration. Used with the word out.

BOLTER, s. a sieve to separate finer from coarser parts, particularly applied to that made use of to separate flour from bran.

BOLTHEAD, s. in Chemistry, a long straight-necked glass vessel used in distillations. See MATRASS.

BOLTING-HOUSE, s. a place where meal is sifted, or separated from the bran.

BOLTON, or BOLTON-LE-MOOR, Lancashire, noted for its manufacture of fustians and cotton goods of all kinds. Here are navigable canals, which conduct from this town to Manchester and Wigan. It lies in the midst of the coal district, which contributes not a little to its prosperity; its foundries and the machinery in its bleaching works and manufactories requiring so much fuel. It has some excellent public institutions and charities. It is 199 miles from London. Market, Monday. Pop. 73,905.

BOLT-ROPE, s. the rope on which the sail of a ship is fastened.

BOLUS, s. [Lat.] in Pharmacy, a medicine made into a soft mass, about the size of a nutmeg, to be taken at once.

BOMB, s. [bombus, Lat.] formerly a loud noise. A hollow iron ball, filled with gunpowder, and furnished with a vent for a fusée, or wooden tube filled with combustible matter, which being set on fire, burns slowly till it reaches the gunpowder, which goes off at once, bursting the shell to pieces with incredible violence. They are discharged from a mortar, and used in besieging towns. The largest ever used were 24 inches in diameter. They are now called shells.

To BOMB, v. a. to attack with, or shoot bombs against.

To BOMBARD, v. a. to fling bombs into a town; to attack with bombs.

BOMBARDIER, s. the engineer who fires or directs the throwing of bombs out of the mortars.

BOMBARDMENT, s. an attack made upon a city, &c. by throwing bombs into it.

BOMBAST, s. in Literature, high, pompous, swelling expressions, above the subject to which they are applied.

BOMBAST, a. pompous; of big sound.

BOMBAY, an important town of British India, standing on an island of the same name, on the W. coast of Hindustan. The fortifications are very strong towards the sea, but the town is slightly built, excepting in the quarter occupied by Europeans. Its position, and its admirable harbour, have made it a place of great value, and of considerable trade. Ship-building in particular is carried on very extensively here. Its population is about 250,000, the greater number of which are natives. On the same island are some other forts and villages. Bombay gives name to one of the Presidencies, into which the British empire in India is divided. It extends along the coast, from the Malabar coast to the Gulf of Cambay, including a population of six millions and a half. Lat. 18.56. N. Long. 72.57. E.

BOMBAZINE, [bombasin, Fr. from bombycinus, Lat.] a slight manufacture of silk and worsted, which is now made only in black, for mourning.

BOMB-CHEST, s. a chest filled with gunpowder and bombs, and placed under ground in order to blow it up, together with those that are upon it.

BOMB-KETCH, BOMB-VESSEL, s. a small vessel, strongly built, and strengthened with large beams, to bear the shock of a mortar at sea, when bombs are to be thrown from it into a town.

BONA, a town and harbour on the N. coast of Africa, above 200 miles from Algiers, but within the borders of the regency of that name. It occupies the site of the ancient Hippo Regius. Its harbour is now silted, and the town has few inhabitants beside the French garrison.

BONA FIDE, s. [Lat.] among lawyers, signifies that such a thing was really done without fraud or deceit.

BONASSUS, s. [Lat.] in Natural History, a name of the buffalo, or bison.

BONCHRETIEN, s. [Fr.] a pear, so called perhaps from the name of some gardener.

BOND, s. [bond, Sax.] any thing which confines a person's arms so that he has not the free use of them; cords or chains; that which holds the parts of a thing together; union, joining, or connexion. Figuratively, captivity, imprisonment, loss of liberty; obligation. A tie, applied to alliance. In Law, a deed by which a person obliges himself to perform certain acts, under a penalty specified therein.

BOND, a. [gebonden, Sax.] not free; in a state of slavery.

BONDAGE, s. slavery; a state wherein a person is deprived of liberty.

BONDMAID, s. a woman or female slave.

BONDMAN, s. a man slave.

BONDSERVANT, s. a person who is under bond to serve his master, and is not at liberty to quit him.

BONDSERVICE, s. the condition of a slave; slavery.

BONDSOLVE, s. a person in inextricable slavery.

BONDSMAN, s. a slave; a person who has given his bond as a security for another.

BONDSWOMAN, s. a woman slave; or one who has given her bond for security.

BONE, s. [bon, Sax.] in Anatomy, a white, hard, brittle, insensible substance, forming the support and strength of the body; defending some of the more essential parts, as the brain; giving shape to the whole frame, and assisting it in its motion. It is composed of either the carbonate or the phosphate of lime, and is compacted with membranous substance. The hollow interior is usually filled up with marrow. Bones are used simply ground or crushed, or with the addition of an acid, as a manure. To make no bones, is to make no scruple, alluding to the readiness with which a dog devours a bone. To give a person a bone to pick, a low phrase for laying an obstacle in a person's way, or suggesting something which may perplex him. A bone of contention, a cause of strife.

To BONE, v. a. to take the bones out of the flesh.

BONELACE, s. a cheap sort of flaxen lace, wove by bobbins made out of bones.

BONELESS, a. that has no bones. Applied to the gums, without teeth.

BONFIRE, s. [bon, Fr. and fire] a public fire, made by the populace on rejoicing days.

BONGRACE, s. [bonne grace, Fr.] a forehead-cloth, generally worn by infants.

BONIFACE, the name assumed by nine popes of Rome, on their exaltation to the chair of St. Peter. The 8th of the name, who reigned at the close of the 13th century, was a determined combatant for the supremacy of his see, and was engaged in a long quarrel with Philip the Fair of France in maintaining it.

BONIFACE, ST., an English monk, who, in the 8th century, devoted himself to preaching to the barbarous tribes that occupied Germany. He fell a martyr to his zeal, for he was killed whilst confirming some of his disciples in Holland or Frisia, in 755, aged 77 years.

BONITO, s. a large and very beautiful sea-fish, of the tunny kind, very common in the Indian seas.

BONN, a city of Cologne, situated on the W. side of the Rhine, belonging to Prussia. The streets are wide and beautiful, and the fortifications are in good repair. It is most famous for its university, in which both Protestants and Romanists unite. It has a population of about 15,000. Lat. 50.44. N. Long. 9.44. E. It is 14 miles S. S. E. of Cologne.

BONNER, EDMUND, the bishop whose deeds in the reign of Mary have gained him a name as a cruel religious persecutor. He was in the reign of Henry VIII. attached to the Reformers, but afterwards he returned to his first faith, and was deprived of his bishopric and imprisoned for it. After his happily brief power during Mary's reign, he was again deprived and imprisoned by Elizabeth; and he died in prison in 1569, aged about 75 years.

BONNET, s. [Fr.] a covering for the head; a cap, or outward covering, made of silk, wove instead of a hat by the ladies. In Fortification, a small work, or little ravelin, without a ditch, having a parapet of earth from 3 to 12 feet high, and from 30 to 36 feet thick. Bonnet à pître, or a priest's cap, an out-work with three salient angles, and two inwards. Bonnets, among sailors, are small sails set on the courses, or fastened to the bottom of the mizzen, main-sail, or fore-sail of a ship, when they are too narrow to clothe the mast, or in order to make more way in light winds or calm weather.

BONNILY, ad. in a gay manner; handsomely.

BONNINESS, s. the quality of appearing gay, handsome, or plump.

BONNNY, s. in Mineralogy, a name given by miners to a bed of ore which is unconnected with any vein.

BONNNY, a. [bon, Fr.] gay, cheerful, handsome, young.

BO'NNYCASTLE, JOHN, the writer of many school books on Mathematics, which are yet in use, was Mathematical Professor at the military college, Woolwich, and died in 1821.

BO'NNY-CLABBER, s. an Irish word for sour buttermilk.

BONONIAN STONE, a grey, soft, glossy, fibrous, sulphurous stone, about the bigness of a large walnut, found in the neighbourhood of Bologna, containing a kind of spar, and making when duly prepared a species of phosphorus.

BONUM-MAGNUM, s. [Lat.] in Gardening, a species of plum.

BO'NY, a. having the properties or consisting of bone; abounding in bones.

BO'NZES, s. priests of the religion of Boodh in Japan; whose systems greatly resemble those of the priests of Romanism.

BOO'BY, s. in Natural History, the name of a water-fowl, common in the West Indies, which does not seem capable of any exertion to preserve its life, suffering itself to be knocked down, even after others near it have been served so. A dull, heavy, stupid, or contemptible fellow.

BOOK, s. [booc, Sax.] a written or printed composition of a length sufficient to make a volume; a collection of papers sewed or bound, intended to be written on; the division of an author's subject. The most ancient materials for books appears to have been the leaves of the palm-tree, and the papyrus, then leather, and afterwards parchment. They anciently consisted of rolls, the several sheets being joined together at the ends. Used with the particle in, and personal pronouns his or my, to be much esteemed or valued by a person. "I was so much in his books, that," &c., Addison. Without book, applied to the public delivery of a preacher, by the mere strength of memory.

To BOOK, v. a. to enter or write any thing in a book.

BOOKBINDER, s. one who sews the sheets of a book together, and fixes them to the boards, which he covers with leather, cloth, &c.

BOOKFUL, a. full of opinions gleaned from books, without having either digested what he has read, or been able to produce any thing of his own.

BOOKISH, a. very fond of books, study, or reading; pedantic. Sometimes used in a bad sense, and as a term of contempt.

BOOKISHNESS, s. a great fondness for books; too intense an application to study. Used sometimes as a reproach, or term of contempt.

BOOK-KEEPER, s. a clerk employed in a counting-house to register the transactions daily carried on, and able to methodize them so, that the true state of affairs may at any time be known.

BOOK-KEEPING, s. the art of keeping accounts, or registering mercantile transactions. Book-keeping is said to be by single entry, when each transaction of business is posted once in the ledger; and by double entry, when each transaction is posted twice, so as to appear on both sides of the balance sheet, thus presenting at any moment a complete statement of the condition of the parties' affairs. This last method of book-keeping is also called the Italian method.

BOOK-LEARNED, a. conversant in books, but not in men; applied also to one that reads much, but is a person of no parts or invention.

BOOK-LEARNING, s. improvement or learning to be acquired from books, opposed to that which may be obtained by the exercise of a man's own faculties.

BOOKSELLER, s. he whose profession it is to sell books.

BOOKWORM, s. in Natural History, a mite or worm which preys upon books. Figuratively, a person immoderately fond of reading; one who applies himself too intensely to study.

BOOM, s. [beam, Sax.] among mariners, a long pole used to spread out the clue of a sail; a pole, with bushes, or baskets, set as a mark to show the sailors how to steer in a channel, when the country is overflowed; a cable or cables stretched across the mouth of a river or harbour, to prevent an enemy's entering.

BOON, s. [bene, Sax.] a gift, or present, obtained by having requested or sued for it.

BOON, a. [bon, Fr.] merry; gay. Generally used with the word companion.

BOOR, s. [beer, Belg.] a rude, unpolished countryman; a clown.

BOORISH, a. without any breeding or politeness; rude, clownish.

BOORISHLY, ad. in an unpolite, rude, and clownish manner. BOORISHNESS, s. clownishness, rudeness of behaviour.

BOOSE, s. [boosy, Sax.] a stall for a cow or an ox.

To BOOT, v. a. to be of service or advantage; to profit; to enrich, serve, or accumulate.

BOOT, s. [boote, Sax.] gain, profit, or advantage. To boot, is an adverbial expression, implying besides; over and above.

BOOT, s. [botte, Fr.] a leather covering worn over the legs and feet; a receptacle under a coach-box, used for carrying boxes or other parcels. A kind of torture formerly used in Scotland.

To BOOT, v. a. to put on boots.

BOOTA'N, a country of India, situated between Bengal and Thibet, and surrounded on all sides by very high mountains. It is bounded by Thibet, Bengal, Bahar, and Sikkim. It includes that part of the Himmaleh Mountains which rises to the height of 25,000 feet. It exhibits the peculiar productions of all climates from the tropics to the arctic regions. The rivers which rise in this region join the great streams of China. The people are worshippers of Boodh. The sovereign is looked on as an incarnation of the Deity, and the affairs of the country are managed by his subordinates. Tassasudon is his palace, and the capital of the country.

BOOTCATCHER, s. the person who pulls off boots at an inn.

BOOTED, [part. with boots on the legs; in boots.

BOOTES, [bootes, s.] [Lat.] in Astronomy, the name of a northern constellation, one of whose stars, called Arcturus, is of the first magnitude.

BOOTH, s. [butch, Brit.] a house built of boards, or boughs, to be used for a short time.

BOO'THIA FELIX, a country lying W. of Baffin's Bay, discovered in Ross's attempt to find the N. W. passage to the East Indies, and named after Sir Felix Booth of London. It is almost perpetually covered with ice and snow, but is inhabited by a race of Esquimaux, who are remarkable for their gross barbarism.

BOOT-HOSE, s. a stocking worn instead of boots; spatter-dashes, or Welch boots.

BOOTLESS, a. that will not produce any advantage or profit; unavailing; unsuccessful.

BOOT-TREE, s. an instrument consisting of two parts when joined in the shape of a leg, with a groove cut in the middle to receive a quoin or wedge, which is driven in by main force, in order to stretch or widen a boot.

BOO'TY, s. [buylt, Belg.] that which is gained from an enemy in war; plunder; pillage; spoil; things acquired by robbery. To play booty, is to play or act unfairly.

BOPEEP, s. the act of thrusting the head in sight of a person, and drawing it back again immediately; sometimes used as a token of fear, and at others as a sign of pleasantry.

BORA, KATHARINE VON, Luther's heroic wife. She was highly connected, and had taken the veil, but during the first stir of the Reformation, fled from the convent with some of her companions, and was hospitably entertained by Luther, who eventually married her. After the death of Luther, she was involved in the deepest distress, owing to the total neglect of her on the part of the Protestant princes. After wandering about and begging her bread for some years, she died in 1552, aged 53 years.

BORABLE, a. that may be bored.

BORACHIO, s. [boracho, Span.] a drunkard.

BORACIC, a. in Chemistry, an acid formed from boron and oxygen.

BORAGE, s. in Botany, a plant with rough egg-shaped leaves, and blue blossoms, found on walls, and amongst rubbish, flowering in the summer months.

BORAMEZ, s. the Scythian lamb, generally known by the name of Agnus Scythicus.

BORATES, s. in Chemistry, salts formed by the combination of any base with boracic acid.

BORAX, s. [Lat.] a salt known in Chemistry as the borate of soda, which occurs native in some of the lakes of Thibet and Persia, and is extracted by evaporation. It is imported from India in a crude state, under the name of Tincal. Its chief use is as a flux for metals. It is used by dyers, and is an ingredient of Glauber's salts.

BORDA, JEAN CHARLES, an eminent French natural philosopher, whose investigations respecting the pendulum, &c., laid the foundation for some of the greatest modern improvements. He was a distinguished mathematician, and has left some useful works on the subject. During the late war he was taken prisoner by the English fleet in a French frigate. He died in 1799, aged 66 years.

BORDEAUX, a large and important city in the department of the Gironde, France. It stands on the Garonne, about 50 miles from its mouth; but as it, a little below the city, assumes the appearance of an arm of the sea, Bordeaux is a first-rate port. It is a nobly built place, and has many magnificent public buildings, such as the custom-house, the exchange, the town-hall, the courts of justice, &c. The river is crossed by a bridge of about 500 feet in length, composed of 17 arches. The cathedral is very fine, as also some other religious edifices. There are also colleges, hospitals, a museum, and a library. Bordeaux has a great trade, being the port nearest the Atlantic, and lying in the centre of a fine wine country. It receives goods from all parts, and exports chiefly claret. A good deal of ship-building is carried on here. The population is about 100,000. It is 371 miles from Paris. Lat. 44. 50. N. Long. 0. 34. W.

BORDER, s. [bord, Teut.] the extremities or edge of any thing; the extremities or confines of a country; the outer and extreme parts of a garment or head-dress; a narrow slip of flowers at the extremity of a flower-bed, &c. in a garden.

To BORDER, v. n. to live near to the extremities or confines of a country; to be situated near. Figuratively, to approach.—v. a. to sew a narrow ornament at the extremities of a thing; to lie upon or near.

BORDERER, s. one who dwells near a place, or on the confines and extremity of a country.

BORDURE, s. in Heraldry, a cutting off from within the escutcheon all round it about one-fifth of the field, serving as a difference in a coat of arms, to distinguish families of the same name, or persons bearing the same coat. If the line constituting the bordure be straight, and the bordure be plain, then in blazoning you must only name the colour of the bordure.

To BORE, v. a. [borian, Sax.] to wear into a hole; to make a hole by any sharp-pointed instrument; to push forwards with violence; to make one's way, alluding to the strength required to make a hole with.

BORE, s. the hole made by boring; the instrument used in boring a hole; the dimensions of the cavity of a cannon, or other piece of artillery. Also a peculiar tidal phenomenon, which occurs in many English rivers, as well as in the great rivers of India and America, the flow being like a bank of water rushing up the stream with great violence and rapidity. In the Trent it is called the Eager.

BORE, the preter. of To BEAR.

BOREAL, a. [borealis, Lat.] northern.

BOREAS, s. [Lat.] the north wind.

BORER, s. an instrument made use of to bore holes with; the person who bores holes.

BORGIA, the name of a family notorious for monstrous crime. The father was Pope Alexander VI., who, contrary to his vows, had by a mistress five children. One of these, Cesar, he introduced into the church and made a cardinal of, but being unable to gratify all his ambition and lust, he renounced his orders, and became as famous for his desperate daring, as he was before for his duplicity. Lucretia, the daughter, was married to an Italian noble, then divorced by her father and married to the son of the king of Naples, who was murdered, when she married the duke of Ferrara. She was believed to have lived incestuously with both her father and her brother. The eldest son was duke of Gandia, and was murdered, according to all appearance, by Cesar, who was the reputed assassin of his sister's second husband. The crimes of the father were cut short by his unintentionally partaking of some poisoned wine which he had prepared for one of his cardinals. Cesar narrowly escaped; but fell in battle four years afterwards, in 1507.

BORLASE, DR. WILLIAM, a clergyman of Cornwall, who, during the last century, devoted himself to the study of the natural history and antiquities of that county, and became well known through the works which he published concerning them. He was the correspondent and friend of the most distinguished men of his age; and died in 1772, aged 77 years.

To be BORN, v. n. pass. [from bear.] to come into the world; used with the particles to, for, and of. "He was born to empire." Πρωτ. He that is born to be hanged shall never be drowned. — He that was born under a three-half-penny planet shall never be worth two-pence.

BORNE, part. pass. of To BEAR.

BORNEO, a very large island of Asia, in the East Indies, about 800 leagues in circumference, and almost of a round form. The inland country is very mountainous; but towards the sea, low and marshy, occasioned by the great rains that fall eight months in the year. It produces oranges, lemons, mangoes, pines, palms, bread-fruit, &c. in great abundance, excellent mastic, and other gums, wax, rice, cassia, cotton, camphire, frankincense, and all kinds of spices; diamonds and gold dust are found in their rivers. Their animals are elephants, buffaloes, oxen, horses, tigers, leopards, bears, monkeys, deer, wild boars, goats, parrots, paroquets, together with a great variety of other beautiful birds. The people, in general, are very swarthy, but not quite black, and they go almost naked. Many Malays and Chinese have settled on the island. There are Mahometans on the sea-coast; but all the rest are Pagans. The inhabitants of some parts of the country are very piratical. The English and the Dutch have trading settlements, but the chief trade is with China. The sea-coast is usually overflowed half of the year; and when the waters go off, the earth is covered with ooze and mud; for which reason some of the houses are built on floats, and others on high pillars, or posts. The capital town is of the same name, and large and populous, with a good harbour, and seated on the north side of the island. Lat. 4. 55. N. Long. 111. 27. E.

BORNHOLM, an island of Denmark, in the Baltic, about 20 miles in circumference, nearly surrounded with rocks. The soil is stony, but fertile, and affording good grazing ground. There are coal mines and excellent stone quarries. Its capital is Rönne. Lat. 55. 10. Long. 15. 0. E.

BORNOU, an extensive country in the very interior of Africa, bounded by the Great Desert, Fezzan, Dongola, Howssa, Darfur, lake Tchad, and the river Tchary. It is a flat country, excepting near the Mandara mountains, and is watered by several rivers, which overflow during the rainy season, and inundate the country. Lions, panthers, griffins, antelopes, hyenas, jackals, monkeys, &c. abound, with elephants, hippopotami, and crocodiles. The ostriches, pelicans, cranes, &c. are also numerous. The climate is like that of the other lands of N. Africa. It has two seasons, separated by three or four months of almost continued rain. This kingdom is inhabited by a variety of tribes, and the natives are of the negro variety. All profess Islamism; and most live by agriculture. The government is despotic, but the power of the sultan is nominal. Kouka, Angornou, and Bornou, are the chief towns.

BORON, s. in Chemistry, an earth which is the base of boracic acid, borax, &c. It is of an olive green colour, and was discovered by Sir Humphrey Davy.

BOROUGH, (burra) s. [borhoe, Sax.] a town with a corporation. The word originally signified a town having a wall or some kind of defence about it. Some are called free boroughs, and the tradesmen in them free burgesses, from a freedom they had granted them originally, to buy and sell without interruption, and exempt from toll. Borough is now particularly appropriated to such towns as send burgesses or representatives to parliament, whether they be incorporated or not. Royal boroughs are corporations in Scotland, made for the advantage of trade, having commissioners to represent them in parliament. Headborough, the president or chairman of a hundred, chosen to speak or transact affairs in their name. In parishes, a subordinate constable.

BOROUGHBRIDGE, Yorkshire, W. R. It is situated on the river Ure, (over which there is a fine bridge of stone, with very wide, high arches, and high stone footways at each end to keep out the water,) 218 miles from London. Market, Saturday. Pop. 1024.

BOROUGH-ENGLISH, s. the customary descent of lands or tenements, in certain places, to the youngest instead of the eldest son; or, if the owner have no issue, to the younger instead of the elder brother. This custom is not frustrated by the devise of a will, or a feoffment at common law to the contrary. The reason of this custom, according to Littleton, is, because the youngest is presumed, in law, to be the least able to provide for himself. It obtains only in some ancient boroughs, and copyhold manors.

BORRELISTS, a sect in Holland, who allow no use of sacraments, public prayers, or external worship, nor of any human explication of Scripture, but profess to adhere to the faith and manners of the New Testament times in all their simplicity.

BORRHOE, ST. CHARLES, a cardinal and prelate of the Roman Church in the 16th century, who by his whole life won that esteem which led to his canonization. He was zealous to promote learning amongst the priests, and wrote the celebrated Catechism of the Council of Trent. He exerted himself continually to preserve his clergy in the diligent discharge of their duties, and himself showed the way. His conduct during the plague of Milan, was worthy of all admiration and praise. He died in 1594, aged 50 years, and was canonized by Paul V.

To BORROW, (bórró) v. a. [boryan, Sax.] the taking money or other things of another, on condition of returning it again. Figuratively, to take something which belongs to another; to assume a property which belongs to something else. Prov. He that goes a borrowing, goes a sorrowing.

BORROWDALE, a romantic valley among Derwent-water fells, in the S. E. part of Cumberland, bordering on Westmoreland. The soil is very fertile, and the hills yield the best quality of plumbago, which the people call wad. The Bowder stone, which is an immense block of transported trap-rock, and the four yew trees, are also famed curiosities of the valley. It is watered by the clearest brooks, which, precipitated from the hills, and forming many beautiful waterfalls, meet together in the dale, and, forming one large stream, pass out of the dale under the name of Borrowdale Beck, whence its waters spread out into an extensive lake, containing several beautiful islands, called Derwent-water, or Keswick Lake. Borrowdale is 4 miles from Keswick. Pop. 369.

BORROWER, s. a person who takes money, &c., of another, on condition of returning it again; he that uses what is another's as if it were his own. Figuratively, he that adopts the sentiments of another, without acknowledging that they are so, applied to writings.

BOS, LAMBERT, a very distinguished Greek scholar and professor of the Netherlands, at the commencement of the 18th century. He wrote many works, distinguished by their great erudition, respecting the Greek language, Grecian antiquities, the Greek Testament, &c.; and of these the treatise on the Ellipses commonly used in that language is the most generally known. He died in 1717, aged 47 years.

BOSBOCK, s. in Natural History, a kind of antelope, found in the interior of Africa.

BOSCA'GE, (bockáche) s. [Fr.] a place set with trees; a grove or thicket; woods or woodland. In Painting, a picture or landscape, representing woods.

BOSCAWEN, ADMIRAL EDWARD, a distinguished English naval commander. He was engaged in many actions during the French war in Europe, India, and N. America, and gained great renown by his intrepidity and skill. One of his most brilliant achievements was effected when he had the command of the Dreadnought, now so much more honourably employed as a floating sailors' hospital in the Thames. He died in 1761, aged 50 years.

BOSCOVICH, ROGER JOSEPH, a celebrated professor of natural philosophy, in Italy, in the 18th century. He was a Jesuit, but after the suppression of the order he continued to teach and to practise his favourite studies. He had considerable mathematical skill, but apparently lacked what Newton, whose doctrines he taught at Rome in spite of interdicts, said alone distinguished him—persistent attention; for though he did many good things, he did not effect one great one. He died in 1787, aged 70 years.

BOSKY, a. [bosque, Fr.] abounding with wood; woody.

BOSNIA, a province of European Turkey, divided by the Saave from Slavonia, and bounded on the other sides by Croatia, Dalmatia, Albania, and Servia. The most easterly members of the Alps run beside and through this province, and in some parts the peaks are 6000 feet high. The Saave, the Unna, and the Bosna, are its chief rivers, and they are tributaries of the Danube. Excepting in some parts, pastures and forests occupy the soil; the parts that are cultivated are productive in corn, various grains, and fruits. There are mines of the precious metals, as well as iron, &c., here, and good quarries for marble and building stone, with coal and salt mines. These are the various sources of the exports of the country. The population is about 1,000,000; and the chief places are Bosna-Serai, Travnick, Mostar, Novi, and Yaicza.

BOSOM, (bôz'm) s. [bosme, bosom, Sax.] the breast; that part of the body containing the heart. Figuratively, the embrace of the arms holding any thing to the breast; the middle or innermost part of any enclosure. In Composition, it implies favourite; any thing near or dear to a person, or that of which he is peculiarly fond; thus bosom-interest, bosom-friend, bosom-secret.

To BOSOM, (bôz'm) v. a. to enclose in the bosom. Figuratively, to keep secret; to surround.

BOSPORUS, s. [bosus and poros, Gr.] in Geography, a narrow strait or arm of the sea, which it might be supposed an ox could swim over; at present confined to that of Thrace, called the Straits of Constantinople; and the Cimmerian, or Scythian Bosphorus, called the Straits of Kapha, or Kiderier.

BOSQUETS, s. [boschetto, Ital.] in Gardening, small groves, or compartments, formed of trees, shrubs, or tall-growing plants, planted in quarters, either disposed in regular rows, or in a wild and accidental manner.

BOSS, s. [bosse, Fr.] a stud or ornament, raised above the rest of the work; a shining prominence; the prominent part, or that which sticks out of the middle of a thing, or shield.

BOSSAGE, s. in Architecture, a projecting stone laid rough in a building, to be afterwards carved into mouldings, arms, &c.

BOSSINEY, or BOSS-CASTLE, and TREVENA, Cornwall. It is seated on the sea-coast, and near it are the ruins of Tintagel's Castle. It is 233 miles from London. Market, Thursday. Pop. (of Tintagel, which is the parish to which Bossiney and Trevena belong.) 1185.

BOSSUET, JACQUES BENIGNE, the celebrated French prelate and sacred orator of the 17th century. He was indebted to his eloquence in the pulpit for the eminent stations he was called to fill. He was tutor to the Dauphin, and finally bishop of Meaux. The writings best known are his Funeral Orations, which are universally deemed master-pieces of eloquence. His work on Universal History is not less admired by those who have read it. His controversial works, which he published against the Huguenots, are taken as clear and satisfactory statements of the Romanist faith, both in France and in this country. He was also engaged in the Jansenist controversy, but not at all to his fame or honour. He died in 1704, aged 70 years.

BOSTON, Lincolnshire. It is commodiously seated on both sides of the river Witham, over which it has a handsome high cast-iron bridge; by means of which river, assisted by navigable canals, it carries on a considerable inland trade. It also trades with London and the Baltic. It is a large, handsome town, with a spacious market-place; and a fine church, whose tower, 300 feet high, serves as a land-mark for sailors. It is 116 miles from London. Markets, Wednesday and Saturday. Pop. 12,942.

BOSTON, the capital of Massachusetts in the United States, seated on a peninsula, at the bottom of a fine bay. It lies in the form of a crescent about the harbour; and the country within, rising gradually, has a very fine and striking appearance. There is only one safe channel to the harbour, and that so narrow that two ships can scarcely sail abreast; but within the harbour there is room for 500 sail to anchor, where they are covered by the guns of a very strong fortress. There are many wharfs, to which ships of the greatest burthen may come close; that called Long Wharf is above 1600 feet in length. The streets are generally spacious and well built, particularly the principal one, extending from the pier to the town-house. The state-house, custom-house, market, hospital, court-houses, Trinity church, St. Paul's church, and Park Street church, are fine buildings. There is also a medical school, and some grand literary institutions. It is 440 miles from Washington. Pop. 93,383. Lat. 42. 25. N. Long. 70. 33. W. There are seven other places of this name in the United States.

BOSWORTH, or MARKET-BOSWORTH, Leicestershire. It is seated on a hill, and is surrounded by a good agricultural district. Near it was fought the battle which ended the wars of the Roses, terminating the power of the feudal aristocracy, and introducing an almost arbitrary monarchy. It is 107 miles from London. Market, Wednesday. Pop. 2531.

BOSWORTH, JAMES, a Scottish laird, who was educated as a barrister, but was diverted from his profession by a passion for celebrity, which he effected by the use of celebrated names. In the earlier part of his career, after his tour on the continent, through his over-zealous admiration of General Paoli, he was gratified by being known as Corsica Boswell. Afterwards he was engaged more profitably for the world in minuting all the sayings and doings of Dr. Samuel Johnson, which he published after the Doctor's death. It is on this work that his fame rests, imperishable as Johnson's own. He died in 1795, aged 55 years.

BOT, s. [bitan, Sax.] the larva of the gadfly, of which there are several species, some feeding on the stomach and intestines of the horse, another in the nostril of the sheep, and a third under the skin of the ox.

BOTANIC, BOTANICAL, a. [botane, Gr.] that relates to herbs; skilled in herbs.

BOTANIST, s. one who is skilled in the nature of plants, and their culture; one who applies himself peculiarly to the study of vegetables.

BOTANOLOGY, s. [botane and logos, Gr.] a discourse on plants.

BOTANY, s. [botane, Gr.] the science of herbs and plants. This science consisted till very lately of a mere classification of known plants, according to one or another principle of arrangement; but the study of vegetable physiology, aided by the use of the microscope, and the chemistry of the present day, and particularly the extraordinary theory of Goethe respecting the metamorphoses of plants, have cast altogether a new light on the pursuit, and rendered it one of the profoundest as well as most interesting sciences.

BOTANY BAY, a bay on the E. coast of New Holland, so called by Captain Cook, from the great quantity of herbs found there. Port Jackson, 15 miles farther to the N. is the penal settlement of Great Britain. Lat. 34. 6. S. Long. 151. 22. E.

BOTARGO, s. [botarga, Span.] a relishing sort of food, made of the roes of the mullet fish; much used on the coasts of the Mediterranean as an incentive to drink.

BOTCH, s. [bozza, Ital.] a swelling which afterwards encrusts, discolours the skin, and causes a disagreeable idea. Figuratively, the part of any work clumsily or ill finished, so as to disgrace the rest; something added or joined to a thing in a clumsy manner.

To BOTCH, v. a. [botseun, Belg.] to mend or patch old clothes in a clumsy manner; to mark with blotches. Figuratively, to mend any thing in an awkward manner; to join things together which do not suit, or agree with one another.

BOTCHER, s. one who mends, or sews patches on old clothes, in a clumsy manner; and is in the same respect to a tailor, as a cobbler to a shoemaker. Figuratively, a person who performs any thing in a clumsy and bungling manner.

BOTCHY, a. marked with blotches.

BOTESDALE, Suffolk. This town is but a hamlet of Redgrave, and the market town is in part Rickinghall. It is 89 miles from London. Market, Wednesday. Pop. 1065.

BOTH, a. [batu, batra, Sax.] when applied to two persons, or other things as concerned together, it unites them into one collective idea, which implies the two. When followed by and, it implies one as well as the other. "Both morning and afternoon." Sidney.

BOTHNIA, a province of Sweden, lying N. and W. of the Gulf of the same name, and E. of the range of mountains dividing Norway from Sweden. It is intersected by numerous streams, which rise in the mountainous regions, and run down to the sea, spreading into large lakes frequently in their course. The Tornea, the Calix, the Lulea, and the Skelleftea, are the chief of them. Very few parts are cultivated; pine forests, and forests of birch, alder, &c. cover most of it. There are some pastures near the rivers, on which are reared cattle, which are the chief articles of trade, after the fir timber, and the products of the fir; and the skins of wild animals. The mountains also yield iron abundantly. The climate is very severe, as part of it lies within the arctic circle, and no efficient cultivation of the soil has been attempted. Gulf of Bothnia, the name given to the most northerly part of the Baltic, from the island of Åland to Tornea.

BOTHWELL, JAMES, EARL OF, one of the Scottish nobles who took a very considerable part in the troubled affairs of Queen Mary's reign. He bore the character of one addicted to all crime, and of a most determined will. He opposed the murder of Rizzio, and is believed to have effected Darnley's. His crowning crime was the seizure of Mary's person, and marrying her, with or without her consent, for which he was, however, pardoned by the queen. The people, however, rose upon him, and he fled to Denmark, and died in 1576, aged 51 years.

BOTRYOID, a. [botrus and eidos, Gr.] in shape like a bunch of grapes.

BOTTA, CARLO GUISEPPE, an Italian historian of the present century. He was a medical practitioner at Turin, and embraced warmly the hopes awakened by the outbreak of the French Revolution, for which he was imprisoned. He was afterwards engaged in the French army of Italy, and a member of the provisional government of Piedmont. In France he was subsequently in the chamber of representatives under Napoleon. After 1814 Botta led a various life, subsisting chiefly by his writings. He has left us a history of the affairs of Italy during his life-time, and a continuation of an older history, so as to make Italian history so far complete; also a history of the war of independence in America, and some other works of less note. He died in 1837, aged 71 years.

BOTTLE, s. [bouteille, Fr.] a vessel with a narrow mouth to contain liquor. When made of leather, called a leathern bottle; when of glass, a glass bottle. Figuratively, a quart, bottles generally holding that quantity. When compounded with other words, it signifies drinking; as, a bottle companion. A bundle of grass or hay, derived from the French boteau, a bundle.

To BOTTLE, v. a. to put liquor in bottles. Used with the particle off, to draw out of another vessel into a bottle.

BOTTLEMOSS, s. in Botany, the English generic name for all those mosses called by Linnaeus splachnum.

BOTTLE-NOSED, a. having a large nose, very big towards the end.

BOTTLESCREW, s. a spiral wire, made use of to pull a cork out of a bottle.

BOTTOM, s. [botm, Sax.] the lowest part of a thing. Applied to a river, the bed of earth or gravel, over which the water glides; a valley, dale, or lower ground. Figuratively, foundation; hence, to the bottom, sometimes implies thoroughly. To be at the bottom, to be concerned in, to have a part or share. A ship or vessel; hence, to embark on the same bottom, is to venture in one bottom, to run a risk together in the same thing. The bottom of a lane is the lowest part. The bottom of beer, the dregs. Applied to thread, a small ball, from botau, Fr. a heap or little bundle.

To BOTTOM, v. a. to build upon as a foundation, principle, or support; to wind thread into a ball.—v. n. to be built on; to be supported by.

BOTTOMED, a. having a bottom; usually compounded with some other word, as flat-bottomed boats.

BOTTOMLESS, a. without a bottom; prodigiously deep; that cannot be fathomed. Figuratively, boundless, insatiable.

BOTTOMRY, s. in trade, the borrowing money upon the keel or bottom of a ship, whereby, if the money be not repaid at the day appointed, the ship becomes the property of the creditor; likewise, the lending money, to be repaid at the return of the ship; in consideration of which, though the interest demanded be 20, 30, 40 per cent. and upwards, it is not esteemed usury, because if the ship perishes, the creditor loses his money.

BOUCHES DU RHONE, a department of France, lying on the Mediterranean, and bounded by the departments of the Var, of Vaucluse, of the Basses Alpes, and of Gard. It is a tolerably level district, and includes the delta of the Rhone. There are some mines of lead, iron, and coal, and some stone quarries. But the wealth of the department lies in its pastures, its fruits, and its wine; but little grain being raised. There are also manufactures of cotton, woollens, leather, glass, &c. &c. Marseilles is its chief town. The population is about 400,000.

BOUCHET, s. [Fr.] a sort of pear.

BOUGAINVILLE, LOUIS ANTOINE DE, the French circumnavigator of the last century. He had been a mathematical writer, afterwards in the army, then in an embassy to England, subsequently in the army again during the war with England about Canada. After his return from his long voyage, he commanded a frigate in the war of independence of the United States. He died in 1811, aged 82 years.

To BOUGE, v. n. [bouger, Fr.] to swell out.

BOUGH, (bow), s. [bog, Sax.] an arm or large shoot of a tree, bigger than a branch, yet not always distinguished from it.

BOUGHT, preter. of To Buy, and pron. baut.

BOUGEIE, s. [Fr.] an instrument employed by surgeons in the cure of strictures of the urethra.

BOUILLE, E., BOUILLON, s. [bouillon, Fr.] in Cookery, any thing made of boiled meat; broth or soup. In Farriery, a lump of flesh near the frog of a horse's foot, which makes him halt.

BOUILLON, GODFREY DE, the commander-in-chief of the army of the first crusaders. He had greatly distinguished himself by his courage before, and his conduct during the crusades did not lessen his fame; at Nice, Doryleum, Antioch, and Jerusalem he was foremost in danger and victory. He was chosen king of Jerusalem. He died in 1100, aged about 40 years.

BOU/LEVARDS, s. the space vacant of houses occupied by public walks, round towns in France, on which walls or ramparts could be erected.

BOULOGNE, a large and handsome sea-port in the department of the Pas de Calais. It is divided into the higher and lower town. The harbour has a mole for the safety of ships, which prevents it from being choked up with sand. It is seated at the mouth of the river Liane, and has some fine buildings, as the town-hall, law courts, prison, and some churches. It is a fashionable watering-place, and has also some trade. The population is about 100,000. It is 130 miles N. of Paris. Lat. 50. 44. N. Long. 1. 35. E.

BOULTON, MATTHEW, the partner of Watt in some patents respecting the steam-engine. He was a man of considerable wealth, but his practical turn of mind, and generosity of spirit, enabled him to do more than his property. He put his property almost freely into Watt's hands, that he might not be checked in his attempts to perfect his invention. He died in 1809, aged 81 years.

To BOUNCE, v. n. to strike against a thing with such force as to rebound back, making a noise at the same time; to spring with force, applied to the spurting beer out of a bottle. In familiar language, to make a noise, bully, or hector; to be strong-made and active.

BOUNCE, s. a smart, violent, and sudden stroke; a sudden crack or noise, applied to the explosion of a gun, or the bursting of a bladder, &c. In low language, a threat, or boast.

BOUNCER, s. one who is noisy in his own praise, or in his threats against another; a bully; a boaster.

BOUND, s. [bound, Fr.] a restraint; a leap, jump, or spring; the flying back of a thing which is struck against another with great force.

To BOUND, v. n. [bound, Fr.] to jump, spring, or move on forwards by leaps; to fly back again when struck against a thing with violence;—v. a. to make a thing leap, or mount by fits from the earth, in its motion.

BOUND, part. pass. of To BIND.

BOUND, a. [bindan, Sax.] destined, intended, or on one's way to a certain place. Used with for, and peculiar to seamen.

BOUNDARY, s. the extremities or utmost limits of a thing or country.

BOUNDEN, part. pass. of To BIND.

BOUNDING-STONE, s. a stone played with, and made to bound from the earth, when flung from the hand.

BOUNDLESS, a. that is restrained by no limits, confined by no power, or satisfied by no enjoyment.

BOUNDLESSNESS, s. the quality of being without any restraint; insatiableness; infinity.

BOUNTEOUS, a. liberal, or conferring benefits largely, and from a goodness and kindness of nature.

BOUNTEOUSLY, ad. in a liberal manner; conferring benefits generously, and from a principle of good nature.

BOUNTEOUSNESS, s. the quality of conferring benefits or favours from a principle of kindness, including the idea of superiority.

BOUNTIFUL, a. conferring favours without restraint, and from an internal principle of kindness. Applied to things, very much abounding in valuable products.

BOUNTIFULLY, ad. in such a manner as to confer favours or benefits with generosity, and from an inward principle of kindness. Applied to things, plentifully producing what is of service or use.

BOUNTIFULNESS, s. a great propensity to bestowing favours, or conferring benefits; generosity, munificence.

BOUNTY, s. [bonte, Fr.] the conferring benefits on others, distinguished from charity, because exercised towards objects that are not highly necessitous; and including the idea of a gift bestowed by a superior. In Commerce, a premium paid by government to those who rear, prepare, or export certain commodities. Queen Anne's bounty, is the produce of the first-fruits and tenths, set apart for augmenting poor livings.

BOURBON, an island of Africa, in the Indian Ocean, belonging to France, producing plentifully, with little culture, wheat, oats, and other European grains, rice, Indian corn, sugar-canes, ebony, excellent tobacco, cinnamon, and most kinds of greens, roots, and pulse; as also gum, resin, benzoin, &c., the soil yielding two crops a year. The country is every where well watered, and well stocked with horned cattle, hogs, goats, &c.; but the chief production of the island is coffee. One of the mountain-peaks of the island is above 9500 feet high. It is 400 miles E. of Madagascar. The capital is St. Denis. Lat. 20. 52. S. Long. 55. 20. E.

BOURBON, the name of the last dynasty of France, the first member of which ascended the throne in 1381, and whose representative still holds the chief power. See LOUIS, CHARLES, &c.

BOURBON, CHARLES DE, a celebrated French warrior and general of the 15th century. Francis I. made him his constable, and the skill and discipline he introduced into the army contributed not a little to the French monarch's fame. But afterwards falling into disgrace with the king, and receiving many affronts from him, he joined the Emperor Charles V. As his general, the constable won the famous battle of Pavia, in which Francis was taken prisoner. But treated with coldness and suspicion by Charles, having to occupy and reward the army of lansquenets he had raised, he determined on attacking Rome. He was the first man to ascend the walls, and he fell instantly. His army afterwards sacked the city. He died in 1527, aged 38 years. He was a noble exception to the licentiousness of the nobility in his times, and was destroyed by the duplicity of the sovereigns he served.

BOURBON VENDORIE, the capital of dept. Vendée, France, which was reared on an insignificant village, in execution of one of Napoleon's deep-laid schemes of policy. It was named by himself Napoleon Vendée, which was changed to its present name on his fall. It has a little trade, and a population of about 4000. It is 250 miles from Paris. Lat. 46. 41. N. Long. 1. 29. W.

BOURDALOUE, LOUIS, a celebrated orator of the Society of Jesuits, whose sermons are still read and admired for their pure style and rich thought. He was a man of considerable learning, and was in the early part of his life a professor of philosophy, &c. in connexion with his order. He died in 1704, aged 72 years.

BOURDON, SEBASTIAN, a famous French painter of the 17th century, one of the eminent men whom Christina of Sweden gathered round her. He assisted, on his return to France, in the establishment of the Royal Academy there. Neither fame nor wealth had great attractions for him, and his great readiness in composition and execution, and skill in imitating, prevented his pictures having any marked style. He died in 1671, aged 55 years.

BOURG, the capital of the dept. Ain, France, stands on the Reysousse, in a pleasant situation, and is handsomely built, and adorned with some fine public buildings. It has some manufacturing trade, and some trade in agricultural produce and cattle. Its population is about 8000. It is 250 miles from Paris. Lat. 46. 13. N. Long. 5. 12. E.

BOURGEON, SIR FRANCIS, an English painter of no great celebrity in his art, although he was regarded by royalty in his day as worthy of patronage. He was the donor, by bequest, of the pictures in the gallery of Dulwich College, which had been left him by a friend. He died in 1810, aged 66 years.

To BOURGEON, (boorjon) v. n. [bourgeoinner, Fr.] to sprout; to shoot into branches; to produce buds.

BOURGES, the capital of the dept. of Cher, France. They have manufactures of cloth, woollen, stuffs, and stockings, and the trade of the town consists of these, and the produce of the vicinity. It is seated on the rivers Auron and Evre, 155 miles from Paris. The population is about 18,000. Lat. 47. 5. N. Long. 2. 23. E.

BOURN, Lincolnshire. It is seated near a spring called Burnwell-head, from which proceeds a river that runs through the town. It is a pretty large place, and has a good market for corn and provisions. It is 95 miles from London. Market, Saturday. Pop. 3361.

BOURN, (boorn) s. [borne, Fr.] the extremities, bounds, or limits of a country, or piece of land.

BOURN, (burn) s. [burn, Sax.] a brook or torrent; when added to the names of places, it implies, that they are situated near or upon brooks.

BOURNE, VINCENT, the author of some elegant Latin poems, and Latin translations of popular English ballads. He studied at Cambridge, and was an usher at Westminster School. Cowper translated many of them into his own easy and graceful verse, which, together with his affectionate mention of his old tutor, has helped to preserve this writer from undeserved neglect. He died in 1747, aged 52 years.

To BOUSE, (booze) v. n. [buysen, Belg.] to drink immoderately; to touse.

BOUSY, (bozzy) a. intoxicated with drink.

BOUT, s. [botta, Ital.] a turn; implying as much of an action as is performed without intermission; at once, a part of any action which is carried on by successive intervals.

BOUTERWEK, FRIEDRICH, a German writer on literature, &c., of some eminence. He was a Professor in the university of Göttingen. His principal work, on Modern Poesy and Eloquence, is well known in this country and on the continent. He died in 1828, aged 62 years.

BOW, (Bö) Devonshire, 188 miles from London.

To BOW, (bow pron. like that in now or how.) v. a. [bugen, Sax.] to bend the body in token of respect; to listen to, joined with ear and the particle down. "Bow down thine ear to the poor," Eccles. iv. 8. To depress, or crush.—v. n. To bend, or be bent; to make a bow; to stoop; or incline the body towards the earth. Figuratively to be overpowered, or to stoop under the pressure of affliction.

BOW, (the pron. like that in how or now.) s. a stooping of the head and inclination of the body, by way of compliment.

BOW, (*pron. bö, as if the o was dropped*.) s. [bora, Brit.] an instrument, made of yew or some other tough wood, the extremities of which are tied by a string, which being drawn towards the body of a person, bends the wood; and by its elasticity throws an arrow placed on the string to a great distance, used in war and hunting anciently; a bending piece of wood furnished with hair, and used on stringed instruments; the loop of a string tied in a knot; a yoke or bending piece of wood. Cross-bow, the name of a bow fastened at the end of a grooved stock, which was discharged by a trigger. Applied to a ship, that part which begins at the loof, and compassing ends of the stern, and ends at the sternmost part of the fore-castle. In Building, bow is a beam of wood or brass, with three long screws, which directs a lath of wood or steel to any arch, used commonly in drawing draughts of ships, projections of the sphere, or long arches. Prov. A bow long bent at last weazeth weak. This proverb may be applied both to the body and mind; too much labour and study weaken and impair both the one and the other.

BOW-BEAKER, s. an under-officer of the forest.

BOW-BENT, (bö-bent) a. bent like a bow, or in the form of a bow; crooked; stooping.

BOWDICH, THOMAS EDWARD, an English merchant, who being employed on a mission to the Ashantees in W. Africa, published the discoveries which he made respecting that ill-understood country. He died in 1824, when he had set out for the purpose of further researches, aged 34 years.

BOWDITCH, DR. NATHANIEL, the American translator and commentator on Laplace's Mécanique Céleste. He was born in humble circumstances, and was almost self-taught. He studied more than 20 different languages, and engaging in maritime life, obtained a good acquaintance with mathematics. Being afterwards occupied in connexion with insurance companies, he effected the great work named above. He died in 1838, aged 65 years.

To BOWEL, (the ow is pron. as in now.) v. a. to pierce the bowels; to penetrate deep, or to the bottom of a thing.

BOWELS, (boüels) s. [boyanza, Fr.] the intestine vessels, or organs within the body. Figuratively, the inner part of any thing; tenderness, pity, or compassion.

BOWER, (boüer) s. an arbour, or place formed of the branches of green trees, bent or arched at the top; the anchor of a ship, so called from its being in the bow of a ship, and then pronounced bo-er.

To BOWER, (boüer) v. a. to make a bower; to include in a bower. Figuratively, to enclose.

BOWERY, a. full of bowers; shady and enclosed like a bower.

BOWL, (bole) s. [buclin, Brit.] a drinking vessel, rather wide than deep; the hollow roundish part of any thing which can hold liquor.

BOWL, s. [boule, Fr.] a nearly spherical piece of wood, used in playing a game, in which they are rolled on the ground at a ball, used as a mark.

To BOWL, v. a. to roll or bowl along the ground; to roll a bowl at any mark.

BOW-LEGGED, (bölegged) a. having crooked legs, or such as resemble a bow when bent.

BOWLER, (the ow pron. as in now.) s. he that rolls a bowl; one that plays with or at bowls.

BOWLING-GREEN, s. a piece of grass-plot of a true level or horizontal surface, kept close cut, and frequently rolled, for playing at bowls.

BOWLINE, (bö-line) s. a rope fastened to the middle part of the outside of a sail.

BOWMAN, (bö-man) s. one who shoots with a bow.

BOWSHOT, (bö-shot) s. the distance to which an arrow can fly when shot from a bow.

BOWSPRIT, (bö-sprit) s. a kind of mast at the prow of a vessel, resting slopeways on the head of the main stem, fastened by the fore-stay and to the partners of the foremast, serving to carry the sprit, and sprit-topsail and jackstaff. Its length should be two-thirds of the mainmast, and its thickness equal to the mizzen.

BOWSTRING, (bö-string) s. the string by which a bow is bent.

BOWYER, (böyer) s. one who shoots with a bow; an archer; a person who makes bows.

BOWYER, WILLIAM, a famous and learned printer of London in the last century. He studied at Cambridge, and devoted himself not merely to carrying on his father's business, but to the study of antiquities, and to the elucidation of the Greek Testament. He numbered amongst his personal friends all the greatest scholars, &c. of his day; and died in 1777, aged 78 years.

BOX, s. [Sax.] in Botany, a well-known shrub, with small, smooth, oval leaves, which grows on chalky hills, such as Box-hill, Surrey, in this country. Its flowers are not conspicuous. Its wood is the valuable close-grained, hard wood used for woodcuts, mathematical rules, scales, &c. The kind of box used for the borders of garden beds is a dwarf variety of this. Also a case made of wood, or other substance, to hold any thing; the case of a mariner's or sea compass; the inner case of a watch; a chest in which money is put; hence a Christmas box, which signifies both the chest into which the money is put, and the money then collected: a compartment of the first tier of seats in a play-house; a compartment in a coffee-house, or restaurateur's; a small cottage residence in the country, used by sportsmen in the sporting season.

BOX, s. [bock, Brit.] a blow on the face with the hand.

To BOX, v. a. to fight with the fists; to strike on the head or face with the hand.

BOXEN, a. made of box. Applied to colour, of a box colour.

BOXER, s. one who is skilled in fighting with the fists; one who fights with his fists.

BOY, s. [the etymology uncertain,] a name applied to persons of the male sex till they are fifteen years old. Used figuratively for a person who wants the sedateness and discretion of manhood, and is then a term of reproach.

BOYCE, DR. WILLIAM, an eminent English composer, whose genius is highly esteemed. He was in the service of George II., and was organist at the chapels-royal. His most admired works are anthems, and other sacred pieces. He died in 1779, aged 69 years.

BOYDELL, ALDERMAN JOHN, the well-known illustrator of Shakespeare, was an engraver and print-seller at London, and devoted himself to the encouragement of English artists. His exertions helped greatly to revive the national taste; but his engravings, though very splendid, do not accord with the purer taste which has arisen in this country since that time. He died in 1804, aged 85 years.

BOYHOOD, s. the state wherein a person is styled a boy, extending from infancy to youth, or till a person is fifteen years old.

BOYISH, a. like a boy with respect to inexperience, want of sedateness and discretion; childish; trifling; puerile.

BOYISH, ad. in a childish, wanton, trifling manner.

BOY'ISHNESS, s. that quality which is predominant in boys; want of thought, sedateness, or discretion; childishness; trifling.

BOYLE, an Irish noble family, which has been distinguished by many illustrious members. The founder, Richard Boyle, in the latter part of the 16th century, had studied at the Temple, and got employment as a clerk in Dublin. He afterwards acquired a little property, and being successful in defending himself in the presence of Queen Elizabeth, against a conspiracy to crush him, he entered on the road to greatness. Wealth and honours steadily flowed in upon him, and he died in 1644, the Earl of Cork, aged 78 years. Roger Boyle, one of his sons, was the famous Lord Broghill of the Commonwealth and Protectorate. He was a royalist, but was won by Cromwell's address, and took part in his Irish campaigns, and afterwards was one of his council. He lent his help to effect the Restoration, and was made Earl of Orrery. He died in 1679, aged 59 years. Robert Boyle, brother to the last named, was a distinguished natural philosopher, and founder of the lectures against the various forms of unbelief and mischief. His experiments and his works, both scientific and theological, have given him a truly honourable position amongst the celebrated men of this country. He died in 1691, aged 65 years. Charles Boyle, grandson to Lord Broghill, has gained an unenviable fame, through the part he took in a quarrel with Bentley about the Letters of Phalaris, and a more pleasing one as a soldier under Marlborough, a diplomatist, and patron of the inventor of the astronomical instrument named, after him, an Orrery. He died in 1731, aged 56 years. John Boyle, his son, also gained a modest renown by his literary labours. He too was Earl of Orrery, and died in 1762, aged 56 years.

BOYNE, a river of Ireland, which rises in the county of Kildare, crosses that of Meath, and falls into the Irish Channel, 4 miles below Drogheda. It is celebrated for the victory obtained by William III. over James II. in 1690.

BP., an abbreviation for bishop.

BRABANT, NORTH, a province of Holland, lying on the Belgian and Prussian frontiers, and adjoining to the provinces of Guelderland and Zealand. The Maas, the Dommel, the Merk, and the Scheldt, are its rivers. It is not naturally a very productive country, but is well cultivated. Its population is under 400,000. Its chief places are Bois-le-duc and Breda.

BRABANT, SOUTH, a province of Belgium, lies between the provinces of Antwerp, Liege, Limburg, Hainault, Namur, and Flanders. The Dyle and the Dender are its rivers. Brussels, Louvain, and Nivelles are its chief towns. Its population is nearly 600,000. The soil is somewhat rich, and is well cultivated.

BRA'BBLE, s. [brabbelin, Belg.] a quarrel; a clamorous, noisy contest.

To BRA'BBLE, v. n. to contest a thing with great clamour; to quarrel; to clamour.

BRA'BBLEIN, s. a clamorous, quarrelsome, turbulent, or noisy fellow.

BRACCIOLINI, POGGIO, one of the scholars of the 15th century, to whose labours we are indebted for the revival of learning and literature. He was instructed by the best teachers of the day, and became one of the pope's secretaries. In this capacity he was present at the Council of Constance, and was a witness to the perfidy and barbarity of Rome. He travelled after this to England, and thence returned to his secretaryship. At length he was made chancellor of Florence. He died in 1459, aged 79 years. He used all his travels as means of increasing his acquaintance with languages and books. His translations and other works were very numerous.

To BRACE, v. a. [embrasser, Fr.] to tie or wind bandages tight round any thing; to strain or stretch. To brace the yards, in sea language, is to bring the yard to either side, so as to make it stand square, or even across the ship.

BRACE, s. a bandage; that which keeps the parts of a thing close together; that which is used to keep a thing stretched. In Printing, a crooked line, denoting that the members of a sentence ought to be joined together, but not taken separately, marked thus { and used by poetical writers at the end of a triplet, or three lines which rhyme to each other. In Architecture, a piece of timber formed with bevel joints, and used to keep a building steady. In the plural, those ropes fastened to the yard-arms of a ship, used to square the yards, and bring them to any position. Applied to a coach, the thick thongs of leather on which the body hangs. Also, those slips of cloth or leather, which, passing over the shoulders, and buttoning to the breeches, serve to hold them up.

BRACE, s. [never used with an s at the end for the plural, and is a collective noun, which seems to have only the singular,] in Hunting, two, or a pair; perhaps so called from their being tied together.

BRACED, a. in Heraldry, the intermingling chevrons at the base of an escutcheon.

BRACELET, s. [bracelet, Fr.] an ornament worn round the wrist; a piece of defensive armour for the arm.

BRACER, s. that which braces, or keeps a thing tight. In Surgery, a bandage.

BRACHIAL, (brákial) a. [brachium, Lat.] that belongs to, or is situated in, the arm.

BRACHYGRAPHY, (brakygraphy) s. [brachus and grapho, Gr.] the art of short-hand, or writing by characters in a shorter time and compass than by the letters of the common alphabet.

BRACKET, s. [bracciata, Ital.] a piece of wood, carved or plain, fixed against a wall, to support something.

BRACKISH, a. [brack, Belg.] salt; that is somewhat salt; of the taste of sea-water.

BRACKISHNESS, s. saltiness in a small degree, applied to sea-water.

BRACKLAW, a city of Podolia, on the river Bog. Lat. 48. 49. N. Long. 29. 30. E.

BRACKLEY, Northamptonshire. It is seated on a branch of the river Ouse, and contains two churches. It had formerly a college, now turned into a free-school. It is 64 miles from London. Market, Wednesday. Pop. 2121.

BRACTON, one of the oldest writers on English law. He lived in the 13th century.

BRAD, a. [Sax.] when added to the names of places, signifies broad; thus Bradford signifies a broad ford.

BRAD, s. a kind of nails used in building, without a shoulder over their shank, or a spreading head like other nails, but are pretty thick towards the upper end, and the top may be driven into, and buried in, the board they fasten.

BRADFIELD (MAGNA), Essex, 38 miles from London. Market, Thursday. Pop. 995.

BRADFORD, Wilts. It is famed for the manufacture of super-fine cloths, which it shares with the surrounding towns. It is seated on the Avon, 102 miles from London. Market, Monday. Pop. 10,563.

BRADFORD, Yorkshire, W. R., a town seated between Leeds and Halifax, on the branch of the Aire, from which a canal has been made to join the grand canal from Leeds to Liverpool. It has a considerable trade in shalloons, everlastings, and other worsted stuffs, which are made in the neighbourhood. There are also some iron foundries. It is 193 miles from London. Market, Thursday. Pop. 105,257.

BRADLEY, JAMES, an eminent English astronomer, who discovered the aberration of the fixed stars, or the apparent change in their position at different times of the year, owing to the motion of light, and the motion of the earth in its orbit; and the nutation of the earth's axis, occasioned by the attraction of the moon. He was a very careful and accurate observer, and was finally appointed astronomer royal. His tables have been used by all succeeding astronomers, and have established his claim to the high place assigned him by Sir Isaac Newton. He died in 1757, aged 64 years.

BRADNINCH, Devonshire, 185 miles from London. Market, Saturday. Pop. 1714.

BRADSHAW, JOHN, a most distinguished parliamentary leader during the commotions of the 17th century. The greatest act of his life was his presiding at the trial of Charles I., in which position he conducted himself with all the dignity that became the representative of the victorious cause, on such an occasion. He was rewarded by the gibbeting of his remains at Tyburn in the Restoration. He opposed Cromwell's protectorate, but had to yield to his superior power. He died in 1659, aged 66 years.

To BRAG, v. n. [braggeren, Belg.] to display an advantage with great pomp and vanity; to boast.

BRAG, s. a pompous or proud display of any advantage a person possesses. Figuratively, the thing itself which causes pride or boasting; glory. Prov. Brag's a good day, but that he has lost his tail.—Brag's a good dog if he be well set on, but he dare not bite.

BRA'GA, a city, the capital of Entre-Douro-e-Minho, seated on the Cavado, 180 miles N. of Lisbon, has a fine cathedral, and many Roman ruins. Its population is about 20,000. Lat. 41. 42. N. Long. S. 29. W.

BRAGA'ZA, a city in the province of Tras los Montes, in Portugal. It is seated on the river Fervanca, and carries on a manufacture of silk, stuffs, velvets, and program. Population about 4000. Lat. 41. 40. N. Long. S. 30. W.

BRAGGADOCHIO, s. a person who vainly sets forth his own good qualities, or displays them more than they deserve.

BRA'GGART, s. [braggeret, Teut.] a person who boasts of his own abilities too much.

BRAGGART, a. proud, conceited, vain.

BRAGGER, s. one who displays his pretended abilities in all the pomp of vain and ostentatious language.

BRAGLESS, a. without a boast; without being boasted of.

BRAHE, TYCHO, the famous Danish astronomer of the 16th century. His life was very unsettled, and his principal observations were made on the island of Hueno, on which the Danish king had erected for him a noble observatory, called Uraniberg. He greatly advanced the science to which he had devoted himself, by his diligent observations and accurate tables, which, till Bradley's time, were the best constructed, and which were the groundwork of Kepler's great discoveries. He did not serve it so well by the solar system which he promulgated in opposition to the Copernican, making the sun, round which the planets revolved, revolve round the earth as its remote and more important satellite. He died at Prague in 1601, aged 65 years. It was during his life-time that the temporary star in Cassiopeia appeared.

BRAHMA, the principal deity in the Hindu mythology. He is represented as the creator, whilst Vishnu is the preserver, and Siva the destroyer. He has many distinguishing names and representations, but not many exclusive worshippers.

BRAHMANS, the highest caste amongst the Hindus. In the ancient fable they are represented as proceeding from the mouth of Brahma, the creator. They were the priestly order, and the only educated class. They alone might teach the Vedas (the sacred books of their mythology). They were regarded as possessing something of the nature of divinities, and were therefore treated with the supreme respect, and sometimes even worshipped, whilst their curse was regarded as superlatively dreadful. Their outward badge of distinction was a peculiar thread worn round the neck. They expected to be supported by the gifts of the other castes; but they might, and often did, work for their bread. They had at Benares, in N. Hindustan, their university, where they were initiated into all the mysteries of their religion. In different parts of the country they have adopted different practices, most remarkably resembling those of the Roman Catholic clergy and religious orders.

BRAHMAPOOTRA, one of the largest rivers of Asia, which has its rise in the unexplored recesses of the Himalaeh mountains, and flowing on the N. side of the principal range, winds at length round the E. extremity, and after a course of nearly 1000 miles, empties itself into the Bay of Bengal at the Gangetic delta. Some of its tributaries fall but little short of its own magnitude, and the volume of water it discharges into the ocean considerably exceeds that discharged by the Ganges.

To BRAID, v. a. [brædan, Sax.] to weave together; to plait.

BRAID, s. a lock of hair, or any thing collected by weaving or plaiting; a small narrow kind of lace, used for ornamenting women's shoes, bed curtains, &c.

BRAIDWOOD, THOMAS, a successful teacher of the deaf and dumb at Edinburgh, and London, in the last century. He died in 1800, aged about 70 years.

BRAILS, s. small ropes used in furling the sails across. To kale up the byails, or brail up the sail, implies that the sail is to be haled up, in order to be furled, or bound close to the yard.

BRAIN, s. [bræyren, Sax.] in Anatomy, the large, soft, whitish substance, filling the inside of the cranium, or skull, wherein all the organs of sense terminate. It is divided into the cerebrum, cerebellum, and medulla oblongata, or medulla spinalis. The brain is much larger in men than in any other animals, and is generally biggest in such other animals as show the greatest degree of sagacity.

To BRAIN, v. a. to dash the brains out; to kill by dashing the brains out.

BRAIN/LESS, a. without brains. Figuratively, silly, foolish, thoughtless.

BRAIN/PAN, s. the skull, so called from its containing the brains.

BRAIN/SICK, a. disordered in the brain. Figuratively, giddy, thoughtless, foolish, mad.

BRAIN/TREE, Essex. This town carries on a considerable manufacture of baize. It is 41 miles from London. Market, Wednesday. Pop. 3670.

BRAKE, s. [of uncertain etymology,] a thicket of brambles or thorns.

BRAKE, s. [bræcan, Sax.] a wooden mallet, used in beating or dressing hemp; the handle of a ship's pump; a baker's kneading trough; a sharp bit or snaffle for horses.

BRA'KY, a. abounding in brakes, or thickets of thorns.

BRAMA'NTE, D'URBINO, an eminent Italian architect of the 15th century. His greatest work was the commencement of St. Peter's at Rome. But so many variations were introduced by other architects, that his original design is undiscoverable. He was engaged in many other public buildings, and died in 1514, aged 70 years.

BRA'MAH, JOSEPH, a very ingenious mechanical inventor of the end of the last century. His lock, which defies all attempts at picking; the beer-pumps now universally used in tavern bars; the machine for printing the numbers on Bank of England notes; and above all, the hydraulic press, remain the best proofs of his skill; and these are but a few of his inventions. He died in 1814, aged 66 years.

BRA'MBER, Sussex, a town formerly of some account, but now having neither market nor fair. It is 49 miles from London. Pop. 138.

BRA'MBLE, s. in Botany, a wild prickly shrub; a black-berry, dewberry, and raspberry bush.

BRA'MBLING, s. in Natural History, a bird, the same with the mountain chaffinch.

BRA'MHALL, ARCHBISHOP JOHN, one of the coadjutors of Laud, and the high-church party of the 17th century, in aiming to increase the consideration and power of the clergy. He was imprisoned as one of Strafford's party, but afterwards released. He subsequently left the country, and at the Restoration was made Primate of Ireland. His testimony to the high-church system, and his controversy on the freedom of the will, with Hobbes, have preserved his name from being more profitably forgotten. He died in 1663, aged 70 years.

BRA'MPTON, Cumberland. It is seated on the river Irtshin, not far from the Picts' wall. It is at present but a small place; and near it, on the top of a high hill, is a fortified trench, called the Mote. It is 311 miles from London. Market, Tuesday. Pop. 3304.

BRAIN, s. [brann, Brit. brenna, Ital.] the husk of corn, separated after grinding from the flour.

BRANCH, s. [branche, Fr.] in Botany, the arm, or part of a tree which sprouts from the trunk. Figuratively, any detached part from the whole; a section or subdivision, applied to writings; any part which is joined to another, like a branch to a tree; a part of a pedigree or family. In Hunting, the antlers or shoots of a stag's horns. The branches of a bride, in Farriery, are two pieces of bended iron, that bear the bit-mouth, the chains, and the curb, in the interval between the one and the other.

To BRANCH, v. a. to divide into separate divisions like branches. Figuratively, to adorn with needle-work representing branches.—v. n. to spread in branches; to separate or divide a subject into several parts, used with the particle out; to speak diffusely, to expatiate; to have horns shooting out into antlers.

BRANCHER, s. one that shoots out into branches. In Falconry, a young hawk. [from brancher, Fr.]

BRANCH/LESS, a. without branches; without honour, alluding to the branches of a pedigree.

BRANCHY, a. full of branches; spreading.

BRAND, s. [Sax.] a stick lighted, or fit to be set on fire at one end. Figuratively, a thunderbolt; a mark made on the flesh of a criminal by a burning iron; a species of mildew which attacks ears of corn. Anciently, a sword. [from brando, Ital.]

To BRAND, v. a. [branden, Belg.] to mark with a brand, or burning iron. Figuratively, to reproach as infamous; to stigmatize.

BRANDENBURG, a province of Prussia, bounded by Mecklenburg, Pomerania, W. Prussia, Posen, Silesia, Saxony, Anhalt, and Hanover. It is a level country, and is watered by the Elbe and the Oder, with their tributaries. Corn, fax, tobacco, and the usual agricultural produce, timber, wine, coals, lime, &c. &c., are its natural wealth. It has also good manufactories of woollens, silks, cottons, tobacco, and iron-ware of all descriptions. The population is about 2,000,000, of whom the greater part are Lutherans, but there are also Romanists. The chief town is Berlin: Königsberg, Friedeberg, Potsdam, Frankfurt on the Oder, &c., are also in this province. This was formerly an Electorate, but by Frederick III. this title was laid aside, and Brandenburg and the rest of his dominions formed into the kingdom of Prussia.

BRANDENBURG, a city of Prussia, standing on the Havel, which runs through it. It has a cathedral, a castle, and a college, and is a prosperous manufacturing and trading place. It is 31 miles from Berlin, and its population is about 15,000. Lat. 52. 30. N. Long. 12. 32. E.

BRANDGOOSE, s. in Natural History, a kind of wild fowl, less than a common goose, having its breast and wings of a dark colour.

TO BRANDISH, v. a. [from brand] to wave, shake, or flourish a weapon. Figuratively, to make a parade, or flourish with.

BRANDLING, s. a sort of worm.

BRANDON, Suffolk. It is seated on the Lesser Ouse, over which it has a bridge; and, at a small distance, a ferry. It is 78 miles from London.

BRANDY, s. [brandy, Fr.] in Distillation, a proof spirit, obtained from real wines, or fermented juices of grapes.

BRANGLE, s. squabble; wrangle.

TO BRANGLE, v. n. to wrangle; to squabble.

BRANK, s. the same with buckwheat, French wheat, or crap.

BRANLIN, s. a species of fish, of the salmon kind, which never grows to any great size.

BRANNY, a. having the appearance of bran.

BRANTÔME, an old French writer. He was noble by birth, and travelled through Europe. His works are chiefly biographical; and they give a mournful picture of the morals of the courts of those days. He died in 1614, aged 87 years.

BRASEN-NOSE COLLEGE, Oxford, was founded in the commencement of the 16th century, by Bishop Smyth and Sir R. Sutton. The buildings are very fine; the library was designed by Sir Christopher Wren.

BRASIDAS, a famous Lacedæmonian leader during the Peloponnesian war, in which he played a prominent part. He fell, at length, in a battle before Amphipolis, in which he defeated the Athenians under Cleon, who were laying siege to the place. This was in 422 B. C.

BRASS, s. [brass, Sax.] a factitious yellow metal, made of copper melted with lapis calaminaris. In order to make brass, the calamine is previously roasted; it is then mixed with charcoal and grain copper, and put into large crucibles, which are kept for a considerable time in a heat that will not melt the copper; after a time, the heat is raised so as to fuse it, and the compound metal is then run into ingots. Corinthian brass was a very valuable mixed metal, said to have been accidentally formed by the melting of statues and vessels of different descriptions, when Corinth was burned by the Romans, 146 B. C. Brass is used figuratively for impudence.

BRASSY, a. partaking of brass; hard as brass. Impudent.

BRAT, [Sax.] a child; used to express contempt. Figuratively, products or effects.

BRAVADO, s. [bravada, Span.] a proud boast; haughty defiance or challenge.

BRAVE, a. [Fr.] not daunted or terrified with dangers and difficulties; ready to attempt any dangerous enterprise; grand or noble. Sometimes applied, in an indeterminate manner, to express good or great in the positive degree.

BRAVE, s. [Fr.] a person who is daring beyond the rules of discretion, or bold to excess; a bold defiance or challenge.

TO BRAVE, v. a. to undertake a thing notwithstanding the dangers with which it is attended; to defy contemptuously; to provoke a person to resentment; to bid defiance to; applied, in this last sense, to imitate things with great beauty.

BRAVELY, ad. in such a manner as not to be terrified by difficulties, or daunted by dangers; intrepidly; courageously.

BRAVERY, s. the performance of any great and noble actions, notwithstanding the dangers which attend them; a disposition of mind, which enables a person to accomplish his designs, notwithstanding any obstacles or difficulties which oppose it. Applied to the appearance of things, finery, splendour. Also, false courage, boasting, or boldness.

BRAVO, [Ital.] a man who murders or assassinates another for hire.

BRAVURA, s. in Music, a rapid and long passage, requiring to be uttered in a single breath, for its full effect.

TO BRAWL, v. n. [brouiller, or brauler, Fr.] to quarrel about trifles in a noisy manner; to report in a loud manner; to make a noise; beautifully applied to inanimate things.

BRAWL, s. a noisy quarrel; scurrility.

BRAWLER, s. one who is quarrelsome and noisy at the same time; a word of reproach.

BRAWN, s. [of uncertain etymology,] the flesh or muscular parts of the body; the arm; the flesh of a boar soused or pickled; a boar. Figuratively, vigour or strength.

BRAWNY, a. strong; robust; sinewy; fleshy; of great muscles and strength.

TO BRAY, v. a. [bracan, Sax.] to beat into pieces, or powder in a mortar by means of a pestle.

TO BRAY, v. n. [bruir, Fr.] to make a noise like an ass. Figuratively, to make a disagreeable noise like that of brass.

BRAY, s. the noise of brass; a terrific or disagreeable sound.

BRAY, Berkshire, famous for its changeable vicar, who having been twice a Papist and twice a Protestant in the reigns of Henry VIII., Edward VI., Mary, and Elizabeth, was accused of being a turn-coat; but he replied, that he always stuck fast to his principles, which was, to live and die vicar of Bray! Pop. 3480.

TO BRAZE, v. a. the soldering or joining of two pieces of metal together. Figuratively, to be inured or hardened in impudence.

BRAZEN, a. made of brass. Figuratively, caused by brazen instruments; impudent.

TO BRAZEN, v. n. to deny with great impudence; to behave without concern; to bully. Used with the word out. "He would brazen it out as if he had done nothing." Arbuth.

BRAZENFACE, s. a person who has no sense of shame; an impudent fellow.

BRAZENFACED, a. void of shame, impudent.

BRAZENNESS, s. appearance like brass. Figuratively, undaunted impudence.

BRAZIER, s. one who makes or sells brass ware.

BRAZIL, the largest state of South America, occupying the E. coast from Guiana to Banda Oriental, and bounded inland by La Plata, Paraguay, Bolivia, Peru, and Columbia. Its principal natural features are its rivers, amongst which are the Amazon, the largest in the world; the Branco, the Yapura, and the Madera, its principal tributaries; the Topayos, the Araguay, the S. Francisco, the Parana, and the Paraguay. It is crossed by many considerable chains of mountains, some dividing the basin of the Amazon from that of the Parana, and others lying between the rivers that run northward into the Amazon, or the Atlantic. The loftiest, rising above 8000 feet, are near St. Paulo, not far from the sea coast. The lakes of Patos and Mirim, and those through which the Paraguay flows, are included wholly or partly in Brazil. The climate of this country is in the main temperate and healthy, though it must vary much through so large a tract, diversified with such rivers and mountains, and lying partly in the tropics. The soil of Brazil, though generally rich, has been left to itself, and its spontaneous productions, mostly. In the region about the higher parts of the Amazon is a forest country ten times the extent of the surface of Great Britain, which is impassable except with great labour by the various streams and river-beds; it is called the Selva. More to the south are wide pastures resembling in their physical features the pampas of the regions still more southerly. Alligators, jaguars, pumas, tapirs, horses, wild cattle, monkeys, and serpents abound; the butterflies are very splendid; emus, toucans, humming-birds, parrots, &c. &c. are most common; and whales and turtles are plentiful in the adjacent sea. Gold is its chief mineral production; iron also is found; and in one extensive tract the soil is thoroughly impregnated with salt. Besides the natural resources of wealth, maize, banana, coffee, tobacco, cotton, sugar, &c. &c. are cultivated. These, with the timber, fruits, and other vegetable products, are the staple of its extensive commerce. Although Brazil has been for so long a time receiving settlers from Europe, the effects of European civilization are but partially discernible, and in the interior are native tribes living in all the degradation of the lowest cannibalism. It has been colonized chiefly by the Portuguese, and the slaves which they have brought from Africa. The population consists of about 2,000,000 whites and as many slaves. The numbers of the aborigines cannot be ascertained. The chief places are Rio Janeiro, Bahia, Pernambuco, Maranhão, &c.

BRAZING, s. the act of soldering or joining two pieces of iron together. Sometimes the word is applied to the joining pieces of iron together by beating them red hot upon one another; but this is more properly called welding.

BREACH, s. [breche, Fr.] the dividing or destroying the union between the parts of a thing before joined together. In Fortification, a hole or gap made in any part of the works of a town either by cannon or mines. Figuratively, a defect; the acting contrary to any law; the violating any obligation; quarrel; discord; want of unity.

BREAD, (bred) s. [breod, Sax.] a baked mass of dough formed from the flour of some grain, and a constant part of food. Figuratively, every kind of necessary for the support of life. To eat a person's bread, is sometimes used to imply, that he has been admitted to the most intimate friendship, and supported by his bounty.

BREAD-CHIPPER, s. one that chips bread; a baker's servant, an under butler.

BREAD-CORN, s. corn or grain of which bread is made.

BREAD-FRUIT, s. in Botany, a genus of trees common in the islands of the Pacific Ocean, and in some of the East Indian isles, the pulp of whose fruit resembles new white bread. It is sometimes roasted or baked before being used; at other times it is beaten into a thick paste with water or cocoa-nut milk. It has been transported into the West Indies.

BREAD-ROOM, s. [a sea term] a place in a ship's stern, to keep bread or biscuit.

BREADTH, (breath) s. [from breath, Sax.] the measure of a plain superficies from side to side. In Commerce, the measure of any cloth, or other manufacture, between the two selvages or lists. Within a hair's breadth, denotes extreme nearness, applied to situation; and a very narrow escape, applied to danger.

To BREAK, v. a. [breccan, Sax.] to separate the parts of a thing by force; to burst by violence. Used with the word down, to destroy or demolish. To pierce or penetrate, applied to light. "A dim winking lamp, which feebly broke the gloomy vapours." To diminish or weaken. "Have not some of his vices weakened his body, and broke his health?" Tillot. In horsemanship, to tame or render manageable. "To break the stubborn colt," Dryd. Applied figuratively to the human species. "To break our fierce barbarians into men," Addis. To render a person unable to carry on trade; to make a bankrupt. "Impoverishes the rich, breaks the merchant," South. To wound so as to make the blood appear. "She'll sooner break your head," Dryd. Applied to promises, oaths, or duty, to act counter to, to violate or disregard. "I never more will break an oath," Shak. "To break the pious laws of nature," Dryd. To intercept, prevent, or hinder the effect of. "To break his dreadful fall," Dryd. To interrupt. "His voice broke with sigh," Spect. No. 164. To separate, joined to company. "They were forced to break company," Atter. Used with off, to dissolve; likewise to stop, hinder, or prevent. "To break off so noble a relation," Collier. "To break off all its commerce with the tongue," Addis. With off, to master or lay aside an ill habit. "The French were not quite broken of it," Greec. Used with mind, to discover our sentiments. "Fearful how to break my mind," Dryd. Used with back, to strain or put the back-bone out of joint. In Husbandry, to plough. "The husbandman must first break the land," Davies. To disband, applied to an army. "Solymon, returning to Constantinople, broke up his army," Knollis. To break on the wheel, is to break the bones of a criminal fastened on a wheel.

To BREAK, v. n. to burst. "Whispers the o'er-fraught heart, and bids it tumour," Shak. To open so as to discharge matter, applied to a tumour. To dispel darkness, to dawn, applied to the first appearance of light in a morning. "As soon as the day breaks," Spect. No. 465. "See how the day begins to break," Swift. To decay in health and strength. To burst, to pronounce, or utter, used with from, and the words lips, mouth, or breast. "Whilst from his breast the dreadful accents broke," Dryd. To force a passage, used with the particles through, into, and forth. "To break through with his whole body of horse," Clarend. To intervene without notice or regard to the ceremonies of polite behaviour. "With a magisterial air breaks in upon conversation," Addis. Discarded or deprived of an employ. "When I see a great officer broke," Swift. Joined with loose, to disengage from all obstacles, tie, or other confinement or restraint. "Break loose from all engagements," Tillot. To desist from an undertaking; to quit a habit; to desist suddenly, with the particle off. "Do not perpetually break off in any business," Bacon. When used with off and from, to separate from with some effort or violence. "I must from this enchanting queen break off," Shak. To burst through and discover itself notwithstanding any impediment. "There being so many ways by which a smothered truth is apt to blaze and break out," South. To rage, or appear, applied to a distemper. "A violent fever broke out in the place," Spect. No. 164. In all the various meanings of this verb, the idea of separation, or the effect of sudden force, is always included.

BREAK, s. applied to the first appearance of light in the morning, when the rays of light break the gloom of darkness, it implies the dawn. A pause or interruption, applied to a discourse.

BREAK'ER, s. he who forces a thing asunder; he who divides a thing by force; a wave broken by rocks or sand-banks.

To BREAKFAST, (brekfast) v. n. to eat after having fasted some time; applied to the first meal a person makes in the day.

BREAKFAST, s. that which a person eats at his first meal in the day. In a general sense, any thing to eat after a long want of food.

BREAK'NECK, (brake-neck) s. a precipice or fall, from whence a person would break his neck.

BREAKSTONE, s. in Botany, a common British plant, of which there are several species, the best known covering our hedge-banks in spring with its elegant white flowers.

BREAM, s. [brame, Fr.] in Natural History, a large fish, delighting in rivers or ponds, very broad, with a forked tail, and scales of a golden colour, set with great elegance.

BREAST, (pronounced and formerly written breast) s. [breost, Sax.] in Anatomy, that part of an animal body which contains the heart and lungs. Breasts, the organs of the human frame which secrete milk for the sustenance of the infant. In beasts, the word is applied to that part which extends from the neck to the fore-legs. Figuratively, the heart; bosom; conscience; or soul, which was, by the ancients, supposed to reside in this part.

To BREAST, v. a. to oppose with the breast; to meet; to struggle against.

BREASTBONE, s. in Anatomy, the bone of the breast; the sternum.

BREASTHIGH, a. as high as the breast.

BREASTHOOKS, s. among ship-carpenters, the compassing timbers before, that help to strengthen the stem, and all the fore part of a ship.

BREASTKNOT, s. a bunch or knot of ribands worn by females on or near their breasts.

BREASTPLATE, s. armour worn by way of defence on the breast.

BREASTROPES, s. in a ship, those ropes which fasten the yards to the parrels, and, with the parrels, hold the yards fast to the mast.

BREASTWORK, s. works thrown up as high as the breasts of the defendants in a fortified place, or field; the same with parapet.

BREATH, (breth) s. [brathe, Sax.] the air which proceeds from the mouth, either in the actions of respiration or inspiration; a breeze of wind, or gentle current of air. "Not a breath of wind flies o'er its surface," Addis. Figuratively, life. Used with take, to recover lost breath from too great a fatigue; to cease from labour or hurry; a respite or pause. The same instant, used with in. "You menace and court me in a breath," Dryd.

BREATHABLE, a. that may be breathed; or that is fit to be breathed.

To BREATHE, v. n. to draw in and force out the air at the mouth by the action of the lungs. Figuratively, to live. "Let him breathe a private man in Athens," Shak. To take breath, to recover a damage by means of a respite; to rest. "He followed the victory so hot upon the Scots, he suffered them not to breathe," Spem. Used with in, to enter by the action of breathing or respiration. "To whose foul mouth no wholesome air breathes in," Shak. —v. a. it implies to fill with, and discharge the lungs of air, by the actions of inspiration and respiration. Used with into, to act upon by breathing; to animate. "He breathed into us the breath of life," Lucy of Peck. To force out of the mouth, with the particle out. "Who breathed out nothing but flame," Spec. No. 223. To make long-winded by exercise. "The greyhounds are as swift as breathed stags," Shak. To sound by the breath, applied to wind instruments. "To breathe the flute," Prior. To send up in vapours appearing like the breath in frosty weather. "His altar breathed ambrosial odours," Par. Lost. To sigh, or offer up, without being heard. "I have toward heaven breathed a secret vow," Shak. In Surgery, to open by a lancet. "To breathe a vein," Dryd.

BRE/ATHER, s. one who enjoys life; one who is alive; he that causes or animates by his breath, alluding to God's breathing into man the breath of life, as the Scripture expresses it.

BRE/ATHING, s. the act of fetching breath. Figuratively, a sigh of devotion; secret prayer conceived in the mind, but not uttered in words; an aspiration. Breathing-places, vents, or chinks, that let in fresh air.

BRE/ATHLESS, (breathless) a. out of breath, or scarce able to breathe from fatigue or hurry. Figuratively, dead.

BRE/CHIN, Forfarshire, Scotland. An ancient town, containing several interesting antiquarian relics. The town-hall and church are fine buildings. The people are chiefly supported by manufactures. It is 45 miles from Edinburgh. Pop. 7500.

BRE/CKNOCK, or BRE/CON, Brecknockshire, Wales. It is called by the Welch, Aber-Honddu, and it is situated at the confluence of the rivers Honddu and Usk. It is an ancient place, as appears by the Roman coins that have often been dug up here. It is a large town, containing three churches, one of which is collegiate, and stands at the west end. The houses are well built, and it formerly had a wall, with three gates, and a stately castle. The assizes are kept here, and it has a good trade in clothing. It is 162 miles from London. Markets, Wednesday and Saturday. Pop. 5701.

BRE/CKNOCKSHIRE, a county of S. Wales, bounded on the E. by Hereford and Monmouth, on the S. by Glamorgan, on the W. by Caermarthen and Cardigan, and on the N. by Radnor. It is 35 miles in length, and 30 in breadth. It is full of mountains, some of which are exceeding high, particularly Monuchendy-hill, not far from Brecknock, which is nearly 3000 feet high. It has little or no mineral wealth. However, there are large fertile plains and valleys, which yield plenty of corn, and feed great numbers of cattle. It has 67 parishes, and 4 market towns, and there were formerly 9 castles. Its population is 55,603. It returns two members to parliament.

BRE/DA, a large, strong, and beautiful city of N. Brabant, containing several public buildings, 4 spacious market-places, which are plentifully supplied with fresh and salt water fish, and a fine castle. It is seated on the rivers Aa and Merch, 48 miles from Amsterdam. Pop. about 14,000. Lat. 51. 35. N. Long. 4. 47. E.

BREDE, s. [see BRAID] a border wrought with the needle in different colours resembling flowers, &c.

BREECH, a. (breacan, Sax.) the back and lower part of the body. Applied to a piece of cannon, the hinder part, or that part behind the touch-hole.

BREECHES, (briches, Sax.) it has no singular; that part of a man's dress that covers his thighs and breech. Breeches formed no part of the ancient Grecian or Roman dress, but were derived to us from our ancestors, the northern barbarians of Britain and Germany. To wear the breeches, is a phrase implying, that a woman usurps more authority over her husband than becomes her sex.

To BREED, v. a. [brædan, Sax.] to produce, bring forth, to generate; to educate, nourish, or bring up; to keep animals for multiplying their species. Sometimes used with the particles to and up to. Figuratively, to occasion or cause. Applied to place, to give birth to. To cut, applied to the teeth.

To BREED, v. n. to be big with child, to be pregnant; to propagate, or increase by propagation; to raise or increase a breed. BREED, s. a species of animals; a cast or kind; that which is produced at one hatching; offspring, applied to mankind.

BREE/DER, s. that which produces or is the cause of any thing; that which educates or brings up; a person who is not barren; one who raises a breed; a whitlow.

BREE/DING, s. education, instruction. Figuratively, genteel and polite behaviour; the method taken in rearing a child.

BREEST, s. (brisa, Sax.) in Natural History, a stinging fly, called also the gad-fly.

BREEZE, s. (brezza, Ital.) a gentle, cooling, pleasant breath of wind. In Navigation, a shifting wind blowing from the sea and land alternately at certain hours, and sensible only near the coasts.

BREEZY, a. refreshed by breezes.

BRE/HONS, the provincial judges among the ancient Irish, by whom justice was administered, and controversies were decided. They were a distinct family, who derived their support from certain lands, appropriated for that purpose, and from the eleventh part of all the fines in criminal causes. The laws observed by them were called Brehon laws.

BREMEN, a free state of Germany, the whole a vast plain, almost surrounded by the Weser and the Elbe, with Oldenburg and the German Ocean on the W. It contains 111 Lutheran churches, and 137 pastors, under a general superintendent. The air is cold, but the country is well peopled, and fertile in grain, fruits, flax, &c., and produces large breeds of cattle. They have manufactures of cordage, linen, and woollen stuffs. In the winter it is subject to inundations. Its population is about 60,000. The capital is Bremen, a large, populous, and imperial city, seated on the Weser. The cathedral, and some of the churches, the town-hall, and bishop's palace, &c., are fine buildings. There are some great curiosities here; wines of incredible age stored in the old town-hall; and the observatory whence Olbers discovered two of the asteroids. The town has some small manufactures. Its population is about 45,000. Lat. 53. 4. N. Long. 8. 45. E.

BREMEN, a duchy of Hanover, adjoining the free state of the same name, and bounded by the German Ocean, and Oldenburg, Holstein, Lüneburg, and Brunswick. The Elbe and the Weser are its rivers. It is a low and in some parts most desolate tract, but is being brought under the plough. It pastures a considerable stock of cattle; and has a little fishing trade. It has a population of about 190,000. Stade and Verden are its chief places.

BRE/NNUS, the name of a Gaulish chief, who, according to a lay of ancient Rome, entered Italy, and took Rome, all but the Capitol. The heroism of one man saved that. The Romans at length were buying Brennus off from their ruined city, when one of the most famous generals of Rome, who had been banished, returned with an army and utterly destroyed the invaders. This was about 380 B. C.

BRENT, a. burnt. Obsolete.

BRENT, Devonshire. It is 200 miles from London. Market, Saturday. Pop. 1237.

BRENTFORD, Middlesex, seated on the river Thames, into which at the W. end of the town flows a rivulet called the Brent. It is 7 miles from London. Market, Saturday. Pop. 2174.

BRENTWOOD, Essex, situated on a fine eminence, 18 miles from London. Market, Wednesday. Pop. 2362.

BRE/SCIA, or BRESCIA'no, a province of Lombardy, in Italy, bounded on the N. by the Tyrol, on the N. and W. by Bergamo, on the W. and S. by Cremona, and on the E. by Mantua and Verona. It is a mountainous district, and is watered by the Oglio, the Mella, and the Chiesa. It abounds in wine, oil, wheat, and other grain; it also contains mines of iron, copper, &c., marble of different kinds, silk, &c. The population is about 325,000. Besides the capital, there are Chiari, Lonato, Pontevico, and numerous other towns and villages. Brescia, the capital, stands near the Mella, and is a handsome town, with some trade arising from its manufactures of cloths, &c., and the character of the surrounding country. It has a fine cathedral, several splendid palaces, a good library, and many hundreds of fountains. It is about 100 miles from Venice. Population about 35,000. Lat. 45. 31. N. Long. 10. 13. E.

BRE/SLAW, or WRA/TSLAW, a large city of Germany, capital of Silesia, with a university. It is seated at the confluence of the rivers Oder and Ohlau, which last runs through several of the streets. It has several large squares, and the public buildings are very stately; the streets are straight and wide, and the houses generally well built. Its manufactures are various and extensive, and its trade considerable. Its population is nearly 100,000. It is 113 miles from Prague. Lat. 51. 6. N. Long. 17. 2. E.

BREST, a strong town in the dept. of Finisterre, France, seated on the N. side of a large commodious harbour, or bay, opening to the Atlantic, which has, however, a narrow and difficult entrance. The town stands upon a declivity, and the streets are narrow and crooked; but the quay is above a mile in length, and here is every accommodation for the shipping and marine service. It is 127 miles from Paris. Population about 30,000. Lat. 48. 23. N. Long. 4. 28. W.

BREST, s. in Architecture, the member of a column, named likewise torus, or tore.

BRET, s. in Natural History, a round flat fish of the turbot kind; called likewise burt or brut.

BRETAGNE, a ci-devant province on the E. of France, now formed into 5 departments, viz. Côtes du Nord, Finisterre, Ille et Vilain, Loire Inférieure, and Morbihan. Its original population were akin to the ancient Britons, the Welch, and other Celtic races, and the ancient language is still much used.

BRETHREN, s. the plural of brother, which see.

BRETTON CAPE, an island near the E. coast of North America, between 45 and 47 degrees of N. latitude. It is separated from Nova Scotia by a narrow strait called Canso, and is about 140 miles in length, and 50 in breadth. It is a barren country, producing little corn or grass, and in winter is excessively cold. It is of very small importance to England, but it commands the navigation of the river St. Lawrence. There is an excellent fishery on this coast.

BREVE, s. in Music, a long note, formerly pricked in the form of a square without any tail, equivalent to two measures, minims, semibreves, or bars, and is now wrote thus,  $\overline{\text{—}}$ . In Law, any writ directed to the chancellor, judges, sheriffs, or other officers, whereby a person is summoned, or attached, to answer in the king's court, &c.

BREVEY, s. among the French, denoted a grant of some favour or donation from the king; not much unlike a warrant, or the king's letters-patent, with us.

BREVIARY, [brevarium, Lat.] an abridgment or compendium. Also, a daily office, or book of divine service, in the Romish church.

BREVIER, (bre-ver) s. a small printing letter.

BREVITY, s. [brevis, Lat.] applied to writings, the expressing a sentiment in very few words; conciseness; shortness.

To BREW, v. a. [bræwen, Belg.] to make beer or ale, by mixing malt and hops with boiling water, and fermenting it afterwards with yeast. Figuratively, to make any drink by boiling different ingredients; to contrive; to plot.—v. n. to perform the office of a brewer; to make ale or beer.

BREWER, s. one who makes malt liquor, and sells it.

BREWHOUSE, s. a place or house wherein beer or ale is made.

BREWING, s. the process or method of making ale or beer; the quantity of liquor produced by brewing.

BREWIS, s. a piece of bread boiled in a pot, together with meat. It seems anciently to have meant broth. "What an ocean of brevis shall I swim in."

BREWWOOD, Staffordshire, 10 miles S. by W. of Stafford. Market, Tuesday. Pop. 3641.

BRIAN-BOROMHE, (Brian-ború) one of the ancient kings of Munster, Ireland, who obtained at last the sovereignty of the whole island. He is still celebrated in the national songs for his victories over the Danes, and for his heroic death at Clontarf, in 1014.

BRIAR, s. [brær, Sax.] in Botany, the wild species of rose-tree. Also, generally, any thorny wild shrub. Sweet-briar, a wild species of rose, whose leaves are very fragrant.

BRIARY, s. a full of briars, or thorny plants.

BRIBE, s. a gift or reward given to a person to engage him to determine contrary to the merits of a cause; something given to a person to stifle evidence; something given to an elector, to engage him to vote for a particular candidate.

BRIBERY, s. one that pays for corrupt practices.

BRIBERY, s. the act of giving a person money to engage him to any particular side or undertaking.

BRICK, s. [brick, Belg.] a flat lump of reddish or white earth, formed in wooden moulds of various sizes; first dried in the air, and afterwards burned in a kiln or clamp. The invention of bricks must have been very ancient, as we find they were employed in erecting the tower of Babel. The Romans did not burn their bricks, but dried them in the air four or five years.

To BRICK, v. a. to lay or build with bricks.

BRICKBAT, s. a piece or fragment of a brick.

BRICKDUST, s. the dust of bricks; or the powder of bricks made by rubbing them on each other, or pounding them.

BRICKING, s. among builders, the counterfeiting of a brick wall on plaster, which is done by smearing it over with red ochre, and making the joints with an edged tool; these last are afterwards filled with a fine plaster.

BRICK-KILN, s. a place where bricks are burnt.

BRICKLAYER, s. one whose business it is to lay and cement bricks in a wall or building. Tilers and bricklayers were incorporated 10 Eliz., under the name of Master and Wardens of the Society of Freemen of the Mystery and Art of Tilers and Bricklayers.

BRICKMAKER, s. one who makes bricks.

BRIDAL, a. that belongs to a wedding.

BRIDE, s. [brýd, Sax.] a name given to a woman the day of her marriage, and sometimes after the wedding day is over.

BRIDEBED, s. the bed on which a new-married couple lie.

BRIDECAKE, s. the cake with which the guests are entertained at a wedding.

BRIDEGROOM, s. a new-married man.

BRIDEAIDS and BRIDEMEN, s. the attendants on the bride and bridegroom at a wedding.

BRIDEWELL, s. a house of correction near Fleet-ditch, London, built by Henry VIII. as a royal palace for the reception of the emperor Charles V. It is an institution of a mixed nature, partaking of the hospital, the prison, and the workhouse. Houses of correction are generally called so, from this one, which was the first in England.

BRIDGE, s. [bric, Sax.] a building of stone or timber, consisting of one or more arches, intended for the passage of men or carriages from one side of the river to another. Figuratively, the upper part of the nose; in violins, &c. a piece of wood, which stands upright on the belly of the instrument, and supports the strings. Suspension bridges are those which are sustained by chains fastened securely at the extremities. A draw bridge is made fast only at one end with hinges, so that the other may be lifted by chains fixed to it. A swing bridge is made to turn round on a pivot at one end so as to be removable to allow vessels to pass by. A flying bridge is made of pontoons, leather-boats, cables, &c., covered with planks for the passage of an army. A cradle of boats is made of copper or wooden boats, fastened with stakes or anchors, and covered with planks. Prov. Let every man praise the bridge he goes over, i. e. Speak not ill of him who hath done you courtesy, or whom you have made use of to your benefit, or do commonly make use of.

BRIDGEND, Glamorganshire, Wales. It is seated on the river Ogmore, which divides it into two parts, but they are joined together by a stone bridge. The market is considerable for corn, cattle, and provisions. It is 177 miles from London. Market, Saturday. Pop. 1764.

BRIDGENORTH, Shropshire, a town seated on the Severn, which divides it into two parts, joined by a stone bridge. The streets are broad and paved, and its situation is commodious for trade. Its fairs are much resorted to for cattle, sheep, butter, cheese, bacon, linen cloth, hops, and other merchandise, and it has some manufactures. It is 139 miles from London. Market, Saturday. Pop. 5770.

BRIDGETOWN, the capital of Barbadoes, situated in the S. W. part of the island, on Carlisle Bay, which is capable of containing 500 ships. The town lies at the entrance of St. George's Valley, which runs several miles into the country. Here is a free-school, an hospital, and a college, and recently a fine cathedral. The streets are broad, and the wharfs and quays commodious and well fortified. Lat. 13. 10. N. Long. 58. 38. W.

BRIDGEWATER, Somersetshire. The streets are wide and well paved. It stands on the Parret, about 10 miles from the British Channel, and ships of 200 tons burthen come up to the town. They import the manufactures of Manchester, Liverpool, Birmingham, &c., which are conveyed from hence to the internal parts of Devonshire and Cornwall. The Parret is subject to the peculiar and dangerous rise of the spring tides, called the Bore. It is 137 miles from London. Markets, Thursday and Saturday, for corn, cattle, &c., and particularly for cheese. Pop. 10,449.

BRIDGEWATER, FRANCIS, DUKE OF, commonly called the father of our inland navigation, from the fact of his having projected, and, by the aid of Brindley's skill, carried out the first extensive modern canal in England, which conducted greatly to the prosperity of Manchester. He ultimately gained great wealth by his projects, and died in 1803, aged 67 years.

BRIDLE, s. [bridel, Sax.] the bit, headstall, fillet, throatband, reins, and noseband, which are fastened on a horse's head to manage and govern him. Figuratively, a restraint, curb, check.

To BRIDLE, v. a. [bridlian, Sax.] to manage a horse by means of a bridle. Figuratively, to check; or restrain; or keep within bounds.—v. n. to hold up the head in an affected manner, applied to the attitudes of a woman.

BRIDLINGTON, or BURLINGTON, Yorkshire, E. R. A sea-port seated on a pretty large bay, near Flamborough Head. It has a commodious quay for ships, and is a place of good trade, and recently has been much used as a watering-place. It is 208 miles from London. Market, Saturday. Pop. 6070.

BRIDPORT, Dorsetshire. It has a safe port for about 40 vessels, and stands on a little hill near the English Channel. The market is remarkable for hemp, and it furnishes lines, twines, nets, sail-cloth, &c. to the Newfoundland fishery. It is 135 miles from London. Market, Saturday. Pop. 4787.

BRIEF, (breff) s. [breif, Fr.] appropriated to language, short, concise, opposed to diffusive or verbose.

BRIEF, s. [Belg.] a short and expressive account or description. In Law, a writ whereby a person is summoned to answer to any action; an abridgment of a client's case, containing in a concise manner the proofs and objections that may be made by the contrary party, with answers to them, wrote out for the instruction of a counsel on a trial. In Canon Law, letters-patent, generally read in churches, giving a licence for making a collection all over the kingdom; also a statement of a case of distress, used by persons soliciting pecuniary aid from their neighbours.

BRIEFLY, ad. in few words; concisely.

BRIEFNESS, s. the quality of expressing a thing in a few words; conciseness; shortness.

BRIEU/X, ST. the capital of dept. Côtes du Nord, France. It stands on a small bay of the English Channel, at the mouth of the river Gonet, over which it has a bridge. It has an old Gothic cathedral, a good library, a college, &c., and an hospital. It has some small manufactures, and a good shipping trade. Its population is about 11,000. It is 270 miles from Paris.

BRIGADE, s. [brigade, Fr.] in the military art, a part or division of an army, whether horse or foot, under the command of a brigadier-general. A brigade of an army, is a body of horse of two or three regiments, or from two to six battalions of foot. A brigade of a troop, is a third part of it, when consisting of fifty soldiers; but only a sixth, when it consists of one hundred: that is, a troop divided into three brigades in the former case, and into six in the latter.

BRIGADE-MAJOR, s. an officer appointed by the brigadier-general, to assist him in the management and ordering of his brigade; and he there acts as a major does in any army.

BRIGADIER-GENERAL, s. an officer commanding a brigade of horse or foot, and ranking next below a major-general.

BRIGANDINE, s. [brigand, Fr.] a kind of ancient defensive armour, consisting of thin pliable plates, like scales; a coat of mail.

BRIGANTINE, s. [brigantin, Fr.] a small, light, flat, open vessel, with twelve or fifteen benches on each side for rowers, going both with sails and oars, fit for boarding, or giving chase, and chiefly used by corsairs.

BRIGG, Lincolnshire, with a good market for cattle and provisions. It is seated on the river Ankam. Some call it Glamford-bridges. It is 153 miles from London. Pop. 1822.

BRIGGS, an eminent mathematician of the 16th century, who was Gresham Professor in London, and Savilian Professor at Oxford. He completed the invention of logarithms, which had been made by Napier. He died in 1630, aged about 75 years.

BRIGHT, a. [beort, Sax.] shining, splendid; glittering with light. Figuratively, strong, clear; or that which introduces more light into the mind. Noble, shining, illustrious, or that which sets a person in a conspicuous point of view, applied to action. Applied to sagacity, quick, penetrating.

To BRIGHTEN, v. a. to make a thing shine which was dull, or covered either with rust or dust. Figuratively, to disperse. To make famous; to render conspicuous; to heighten, applied to character.—v. n. to shine again after being obscured.

BRIGHTLY, ad. with splendour; with lustre. Figuratively, in such a manner as will raise an advantageous idea of ourselves.

BRIGHTNESS, s. the lustre which appears on the sight of burnished metals, or cut diamonds; splendour. Figuratively, goodness; sagacity; perfections that make a person conspicuous.

"The brightness of his parts," Prior.

BRIGHTON, or BRIGHTHELMSTONE, Sussex. This large town is beautifully situated on the S. coast of England, and is a place of great resort in the bathing season, and during the latter part of autumn. It is of very recent growth, having been little beyond a fishing village till it was selected as a marine residence by George IV. It is a finely built place, especially towards the sea; and the royal palace, called the Pavilion, attracts attention by its grotesque style. It has a very fine chain pier, which is used as a promenade and landing-place. It is about 50 miles from London. Markets, Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday. Pop. 46,661.

BRIILLIANCY, s. [brillant, Fr.] greatness of lustre, or splendour which dazzles the eyes.

BRIILLIANT, a. [brillant, Fr.] sparkling, or reflecting the rays of light with great lustre.

BRIILLIANT, s. [briller, Fr.] a diamond quite flat underneath, and cut on its upper part in triangular faces, the uppermost ending in a point.

BRIM, s. [brymne, Sax.] the edge or extremity of a thing, as a vessel containing any liquor or fluid, a river, a hat, &c.

To BRIM, v. a. to fill full; to fill up to the brim.—v. n. to be full to the top.

BRIMFUL, a. full to the top. Figuratively, ready to run over by being charged too full.

BRIMMER, s. a vessel or bowl filled up to the brim.

BRIMMING, a. filled to the top.

BRIMSTONE, s. See SULPHUR.

BRINDED, part. [brin, Fr.] streaked; marked with streaks or branches; tabby.

BRINDISI, the ancient BRUNDISIUM, a decayed city of Naples, 35 miles N. W. of Otranto. Pop. about 6000.

BRINDLE, s. applied to the streaks upon the skin of a beast, of a different or darker colour than the other parts.

BRINDED, part. marked with streaks of a different or darker colour, applied to the skin of a beast.

BRINDLEY, JAMES, the famous canal engineer of the last century. He commenced life as an agricultural labourer, and was afterwards a millwright, in which business he was often employed in making and repairing machinery of a more complicated character, and gained a name for original skill. After being employed by the Duke of Bridgewater to construct his projected canal from his mines to Manchester, and having succeeded, his principal employment afterwards lay in planning and executing navigable canals. His name stands amongst the first in his line in this country. He died in 1772, aged 56 years.

BRINE, s. [brine, Sax.] any salt liquor; sea-water; the liquor or pickle which proceeds from salted meat. Figuratively, the sea; tears.

To BRING, v. a. pret. I brought, part. pass. brought; [bringan, Sax.] to cause a person to come, or to fetch a thing to another, distinguished from carry, because it may then be done by another; but the word bring implies that a thing is done by oneself. Figuratively, to procure; to produce. Used with the particle in, to introduce. Used with back, to make a person or thing return; to recover; to recall. Used with to, to lead, or conduct; to induce, to prevail upon. Used with about, to accomplish. Used with off, to clear from any charge; to free from danger. Used with over, to prevail on, or induce a person to alter his sentiments; to convert or seduce. Used with out, to discover a thing which is concealed. Used with under, to subdue, vanquish, or tyrannize over. Used with up, to instruct; educate; to teach; to introduce a fashion; to advance, or come forward with, applied to an army. "Bring up your men," Shak. SXON. To bring implies conveying a thing ourselves from one place to another, in opposition to the word send. To fetch, implies going to a place in order to bring.

BRINISH, a. [brine and ice, Sax.] like brine; saltish.

BRINK, s. [brink, Dan.] the extreme edge of a river, precipice, &c. Figuratively, the highest degree of danger.

BRINY, a. tasting saltish, or like brine, or any other liquor that resembles it.

BRIONY, s. See BRYONY.

BRISK, a. [brasque, Fr.] lively, gay, airy; full of vivacity and spirits, applied to the disposition. Vigorous, full of activity and power, applied to action. Sparkling, mantling, applied to liquors. Bright, glaring, and strongly affecting the sight, applied to colours.

To BRISK UP, v. n. to advance in a sprightly, lively, and nimble manner.

BRISKET, s. [brichet, Fr.] the breast of an animal, particularly that part which lies next to the ribs.

BRISKLY, ad. in a brisk, lively, active, and spirited manner.

BRISKNESS, s. a light, airy, and cheerful disposition; vivacity, or liveliness; activity, gaiety.

BRISOT, JACQUES PIERRE, one of the Girondin party, during the French Revolution, who being born in humble circumstances, devoted himself to literary and philosophical studies, and gained some applause by his writings: he entered warmly into the views of the Americans during the war of Independence, and into the Revolution in France. He was a man of some account in the legislative assembly, and stood up earnestly for the freedom of the negroes. He was involved in the fall of his party, and guillotined in 1793, aged 39 years.

BRISTLE, s. [brist, Sax.] the strong hair which grows and stands upright on the back of a boar, &c.

To BRISTLE UP, v. a. to erect the bristles upright when enraged, applied to a hog. Figuratively, to grow angry; to advance to an enemy in order to attack him, or revenge an affront, used with the particle up.—v. n. to stand erect like the bristles of a hog.

BRISTLY, a. in Botany, encompassed with a substance resembling hairs. Thicks set with hairs or bristles.

BRISTOL, Gloucestershire and Somersetshire. This sea-port stands at the confluence of the Avon and the Frome, about 9 miles from where the Avon discharges itself into the Bristol Channel. It occupies a noble position, rising range above range of houses to the top of a hill; but the old part is narrow and ill built, whilst the new parts are magnificent, the houses being made of stone, and much in the same style as Bath. The docks and harbours are extensive, as are the quays, to which the largest ships have access. The public buildings are numerous; amongst the finest of them may be mentioned the churches, the exchange, the railway buildings, the scientific and literary institutions, &c. Bristol manufactures sugar, glass, floor-cloth, brass, iron, &c. &c. It imports goods from all quarters of the world, but from Ireland most abundantly. But the trade has not lately been so great as it was. There are several colleges and high schools in this town. The neighbourhood is most beautiful and healthy, abounding in objects of curiosity, especially to the botanist and geologist. It is 110 miles from London. Markets, Wednesday, Friday, and Saturday. Pop. 140,158.

BRISTOL, a port of Rhode Island, United States, seated on Narragansett Bay, with a good harbour. It is extensively engaged both in the coasting trade and fisheries. The view from the summit of Mount Hope is most beautiful. It is 418 miles from Washington. Pop. 3490.

BRISTOL CHANNEL, that arm of the Atlantic, lying between Cornwall, and Somersetshire, and Wales, into which the river Severn discharges itself. More correctly, it is the mouth of the Severn.

BRISTOL-STONE, s. a kind of soft diamond found in Vincent's Rock, near Bristol.

BRITAIN, (GREAT) the title given to the whole island, including England, Wales, and Scotland, since the union of the two kingdoms. Pop. 18,526,925.

BRITAIN, (New) an island in the most easterly part of the Indian Ocean, near New Guinea, nearly equal to Ireland in size. It has been but little explored, but it is, in the interior, mountainous and well wooded, and has very fertile plains near the shore. The palms and other fruit trees are numerous. Pigs, dogs, &c., are the only animals; and the people are of that kind of negro appearance, which is often met with in the South Seas. They are very barbarous and fierce.

BRITANNIA, the Roman name of Great Britain. Its origin is not known. Very little is known respecting the inhabitants, save that they were of Celtic origin, and that the tribes inhabiting the shores nearest to the continent, had migrated thither for the purpose of such trade as was carried on amongst barbarians. It appears that they resembled in their customs the native tribes of N. America; but in the cruelty of their religious rites they surpassed most other heathen. The first civilized visitor was Julius Caesar, who in 55 b. c. invaded the island, and in the following year gained a permanent lodgement for the Romans. In the early times of the empire it was thoroughly subdued, and made a Roman province. During the later and weaker times of the empire it proved a fruitful source of trouble to the Romans: being remote from the seat of authority, barbarians both native and visitant assailed it; whilst the soldiers were engaged in continual revolts, and showed their power by elevating one after another of their favourite commanders to the purple. At length, by about 426 a. d., the last sign of Roman sway was removed, and the small, scattered, degenerate relics of the ancient Britons were left to themselves; the last days of the empire being impending.

BRITISH, a. belonging to Britain.

BRITISH AMERICA, that part of the N. American continent which belongs to Great Britain, the boundary of which from the United States passes from the W. side of New Brunswick to Montreal, and follows the course of the St. Lawrence and the lakes to the W. side of Lake Superior, whence it crosses directly to the Rocky Mountains, and thence to the Pacific on the 49th parallel, including, however, Vancouver's Island. It is divided from the Russian possessions by a line drawn from the Arctic Ocean to Mount St. Elias, in 140 W. Long., and thence, bordering on the Pacific, to 55 N. Lat. See CANADA, HUDSON'S BAY, &c. &c.

BRITISH INDIA, that part of Hindustan in Asia, which is under the control of the British government, and is included in the presidencies of Bengal, Bombay, and Madras. Which names see. See also, EAST INDIA COMPANY, HINDUSTAN, &c. &c.

BRITISH MUSEUM, a prodigious collection of antiquities of all nations, and modern curiosities, specimens in every department of natural history and geology, books, manuscripts, prints, &c. &c., made under the direction of government, and preserved in a large building, formerly Montague House, near Russell Square, London. It is open to the public for three days in every week, excepting at certain times; and to artists, two other days weekly. There are attached to the library two spacious reading rooms, to which admission is granted by the principal librarian, and which are open every day, except at certain times of the year.

BRITTLE, a. [britan, Sax.] that breaks or crumbles to pieces with the least force or violence.

BRITTLENESS, s. that quality which renders a thing easy to break.

BRITTON, the name of an ancient writer on law, of whom nothing is known save his work, which has always been held in the highest repute.

BRIXHAM, Devonshire. A sea-port on the S. side of Torbay, with a good harbour, and a considerable shipping trade and fishery. The lower part of the town is badly built and kept, but the newer part is very good. It is 100 miles from London. Market, Tuesday. Pop. 5684.

BRIZE, s. the same with the gad-fly.

BROACH, s. [broche, Fr.] an instrument or stake forced through a joint of meat, by means of which it is turned round, and its parts are successively exposed to the action of the fire, in roasting; an ornamental part of dress, fashioned to hold the two extremities of a scarf or cravat together, by a pin which moves on a hinge, like the tongue of a buckle, passes through both the parts, and is caught in a loop.

To BROACH, v. a. to spit; to pierce with a spit. Figuratively, to force a spicket or cock into a vessel in order to draw the liquor; to tap; to open; to wound, so as to let out blood. To be the author of, applied to doctrine or opinion.

BROACHER, s. a spit or stake to roast meat on. Figuratively, the first inventor, author, or founder of any opinion or doctrine.

BROAD, (bröd or bræd) a. [brad, Sax.] wide, or the extent between the sides of a thing; distinguished from length, which is the extent or space between the two ends. Figuratively, large or great. "A broad mixture of folly," Locke. Diffusive, clear, and bright. "Appears in the broadest light," Decay of Piety. Coarse, gross, obscene, applied to language. "In some places he is broad and fulsome," Dryden. With the eyes wide open. "He was broad awake," Bold, not delicate; not reserved. Broad as long, implies equal on the whole. SYNON. By broad is understood extended each way; as, broad cloth; a broad brimmed hat. By wide is meant broad to a certain degree; as, three inches wide; four feet wide.

BROAD-CAST, s. denotes the method of sowing corn, turnips, pulse, grasses, &c., by scattering the seed with the hand. This is called the old Husbandry, to distinguish it from the practice of drilling, or dropping seeds, which are called the new Husbandry.

BROAD-CLOTH, s. manufacture made of sheep's wool of our own growth, mixed with that of Segovia in Spain, so called from its breadth.

BROAD-EYED, a. that can see to a great distance round; or has a very large prospect in sight. "In spite of broad-eyed, watchful day," Shak. This conveys a noble image to the mind, and is an elegant use of the term.

BROAD-LEAVED, a. that has broad leaves.

BROADLY, ad. in a broad manner.

BROADNESS, s. breadth; the extent between the selvages or list of cloth; the space between the sides of a thing. Figuratively, obscenity, immodesty.

BROAD-SHOULDERED, a. measuring much, or of great width, between the shoulders.

BROADSIDE, s. the firing all the guns on one side of a ship into an enemy's vessel. Figuratively, an attack; or a positive and unexpected charge of something criminal, by way of accusation or reply.

BROADSWORD, s. a sharp-edged cutting sword, with a broad blade.

BROADWATER, Sussex. It is 63 miles from London. Pop. 5345.

BROADWISE, ad. according to the direction of the breadth. BROCADE, s. [brocado, Span.] a stuff of gold, silver, or silk, raised and embellished with flowers, foliages, or other ornaments.

BROCADED, a. woven with flowers, or ornaments of various colours. Figuratively, drest in brocade.

BROCCII, GIOVANNI BATTISTA, an eminent Italian mineralogist and geologist, to whom science is indebted for most acute investigations into the character of the sub-apennine beds of his native country, which established a criterion of the age of strata by the proportion of fossils with recent analogues in them. He died in a scientific expedition in Egypt in 1820, aged 54 years.

BROCCOLI, s. [Ital.] in Botany, a species of cabbage.

BROCK, s. [broc, Sax.] a badger; also, a hart of the third year; also, a hind of the same year, a brock's sister.

BROCKEN, the name of the loftiest point of the Harz Mountains in Germany, 3658 feet high. This mountain has always been associated with tales of witchcraft, &c. The spectre of the Brocken is the shadow of any one standing on the summit of this mountain, at sunrise, projected on the mist on the other side of the hill from the sun. It was for a long time regarded as quite unaccountable.

BROCKET, s. a red deer of two years old.

BROGUE, (brög) s. (brog, Ir.) a wooden shoe; a corrupt or vicious manner of speaking or pronouncing.

TO BROIDER, v. a. [broidir, Fr.] to adorn with figures of needlework.

BROIL, s. [brouiller, Fr.] a quarrel, contest, tumult, or war. TO BROIL, v. a. [bruler, Fr.] to dress meat either by placing it immediately on the coals, or on a gridiron over a fire. Neuterly, to overhear by immoderate exercise. Used improperly for to burn.

BROKENHEARTED, a. in a condition which admits of no comfort; dejected; in despair; disconsolate.

BROKENLY, ad. in an unconnected manner; without any connexion; by loose sentences.

BROKEN-MEAT, s. fragments, or pieces of meat taken from a table.

BROKENWINDED, a. a term applied to a horse suffering from the rupture of some of the cells of the lungs, occasioned by inflammation, or violent exercise at a time when the lungs could not bear it, and observed most frequently in horses kept low by poor and coarse food.

BROKER, s. one who buys or sells, or transacts business for another, charging a commission. By abuse, the word is applied to those who deal in second-hand goods. Exchange-broker, is one who concludes bargains for others, relating to the remitting of money, or bills of exchange. Stock-brokers, are those who buy or sell, for others, parts or shares in the joint stock of any public company, as the Bank, India, &c. Pawn-brokers, are those who lend money to the necessitous, upon a pledge of goods given as security. Ship-brokers, persons who arrange all matters needful in shipping trade for the owners, freighting it, insuring it, and collecting the freight of a returned cargo, &c.

BROKERAGE, s. the fee or pay given to a broker for negotiating business.

BROMINE, s. [brömis, Gr.] in Chemistry, an elementary body discovered in sea-water, in the Dead Sea, in various salt-springs in Germany, and England. It has been found also in the ashes of sea-weeds, and of some molluscous marine animals. It is a liquid at common temperature, and of a red colour, with a disagreeable odour, and powerful taste. It possesses many peculiar and remarkable properties, in some resembling chlorine, and it is fatal to animal life.

BROMLEY, s. It is on the road to Tunbridge, and is very delightfully situated. It is 10 miles from London. Market, Thursday. Pop. 4325.

BROMLEY, Staffordshire. See ABBOTS-BROMLEY. Pop. 1508.

BROMSGROVE, Worcestershire. It has considerable manufactures of worsted, linsey, linen cloths, fish-hooks, needles, and nails. It is situated near the rise of the river Salwarp, 115 miles from London. Market, Tuesday, for corn, cattle, and provisions. Pop. 9371.

BROMYARD, Herefordshire. It is situated in a country full of orchards. It is 125 miles from London. Market, Monday. Pop. 2927.

BRONCHIA, (brónkia) s. [Gr.] in Anatomy, the ramifications of the trachea; or certain branches or hollow tubes belonging to the windpipe, that are dispersed through the lungs.

BRONCHIAL, (brónkial) a. belonging to the throat.

BRONCHITIS, s. in Surgery, the inflammation of the bronchial tube, usually occasioned by exposure to moisture and cold. A species of this disease is very dangerous to horses and cattle.

BRONCHOCELE, (brónkoesele) s. [bronchos and cele, Gr.] in Surgery, a tumour in the anterior part of the neck, very general in Switzerland, and called goitre; an almost infallible remedy for which has recently been discovered in the use of iodine.

BRONCHOTOMY, (brónkotomy) s. [bronchos and temno, Gr.] the operation of opening the windpipe by incision, in such cases as a violent quinsy, to prevent suffocation from the great swelling of the parts.

BRONSTED, PETER OLAVE, a late eminent antiquary of Denmark, to whom we are indebted for many interesting and valuable discoveries respecting Grecian antiquities. He had at various times the posts of Greek Professor and Rector at Copenhagen, and was employed by the court on several embassies. He died in 1842, aged 61 years.

BRONTOLOGY, s. [bronte and logos, Gr.] a discourse on thunder.

BRONZE, s. [bronze, Fr.] a metal compounded of copper, tin, and zinc, which is employed for various uses, as making bells, cannons, and statues; the proportions of the component metals being varied to suit the purposes to which the bronze is applied. Also a kind of colouring prepared by colourmen in imitation of bronze. There are two sorts of it, the red, made of copper dust and red ochre, and the yellow, which is made of the finest copper dust alone.

BROOCH, s. [broke, Belg.] a jewel; an ornament of jewels. Figuratively, an ornament; glory.

TO BROOD, v. n. [brædan, Sax.] to hatch, or sit upon in order to hatch; to sit like a hen hatching her eggs; beautifully applied in the following sentence: "When brooding darkness spreads its jealous wings," Miln. To sit near, and watch with great anxiety.—v. a. to hatch. Figuratively, to cherish or keep alive by incessant anxiety.

BROOD, s. [brod, Sax.] the young of fowls, fishes, or small land animals; a parcel of chickens hatched by one hen at one time. Figuratively, offspring, children; productions.

BROODY, a. inclining to hatch, or to sit on eggs to hatch them.

BROOK, s. [broc, Sax.] a small and shallow running water. Synon. Rivulets and brooks are certain species of streams which are running waters, with this difference, that a rivulet runs between banks, whereas a brook winds its way through the meadows, or by a hedge-side. A ruvlet is a much larger stream than a brook.

To BROOK, v. a. [brocan, Sax.] to bear without resentment or complaint; to put up with. Applied to misfortunes, or affronts, to endure.

BROOKLINE, s. in Botany, a sort of water speedwell, very common in ditches, throughout Europe.

BROOKLYN, a city of New York, United States, situated on Long Island, opposite the lower part of the city of N. York. It is regularly laid out, the streets being, in every case but one, straight, and crossing each other at right angles. The situation is very beautiful, and the irregularity of the ground it occupies has proved too great for all the efforts made to overcome it, so that this beauty remains to a considerable extent unimpaired. It has some fine public buildings and some good literary and scientific institutions. The United States navy yard here covers 40 acres of ground, and has a dock, and an hospital, with library and museum connected with it. Brooklyn has a considerable trade, and some manufactures also. A basin also is constructing because of the crowded state of the docks at New York. Over the East River, which is only three quarters of a mile wide, are four steam ferries continually plying between this city and N. York. It is 226 miles from Washington. Pop. 36,233. Lat. 40. 42. N. Long. 74. 0. W. There are eight other places in the U. States of this name.

BROOM, s. [brum, Sax.] in Botany, the genista, Lat. genet, Fr. Likewise a utensil made with the twigs of the above-mentioned plant, or birch, or heather, and used in sweeping houses or streets.

BROOMGRASS, s. in Botany, a genus of the grasses called by Linnaeus bromus. The English species are numerous.

BROOMING, or BREAMING, s. the burning the fith a ship has contracted, with straw, reeds, broom, &c., when she is on the career.

BROOMRAPE, s. in Botany, a curious genus of parasitical plants, having no leaves, and delicate purplish flowers, growing on the roots of clover, broom, &c. &c.

BROOMSTAFF, s. the staff to which the twigs of a broom are bound, to make a besom; the handle of a broom; named more generally in London a broomstick.

BROOMY, a. full of, or abounding in, broom.

BROSELEY, Shropshire. This town stands on the Severn in the midst of a coal and iron district, which gives employment to most of the population. Petroleum springs have existed in the neighbourhood. It is 130 miles from London. Market, Wednesday. Pop. 4849.

BROTH, s. [broth, Sax.] a kind of soup, made by boiling meat down in a small quantity of water.

BROTHER, s. brethren and brothers in the plural, the former of which seems confined to the Scriptures; [Sax.] the relation which a male child holds to the other children sprung from the same father or mother, or both. Among the ancients, this term was used with greater latitude than at present, and signified even first cousins; in this sense it is used in Scripture, when mention is made of our Lord's brethren. Figuratively, a person united by the most ardent affections of friendship; one of the same trade; a person resembling another in qualities or conduct. Among divines, taken for man in general, alluding to our being all descended from one common parent.

BROTHERHOOD, s. the state or condition of a brother; the relation in which one brother stands with respect to another. Figuratively, men living together in the same house, and professing the same principles, applied to monks or friars; men incorporated together by the same charter; men of the same trade.

BROTHERLY, a. that suits or belongs to a brother.

BROTHERLY, ad. after the manner of a brother. Figuratively, in a very affectionate manner.

BROTHERS, RICHARD, one of those maniacs who, by their general rationality, and by the peculiar vein of their madness, attract large attention, and who are most frequently heard of in troublous times. He lived and wrote in the height of the fever produced by the French Revolution, and for his prophecies was, at least, imprisoned, being much too near treason. He gained many followers, and some amongst the educated classes even, and his announcement of the establishment of a sort of millennial kingdom, himself being the king, was very greedily believed. This was to have happened in 1798.

BROUGH, or BUGA upon STANMOOR, Westmoreland. It is 270 miles from London. Market, Thursday. Pop. 1694.

BROW, (the oe is pron. like oe in now, how.) s. [brora, Sax.] the arched collection of hairs over the eye in human creatures. Figuratively, the looks, air, or appearance of the countenance. Applied to a hill, the verge, or extremity of its surface.

To BROWBEAT, v. a. to endeavour to awe a person by stern and haughty looks or words.

BROWN, (the oe is pron. as in cow.) a. [brun, Sax.] sunburnt, of a colour which may be made of a mixture of black with another colour. Figuratively, dark, gloomy. Used as a substantive, dark, or dusty colour.

BROWN, DR. JOHN, a Scotch physician, who was the author of a System of Medicine, which made some noise on the continent, under the title Brunonian, during the last century. He aimed at simplicity, and failed by the excess of it. He was not lacking in intellectual ability, but in other respects he did not shine. He died in 1788, aged 53 years.

BROWN, LANCELOT, the famous landscape gardener, so well known as "Capability Brown," during the last century. His taste is not so much admired now; but the houses that he built as country seats for many of the nobility, &c. are regarded yet as patterns of completeness. He gained both wealth and honours, as well as fame, by his art, and died in 1773, aged 58 years.

BROWN, DR. THOMAS, the last distinguished and popular teacher of Scotch metaphysics. He studied at Edinburgh, and was early imbued with the love of metaphysical speculation and literary pursuits. He was one of the brilliant circle at the Northern Athens who started the Edinburgh Review. Medicine was his profession, but he was introduced by Stewart into his favourite field, and succeeded him in the chair of Moral Philosophy; whence he delivered those lectures, whose ornate and popular style won him more followers than even his talent did. He died in 1820, aged 42 years. His poems and lighter works are yet praised. His metaphysical system has all the advantages and all the disadvantages which determined generalization always entails. His treatise on Cause and Effect is his great production.

BROWNE, SIR THOMAS, the celebrated physician of the 17th century, author of Religio Medici, and other works relating to antiquities, &c. He lived at Norwich excepting during his early and college years, and his continental tour, and he enjoyed great esteem there for his curious and varied learning. His speculations respecting the quintess are the finest specimen of air-castle, perhaps, in the language. He died in 1682, aged 77 years.

BROWNE, WILLIAM GEORGE, a very enterprising traveller, who was the first Englishman that explored the country of Darfoor in Africa. He made several journeys through the countries bordering on the Mediterranean, accounts of which were published on his return. He fell at length in Persia, whilst prosecuting an attempt to reach Samarcand, in 1812, aged 44 years.

BROWNISH, a. somewhat brown; inclining to brown; of a faint brown.

BROWNISTS, in Church History, a religious sect, which sprung up in England towards the end of the 16th century. Their leader was one Robert Brown, a native of Northampton. They separated from the Established Church; and were equally averse to Episcopacy and Presbyterianism. They rejected all forms of prayers, and held that every society of Christians was complete in itself for all purposes of ecclesiastical order and discipline. Ministers they did not esteem as priests, and they were chosen by the votes of their churches, which were democratical. They were persecuted with great severity by Queen Elizabeth. They were afterwards called Independents.

BROWNNESS, s. that idea or sensation which is excited in the mind on seeing a brown colour.

BROWNSTUDY, s. gloomy meditations.

To BROWSE, (brouce) v. a. [brouser, Fr.] to feed on herbs, leaves, or grass. To crop or eat, applied to cattle.—v. n. to feed or eat, used with on or upon.

BROWSE, (brouce) s. pasture; properly leaves or shrubs fit for goats and other animals to eat.

BROW-SICK, a. dejected; hanging the head.

BRUCE, JAMES, the famous Abyssinian traveller, after various mercantile and other engagements in England in the beginning of his life, was appointed consul at Algiers, and travelled through the northern part of Africa, visiting the ruins of the ancient cities. He afterwards visited Syria, and thence went to Egypt. From Egypt he ascended to Abyssinia, and remained there for a considerable time, being held in great esteem by the most powerful men of the country, and helped by them in visiting the fountains of the principal branch of the Nile. His tales on his return to England were received with general mistrust; and he did not write and publish his narrative till long afterwards, which was not more favourably read. It is admitted that he did, from vanity and indolence, make some considerable exaggerations in his statements, but his accounts were in the main correct. He died from a fall in 1794, aged 64 years.

BRUCE, MICHAEL, a poet of Scotland, not so well known as his writings deserve. He was born in humble life, and devoted by his parents to the ministry. During his studies he contended against all sorts of hindrances; and after a while he sank under bodily disease, which his natural constitution, and his slender means, were not fitted to contend with. He died in 1767, aged 21 years.

BRUCE, ROBERT, one of the most chivalric of the kings of Scotland. He was the grandson of the Bruce who disputed the inheritance of the crown with Baliol. During the long and varied struggle for liberty maintained by Wallace, Bruce was sometimes with him, but more frequently in allegiance with Edward, the English king. Having resolved at length to undertake the deliverance of his country, and having with difficulty escaped from the English court, he was crowned at Scone, and acknowledged by almost all Scotland. His career was one of defeats, escapes, and deeds of personal prowess, till at Loudon Hill he defeated the English utterly. On the accession of Edward II. Bruce commenced a system of invasions on England, and gained the victory at Bannockburn. After this Scotland had peace. He died in 1329, aged 55 years.

BRUCKER, JAMES, the laborious author of a repertory of information respecting philosophy and philosophers, misnamed a Critical History of Philosophy. He published some other works, and had the reputation of extensive, if not of profound or accurate scholarship. He died in 1770, aged 74 years.

BRUEY'S, the name of the commander of the French fleet at the battle of the Nile, who perished in the blowing up of his vessel, L'Orient, in 1798.

BRUGES, a city of Belgium, capital of the province of W. Flanders. It is a fine place, built in the usual style of Dutch cities, with canals running through the great streets. It is connected with the sea by means of a canal from Ostend, and it has the usual accommodations of sea-ports, such as docks and warehouses. It was formerly famous for its manufactures of tapestry, for which England used to supply the wool. It now manufactures woollen, linen, and cotton goods, lace, &c. &c. The town-hall and the churches are fine specimens of architecture. There are also institutions for the promotion of science and literature. It is 60 miles from Brussels. Population about 50,000. Lat. 51. 12. N. Long. 3. 15. E.

To BRUISE, (bruise) v. a. [briser, Fr.] to crush or hurt by any thing blunt, which does not cut the skin, or let the blood out; to crush by any weight; to beat in a mortar, so as only to crush or destroy the form of a thing, without reducing it to powder.

BRUISE, (bruise) s. a hurt whereby the skin is not broke.

BRUISEWORT, s. in Botany, an herb, the same with comfrey.

BRUIT, (bruit) s. [Fr.] a report, rumour, or noise; something which is the common topic of conversation.

To BRUT, (brut) v. a. to spread abroad; to divulge; to rumour. Both the verb and the noun are seldom used.

BRUMAL, a. [brumalis, Lat.] belonging to the winter.

BRUMOV, PIERRE, a learned and literary Jesuit of the last century. His works are numerous, and of them the most important is his History of the Church in England. He died in 1762, aged 53 years.

BRUNCK, RICHARD FRANCIS PHILIPPE, an eminent editor of classical authors during the last century. Some of them are well known, through reprints in this country, but his critical canons left too much to the fancy of the critic to give his recensions a very high value. During the Revolution, he engaged on the popular side, and was imprisoned by Robespierre. He died at his native town, Strasburg, in 1803, aged 74 years.

BRUNE, MARSHAL, one of the military commanders called forth by the French Revolution. He signalized himself in Italy, Holland, and the N. of Germany. He was ambassador at Constantinople. Offending Napoleon by neglect of some formality, he retired from the army. During the rapid changes of 1814 and 1815, he changed with circumstances, and was shot by a mob at Avignon, in 1815, aged 52 years.

BRUNELLESCHI, FILIPPO, an architect of Florence, who in the 15th century built the dome of the church of Santa Maria in that city. He erected both in this and other cities of Italy other churches and palaces, and died in 1444, aged 70 years. [Fr.] a person of a brown complexion; generally applied to the female sex.

BRUNI, LEONARDO, one of the illustrious scholars and authors of the period of the revival of learning in Europe. He was secretary of the Roman Chancery under several popes, and was at the Council of Constance. Afterwards he was chancellor of Florence. His great work was a History of Florence. Most of his other writings are unknown, or have never been printed. He died in 1444, aged 75 years.

BRUNION, s. [brugnon, Fr.] a sort of fruit between a plum and a peach.

BRUNN, the capital of Moravia, in Austria. It stands in the midst of a good country, near the junction of two rivers. It is fortified and regularly built, though the streets are narrow. There are some fine squares, and many fountains. Some of the churches and public buildings are handsome structures. It has extensive woollen manufactures, and some others of less importance. It is 73 miles from Vienna. Population about 40,000. Lat. 49. 12. N. Long. 16. 36. E.

BRUNO, GIORDANO, a philosopher and scholar, who was burnt at Rome during the last year of the 16th century, for his speculations, and opposition to the determinations of the Church. He visited various countries, and at Geneva, Paris, Marburg, Helmstadt, Frankfurt, and especially in England, maintained his character for learning with various skill and success. Some of his writings are merely satirical, others are a development of a Pantheistic system of theology, &c. He returned unadvisedly to Italy, and was arrested by the Inquisition: after some years' imprisonment, he was burnt in 1600, aged about 50 years.

BRUNSWICK, one of the German states, in rank a duchy, lying in several detached portions between Hanover, Prussia, and Prussian Saxony and Anhalt. It is watered by the Weser, the Aller, the Ocker, the Leine, and the streams tributary to them. In the S. part are the Harz mountains, the highest peak of which is nearly 3000 feet high. This part produces some timber, and here are mines of various metals, and coal, and salt, and quarries of building stone and marble, which are very valuable. The proportion of arable land is considerable, and it is very productive. Swine are the principal stock reared. There are manufactories of linen, woollen cloth, oil, paper, china, &c. The trade of the duchy is mostly internal, but one town having a water communication with the sea. The population is nearly 300,000. From the dukes of Brunswick the sovereign now on the British throne is descended; George I., son of the Elector Ernest Augustus, and descended on his mother's side from James I., having been called to the throne in 1714, by virtue of the Act of Settlement, passed in 1701.

BRUNSWICK, capital of the duchy of the same name, lies on the Ocker. It was one of the Hanse towns, and is now a place of some consideration. It has beside the palace, some fine buildings; and it abounds in establishments for the aid of the sick and the poor. It has about 40,000 inhabitants. Lat. 52. 15. N. Long. 10. 32. E.

BRUNSWICK, a town of Maine, United States. It is situated on the S. side of the Androscoggin river, at the Lower Falls, where there is a considerable water-power, used for working some saw-mills, and a cotton factory. Bowdoin College, a well-endowed and flourishing institution, is located here; a prosperous medical institution is attached to it; and it has a good museum and library. It is 570 miles from Washington. Pop. 4259. There are five other places in the States of the same name, BRUNSWICK, NEW, a province of British N. America. See NEW BRUNSWICK.

BRUNSWICK, NEW, a town of New Jersey, U. S. See NEW BRUNSWICK.

BRUNT, s. [brunst, Belg.] the onset, attack, or shock of an enemy; the force, violence, and stroke of a cannon. Generally used with the verb bear. To bear the brunt, is to sustain the attack of an enemy. Figuratively, any difficulty, or cross and unexpected accident.

BRUSH, s. [brosse, Fr.] an instrument made of bristles or hair fastened to wood, used for sweeping rooms, cleaning clothes, or painting. Figuratively, a slight attack or skirmish in war.

To BRUSH, v. a. to clear a thing of dust by means of a brush; to touch in one's passage. Used with up, to paint, to make a thing look well by a brush. Used neuterly, to pass quick and close to a person, joined with the particle by. "Brush'd regardless by," Dryd. To skim upon the surface; to pass along so as just to touch the surface in the passage, used with over.

BRUSHER, s. a person who makes use of a brush; one who cleans with a brush; by one who rouses game at a battue.

BRUSHWOOD, s. rough, woody thickets.

BRUSHY, s. a rough or shaggy like a brush.

BRUSSELS, the capital city of the kingdom of Belgium, stands on the Senne, and is connected by a canal with the Ruyel at Willebroeck. It is a fine place, and has some noble streets and squares, and is ornamented by many fountains. It is rich in public buildings, having beside the churches, some of which contain masterpieces of sculpture and painting, a town-hall, royal palace, palace of the fine arts, &c. It is walled, and has eight gates, whence high roads diverge to all parts of Belgium. The Park is a pleasant promenade under well-kept avenues of trees. The city has manufactures of lace, camlets, &c. &c. The population is about 100,000. Lat. 50. 50. N. Long. 4. 22. E.

To BRUSTLE, v. a. [brusthan, Sax.] to crackle; to make a noise like the rustling of armour, or that of rich silks. Figuratively, to swagger, hector, or approach a person in a threatening manner.

BRUTAL, a. [brutal, Fr.] that belongs to a beast, opposed to rational. Figuratively, inhuman, cruel, savage; without, or contrary to, reason and the principles of humanity.

BRUTALITY, s. [brutalité, Fr.] a disposition or behaviour contrary to the laws of reason and dictates of politeness and humanity; churlishness, savageness.

To BRUTALIZE, v. n. [brutaliser, Fr.] to grow morose, savage, inhuman, and like a brute. Actively, to make brutal.

BRUTALLY, ad. inhumanly; churlishly.

BRUTE, a. [brutus, Lat.] senseless; savage; inhuman; void of all the tender and social affections; not having the use of reason; rough, uncivilized.

BRUTE, s. an animal without the principle of reason; a beast. Figuratively, applied to men as a term of the most mortifying reproach, and implying a person void of humanity, and an enemy to reason.

BRUTISH, a. resembling a beast, either in form or qualities. Figuratively, rude; inhuman; senseless; stupidly ignorant; regardless of reason, or contrary to its dictates.

BRUTON, Somersetshire. It is seated on the river Brew, and is a well-built town, with a handsome church, a free-school, and a stately almshouse, and has a manufacture of serges and stockings. It is 109 miles from London. Market, Saturday. Pop. 2074.

BRUTUS, a cognomen used by some members of the clan or family of Junius in ancient Rome, which is said to have arisen from the device resorted to by Lucius Junius, nephew of Tarquinus Superbus, to avoid being destroyed by him. He lived in the royal house as a jester or fool, but being present at the suicide of Lucretia, he threw off his pretended idiosyncrasy, and vowed the race of Tarquinus and the royal rank to destruction. He was one of the first consuls, (two chief magistrates elected annually), and condemned his own sons to death for conspiring against Rome. He fell in battle, when the Tarquinii attempted by the aid of Lars Porsena to regain their kingdom. This was about 507 B. C. The most famous was Marcus Junius, who was the leading patriot of the band that slew Julius Cæsar the dictator, when he was threatening the liberties of Rome. He was the friend and son-in-law of Cato, and had learnt his severe and grand philosophy. During the struggle between Cæsar and Pompeius, he fought in the armies of the latter. He was afterwards distinguished by repeated acts of confidence and affection from Cæsar. After the death of Cæsar he went to Athens, and being defeated at Philippi by the forces raised by those who hoped to gain the power of Cæsar, and losing his friend Cassius, he killed himself, in 42 B. C., aged 44 years.

BRUYERE, JEAN LA, a French moralist of the 17th century. His life was varied by few incidents, and his books, and studies, and his friends, were his chief enjoyments. His principal work is written after the model of Theophrastus, and is still read for its graphic and delicate skill in delineating character. He died in 1696, aged 52 years.

BRUYANT, JACOB, a learned scholar, but fanciful speculator, of the last century. He enjoyed the patronage of the Duke of Marlborough. Most of his speculations, &c. related to the facts of Scripture History, or to the origin of heathen religions; except that of the non-existence of Troy. He died from a casual fall in 1804, aged 89 years.

BRUYONY, s. [bryonia, Lat.] in Botany, the white bryonia is a plant with hand-shaped leaves, rough with callous points on both surfaces, found in hedges; the black bryonia has heart-shaped undivided leaves, and is the same with ladyseal.

BUB, s. a cant word for strong malt liquor.

BUBBLE, s. [bubbel, Belg.] a small bladder of water; a little round drop of any fluid filled and expanded with air, and destroyed by the least touch. Figuratively, something easily destroyed; a cheat, or the person cheated.

To BUBBLE, v. n. to rise in bubbles; to make a gentle noise as it runs, applied to water issuing from some narrow place, or its fountain head. Actively, to cheat, or defraud by projects of imaginary advantages.

BUBBLER, s. one who cheats by projects, promising great advantages for the loan of money.

BUBO, s. [boubon, Gr.] a tumour or swelling, attended with an inflammation in the groin, &c. In Natural History, the name of a genus of owls, distinguished by tufts of feathers over the ears.

BUBONOCELE, commonly called A RUPTURE, s. [boubon and cele, Gr.] in Surgery, a tumour in the groin, formed by the prolapsus, or falling down of the intestines, omentum, or both, through the processes of the peritoneum, and rings of the abdominal muscles.

BUCCANERS, or BUCCANERS, s. a name given to the privateers and pirates of the Spanish Main, in former days, from the manner in which they were accustomed to prepare their meat, by hanging it in the smoke, which they called buccaning it. They were principally English and French, and they arose from the absurd and selfish policy of the Spaniards, who attempted to keep all those newly-discovered countries for themselves. Piracy was not unfrequently connected with this armed free trade. The most celebrated of them was Sir Henry Morgan, in the 17th century.

BUCHER, MARTIN, one of the Reformers of the 16th century, who being originally a Dominican monk, was won from Romanism by means of the writings of Luther. He afterwards affected more the opinions of the Swiss Reformers, and being unable to continue with safety at Strasburg, where he had exposed Charles V. respecting the Interim, he went to England, and received from Cranmer an appointment at Cambridge. In the progress of English ecclesiastical changes he took great interest, and exerted some influence. He died in 1550, aged 59 years. Mary had his remains exhumed and burnt. His writings are very voluminous.

BUCER, s. in Natural History, a species of raven found in the East Indies, China, and Tataria, distinguished by the peculiar form of their bills, which are long and serrated, and have an extraordinary enlargement on the base of the upper mandible, which gives them a very formidable appearance.

BUCHAN, a district of Aberdeenshire, in Scotland.

BUCHANAN, GEORGE, the tutor of Mary Queen of Scots, and author of a Version of the Psalms in Latin verse, and other Latin poems. He was born in humble circumstances, and studied amidst interruptions from sickness and poverty, at Paris, and at St. Andrew's, Scotland. Provoking Cardinal Beaton's hostility by some satirical poems on the clergy, he fled to France, and at Bourdeaux, Paris, and Coimbra, gained occupation as Latin Professor, &c. At the latter place he imprisoned by the Inquisition. On his liberation he was engaged again in France and in Scotland as a College Professor, and was tutor to Queen Mary and her son, our James I. He held a high place under the government, at length, and aided in the consolidation of the Scotch Reformation. He died in 1580, aged 74 years.

BUCHANAN, DR. CLAUDIUS, author of Christian Researches in India, was a chaplain in the service of the E. India Company, who by his efforts, and preaching, and writing, aided greatly in obtaining for Hindustan the attention and the labours of the evangelical missionaries of various denominations. He died in 1815, aged 49 years.

BUCHARIA, GREAT and LITTLE. See BOKHARA.

BUCHAREST, the capital of Wallachia, in European Turkey, standing on a small stream, a tributary of the Danube. It occupies a pleasant situation, but is a poor place. It has a palace and above 60 churches, a kind of college, and in the centre of the town is a lofty watch-tower. It has a considerable trade. Its population is about 60,000. Lat. 44. 26. N. Long. 26. 9. E.

BUCK, s. [boech, Brit.], the male of the fallow deer, rabbits, hares, goats, &c. Among deer it is as corpulent, and has horns like a hart, different only in size, and growing out of the head like fingers in the hand. Likewise a cant name of a club or society, so called from their use of these hunting terms, calling their president the grand buck, &c.

BUCK, s. [bauche, Teut.], ley make of ashes for washing linen. Figuratively, linen.

To BUCK, v. a. when from buck, signifying a deer, it denotes to copulate; and when from buck, signifying ley, it implies to wash clothes in ley.

BUCKBEAN, s. in Botany, the fringed water-lily, a sort of trefail, frequent in ponds and pits.

BUCKENHAM, Norfolk. It is 96 miles from London. Market, Saturday. Pop. 1255.

BUCKET, s. [baguet, Fr.], a wooden vessel resembling one half of a barrel or pipe, fitted with a handle formed like a semicircle, and used to draw water out of a well; likewise a leathern vessel of the same form, used in fires to serve the engines with water. See PAIL.

BUCKINGHAM, Buckinghamshire. It is situated on a low ground, on the river Ouse, by which it is almost surrounded, and over it are three handsome stone bridges. There was formerly a strong castle in the middle of the town. There is a county jail, and a town-hall. It has but one church. It is 57 miles from London. Market, Saturday. Pop. 4054.

BUCKINGHAMSHIRE, a county of England, bounded on the N. by Northamptonshire, on the E. by Bedfordshire, Hertfordshire, and Middlesex, on the W. by Oxfordshire, and on the S. by Berkshire, from which it is separated by the river Thames. It is about 50 miles in length, and 18 in breadth. The great range of chalk hills, called the Chilterns, runs through the county, and attains an elevation of more than 900 feet above the level of the sea. On one side of this range flow the Thames, the Thame, and the Colne; and on the other the Ouse. The soil is variable, but in some parts it is very rich. The air is mild, and the county reckoned in general healthy. By means of canals and railroad it has every facility for trade. But its productions are almost wholly pastoral and agricultural. It returns 11 members to parliament. Pop. 155,683.

BUCKLE, [boedel, Brit.], an instrument made of a link of metal with a tongue and catch, used to fasten the straps of shoes, the harness of horses, &c.

To BUCKLE, v. a. to fasten with a buckle. Figuratively, to marry, or join. To confine, with the particle in. To apply to, used with to.

To BUCKLE, v. n. [buchen, Teut.], to bend or bow under a weight, used with under. Figuratively, to bend one's inclinations, to apply, or attend to.

BUCKLER, s. [bucularium, barbarous Lat.], a shield.

BUCKMAST, s. the fruit or mast of the beech tree.

BUCKRAM, s. [bougren, Fr.], a thick sort of linen or hempen cloth, stiffened with gum, chiefly used in the linings of clothes, to sustain and make them keep their form.

BUCKTHORN, s. in Botany, a tree that bears a purging berry.

BUCKWHEAT, s. in Agriculture, a plant, otherwise called French wheat, used occasionally in the rotation of crops, instead of barley. Game are fond of it.

BUCOLIC, s. [boukolikos, Gr.], pastoral poetry.

BUD, s. [bouton, Fr.], in Botany, the small swellings or prominences on the bark of a tree, which turn to shoots, &c. Among gardeners, it denotes the first tops of salad plants; and in Husbandry, a weaned calf of the first year, being so named from the budding of its horns. Figuratively, the beginning, first appearance, tender and immature state of a thing.

To BUD, v. n. to swell with gems or little prominences. Applied to vegetables, to put forth shoots. Figuratively, to be in the bloom of youth.—v. a. in Gardening, to inoculate by inserting a bud into a tree.

BUDA, or OFFEN, a strongly fortified city of Austria, situated on the side of a hill, on the W. bank of the Danube, over which it has a fine bridge, opposite Pesth, with which it is the capital of Hungary, formerly the residence of its kings. The public buildings are elegant, its warm baths very magnificent, and in the adjacent country are vineyards, producing a red wine in great estimation. It has a little trade, arising from a few manufactures and this wine. It is 125 miles from Vienna. Population, about 30,000. Lat. 47. 29. N. Long. 18. 2. E.

BUDÆUS, GULIELMUS, an eminent Greek and Latin scholar of the 16th century, a friend of Erasmus, who was engaged in some embassies and public offices, under Louis XII. and Francis I. His fondness for study was most passionate, and is recorded in some well-known and laughable anecdotes. His works are very voluminous, and not all of worth now. He died in 1540, aged 73 years.

BUDDHA, or BOODH, perhaps a mythic personage, but the reputed founder of the religion called after him Buddhism; whose life, according to tradition, was one of tranquil meditation and study, and distinguished purity and benevolence; but whose era, scholars cannot determine. His religion numbers amongst its followers a third part of the human race, extending from Ceylon, through Hindustan, Thibet, Burmah, Siam, &c. to Tataria, China. The basis of this scheme is Pantheism, and the practical part of it greatly resembles the Neo-Platonism of Alexandria after the Christian era. The perfect state for the soul seems to be, according to this scheme, a sort of nothingness; and the gradual purification of the soul and elevation to this sublimity is effected through a process of metempsychosis. The ecclesiastical part of this religion so much resembles Romanism, that the Propagandist missionaries suspected infernal treachery when they first penetrated into Thibet to preach their faith, and seemed to have been anticipated by a deceitful caricature of their forms and ceremonies and religious orders.

BUDDING, s. in Horticulture, an operation by which a bud of some particular species or variety of shrub or tree is inserted in a slit made in the stock of another species or variety, with the like effect that follows from ingrafting.

BUDDLER, s. a place where miners wash their ore to fit it for the furnace.

BUDE LIGHT, so called from the place in Cornwall at which the inventor lives, is a most intense and brilliant light, produced for lighting large buildings, squares and streets, lighthouses, &c., by the addition of a central jet of oxygen gas, to the common argand gas-burner. Atmospheric air is more commonly used, and the use of several concentric burners has been found very ready to increase the volume of light.

To BUDGE, v. n. [bouger, Fr.], to stir; to move.

BUDGE, the fur of lambs.

BUDGE, s. stiff; surly; formal.

BUDGE, s. [bouquette, Fr.], a small bag; that which is contained in a budget; a store or stock.

BUDLEY, Devonshire, a town situated on the river Otter, near its mouth. It is 194 miles from London. Market, Monday. Pop. 2319.

BUEÑOS AYRES, one of the most considerable sea-ports of South America, and capital of the republic of La Plata. Its situation is on the south side of the river La Plata, 50 leagues within its mouth, (where the river is seven leagues broad,) in a most beautiful country. The streets are straight and broad, and the buildings tolerably regular. It has several churches, and a university, which is in a flourishing condition. The productions of the country, such as tobacco, wool, cotton, skins, dried meats, saffron, cochineal, hemp, hair, drugs, gold, silver, and precious stones, besides tallow and hides, are the staple of

Buckingham

hamshire

REFERENCE TO THE DISTRICTS

1. Newport
2. Gillingham
3. Buckingham
4. Aylesbury
5. Lylesbury
6. Deoborough
7. Amersham
8. Stoke

The County returns 3 Members.

Scale of Miles
0 1 2 3 4 5 6
Railway Stations, this

ETON COLLEGE

its trade. Its population is about 60,000. Lat. 34. 35. S. Long. 57. 24. W.

BUFF, s. [buffalo, Fr.] a sort of leather prepared from the skin of the buffalo; used for waist-belts, pouches, and military accoutrements.

BUFFALO, s. [Ital.] in Natural History, a wild animal of the ox kind, with large crooked horns; equal in size to our largest oxen, with an aspect fierce and terrible. It is a native of the East, but brought into Italy, and other parts of Europe, where it is used as a beast of burthen and draught. See BISON.

BUFFALO, a city and port of New York, United States, situated on Lake Erie, on the head of Niagara river, and the termination of the Erie canal, and having a good harbour, called Buffalo Creek. It has broad and regular streets, and is adorned with fine buildings both public and private. It has 17 churches, and some of its hotels are the finest in the country. It has a good library, and some public schools. Buffalo stands as a great gate between the E. and the W., through which much of the commerce must pass; and it is a great depot for the W. country. A noble pier, with a lighthouse at the end, has been built to secure the harbour. It is 381 miles from Washington. Population, 18,213. There are 14 other places in the States with this name.

BUFFET, s. [buffeto, Ital.] a blow on one side of the head given with the fist. Figuratively, indignity, persecution, or hardship.

BUFFET, s. [buffet, Fr.] a kind of cupboard or closet, formed with an arch at the top, and furnished with shelves, used to place china and plate in for show and ornament.

To BUFFET, v. a. [buffeter, Fr.] to strike on the head with the hand; to box. Figuratively, to strike any thing forcibly with the hand.—v. n. with the particle for, to box, or fight with the fists.

BUFFETER, s. one who fights with his fists; a boxer.

BUFFLEHEADED, a. that has a head like a buffalo. Figuratively, dull, stupid.

BUFFON, GEORGE LOUIS, COUNT DE, a distinguished French naturalist of the last century. He was possessed of a handsome estate, and was carefully trained in the college at Dijon. His early passion for mathematics has led some to suppose him a second Newton. He was fond of experimenting, and proved conclusively the power of the burning mirrors which Archimedes is alleged to have used in defence of Syracuse. His Natural History is his great work, and amongst his speculations the nebular hypothesis found its origin. He died in 1788, aged 80 years.

BUFFON, s. [buffon, Fr.] one who endeavours to excite laughter by low jests and antic postures; a merry-andrew, a jack-pudding.

BUFFONMERY, s. the using low jests, ridiculous pranks, or scurrilous mirth, to extort a laugh from the company.

BUFFONTRY, s. in Natural History, a kind of extraneous fossils, called hydroids, or wolf's teeth.

BUG, s. [bug, Brit.] in Natural History, the name of a genus of insects, with flattish bodies, and wings half protected by sheaths; one species of which is too well known. Likewise a flying insect formed like a beetle, named a May bug, or May fly.

BUG, BU'GGEAR, s. [bug, Brit.] an object which raises terror; a walking spectre; a ghost; generally applied to the imaginary terror used to frighten children.

BUGGY, s. a hooded one-horse chaise.

BUGLE, BU'GLE-HORN, s. a small bending horn; a hunting horn.

BUGLE, s. a shining bead, of a cylindrical form, and made of glass. Also, in Botany, a plant growing in moist places.

To BUILD, (build) v. a. preter. I built, or have built; [builden, Belg.] to make or raise houses, &c. Figuratively, to raise on any thing as a support or foundation.

BUILDER, s. one who constructs or raises houses, &c.

BUILDING, s. a fabric or place erected for shelter from the weather for dwelling, or for the purposes of religion, security, or magnificence. Building is used, in its primary sense, for the art and act of raising edifices.

BULITH, Brecknockshire, a town pleasantly situated on the river Wye, over which it has a bridge into Radnorshire. It has a trade in stockings and flannels. It is 171 miles from London. Markets, Monday and Saturday. Pop. 1203.

BULAM, a fertile island of Africa, about 8 leagues long and 3 broad, at the mouth of the Rio Grande. An attempt has been lately made to colonize it by free negroes, under the direction of the Bulam Association in England; as also to establish a friendly intercourse with the natives, and a trade unpolled by slavery; but the settlement was destroyed by Africans from the continent.

BULB, s. [bulbus, Lat.] in Botany, a thick root, nearly round; of which there are two species. 1. The tunicated, or coated, like the onion. 2. The squamous, or scaly, like the lily.

BULBACEOUS, a. [bulbaceus, Lat.] the same as bulbous, but not so proper.

BULBOUS, a. [bulbosus, Lat.] that resembles or contains a bulb; that has a round root.

BULFINCH, s. in Natural History, a well-known song-bird, so called from its thick neck, noted for imitating tunes, played to it on the flageolet or bird-organ.

BULGARIA, a province of Turkey in Europe, bounded on the N. by Wallachia, on the E. by the Black Sea, on the S. by Romania and Macedonia, and on the W. by Servia. See RUMELIA.

To BULGE, v. n. [originally written bilge, which signified the lower part of a ship,] to spring a leak by striking the bottom on some rock or place which makes a hole, or forces off some of the timber; applied to a ship, to founder. To stick or jut out, used with the particle from.

BULIMY, s. [bous and limos, Gr.] in Medicine, an enormous appetite, attended with faintings, and coldness at the extreme parts.

BULK, s. [bulke, Belg.] size, dimensions. Used with the word people, &c., the greatest part, and sometimes the vulgar. Applied to a ship, the whole space in the bow for the stowage of goods; likewise the cargo. To break bulk, is to open or unload any part of the cargo.

BULK, s. [bieleke, Dan.] in Building, a part of a building projecting from the window, like a table, and used either for placing commodities on, by way of show, or for porters to pitch their barthens.

BULKINESS, s. the largeness of a thing; the greatness of size or dimensions.

BULKY, a. of great size or stature.

BULL, s. [bulle, Belg.] the male of black cattle, kept generally for propagating the species; any thing made in the form of a bull. In Astronomy, one of the twelve signs of the zodiac, into which the sun enters in April. A blunder or contradiction. In Ecclesiastic History, an instrument made out of the Roman or pope's chancellor, sealed with lead, and of the same nature with the edicts of secular princes. The seal presents on one side the heads of St. Peter and St. Paul, and on the other, the name of the pope, and the year of his pontificate; its original name was bulle, whence the instrument took its name.

BULL, in composition sometimes denotes largeness, as bull-head, and in such cases it is not to be looked on as derived from the English noun, but from the Greek particle.

BULL, GEORGE, Bishop of St. David's, one of the chief writers in behalf of Trinitarian doctrines. He was trained amidst the tumults of the civil war in the 17th century, and took his side with sufficient boldness, refusing, whilst at Oxford, to take the oath of obedience to the commonwealth, and obtaining ordination from an Anglican bishop, during the protectorate. He was not made a bishop till shortly before the close of his life. He died in 1709, aged 75 years. His writings embrace a wide range, but his Defence of the Nicene Creed is that by which he is most generally known.

BULLACE, s. a wild sour plum.

BULL-BAITING, s. [bul and baiten, Sax.] the worrying or teasing a bull, by setting dogs on him.

BULL-DOG, s. a species of dogs of a strong make, round head, and great courage and ferocity, formerly used in baiting bulls, which they seized by the nose, and pinned to the ground.

BULLET, s. [bullet, Fr.] an iron or leaden ball or shot used to load guns with. Red-hot bullets are heated in a forge, and used to set a place on fire, containing combustibles. Chain bullets are two bullets joined by a chain three or four feet long.

Branch bullets, two balls joined by a bar of iron five or six inches apart; and beeh-headed bullets, named likewise angles, are the two halves of a bullet joined by a bar or chain; they are chiefly used in sea-fights, to cut the rigging, masts, &c.

BULLETTIN, s. [Fr.] an official announcement of some event, such as the result of a battle, or the health of a sovereign, concerning to the public.

BULL-FIGHT, s. an amusement of a very cruel and dangerous character, which Spain has preserved as a testimony of its slow progress in civilization. There are three or four different classes of combatants; the picadores fight on horseback with a lance, the banderilleros on foot with little darts with pennons attached to them, their helpers, who have only a scarlet cloak to throw over the bull's head, and the matadore, who has a cloak and a sharp sword, and comes in only to finish the scene.

BULL-FROG, s. in Natural History, a very large species of frog or toad, which is found in America.

BULL-HEAD, s. figuratively, a stupid person. In Natural History, a fish, called likewise the miller's thumb: its head is broad and flat, disproportionate to its body.

BULLIA/LDUS, ISMAEL, an astronomer of the 17th century, who was the first to introduce into a systematic treatise the elliptical orbits of the planets. Yet he differed from Kepler respecting his other laws, and has lessened the reputation he might have enjoyed by it. He was one of those who, before Newton, hit conjecturally on the universal law of gravitation, but it was useless, whilst no demonstration could be given, nor any consequences deduced. He died in 1694, aged 89 years.

BULLION, s. [billon, Fr.] gold and silver in the mass, neither wrought nor coined; so named either when they are first melted from the ore, or after they are refined and cast into ingots or bars.

BULL-LOCK, s. the same with the ox, or gelded bull.

BULLY, s. a person who makes use of threatening expressions and insolent behaviour, with great show of courage, but possessed of great cowardice.

To BULLY, v. a. to behave with noisy insolence and personated courage, in order to frighten a person into any measure or compliance.

BULLRUSH, s. in Botany, a name applied to two or three kinds of large rush, growing in rivers and in moist places.

BULLWARK, s. [bultwerck, Belg.] a fortification or bastion. Figuratively, a security or protection.

BUMBA/LIFF, s. a person employed to execute a writ, or arrest a person; a bailiff of the meanest sort.

BUMP, s. a swelling occasioned by a blow.

To BUMP, v. a. to kick a person, or strike him with the knee in the breech. To make a loud noise, applied to that made by the bittern.

BUMPER, s. [perhaps a corruption from bon pere, it being customary in Italy to drink the pope's health in full glasses,] a cup or glass filled up to the brim, or as full as it can hold.

BUMPKIN, s. [boonken, Belg.] a person who has not had the benefit of a polite education, but is gross in his conceptions, rude or unpolished in his behaviour, and void of experience with respect to the world; a rustic, or clown.

BUNCH, s. [buncker, Dan.] any prominence, hard knob, or swelling, rising above the surface of a thing; many things of the same kind growing together; a cluster, applied to vegetables; several things collected, or tied together at one of their extremities.

To BUNCH, v. n. to grow in knobs or protuberances. To swell, used with out.

BUNCHBACKED, a. having bunches on the back; hump-backed; crooked, owing to the dislocation of the back or shoulder-bones.

BUNCHINESS, s. the quality of being uneven with respect to surface; growing in knobs or clusters, opposed to smoothness.

BUNDELCUND, a district of Allahabad, Hindustan, lying between Baghelcund and Scindiah on the E. and W., and the river Jumna and Malva on the N. and S. It is traversed by the Vindhya, the Panha, and the Bandhair ranges of mountains, and its rivers are the Betwa, the Cane, and the Dessan. The valleys are fertile, and produce abundance of rice and other grain. It yields also iron and catechu. The capital is Banda, and there are other towns of strength and importance. Cotton, carpets, &c. &c. are manufactured in some of them. The population is above 2 millions and a half.

BUNDLE, s. [byndle, Sax.] a parcel of goods, or collection of things wrapped or tied together, including the secondary idea of being easily portable.

To BUNDLE, v. a. to tie or wrap several things together. Figuratively, to be included or collected together; to be comprehended or connected.

BUNG, s. [bing, Brit.] a stopple of wood, cork, &c. for the bung-hole of a cask.

To BUNG, v. a. to stop a barrel close at its largest vent or hole.

BUN'GAY, Suffolk. It is seated on the river Waveney, which separates it from Norfolk. It has two parish churches, one of which has a very handsome tower; and in the town are the ruins of a manney, and of the castle of the Bigod family. It is a good trading town, and the market is considerable for corn.

It is 107 miles from London. Market, Thursday. Pop. 4109.

BUN'GHOLE, s. a large round hole in a barrel, by which it is filled.

To BUN'GGLE, v. n. to perform any thing in a clumsy, awkward manner.—v. a. to both. Figuratively, to palliate grossly, joined with the particle up.

BUN'GLE, s. a botch; an awkward and clumsy performance.

BUN'GLER, s. a bad workman; one who does a thing in an ignorant, awkward, or clumsy manner.

BUNGLINGLY, ad. in a bad, clumsy, ignorant, or awkward manner.

BUNN, s. [bunelo, Span.] in pastry, a cake composed of yeast, flour, and caraway seeds, or currants.

BUNT, s. [corrupted according to Skinner from bent,] the middle part of a sail formed into a bag or pouch, that it may contain more wind. Bunt-lines are small lines fastened to the foot, and reeved through little blocks, seized to the yard, serving to hoist up the bunt of the sail, that it may be furl'd with greater ease.

To BUNT, v. n. to swell, used with the particle out.

BUNTER, s. [a cant word,] a woman who picks up rags in the street. Used figuratively, as a term of reproach, to convey the idea of a dirty and low-lived creature.

BUNTING, s. the stuff of which a ship's colours are made.

In Natural History, a bird of the lark kind.

BUNTINGFORD, Hertfordshire. It is a large thoroughfare on the N. road, 31 miles from London. Market, Monday. Pop. 581.

BUNYAN, JOHN, the writer of the Pilgrim's Progress, was a tinker, born at Elstow near Bedford, served in the Parliament's army during the civil war, and after a youth of blackguardism, and a spiritual history replete with intense interest, became a preacher amongst the Baptists at Bedford. He was imprisoned for 12 years at Bedford, under Charles II., and there wrote his immortal work. As a preacher he manifested great powers, and as a writer of allegories, and delineator of the movements of the affections, is unsurpassed. His writings are numerous, and all of a practical character. He died in 1688, aged 60 years.

BUNAPARTE, NAPOLEON. The father of this consummate warrior and statesman, Charles Buonaparte, was a Corsican who joined General Paoli in his vain struggle for independence, and died in 1785. His mother, Letitia Ramolino, shared all her husband's dangers, all her son's glory, and survived his fall, dying in 1836, aged 86 years. Napoleon, the second son, was educated at the military school at Brienne till the age of 15, and afterwards studied at Paris for a year, when he obtained a sub-lieutenancy in the artillery regiment of La Fere. At the outbreak of the Revolution he espoused the popular side, and obtained a captaincy in another artillery regiment. He witnessed the attacks on the Tuilleries, on the 20th of June and 10th of August, which destroyed the shadow of monarchy; and made his first appearance on the stage of world-history in devising and executing a plan of attack on Toulon, which snatched it from the grasp of the English. After some unimportant services and changes, in which he bore the rank of brigadier-general, he next appears as intrusted by the Convention with the suppression of the insurrection of the 13th Vendemiaire, which he effected with his usual stern promptitude. He now married Josephine Beauharnois, and at the same time obtained the command of the army in Italy. From the time of his entrance on this scene of action to the end of the following year, was one series of victories, gained by courage and rapidity of movement, such as only the most brilliant skill can inspire. Three armies of veteran Austrians were destroyed, and a fourth driven out of the country; battles such as those of Arcole and Lodi were gained in the face of seemingly insuperable difficulties; every power, excepting perhaps Naples, was shaken; a republic was formed in the stead of the numerous states of the N. part of Italy;—and as the reverse of all this, Venice was shamefully deceived and sold to Austria; and the whole country ravaged in a way that was not exceeded in rapacity and brutality by the fierce races that overwhelmed the empire of Rome. Jealousy had already sprung up between Buonaparte and the Directory, but they were too well matched for either to attempt the other's overthrow. An attack on England was planned, but relinquished; it was therefore determined to force a passage by Egypt and Syria to the East Indian empire. On his way to Egypt, Malta fell before Napoleon by treachery; and on his arrival, the country being unprepared, and the Manlukos having courage only, without military skill, all was soon in his hands; but his victories, even that of the Pyramids, were fearfully balanced by the loss of the battle of Aboukir Bay, which destroyed his fleet, his defeat before Acre in Syria, and the reputation which his contempt of human life gained for him. At length information from France determined him to relinquish the dream of an empire for the prospect of a reality, and relinquishing his command, he secretly returned to Europe. The result of this was the overthrow of the Directory, and the establishment of the Consulate, Napoleon being of course First Consul. He wisely used his power to recruit and reanimate the spirit of the country, and having arranged home affairs, once more turned to attack Austria. Crossing the Alps, where it was thought impossible, he descended on the plains of Lombardy, and the victory of Marengo was his first blow. The victory of Hohenlinden followed, and, after much diplomacy, the treaty of Amiens. Buonaparte was now appointed President of the Italian Republic, and Mediator of the Helvetic League, and devoted himself to the completion of his internal measures, and his reforms in law, which resulted in the formation of his celebrated Codes, which are fair rivals with the Pandects of Justinian. The annexation of parts of Italy to France, the execution of the Duke d'Enghien, the suppression of conspiracies, and the elevation of himself to the title of Emperor, were his next steps; followed by further changes in Italy, and the appointing of members of his own family to kingdoms established on the ruins of republics. From another attempt on England he was diverted by a new continental war, the issue of which was the victory at Austerlitz. England gained the battle of Trafalgar; and Prussia lost Jena and Auerstadt. Russia next was driven back by the loss of the battle of Friedland, and signed the treaty of Tilsit. So that England was the only power left in opposition untouched. The last vestige of popularity was destroyed by the suppression of the Lower House in France, leaving the emperor, in all but the name, an autocrat. Spain was now visited with the protracted horrors of the Peninsular war, the results of which to France, the Peninsula, and to England, which was the only acting power against Napoleon and his king of Spain, were, for all the glory of the victories gained by the last nation, most fearful. Meanwhile the emperor was engaged in fresh wars, and the victory of Wagram led to the divorce of Josephine and the marriage of Napoleon with Maria Louisa of Austria. This was the loftiest point to which Napoleon's ambition and power carried him. England alone, of all the powers of Europe, was free. The alliance of Sweden with Russia, led to the gigantic expedition against the latter power. He conquered at Borodino, he reached Moscow, but the resolute devotion of their towns to the flames, the savage and restless attacks of their Cossacks, the character of their country and climate, effected for the Russians what their military skill failed to achieve. Napoleon retreated alone from the snare he had laid for himself; his army, diminished by above 400,000 killed and taken prisoners, followed him as it could. Prussia joined with the other allies, and, after various indecisive victories on both sides, the battle of Leipzig sent the emperor again in disastrous defeat to France. At the end of 1813, Buonaparte found that the French nation would no longer willingly give up to him blood and treasure to be so wastefully squandered. Yet he still fought against the allies, till in March, 1814, the whole continent had peace suddenly restored, by the taking of Paris, and the abdication of the emperor for the sovereignty of the petty island of Elba. Here he stayed nearly a year, when, in the midst of the sessions of the congress at Vienna, he returned to France. In one month all the work of the allies was overturned. Napoleon ventured not to assume the sole authority he had held before, but making such provision as he could, advanced to meet the armies that were approaching his frontiers. At Ligny and Quatre Bras he gained some considerable advantage; two days after, at Waterloo, he was utterly routed; in four days more he abdicated the throne he had held for just 100 days, surrendered himself to the captain of an English vessel, and was by the English government despatched at once to the island of St. Helena, where he lived as a prisoner of war from Oct., 1815, to the 5th of May, 1821, when he died, aged 52 years. In Dec., 1840, his remains were transferred from the island to Paris. Respecting the character of Napoleon, his deeds are the only witnesses to be believed, and they show that personal ambition, enhancing the evils of birth and training, could render nugatory in great part, and at last destroy, as mighty and as clear a mind as the world has ever known. And history must record, that as the armed opposition of the civilized world against him was not conducted for the general good, so his overthrow advanced not, but rather vastly retarded, the progress of popular and national liberty. Joseph Buonaparte, the elder brother, after holding some official stations under the Directory, on the rise of Napoleon, was advanced to the highest posts of honour. He was made king of Naples and Sicily first, in which station he introduced many beneficial though sweeping reforms. Afterwards he was appointed king of Spain and the Indies, during the Peninsular war, and had, both from the English armies and the plans of his brother, no enviable throne. He shared the fortunes of Napoleon, and in 1815 settled in the United States. He died at Florence in 1844, aged 76 years. Lucien Buonaparte took some part in the affairs of the Revolution before the rise of Napoleon. He aided in the overthrow of the Directory, but he refused to hold a crown as a vassal of the emperor of France. He was once a prisoner in England. At length, on Napoleon's fall, he retired to Italy, and spent in peaceful and scientific pursuits the remainder of his life. He died in 1840, aged 65 years. Jerome Buonaparte was made by his brother king of Westphalia, and was partner in his fall at Leipzig. Louis Buonaparte, Napoleon made king of Holland, but he soon found the yoke too heavy. He had been espoused to Josephine's daughter. Being deposed, he betook himself to Austria. He died in 1846. Napoleon François Buonaparte, son of the emperor and Maria Louisa, bore the title of King of Rome, during the empire. After 1814 he lived in Austria, and was made Duke of Reichstadt. He died in 1832, aged 21 years.

BUOY, (boy) s. [boûé, or boye, Fr.] a piece of wood or cork, and sometimes an empty barrel, well closed, floating in the water, tied to a cable fastened to the bottom of the sea, in order to inform pilots and mariners where anchors are dropped in the harbours, where the wrecks of ships are sunk, together with shallow places, sand-banks, and other impediments. The mast buoy is made of a piece of a mast or other piece of wood, which stands out of the water. Buoy is sometimes used for a sea-mark, which shows the dangers of difficult passages. Life-buoy is a buoy made to help shipwrecked seamen to keep above water till rescue can arrive.

To BUOY, (boy) v. a. to raise above the surface of the water; to keep afloat. Figuratively, to keep any principle or thing from subsiding, or sinking under oppression; to cause a thing to ascend by its specific lightness.—v. n. to float. Figuratively, to surmount, or get the better of all difficulties or impediments.

BUOYANCY, (boyancy) s. the quality of floating; or that quality which prevents a thing from subsiding, sinking, or descending. The degree of buoyancy depends on the lightness of a substance compared with that of the medium in which it floats; thus cork will swim in water, and vapour will ascend in air, because the specific gravity of cork is less than that of water, and the specific gravity of vapour less than that of common air.

BUOYANT, (boyant) a. floating; light; that will not sink. Figuratively, animated, or that keeps from dejection.

BURBOT, s. a river fish full of prickles.

BURCKHARDT, JOHN LEWIS, a distinguished traveller, who being engaged to explore the interior of Africa, bent his course to Syria, where he studied the language and the manners of the Arab tribes, and discovered the remains of the Idumean capital, Petra. He then attempted to cross the continent of Africa from the upper part of the Valley of the Nile. He then went to Mecca that he might pass as a Hadgi, and was about to set out from Cairo, with a caravan of W. Africans, when he died in 1817, aged 33 years.

BURDEN, s. frequently spelt burthen; [byrthen, Sax.] a load, supposed to be as much as a man or a horse can carry. Figuratively, a difficulty, oppression, affliction, or any thing that affects a person with weariness, or becomes irksome; the number of tons or weight a ship can carry. In trade, applied to steel, 180lb. In Music, the drone or bass of an organ, bagpipe, &c., and the pipe or string which sounds it; hence the words which are repeated at the end of every stanza, are called the burthen of a song. SYNON. By the word burthen we understand a weight possible to be borne; by load, a weight more than we are able to bear. A light burthen is no inelegant expression; but a light load certainly is.

TO BURDEN, v. a. to load; to encumber, or put a person to great expense.

BURDENER, s. one who loads. Figuratively, an oppressor. BURDENOUS, a. that makes a load heavy. Figuratively, grievous, oppressive, irksome; putting a person to great expense, without being of any service to him.

BURDENSOME, a. applied to a very pressing load on the body. Figuratively, applied to afflictions, or the trouble one person gives another, afflicting the mind with great anxiety and distress.

BURDENSOMENESS, s. applied to loads, weight or heaviness. Figuratively, applied to calamities and inconveniences.

BURDETT, SIR FRANCIS, a politician for many years a popular idol, as is ever the case with aristocrats who profess ultra-liberal opinions. His contests for Westminster, his duel, his imprisonment in the Tower, and a consistent course of advocacy of reform, &c. from 1790 to 1835, with his change of political action and profession then, are the whole of his life. He died in 1844, aged 74 years.

BURDOCK, s. in Botany, a very common plant, with heart-shaped leaves and purple blossoms and hooked sepals.

BUREAU, (bu-ro) s. [Fr.] a chest of drawers, with the top sloping, and furnished with pigeon-holes to keep writings in.

BURFORD, Oxfordshire. It has manufactories of duffels, rugs, and saddles; and is seated on the river Windrush, 71 miles from London. Market, Saturday. Pop. 1862.

BURGAGE, s. in Law, a tenure proper to cities and borough towns, whereby lands are held of the king, or other lords, at a certain yearly rent.

BURGAMOT, s. [bergamotte, Fr.] a species of mellow juicy pear; a kind of perfume.

BURGEON, (bu-joins) s. [bourgeois, Fr.] a small type used by printers; a citizen, a bourgeois.

BÜRGER, GOTTFRIED AUGUST, a German poet, some of whose works are known to us by translations, and who stands very high in the estimation of critics. He lived in great poverty, and died in 1794, aged 46 years.

BURGESS, s. [bourgeois, Fr.] an inhabitant of a borough or city; or a representative of a borough town in parliament.

BURGH, s. a corporate town or borough.

BURGH, Lincolnshire, 133 miles from London. Market, Thursdays. Pop. 1095.

BURGER, s. [burg and war, Sax.] one who has the right of a citizen, or a vote for a parliament-man.

BURGERSHIP, s. [burgher and scyp, Sax.] the dignity, privilege, or office of burgher.

BURGLARY, s. in Law, a felonious breaking and entering a person's house in the night-time, with an intent to commit some felony, whether it be executed or not. If the offence happen in the day time, it is then called housebreaking, by way of distinction. A reward of 40*l.* is given for apprehending persons guilty of this crime, by 5 Ann. c. 51.

BURGOMASTER, s. most properly spelt burghmaster; [burgher and master, Belg.] the chief magistrate of the towns of Holland, Flanders, and Germany, and answers to an alderman and sheriff of London.

BURGOS, an ancient city of Spain, capital of Old Castile, seated partly on a mountain, and extending to the river Arlanzon. The squares, public buildings, and fountains are magnificent, and the walks agreeable. Many manufactories are carried on here. Its population is about 12,000. It is 117 miles from Madrid. Lat. 42. 20. N. Long. 3. 30. W.

BURGUNDY, a former province of France, comprising the departments of Aube, Côte d'Or, Saône and Loire, and Yonne. It reached from Champagne to Switzerland and Dauphiné, and lay between Franche Comté and the provinces named Orléannois, Bourbonnois, and Nivernois. This district is watered by the Rhone, the Seine, and the Loire, and their tributaries, and is one of the most fertile parts of all France, producing corn, fruits, and abundance of wine, excellent timber, and sheep. Auxerre and Dijon were the chief places, the latter being the capital. From the 12th to the end of the 15th century, the dukes of Burgundy figure most conspicuously in the history of France.

BURIAL, s. the interring or placing a dead body in the ground. Figuratively, the placing any thing in the earth, or under the water. The burial service is an office of the church, performed at the grave and interment of one of its members.

BURIATS, a race of Siberian Tatars, living on the shores of the Lena in Asiatic Russia. They occupy a position midway between the nomadic pastoral and the settled commercial states of life. In the most southerly part Buddhism prevails, but in the northerly part the religion called Shamanism. Their prayer-mills, prayers written on a wheel to be turned by hand, or by sails like a mill, will show what advance they have actually made from barbarism. The whole nation does not number 500,000 souls.

BURIER, s. he that places or inters a corpse in the grave. Figuratively, that which removes any corpse or other things out of sight. Seldom used.

BURINE, s. [Fr.] a tool used by engravers to make their marks, or etch on metal.

BURKE, EDMUND, one of England's greatest and most philosophical statesmen and orators, studied at Dublin, and was intended for the bar, but relinquished it for the more attractive pursuit of literature. He entered the political field as secretary to Lord Halifax, in the lord-lieutenancy of Ireland, and a few years afterwards appeared in the House of Commons, being also secretary to Lord Rockingham the prime minister. He distinguished himself in the debates from the first day of his entrance to the House, and produced pamphlet after pamphlet on subjects of the deepest interest to the nation. He held a subordinate place in the Rockingham ministry of 1782, and evinced the earnestness of his desire for economical reforms, by beginning with the emoluments of his own post. In the trial of Warren Hastings, Burke took the leadership in the case against him. His views of the French Revolution led to a separation from Fox, and finally from the Whig party. Till 1794 he continued this life of literary and political activity, and then retired. He died in 1797, aged 67 years. His writings and speeches are not mere literary or party productions, they form a part of the history of his country, and abound with suggestions which the men of his day could make no use of. It is remarkable that in his latest efforts he used the most richly ornate style, while his earliest works exhibit the very opposite style.

TO BURL, v. a. to dress clothes as fullers do.

BURLESQUE, (bu-rlésk) s. [Fr.] a droll, ludicrous kind of poetry, wherein both persons and things are represented in such a ridiculous light as to excite laughter.

TO BURLESQUE, (bu-rlésk) v. a. to turn to ridicule; to represent a person or thing in a ludicrous and ridiculous manner.

BURLINGTON, a town of Vermont, United States. It is situated on a bay on the E. side of Lake Champlain, on regularly rising ground, and is laid out so that the streets intersect at right angles. It contains many elegant houses, and is the largest and most commercial place in the State. There are three good wharfs, and 4 miles from the shore is a lighthouse. The buildings of Vermont university are near this town, which is a flourishing institution, with a medical school attached to it, and a good library. It has a few manufactories. It is 513 miles from Washington. Pop. 4271. There are 16 other places of this name in the States, one of which, in New Jersey, is of some importance.

BURLY, a. tall, or overgrown, applied to stature. Of large dimensions, or very wide, applied to breadth. High-sounding, swelling, or pompous, applied to style.

TO BURN, v. a. preter. I burnt, or have burnt; [bernan, Sax.] to consume or destroy by fire; to occasion a wound by fire, or any hot solid body.—v. n. to be on fire; to kindle. Figuratively, to shine as if in flame; to be violently agitated or inflamed by passion; to make the cheeks glow with heat, or consume like latent fire.

BURN, s. a wound or hurt received from fire.

BURNET, s. in Botany, a plant, the same with piimpinella.

BURNET, GILBERT, Bishop of Salisbury, at the end of the 17th century, and a most voluminous writer on history, theology, &c. He studied at Aberdeen, and entered the Church of Scotland as it was organized at the Restoration. He early attracted attention by his semi-political writings, and in time removed to London, where he was soon conspicuous as an opponent of the court party. His reproof of the monarch's vices, and his carelessness of his favour, were singularities in that age of fanatical licentiousness and servility. He was presented to the see of Salisbury by William III., and continued through all opposition and controversy firm to his political party till his death, in 1715, aged 72 years. His History of the Reformation and of his own Times, and his Exposition of the Thirty-nine Articles, are his principal works.

BURNET, DR. THOMAS, one of the most famous of the cosmognets of comparatively modern times. He spent his life as college fellow, private tutor, and master of the Charterhouse; and published his philosophical romancings respecting the changes past and future of the world, respecting the early history of our race, and the state of the dead, with one or two more practical tracts, at different intervals of his long life. He died in 1715, aged 80 years.

BURNET, DR. CHARLES, an eminent English composer, and author of a History of Music, during the last century. He attracted the attention of some of the nobility by his first compositions, and after his marriage resided in London, then at Lynn, and afterwards in town again. In professional pursuits, and authorship, and travels for the sake of materials for his History, he spent his active life, and died in 1814, aged 88 years. He received the highest literary honours during his life, and his work is reckoned a standard one.

BURNHAM, Norfolk. It is seated near the sea, with a good harbour, and a considerable trade in corn, 126 miles from London. Market, Saturday. Pop. 1120.

BURNHAM, Essex, a fishing town at the mouth of the river Crouch, which is here called Burnham Water. The Walkeet and Burnham oysters are the product of the creek and pits of this river. It is 4 miles from London. Pop. 1735.

BURNING, s. the action of fire on any substance. Figuratively, flame or fire. See COMBUSTION.

BURNING-GLASS, s. a convex glass which collects the rays of the sun into a point, where wood or other combustible matter being placed, is set on fire. The burning-glasses made of mirrors are much more powerful than those made by lenses, or glasses that transmit the rays of light through them.

To BURNISH, v. a. [burnir, Fr.] to polish any substance so as to make it shine.—v. n. to grow bright or glossy; to shine with splendour.

BURNISHER, s. one who burnishes or polishes; an instrument used by polishers.

BURNISHING, s. the polishing metals to make them glossy or shining.

BURNLEY, Lancashire; here are large woollen and cotton manufactures, metal foundries, printing houses, dyeing houses, mills, &c. It is seated in a very healthy situation, near the Leeds and Liverpool canal, 208 miles from London. Market, Monday. Pop. 10,699.

BURNS, ROBERT, was the son of a hard-toiling but high-hearted peasant of Ayrshire, Scotland, who had a scanty education given him, and was a laborious and laughter-loving youth. He had pleased himself and his friends with his verses for some years, when driven to great distress by criminal imprudence, and about to leave the country, he published a volume of poems. The effect of this volume was to prevent his voyage, and to throw open to him, as a new-found poet of first rank, the world of letters and of fashion. He undertook a farm, and obtained the post of excise-officer. His farming business did not prosper, and he waited in Duinfries for advancement in his other occupation. Here he wrote some of his sweetest songs, and here he was worn out of life by pecuniary want. He died in 1796, aged 37 years. Of unavailing posthumous honours few have had a like share, but few have so greatly earned them. The admiring world starved him, and now, penitent, has celebrated his memory by a national festival, and called his country, after him, the Land of Burns.

BURN, part. pass. of To BURN. Burnt-ear, a species of disease in ears of corn, produced by a peculiar kind of fungus which converts it wholly into black dust.

BURNTISLAND, Fifehire, a town with a good, deep, and large harbour. It is seated on a stupendous rock, on the Frith of Forth, 10 miles from Edinburgh.

BURK, s. the lobe or lap of the ear; likewise a sweetbread of meat, especially that of veal.

BURR-RED, s. in Botany, a kind of plant found in wet ditches, and on banks of rivers.

BURREL, s. [beurre, Fr.] in Gardening, a species of pear, called likewise the red butter pear.

BURREL-FLY, s. in Natural History, a winged insect very troublesome to cattle, called likewise the ox fly, gad-bee, or breese.

BURRLET-SHOT, s. a sort of case shot, or small bullets, nails, stones, pieces of old iron, &c., put into cases, to be discharged from a piece of ordnance.

BURROW, BERG, BURG, BOROUGH, BURGH, s. [burg, Sax.] a corporate town which sends members to parliament, and formerly applied only to fortified places; the holes made in the ground by rabbits.

To BURROW, v. a. to make holes in the ground like rabbits.

BURSA, anciently Brusa, one of the largest and most beautiful cities of Asia Minor, and anciently the capital of Bithynia. It stands at the foot of Mount Olympus, on the edge of a fine plain, covered with fruit trees. The mosques and caravanseras are elegant, and every house has its fountain. The bezzestine is a large structure, full of warehouses and shops, for the sale of their own manufactures of silk, &c., and all the commodities of the East. The population is under 40,000, and the Turks, Armenians, Jews, and Greeks occupy different quarters of the town. Lat. 32. 22. N. Long. 29. 5. E.

BURSAR, s. [curarius, Lat.] an officer in a college, who receives its monies, and keeps its accounts; a treasurer.

BURSE, [bourse, Fr.] an exchange, or place where merchants assemble to transact business.

BURSRUM, Staffordshire. This town lies in the Potteries, and its almost sole manufacture is earthenware. It is 143 miles from London. Markets, Monday and Saturday. Pop. 10,001.

BURST, s. a separation of the parts of a thing with violence, and attended with noise; an explosion; a sudden and violent action of any kind.

To BURST, v. n. preter. I burst, have burst, or bursten; [burstan, Sax.] to separate or fly asunder with violence; to quit or break away, with the particle from. Used with into, to come in suddenly, "She burst into the room." To break, separate, and disunite with suddenness and violence.

BURST, BURSTEN, part. of To BURST; in Surgery, applied to one who has a rupture.

To BURTHEN, v. a. } See BURDEN.

BURTHEN, s.

BURTON, Westmoreland. It communicates with all the inland navigations. It is 247 miles from London. Market, Tuesday. Pop. 2387.

BURTON STRATHER, Lincolnshire. It is seated on a hill, near the Trent, on which it has several mills. It is 164 miles from London. Market, Monday. Pop. 799.

BURTON UPON TRENT, Staffordshire. It is situated on the river Trent, over which it has a bridge of freestone a quarter of a mile in length. It consists chiefly of one long street, and has long been noted for its excellent malt and ale. It has also manufactures in woollen and cotton, of bats, spades, and other articles, besides forges for forming iron bars. It is 134 miles from London. Market, Thursday. Pop. 8136.

BURTON, ROBERT, author of the famous Anatomy of Melancholy, a quaint, humorous, extravagantly odd character, who, but for his book, would have been worthily forgotten. He died in 1640, aged 74 years.

BURY, (common pron. berry, in this and the four next words,) s. [burg, Sax.] a dwelling-place or house. Added to the Saxon names, implies that the person or company resided or lived there; thus Aldermanbury seems to intimate that the aldermen resided formerly in that place.

To BU'RY, v. a. to inter a corpse in a grave; to inter with funeral rites; to cover with earth. Figuratively, to conceal or hide.

BU'RYING-PLACE, s. a place set apart for interring bodies; a churchyard.

BU'RY, Lancashire, a town noted for its manufacture of fustians, half thicks, kerseys, calicoes, &c. Bury is seated on the Irvell, near a canal which goes to Manchester. It is 190 miles from London. Market, Thursday. Pop. 20,710.

BU'RY ST. EDMUND'S, Suffolk. It owes its name to a celebrated abbey, one of the largest and richest in the kingdom, founded in honour of Edmundo, king of the East Angles, who was slain by the Danes and buried here. It has two fine churches, and is situated in a healthy, delightful spot, affording beautiful prospects. It is 72 miles from London. Markets, Wednesday and Saturday. Pop. 12,538.

BUSBY, DR. RICHARD, the noted head-master of Westminster School during all the troubles of the 17th century. Nothing beyond anecdotes of his ways of preserving his authority amongst his scholars is recorded of him. He was a church dignitary after the Restoration, and died in 1695, aged 89 years.

BUSH, s. [bois, Fr.] a thick shrub.

To BUSH, v. n. to grow thick; to grow in a great number close together.

BUSHEL, s. [baisseau, Fr.] a measure of capacity for dry goods, as corn, salt, fruit, coals, &c., containing eight gallons, or four pecks, or the eighth part of a quarter of corn, &c.

BUSHMEN, the name given by the Dutch to those members of the Hottentot or Caffre race, who live a wild life on the borders of Cape Colony. They subsist chiefly by hunting and robbery, and have not yielded to the efforts which have been made to civilize or Christianize them.

BUSHY, a. full of branches. Figuratively, short, but growing in great numbers.

BUSINESS, (business) a. without employ; at leisure. Figuratively, without the fatigue which attends business.

BUSILY, (busily) ad. in an officious, inquisitive manner; with an air of seeming hurry from the multiplicity of business.

BUSINESS, (business, or business) s. employment; a man's peculiar trade or profession; affairs or concerns. After do, properly, service, advantage, or a means of attaining an end. "A perpetual spring will not do their business" Deut. "To do a man's business, is a low and familiar phrase for killing, destroying, or ruining him. SYNON. Business implies an object of industry; affairs, an object of concern. The first implies the hands; the second, the mind. The word business, by its having no plural number, intimates a particular employ. By the singular of affairs being seldom in use in the sense before us, that word is understood to mean a variety of transactions.

BUSK, s. [busque, Fr.] a piece of steel or whalebone, worn at the stomach of a woman's stays, in order to keep them in the proper form, and strengthen them.

BUSKIN, s. [broeken, Belg.] a kind of short boot worn by the ancients, covering the foot and leg as far as the middle, laced or fastened before; was worn by the dramatic performers in tragedy, and distinguished from the sock worn in comedy, which was of a thinner sole, and consequently lower. Figuratively, tragedy.

BUSKINED, a. dressed in buskins.

BUSS, s. [bus, Ir.] a salute given by the lips; distinguished from a kiss, which is given with a greater show of distance or ceremonious kindness. Also, from busse, Teut. a small vessel from 48 to 60 tons burthen, used in the herring fishery.

To BUSS, v. a. to salute a person with the lips. Figuratively, to touch.

BUST, s. [busto, Ital.] in Sculpture, the figure of a person in relief, containing only head, shoulders, and stomach, usually placed on a pedestal or console. The Italians use the term for the trunk of the human body, from the neck to the hips.

BU'STARD, (bustard, Fr.) in Natural History, a large wild fowl, which runs very swiftly, and does not readily take to flight, found on open downs and heaths, in the W. of Norfolk, and a few other parts of England.

To BU'STLE, v. n. to set about a thing with activity; to make a great noise or stir about any thing.

BU'STLE, s. a hurry of business; a noise or tumult.

BU'STLER, s. an active, industrious, stirring man.

BU/SY, (biszy, or bisszy) a. [busgian, Sax.] engaged in any employment; active, diligent, officious.

To BU/SY, (biszy) v. a. to keep a person employed; to employ.

BU/SYBODY, (biszy body) s. an officious person, meddling with the concerns of other people, offering assistance, and giving advice, without being asked.

BUT, conj. [bute, butan, Sax.] when it diverts or breaks off the thread of a discourse, so as to pursue a different topic, it intimates a stop of the mind, and signifies howbeit. "But to say no more."

When applied to limit or restrain the sense to what is expressed, exclusive of all others, it signifies only. "I saw but two planets." When used to imply a thing to be otherwise than it should be, it signifies yet, or nevertheless. "You pray, but it is not that God would bring you to the true religion." Joined with did or had it denotes only. "Did but men consider," Tillotson. After a comparative noun it has the force of than. "No sooner up, but he privately opened the gate." Guard. No. 167. After the auxiliary verb be, preceded by a negative, it implies otherwise than. "It cannot be but nature has some director," Locke. Joined with for, it implies without, or had it not been for. "And but for mischief, you had died for spite," Dryden. After a negative, or question implying a negative, it denotes an exception, except. "Who can it be, ye gods, but perjured Lycon?" Smith's Phæd.

BUT, s. [bout, Fr.] a limit or boundary. In sea language, the end of any plank which joins to another on the outside of a ship under water.

BUT-END, s. the broad or blunt end of a thing, or the end on which it rests.

BUTCHER, s. [boucher, Fr.] one who kills, cuts up, and sells the flesh of cattle in a market or his own house. Figuratively, one who is of a barbarous disposition, delights in murder, or the slaughter of mankind.

To BUTCHER, v. a. to slay or kill a beast. Figuratively, to murder one of the human species in a barbarous and cruel manner.

BUTCHER-BIRD, s. in Natural History, a small bird of prey; the shrike, also called the nine-killer.

BUTCHERLY, ad. in a cruel, barbarous, or bloody manner.

BUTCHER'S BROOM, s. in Botany, a common shrub, with hard, pointed leaves, and which flowers in a very peculiar way.

BUTCHERY, s. the trade of a butcher. Figuratively, the commission of murder, attended with excessive cruelty; cruelty; barbarity.

BUTTE, JOHN, EARL OF, prime minister in the early part of the reign of George III., which post he held rather by virtue of being a royal favourite than a distinguished political leader. He effected a peace with France, but nothing else, and held his office but a short time. He was naturally addicted to contemplative and scientific pursuits, rather than those amongst which his name came to be known. He died in 1796, aged 83 years.

BUTESHIRE, a county on the W. of Scotland, consisting of the islands of Arran, Bute, Great and Little Cumbra, and Inchmarnock, all lying in the Frith of Clyde. The three large islands grow corn, and have good pastures; and all of them are notorious for their fisheries. Bute is about 5 miles in breadth, and 17 or 18 long, and has a very varied soil and surface. The highest hill is called Kilchattan. Rothsay, the county town, is on this island. Population of Bute island, 7313; of the county, 15,740. It returns one member to parliament.

BUTLER, s. formerly spelt bottler, that is, one who fills bottles, [bouteiller, Fr.] a servant who has the care of the wine and other liquors used in a family.

BUTLER, JOSEPH, Bishop of Bristol, and afterwards of Durham, author of the Analogy of Natural and Revealed Religion, and some valuable essays on the principles of morality, misnamed Sermons. He was by birth a Presbyterian, and purposed for their ministry. He then displayed the strength of his mind by corresponding with Dr. Clarke. He afterwards entered the Established Church, and studied at Oxford, where, attracting attention by his singular powers, he obtained patronage, and so gradually reached the highest dignities of the Church. Some persons attempted to fix the charge of secret Romanism on him, but it was triumphantly refuted. His works are not popular, from the cumbersome style, and the purpose of the writer to awaken thought in his readers by not furnishing all the conclusions that follow from his various arguments; but both as exercises in mental discipline, and as defences of the truth, they are invaluable. He died in 1752, aged 60 years.

BUTLER, SAMUEL, the witty author of Hudibras, had a liberal education, and lived as private secretary to various persons of distinction, both during and after the troubles of the 17th century. The court of Charles II. applauded his biting satire on their fallen foes, and left the satirist to starve. He died in 1680, aged 68 years.

BUTLERAGE, s. the duty upon wines imported, claimed by the king's butler.

BUTLERSHIP, s. the office of a butler.

BUTMENT, s. [aboutement, Fr.] in Architecture, supporters, on or against which the feet of an arch rest; likewise the little places taken out of the yard or ground-plot of a house for a buttery or scullery.

BUTT, s. [butt, Sax.] a vessel or barrel containing 126 gallons of wine, 108 of beer, and from 15 to 22 cwt. of currants.

BUTY, s. [but, Fr.] the place or mark which a person is to hit in shooting. Figuratively, the point or object to which any person's measures are made by a push in fencing; a person who is the object of ridicule to a whole company.

To BUTT, v. a. to strike or give a blow with the head, applied to the method of attack used by a ram.

BUTTER, s. [buttere, Sax.] a fat and unctuous substance, obtained from cream of cows' milk by churning. Butter of antimony, of bismuth, &c. are chemical preparations of those substances, so called on account of their consistence resembling that of butter.

To BUTTER, v. a. to spread or pour butter upon any thing.

BUTTERBUMP, s. a fowl; the same with bittern.

BUTTERBUR, s. [petasites, Lat.] in Botany, a plant which grows wild in great plenty by the sides of ditches, and has hooks to the seed vessel, by which they get carried away and dispersed.

BUTTERCUP, s. in Botany, a yellow flower, a species of ranunculus, with which the fields abound in the month of May.

BUTTERFLY, s. [butterfliege, Sax.] in Natural History, the name given to the full-developed insects of one great division of the order Lepidoptera. They have four wings, covered with scales or plumes of various colours; and some of our native species are very beautiful. The butterflies of Brazil are exceedingly splendid. See CATERPILLAR, CHRYSALIS, MOTHS, &c.

BUTTERJAGS, s. in Botany, a plant, the same with the yellow medick, or snailshell.

BUTTERIS, s. in Farriery, an instrument of steel set in a wooden handle, used in paring the foot or cutting the hoof of a horse.

BUTTERMERE WATER, a lake of Cumberland, near the source of the Cocker. The lakes of Buttermere and Lowswater are not so extensive as those of the Derwent or Keswick, but quite as beautiful, and the country about them is as mountainous and romantic as Borrowdale.

BUTTERMILK, s. the whey separated from the cream in making butter.

BUTTERPRINT, s. a piece of carved wood used to mark butter.

BUTTERWORT, s. in Botany, the pinguicula, a somewhat rare bog-plant.

BUTTERY, s. having the appearance or qualities of butter.

BUTTERY, s. the room where provisions are laid up.

BUTTMANN, PHILIP CHARLES, a well-known Greek scholar of Berlin. He studied at Göttingen, and was engaged afterwards in various grades in the king of Prussia's library. His Grammars are the best known of his productions. He died in 1820, aged 64 years.

BUTTOCK, s. the broad, thick, fleshy part of a man or beast, joining to the hip. The buttock of a ship is her full breadth right astern.

BUTTON, s. [botten, Brit.] a small flattish round ball made of metal, or wood covered with silk or hair, sewed to the clothes to fasten any part of dress together. Figuratively, a knob or ball. In Botany, the round head of a plant; a bud. In Carpentry, a small bar revolving upon a nail or screw, used to keep a door close. In Smithery, a brass knob of a lock, serving to open or shut a door. In Chemistry, the small round piece of metal, which is found at the bottom of a crucible, after a metallic ore or an oxide of metal has been reduced. In Confectionery, a small sweet cake. In Natural History, the sea-urchin, a kind of crab-fish, with prickles instead of feet.

To BUTTON, v. a. to sew buttons on a garment; to close or fasten the parts of a garment together with buttons. Figuratively, to enclose.

BUTTONHOLE, s. the hole made in a garment to receive and fasten the button in.

BUTTRESS, s. [aboutir, Fr.] in Architecture, a kind of buttment serving to prop or support the side of a building or wall. Figuratively, a prop or support of any opinion or cause.

To BUTTRESS, v. a. to prop, support, or secure from falling. BUTTWINK, s. a bird.

BUTYRACEOUS, BUTYROUS, a. [butyrum, Lat.] having the properties or qualities of butter.

BUTYRIC ACID, a volatile acid which occurs in butter: its smell is that of rancid butter.

BUXOM, a. [bucsum, Sax.] obedient; tractable; gay, lively, brisk, wanton, jolly. Figuratively, void of resistance; yielding, or giving way.

BUXOMLY, ad. in a wanton, lively, gay, or amorous manner.

BUXOMNESS, s. wantonness, gaiety.

BUXSTAD, or BUCKSTAD, Sussex.

BUXTON, Derbyshire. This town is famous for its hot springs, which have rendered it a place of resort for persons troubled with some complaints, from the earliest times. The recent part of the town has some very elegant buildings, of which the Crescent is the largest and handsomest. Buxton has a manufacture of cotton, and is situated in an open, healthy country, with a variety of fine views. There are in the neighbourhood many natural curiosities, which afford great attraction to the visitors. It is 159 miles from London. Market, Saturday. Pop. 1569.

BUXTON, JERIDIAH, the famous calculator of the last century, an ignorant man, in humble circumstances, distinguished by nothing whatever save his skill in computation, which made him a wonder in his day. He died about 1775, aged about 70 years.

BUXTON, SIR THOMAS FOWELL, one of the philanthropic politicians who laboured for the overthrow of W. Indian slavery, and for the reform of prison discipline. He was connected by marriage with Mrs. Fry, and laboured with her in the latter object. He died in 1845, aged 59 years.

BUXTORF, the family name of three eminent Hebrew scholars of Basle, Switzerland, at the end of the 16th and the 17th centuries. The eldest, John, was the author of an edition of the Hebrew Bible, and a Grammar, Lexicon, and Concordance to it, beside other works. His son and grandsons re-edited his works, and published various treatises of their own. The first died in 1629, the last in 1732.

To BUY, (by) v. a. [biegean, Sax.] to purchase a thing by money, or the exchange of any other commodity. Figuratively, to exchange one thing for another; to bribe, or corrupt by bribery.

BUYER, (byer) s. he that purchases a thing with money, &c.

To BUZZ, v. n. [büzzen, Teut.] to hum, or make a noise like bees, flies, or wasps.

To BUZZ, v. a. to whisper. Used with abroad, to divulge, publish, or spread a report or rumour.

BZZ, s. the humming sound of bees; a whisper, or talk.

BUZZARD, s. [busard, Fr.] in Natural History, a kind of hawk. Figuratively, a person of mean parts; a blockhead or duce.

BZZER, s. a secret whisperer, or one who endeavours, by false rumours, to alienate the affections of another.

BY, prep. [bi, big, Sax.] after words signifying action, it implies the agent, cause, means, manner; and is used after verbs neuter for the instrument. After quantity it expresses the proportion. At the end of a sentence, it implies imitation or conformity. "A model to build others by," Arbuth. After an adjective of the comparative degree, it denotes the difference. "Shorter by the head." Applied to place or situation, it denotes nearness. Joined to the pronouns himself, herself, &c., it signifies the exclusion or absence of all others. After keep, it signifies, possession, or ready for use. "He kept some of the spirit by him," Bayly. In forms of swearing, it signifies a particularizing, or specifying the object. Used adverbially, it signifies near, or at a small distance, applied to place. Passing, applied to motion; and presence, when used with be. "I will not be by," Shak. By and by, signifies a short time, or shortly. Used substantively, for something which is not the direct or immediate object of a person's regard; generally used with the preposition by. "By the by," Dryd. This word is commonly written bye, and as it distinguishes it from the preposition, should be generally adopted for the sake of perspicuity.

BY, BYE, in composition, implies something out of the direct way, as by-road; something irregular, private, or selfish, as by-end; something private, opposed to that which is by public authority, as a by-law.

BY-END, s. private or self-interest, opposed to public spirit, and conveying an idea of reproach.

BY-GONE, s. past; peculiar to the Scotch.

BY-LAW, s. a law made by corporations, or court-leets, and societies, for the better management of affairs, &c., in cases which are not provided for by the public laws, but no ways opposite or contrary to them.

BY-MATTER, s. something which is accidental, and has no connexion with the main subject.

BY-NAME, s. a nickname, name of reproach, or accidental appellation.

BY-PAST, s. past; peculiar to the Scotch.

BY-PATH, s. a private path, opposed to a public path.

BY-ROAD, s. an unfrequented road.

BYRON, GEORGE GORDON NOEL, LORD, the lately celebrated poet, whose noble verses and profligate life have gained him an unenviable fame, was miserably brought up by a foolish mother, and succeeding suddenly to the title and estates in his boyhood, had his worst passions most fatally strengthened. He early turned author, and was indebted to the slashing criticism of the Northern Review, for the stimulus to the care he afterwards bestowed on the finish of his writings. He travelled several times through the continent, resided for a time in Italy, and was engaged in aiding the revolutionists of Greece at his death. His marriage was as bad as his training. His poems display the worst affectation, the affectation of badness and misanthropy; but genius and passion sufficient to keep them from being forgotten. He died in 1824, aged 36 years.

BYRON, ADMIRAL JOHN, one of our English nautical discoverers, who passed more than a year on an uninhabited island off the W. coast of S. America; and served with distinction in the war with France. He died in 1786, aged 63 years.

BY-WAY, s. a private and obscure way.

BY-WORD, s. [bi-word, Sax.] a saying, proverb, or term of reproach.

BYZANTINE HISTORIANS, the general designation of a series of Greek authors, extending from the 6th century to the 15th, who wrote the History of the Eastern Empire, or who wrote under the patronage of the Eastern emperors. Constantinople, or Byzantium, being the capital of that empire, they have gained this name.

C

C, The third letter in the English alphabet, is sounded by pressing the breath between the tongue, raised to the roof of the mouth near the palate, and the lips open. Before the vowels, a, o, u, and all consonants, it is pronounced hard, like k, as in cage, cat, cut; but before i, e, y, it has a sound like the s, but somewhat more sharp, as in cit, cell, cyder; with an h, it has a peculiar sound, between the hardness of the k, and the softness of the s, as in chain, cheese; but in words derived from the French, it is sounded like an s before h, as in chaise, chicane, which are pronounced shaize, shicane. Writers sometimes add a k to it, when it comes at the end of words, as in logick. Used as a figure, it stands for 100, and when double, CC, 200, &c. When placed before a Latin name, it signifies Caius, Caesar, &c. With Roman lawyers, it signified to condemn, from condemno. See A. When doubled, it signifies consul. In Music, it is the name of the note occupying the 3rd space in the staff of the G clef, and 2nd in the staff of the F clef.

CAB, s. [Heb.] a Hebrew measure, containing about three pints English, or the eighteenth part of an ephah. Also, commonly, an abbreviation for cabriolet.

CABAL, s. [cabale, Fr.] a body of men united in some design to disturb or change the administration of a state, distinguished from party, in the same degree as few from many. Figuratively, an intrigue or plot to introduce a change in an administration. The Cabal was one of the ministries of Charles II., viz. Lords Clifford, Ashley, Buckingham, Arlington, and Lauderdale.

TO CABAL, v. n. [cabaler, Fr.] to form plots.

CABALA, s. [Chald.] properly signifies tradition, and is the name of a mysterious kind of science, thought to have been delivered by revelation to the ancient Jews, and transmitted by oral tradition to those of our times; serving for interpretation to the books both of nature and Scripture. It consisted principally in the combination of particular words, letters, and numbers, by means whereof the rabbins pretended to discover things future, and to see clearly into the sense of many difficult passages of Scripture.

CABALISTS, s. a sect among the Jews who interpret Scripture.

CABALLISTIC, CABALISTIC, a. relating to the cabalists; mystical.

CABALLER, s. one who enters into plots and intrigues to disturb and change the administration of any government.

CABANIS, PIERRE JEAN GEORGE, a physician of the latter part of last century, who bore his part in the French Revolution. He was ardently attached to literary studies, and was intimate with all the leading characters of the age preceding the Revolution, as well as those of that period itself. In philosophical studies he was also versed. He died in 1808, aged 51 years.

CABARET, s. [Fr.] in France, is a tavern.

CABBAGE, s. in Botany, the brassica, a kitchen plant with large, fleshy, and glaucous-coloured leaves; and its species are eight: the varieties of the first being eleven, and those of the third sort two.

TO CABBAGE, v. a. applied to tailors, to defraud a person of part of his cloth.—v. n. to form a head; as, the plants begin to cabbage.

CABIN, s. [chabin, Brit.] a little hut or cottage. On board a ship, small apartments, of different dimensions, for the officers to lie in.

TO CABIN, v. n. to live in a cabin. Figuratively, to live or lie in any narrow or small place.

CABINED, a. belonging to a cabin. Figuratively, narrow, or belonging to a bed-chamber.

CABINET, s. [cabinet, Fr.] among joiners, a kind of press or chest, with several doors and drawers for preserving curiosities, or keeping clothes. Figuratively, a room in which private consultations are held. Hence a cabinet council is that which is held with great privacy, and wherein the most important articles which concern a state are determined.

CABINET-MAKER, s. one who makes cabinets, chests of drawers, and other wooden furniture for chambers or dining-rooms.

CABLE, s. [cabl, Brit.] a thick, large, strong, three-strand rope, from three to twenty inches in diameter, fastened to an anchor to hold the ship when she rides. When two pieces of cable are spliced together, it is called a shot of the cable. Cables are often made of chain now.

CABLED, a. belonging to or resembling cables. Cabled flutes, in Architecture, are those which are filled up with pieces in the form of a cable. In Heraldry, a cabled cross is that which is formed of the two ends of a ship's cable.

CABOCHED, a. in Heraldry, applied to the head of a beast cut off behind the ears by a section parallel to the face.

CABRE/RA, a small island near Majorca in the Mediterranean, completely uninhabited and barren.

CABURE, in Natural History, a small beautiful Brazilian bird, of the owl kind.

CABURNS, s. small ropes used in a ship.

CACHALOT, in Natural History, a genus of animals of the cetaceous kind, one of which yields the spermaceti, and is commonly called the spermaceti whale.

CACHEXY, (kakékxy) s. [kakos and exis, Gr.] a habit of body that hinders nutrition, and weakens the vital and animal functions.

CACHE/CTIC, CACHECTICAL, (kakéctik, kakéktikal) a. having an ill habit of body.

CACHINNATION, (kachinnáshon) s. [cachinnatio, Lat.] a loud laughter, or what we call a horse laugh.

CACIQUE, s. [Mex.] the name given to the kings or chiefs of the Mexican tribes.

CACKLE, s. the noise made by a goose or fowl.

To CACKLE, v. n. [cackelen, Brit.] to make a noise like a goose; applied likewise to that of a hen. Figuratively, to laugh heartily.

CACKLER, s. a fowl that cackles. Figuratively, a person who divulges a secret; a tell-tale; a tattler.

CACOCYMY, (kakokymy) s. [kakos and chumos, Gr.] in Medicine, a corrupt state of the vital humours.

CADODEMON, s. [kakos and daimon, Gr.] an evil spirit, or ghost; any imaginary frightful monster, created in the minds of fearful and superstitious people. With astrologers, it is the twelfth house in a scheme of the heavens, so called from the pretended terror of its prognostication.

CACOTHESES, s. [kakos and ethos, Gr.] in Medicine, an epithet applied by Hippocrates to malignant and difficult distempers. In Surgery, it is an inveterate disease, breaking out in boils or blains, hardly curable.

CACOPHONY, (kakophony) s. [kakos and phone, Gr.] in Grammar and Rhetoric, the meeting together of letters, syllables, or words, which form a harsh and disagreeable sound.

CACIUS, s. in Botany, the general name of a family of succulent plants, with very thorny jointed stems, no leaves, small and delicate flowers set immediately on the stem, and (in their native climate) fruit not greatly dissimilar to the gooseberry. They are found in the tropical regions of the W. hemisphere almost solely.

To CACUMINATE, v. a. [cacumino, Lat.] to sharpen.

CADAVEROUS, s. [cadaverosus, Lat.] having the appearance or qualities of a dead body.

CADDIS, s. a kind of tape or ribbon. In Natural History, the grub of the Phryganea, which spins itself a moveable case, inserting pieces of stone, sand, straw, shells, and any things it finds at the bottom of the shallow waters it inhabits.

CADE, s. soft, tender, tame, delicate. In Husbandry, a cade lamb, is one that is bred in a house; a house lamb. Hence, to cade, the verb, to bring up tenderly.

CADE, s. [cadus, Lat.] a cask, cask, or barrel. A cade of beer is a vessel containing 500, and a cade of sprats, 1000.

CADENCE, s. [cadence, Fr.] a fall, decline, or descent. In Music, cadence is a certain rest either at the end of a song, or of some of its parts into which it is divided, as into members or periods. Cadence, in dancing, is when the several steps and motions follow or answer to the different notes or measure of the music.

CADET, s. [cadet, Fr.] the younger son of a family, is a word naturalized in our language from the French. Among the military men, it denotes a young gentleman, who serves in a marching regiment, as a private man, at his own expense, with a view to acquire knowledge in the art of war, and to obtain a commission in the army.

CADEW, s. [cadeworm, s. in Natural History, a kind of worms which in time change into butterflies.

CADL, s. a magistrate among the Turks.

CADILLACK, s. a sort of pear.

CADIZ, a large, rich, and ancient city of Andalusia, in Spain, seated on an island, from which it has a communication with the continent by a bridge. The bay formed by it is 12 miles in length and 6 in breadth. It is the emporium of the Spanish foreign trade. It has a noble lighthouse, and is strongly fortified, and well built. The docks are extensive, and the city has, besides its trade, some small manufactures. The population is about 30,000. Lat. 36. 32. N. Long. 6. 17. W.

CADMIUM, s. in Chemistry, a metal discovered in association with zinc by Stromeyer. In colour and lustre it much resembles tin, but is somewhat harder and more tenacious.

CADMUS, one of the fabled founders of the Grecian states. He is said to have come from Phœnicia, and it is singular that the name is the Semitic word for the East, with a Greek ending. He is also said to have introduced letters to Greece, and in confirmation of their Phœnician origin, it is noticeable that the names of the old Greek alphabet are nothing more than the Chaldaic or Hebrew names, with the demonstrative pronoun affixed, according to the Chaldaic idiom. He founded Thebes, according to the legend, after having destroyed a dragon that haunted the place, and sown its teeth in the ground, which produced a crop of ready-armed men, who on springing up fought with each other till all but seven were destroyed. These men peopled Bœotia. Other legends are related of him. The founding of Thebes is fixed in 1045, or 1594 n. c., by Newton and Barthélemy.

CADMUS OF MILETUS, was the first Grecian historian; he wrote Annals of the History of Ionia. He lived about 600 n. c.

CADUCEUS, s. [Lat.] among the Romans, was a white staff or wand, carried by those officers who went to proclaim peace with any people with whom they had been at variance. Also, a rod entwined by two serpents, borne by Mercury, as the ensign of his quality and office, given him, according to the fable, for his seven-stringed harp. The poets ascribe to this rod the properties of laying men asleep, raising the dead, &c.

CÆCUM, s. [Lat.] in Anatomy, one of the three portions of the larger intestines.

CÆDMON, was herdsman to the monastery at Whitby, in the days of holy St. Hilda; and was not able to take his part at feasts when each guest in turn extemporized to the harp. But having left a feast for shame once, as he slept one asked of him a song, and he, being persuaded to attempt, poured forth a hymn to God; which he repeated on waking, and is preserved to this day. Afterwards he did several parts of Scripture into Anglo-Saxon verse; and thus was not only the first poetic writer, but the first Bible translator in England. He lived about 670 n. c.

CÆTEN, a city, capital of the department of Calvados, France. It is situated on the rivers Orne and Odon, the former of which runs through the town, the tide bringing up large vessels. It has some manufactures, principally of lace. It has a fine university, and some well-conducted charitable institutions. Roman relics and early Norman remains are abundant in it. It is 129 miles from Paris. Its population is about 40,000. Lat. 49. 10. N. Long. 0. 25. W.

CÆRLIFON, Monmouthshire, once the metropolis of all Wales, and the see of an archbishop. It is situated on the river Usk, and has some small metal works. It is 148 miles from London. Market, Thursday. Pop. 1174.

CÆRWYS, Flintshire, N. Wales. It is seated on an ascent; and though it is but a small place, the market is very good for corn and provisions. It is 203 miles from London. Market, Tuesday. Pop. 987.

CÆSAR, CAIUS JULIUS, was descended from one of the oldest and noblest families of Rome, and was coming into notoriety for his character and military skill during the troubled days of Sylla. He used all his art and wealth to gain popularity in the stations he successively filled in the state. He opposed the severe measures determined in the senate against Catiline and his fellow-conspirators. His first great step was the compromise seemingly effected by him with his two great rivals, Pompey and Crassus. But his fame and place in the world's history opened with his wars in Gaul, which was assigned him as his province after his consulship. The history of the wars he has recorded in his beautifully written Commentaries; and by them he pushed the Roman command to the Atlantic, and laid the foundation for the subjugation of Britain. He next appears in arms against Pompey, in Spain first, and afterwards in Greece, where at Pharsalia he overthrew his rival, and was the undisputed master of the Roman world. Wars in Egypt, and in Asia Minor, against the son of Mithridates, the former king of Pontus, next engaged him. And as the partisans of Pompey (though their chief was dead) had rallied, and threatened to disturb his power, he attacked and defeated them, first in Africa, and afterwards, a second time, in Spain. The history of these wars was in part written by Cæsar, and bears the same character for simplicity and clearness as the other history does. Cæsar never bore any higher title than that of Consul and Dictator. Imperator, or Emperor, was purely a title of honour then, conferred by acclamation of the soldiers on their favourite general. Settled in power, Cæsar consulted for the good of Rome. One of his reforms, that of the Calendar, with one correction, through the nations that formed part of the Roman empire, all the civilized world feel the benefit of to this day. By a conspiracy headed by some of his most intimate friends, he fell at length, being assassinated in 44 n. c., aged 56 years.

CÆSTUS, s. [Lat.] a large gauntlet made of raw hides, used in combats with the ancients; they were studded with nails, or strengthened with lead or plates of iron, and surrounded the hands, wrist, and arm, to guard them from blows, and prevent their being broken or dislocated.

CÆSURA, s. [Lat.] a figure in poetry, by which a short syllable after a complete foot is made long.

CAFFA, the largest town in the Crimea; it is the Theodosia of the ancients, a name which has been restored to it by the Russians. From 1226 to 1474, it was in the hands of the Genoese, when its commerce was at such a height, that it exceeded even Constantinople itself in this particular. It is seated on the Black Sea, 150 miles N. E. of Constantinople. Lat. 45. 8. N. Long. 35. 45. E.

CAFFEINE, s. in Chemistry, an essential principle, or base, discovered in coffee, tea, and some other vegetables. There is reason to believe that it may assist in the production of bile, and thus facilitate the process of respiration.

CAFFRARIA, an extensive country of Africa, having an irregular surface of hill and valley, abounding in lions and other wild beasts, bordering on Cape Colony and the Indian Ocean; its northern boundaries are uncertain. The Caffres are tall, active, and robust, and evince a very warlike disposition. Their complexions are black, and their hair woolly: considerable differences exist amongst the different tribes. The men employ much of their time in hunting, the women in cultivating the land; they also make earthenware and curious baskets. The country is fertile, and they grow grain and vegetables, and they have large herds of cattle. Some of the tribes have adopted the patriarchal, and some the regal form of government. Amongst their religious practices, which are singular and simple, it is remarkable that all the tribes use circumcision. Their language is very peculiar, from the use of a sound totally unknown to us, resembling a sharp click. The Zoolahs are the finest tribe in all respects.

CAFRISTAN, a district of Asia, lying between Afghanistan and Siberia, which affords good pastures, and, in the valleys, fertile soil for grain of various kinds. The mountain range called the Hindoo Koosh, a part of the Himalah chain, runs through it, some peaks of which are upwards of 20,000 feet high. The inhabitants are a warlike, half-nomadic people; they are a branch of the Hindu race, speaking a dialect of the Sanscrit. They worship one God, and know nothing of the Hindu gods and religious customs. They are of exquisite beauty, having fair complexions, and sometimes Grecian features. They are called Caffres by their neighbours; they call themselves Shiah-Posh: their country is called also Cohistan.

CAFTAN, s. [Pers.] a Persian or Turkish vest or garment.

CAG, s. a barrel or wooden vessel, containing four or five gallons. Sometimes written keg.

CAGE, s. [cage, Fr.] an enclosure of twigs or wire, in which birds are kept; a place for wild beasts, enclosed with pallisades; a prison for people guilty of petty crimes.

TO CAGE, v. a. to enclose or confine in a cage.

CAGLIARI, the capital of Sardinia, in the Mediterranean. It stands on the shore of a bay, and extends up a hill overlooking the sea. It has a good harbour, and a considerable trade. There is a finely adorned cathedral, a castle, and a palace. It has also a university with an excellent library, &c. There are some manufactures carried on, and in the neighbourhood good wine is produced. Its population is about 30,000. Lat. 39. 13. N. Long. 9. 6. E.

CAGLIOSTRO, ALESSANDRO, COUNT DI, alias BEPPO BALZANO, the prince of modern quacks, was a native of Sicily, and began by living on acts of petty knavery, till a bolder stroke of villainy made it unsafe to remain. At Rome, London, Strasburg, Warsaw, and other places, in company with an artful but good-looking woman, whom he married at Rome, he now appears under various characters of house-painter, fortune-teller, Egyptian mason, physician to cure old age, &c. &c., and found his way into various galls also. At Paris he got entangled in the business of Cardinal de Rohan, and the diamond necklace, and was lodged in the Bastille. At length the Inquisition laid hold of him in Rome, and in 1795 he died in prison, aged 52 years.

CAHOËRS, capital of the department of Lot, in France, stands on the river whence the department is named, over which it has three bridges, two of which are of great antiquity. It has some manufactures, and the produce of the neighbourhood in corn, wine, &c., with them, are the staple of its trade. It is a bishop's see, and the cathedral and other buildings are interesting as ancient relics. It is 370 miles from Paris. Its population is above 18,000. Lat. 44. 25. N. Long. 1. 28. E.

CAIMAN, s. the American name of a crocodile.

CAJOLE, v. a. [cajoler, Fr.] to flatter, soothe, or coax, including the idea of dissimulation.

CAJOLER, s. a flatterer, or wheedler.

CAIRN, s. [Ceil.] a monumental heap of stones, over the burial-place or body of a chief amongst the Celtic nations.

CAIRN-GORM, s. part of the Highlands of Scotland, surrounding Loch Avon, so called. Also, a particular kind of pebbles, which, when cut and polished, are worn as jewels in brooches and bracelets.

CAIRO, GRAND CAIRO, or EL KAHERA, the capital of Egypt, is about a mile from the river Nile, and is 7 miles in circumference. It has three or four grand gates, but the streets are narrow, and the best houses are generally built round a court, having their windows within the enclosed court, and presenting only a dead wall to the street. A canal conveys the waters of the Nile into the city, which is about 20 feet broad, and has houses built on each side of it. The public baths and caravansaries are very numerous, and there are about 300 mosques, the lofty minarets of which present a very picturesque appearance. The old town of Cairo, or Mesra, and Bulac, are its ports or harbours. Cairo has silk manufactures. There is here also a highly-esteemed college of Mussulman learning, and some good scientific and military schools. Its population is about a quarter of a million. The English and French have many establishments here. Lat. 30. 2. N. Long. 31. 19. E.

CAISSON, s. [Fr.] a chest of bombs, or powder, laid in the enemy's ways, to be fired on his approach. Also a wooden frame, or chest, used in laying the foundations of the piers of a bridge.

CATHNES, the most northerly county of Scotland, bounded on the N. by Sutherlandshire; on the N. by the Pentland Frith, which divides it from the Orkney Islands; and on the S. E. by the German Ocean. Its greatest extent is 35 miles from N. to S. and 20 from E. to W. The S. W. part is mountainous, and the abode of wild roes and other animals; the rocky summits shelter eagles and other birds of prey, and the lakes are resorted to by swans and various water-fowl. There are many extensive moors, fit only for scanty pasture ground, and there are some parts where agriculture is successfully practised. Wick is the chief town. This county sends two representatives to parliament. Pop. 36,343.

CAITIFF, s. [cattivo, Ital.] a criminal who is guilty of meanness; a despicable, contemptible villain.

CAIUS COLLEGE, (pronounced Key's College,) one of the institutions at Cambridge, first established by Edmund Gonville, in the 14th century, and in the reign of Mary greatly enlarged by Dr. Caius, who was a learned court physician, and President of the College of Physicians in London. By the rules of the house great favour is shown to Norfolk men, Dr. Caius being a native of Norwich.

CAKE, s. [caccen, Brit.] a rich kind of baked bread, generally thin and round. Figuratively, any thing composed of flour and baked, made in a thin and flattish form; applied also to any one who manifests silliness of disposition.

TO CAKE, v. n. to harden like dough in the oven.

CALABAR, a country on the Gulf of Guinea, with a town and river of the same name. The commerce is conducted by barter, and the exports are chiefly slaves, gold, oil, ivory, &c. Lat. 16. N. Long. 10. E.

CALABASH-TREE, s. in Botany, a large tree growing from twenty-three to thirty feet high. The shells of the fruit are used by the negroes for cups; as also for instruments of music, by making a hole in the shell, and putting in small stones, with which they make a sort of rattle.

CALABRIA, a country of the kingdom of Naples, divided into Ultra and Citra; bounded by the province named Basilicata, and the Mediterranean Sea. It is rich in vegetable and mineral productions, but liable to earthquakes. There are a few mountains, but only one exceeds 5000 feet in height; and they furnish good pastures. Wine, fruits, and oil are abundantly produced. In all respects the country is improving now. The population is about 800,000. Reggio and Cosenza are its chief places.

CALAIS, a strong town of France, in the Pas de Calais, with a citadel, and a fortified harbour. It is built in the form of a triangle, one side of which is towards the sea. The citadel is as large as the town, and has but one entrance. It is a trading place, with handsome streets, and several churches and monasteries. The fortifications are good; but its greatest strength is its situation among the marshes, which may be overflowed at the approach of an enemy. The harbour is not so good as formerly, nor will it admit vessels of any great burthen. It is always a place of resort for Englishmen, being only 18 miles from Dover. It is 152 miles from Paris. Population about 12,000. Lat. 48. N. Long. 2. 1. E.

CALAMANGCO, s. a kind of woollen stuff, with a glossy surface.

CALAMBA, s. in Commerce, a kind of wood brought from China, usually sold under the denomination of lignum aloes.

CALAMINE, s. [lapis calaminaris, Lat.] the ore of zinc, which is a hard, heavy, mineral substance, appearing of a stony nature, but a lax and cavernous structure, generally found in loose masses, from the size of a walnut to those of three pounds and upwards.

CALAMINT, s. [calamintha, Lat.] in Botany, a species of the melissa or balm, which grows naturally in the mountains of Tuscany. It has forked fruitstalks, growing at the base of the leaves, and bluish white blossoms. It is found by road sides and in corn fields, and flowers in August.

CALAMITOUS, a. [calamitosus, Lat.] involved in misfortunes; wretched; unfortunate; unhappy, oppressed with misery, applied to persons. Fatal, noxious, unwholesome, or productive of misery or distress, applied to things.

CALAMITY, s. misfortune, affliction, distress, the cause of misery. SYNON. Each of these words denotes a sad event; but that of misfortune is applied to casualties and outward circumstances, things detached from us. Disaster respects properly personal accidents. Calamity implies something more general.

CALAMUS, s. [Lat.] in Botany, a reed, or sweet-scented wood. See SPICEWOOD. See also DRAGON'S BLOOD.

CALAMY, DR. EDMUND, who wrote the Lives of the Nonconformist Ministers of 1662, was grandson of an eminent Presbyterian divine, who though not a thorough nonconformist, had to share their sufferings. He had dissented from the movements of the party of the army and the Independents, and been favoured by Charles II. on his restoration. He died in 1666, aged 66 years. Dr. Calamy was a staunch nonconformist. His brother, having adopted the opposite views, provoked a Mr. De Laune to publish his Plea for Nonconformity, and instead of replying, had him imprisoned, where he died.

CALASH, s. [calache, Fr.] a light four-wheeled, uncovered carriage, driven by the traveller himself, now not in fashion.

CALCEATED, a. [calceatus, Lat.] shod; fitted with shoes.

CALCA'REOUS, a. [calcareus, Lat.] that partakes of the nature and qualities of calc or lime.

CALCEDONIUS, s. [Lat.] a precious stone of the agate kind.

CALCINATION, s. [Fr.] the act of reducing any matter into a subtle white powder, by means of fire.

CALCINATORY, s. a vessel used in calcining.

To CALCINE, v. [calc, Lat.] to make a thing easily powdered by means of fire; to burn in the fire to a substance which a small force will crumble; to reduce to ashes; to burn to a cinder. Figuratively, to consume or destroy.

CALCIUM, s. in Chemistry, a metal which is the base of lime. All that is known of it is, that it is of a white colour, exceedingly inflammable, and becomes lime by being oxidized.

CALCOGRAPHY, s. [callos and grapho, Gr.] the art of engraving on brass or copper plates.

To CALCULATE, v. [calcular, Fr.] to find out the value or amount of any thing by arithmetic; to compute or find the situation of the planets; to contrive or adapt to a certain end.—v. n. to make a computation. Calculating machines have been made, by which computations in figures, exceeding human skill, are effected rapidly, and with unerring correctness; and by an additional mechanism, printed off on copper plates.

CALCULATION, s. an operation in Arithmetic. Figuratively, a deduction of reason; the result of an arithmetical operation.

CALCULATOR, s. one who computes or calculates.

CALCULATORY, a. belonging to calculation or computation.

CALCULOSE, CALCULOUS, a. [calculus, Lat.] stony, gritty; having the stone or gravel.

CALCULUS, s. [Lat.] a little stone, anciently used in calculations. In Medicine, a stone in the kidney, ureters, or bladder. In Mathematics, the higher developments of Algebraic science.

CALCUTTA, or FORT WILLIAM, the emporium of Bengal, and seat of the governor-general of India, is seated on the W. side of Hoogly River, at about 100 miles from its mouth, which is navigable up to the town for large ships. There is a fine quay, nearly 3 miles long, beside the river; but the situation is not happily chosen, for it has a vast jungle, with low muddy lakes in it, called the Sunderbunds, near, which makes it unwholesome. The houses variously built, many with the appearance of palaces or temples, some of brick, others with mud, and a greater number with bamboos and mats, make a motley appearance; and the mixture of European and Asiatic manners observed in Calcutta is wonderful. It is now a bishop's see. Here the governor-general and council of Bengal reside, who have a control over the presidencies of Madras, Bengal, and Bencoolen. Here are four judges, who dispense justice according to the laws of England. Calcutta is 1030 miles N. E. by N. of Madras. The population is about 1,000,000. Lat. 22. 23. N. Long. 88. 28. E.

CALDERON DE LA BARCA, DON PEDRO, the famed writer of dramatic poetry in Spain, in the 17th century. He studied at Salamanca, and ended his days as a cleric. He died in 1681, aged 80 years. His works are very numerous, and by competent critics highly admired.

CALDRON, CALDRON, s. [chaudron, Fr.] a large vessel to heat water or dress victuals in; a pot.

CALDONIA, the ancient name of Scotland.

CALDONIA, NEW, a large island in the S. Pacific Ocean, midway between New Guinea and New Zealand, to the E. of New Holland. It is about 400 miles in length, and about 50 miles broad in the middle. It is surrounded by coral reefs, and is mountainous, and not very fertile. Plantains and sugar canes are not plentiful; bread-fruit is very scarce, and the cocoa-nut trees are but thinly planted; but the yams and taras are in great abundance. The inhabitants are strong and active; their clothing is a wrapper made of the bark of a tree, or of leaves. They subsist chiefly on roots, and cultivate the soil with some art and industry.

CALDONIANS, the ancient inhabitants of the north of Scotland.

CALEFACTION, s. [calefactio, Lat.] the act of heating any thing; the state of being heated.

CALEFACTIVE, CALEFACTORY, a. that heats, or has the power of heating.

To CALFEY, v. n. [calfejo, Lat.] to grow hot; to be heated.—v. a. to make hot.

CALENDAR, s. [calendarium, Lat.] a table containing the days, months, festivals, &c. happening in the year. The Roman calendar, from which ours is borrowed, is attributed to Romulus, and Numa Pompilius, who made it consist of 12 lunar months, of 30 and 29 days alternately, which made 354 days; but added one day more, which made it 355 days; and that the civil year might equal the sun's motion, he added a month every second year. Julius Caesar in his dictatorship reformed the calendar, and made the year consist of 365 days, and left the six hours to form a day at the end of every fourth year, which was added to the month of February. This calendar was called the Julian, and was used to the time of Gregory XIII., who finding the Julian year gone too forward, cut off ten days from the calendar; and to remedy this defect for the future, left out one bissextile day every 100 years, making every fourth hundred a leap year. By act of parliament, to remedy the inconveniences arising from the differences of style, this kingdom adopted the Gregorian or new style, by leaving out eleven days of the month of September in the year 1752. Many nations however still use old style; and in the country the quarters of the year are still so reckoned. Calendar of prisoners, is a list of all their names, with their separate judgments in the margin, which the judge signs, and the execution of which is committed to the respective sheriff. Eccelesiastical Calendar, is the yearly list of saints' days, feasts, fasts, festivals, vigils, &c. observed by the Church of Rome or England. Most of these observances are kept on fixed days, but some of the greatest in dignity are movable, and determined by the day appointed to be observed as Easter day, except Advent Sunday, which is always the nearest Sunday to St. Andrew's day, which is the 30th November. Rules and Tables for finding Easter day—lacking however the needful explanation, that it is not by the actual moon, but by an ecclesiastical moon, invented by Clavius, that the day is regulated—are given at the beginning of the Book of Common Prayer. French Revolutionary Calendar, was used for a time by the French Directory and Napoleon. The year was presumed to begin at midnight on September 22. It was divided into 12 months of 30 days each, and the additional days were celebrated as Sans-culottide feasts, the intercalary day being dedicated to Reason. The names of the months were, Vendémiaire, Brumaire, Frimaire; Nivose, Pluviose, Ventose; Germinal, Floreal, Prairial; Messidor, Thermidor, Fructidor. Each month was divided into three decades of days, and the 10th day was a holiday instead of the 7th day. Napoleon altered this; and, in 1805, laid the whole calendar aside, which had lived then just 13 years. Roman Calendar. The peculiarity of this was the nomenclature of the days in the months. The first day of every month was called the calends of the month; the 13th of all but March, May, July, October, and of these the 15th day, was called the ides of the month; the 9th day preceding the ides of each month was called the nones; and the intermediate days were reckoned as so many days before the calends, nones, ides, next ensuing.

CALENDER, s. a hot press, made use of to press, smooth, or water manufactures of silk, woollen, or linen. It consists of two large iron rollers, round which the pieces of stuff are wound; these are put between two large, close, polished planks of wood, the lower serving as a fixed base, and the upper movable by means of a wheel, like that of a crane, with a rope fastened to a spindle, which makes its axis; this upper part is of prodigious weight, which, together with its alternate motion, gives the polish, and makes the waves on the stuffs, by causing the cylinders on which they are put to roll with great force over the lowest board. The rollers are taken off and put on again by inclining the machine. In Natural History, the word is applied to an insect, which preys on corn, leaving nothing but the husks, and giving the flour of it a very bad taste.

TO CALENDER, v. a. [calendrier, Fr.] to smooth, water, or dress any manufacture in a hot press or calender.

CALENDERED, a. applied to corn, devoured by the calender, an insect.

CALENDERER, s. one who presses, smooths, or waters manufactures in a hot press or calender.

CALENDERS, s. it has no singular, [calendas, Lat.] the first day of the month among the Romans.

CALENTURE, s. [calco, Lat.] in Medicine, an inflammatory fever, frequent at sea.

CALF, s. plural calves, [calaf, Sax.] the young of a cow; the swelling, fleshy part of a man's leg; a dolt or stupid wretch, by way of contempt.

CALIBRE, s. [Fr.] the extent or diameter of any round thing; an instrument used by carpenters. Among the gunsmiths, wooden calibres are models by which they cut the stocks whereon they mount their guns, pistols, &c. Steel calibres are instruments with which they turn and file their screws. In Gunnery, the diameter of the mouth or bore of a piece of cannon, or of the ball it carries. Calibre or caliper compasses, a pair of compasses, with the legs bent inwards, furnished with a tongue, which moves on a rivet on one of its legs, and is used to take the dimensions of the bore of a cannon, together with the size and weight of the ball it can carry.

CALICE, CHALICE, s. [calix, Lat.] a cup, appropriated to the cups or vessels which the communicants drink out of at the Lord's supper.

CALICO, s. [from Caticut, in India, a kind of cotton manufacture formerly imported by the East India Company, now one of the chief products of British home labour.

CALICUT, a town and sea-port of Malabar, Hindustan, noted in old time for its cotton manufactures, thence called calico. It is of no great consequence or extent now. Lat. 11. 14. N. Long. 76. 0. E.

CALID, a. [calidus, Lat.] hot, burning, fervent.

CALIDITY, s. [caliditas, Lat.] heat.

CALIF, CALIPH, s. [khalifa, Arab.] a title given to the successors of Mahomet among the Saracens, by whom it is accounted the supreme ecclesiastical dignity; or, among the Mahometans, a sovereign dignity, vested with absolute authority in all matters relative both to religion and polity.

CALIFORNIA, a territory of N. America, lying on the Pacific Ocean, extending from the plain watered by the Columbia river to the long, narrow peninsula running S. of the Colorado river. This peninsula is between 600 and 700 miles in length, and is very rocky and barren, producing a most inconsiderable quantity of grain, wine, horses, cattle, &c. in proportion to its extent. It has also a gold mine or two. N. of the peninsula is a territory upwards of 700 miles in width, and somewhat more in length, lying between the Rocky Mountains and the W. Ocean. It has some very productive land amongst its rocks, and grows corn, wine, fruits, &c. &c., and furnishes excellent pasture. Gold and silver have been found, but in small quantities. The climate of the peninsula is intensely hot; that of the upper region is temperate, or perhaps cold. The population is small. Loretto, La Paz, St. Diego, and St. Francisco, are its chief towns. It has lately been seized by the United States. The Gulf of California is the narrow arm of the sea that runs between the peninsula and Mexico.

CALIGATION, s. [caligo, Lat.] darkness, cloudiness, dimness of sight.

CALIGINOUS, a. [caliginosus, Lat.] dark, dim, cloudy, obscure.

CALIGINOUSNESS, s. darkness; obscurity.

CALIGRAPHY, s. [kalos and grapho, Gr.] a neat and handsome hand, applied to writing; beautiful writing.

CALIGULA, CALUS CESAR, the fourth emperor of Rome, who, after a few months of prudent government, apparently became insane, for the absurdities and intolerable cruelties he was guilty of admit of no other supposition. After enduring this change for two years, some of his officers assassinated him. He reigned near three years, and fell in 41 A. D., aged 30 years.

CALIVER, s. a hand-gun, harquebuse; a small gun used at sea.

CALIXTINES, s. in Church History, a section of the Hussites of Bohemia, which was opposed to the Taborites during the wars of Ziska. They held by a few simple practical requisitions, amongst which was communion in both kinds. They were reconciled to Rome, on the cup being granted to all at the eucharist. It was also a name given to those among the Lutherans, who followed the sentiments of George Calixtus, a celebrated divine, who opposed the opinion of St. Augustine on predestination, grace, and free-will.

CALIXTUS, the name assumed by three popes, and one anti-pope; none of which did any thing worthy of especial notice.

TO CALK, (caulk) v. a. [calage, Fr.] to stop the seams or other leaks of a ship with oakum or tow, to keep the water out.

CALKER, (caulker) s. the person who stops the leaks of a ship.

CALKING, (caulking) s. stopping the leaks or seams of a ship with oakum or tow, which is afterwards covered with a mixture of tallow, pitch, and tar, as low as it draws water.

TO CALL, (call) v. a. [callo, Gr.] to name. Used with on and upon, to visit or go to a person's house. In Divinity, to receive a mission from God; and used with upon, to implore; to pray to in distress; with confidence of assistance. To call back, to revoke. To call over, to read aloud a list or muster roll. To call names, to abuse a person by some reproachful term or word. To call in, applied to money, to collect or demand a sum lent. Joined with out, to challenge, provoke, or excite to combat or danger.

CALL, (call) s. an address by word of mouth. Figuratively, a mission from God. In Law, a nomination or admission. Used with upon, a claim or demand. Within call, not far off; within hearing. An instrument imitating the notes of birds, and used by bird-catchers to bring them into their traps. The English name for the mineral called tungsten or wolfram by the Germans.

CALLAO, a city, the port of Lima, in Peru, with a large, beautiful, and safe harbour. The town is built at a little distance from the sea, and all the houses are low and slightly built, because of the frequency of earthquakes. It is fortified, and has now a good trade. It is 7 miles from Lima. Lat. 12. 2. S. Long. 77. 4. W.

CALLCOTT, DR. JOHN, a distinguished English composer, who has left us some of the most beautiful and most popular glees, &c. At the latter part of his life he lost his mental power and vigour, and was released from his mournful state in 1821, aged 55 years.

CALLCOTT, SIR AUGUSTUS, brother to the composer, was a greatly admired landscape painter. His pictures are numerous and well known. He died in 1844, aged 65 years.

CALLIMACHUS, a Greek poet, who was born in Cyrene, and kept a school at Alexandria. His hymns are very beautiful, but some other productions are too pedantical. He flourished about 260 B. C.

CALLING, (calling) s. the business or trade a person possesses; station, employment, or profession; divine vocation; invitation to the true religion.

CALLINGTON, or K'LLINGTON, Cornwall. It has a woollen manufactory, and is seated on the Tamar. It is not inferior to half of the Cornish boroughs for wealth and buildings, having one very good broad street, a market-house, and neat church. It is 217 miles from London. Market, Wednesday. Pop. 1685.

CALLIOPE, [Gr.] the muse who presides over rhetoric and heroic verse.

CALLIPERS, s. See CALIBRE, of which this is a corruption.

CALLOSIITY, s. [callosité, Fr.] in Anatomy, a hardness of the skin, owing to hard labour, or frequent rubbings, whereby it becomes insensible.

CALLOUS, a. [calthos, Lat.] indurated; hardened; having the pores shut up. Applied to the mind or conscience, not to be moved by threats or promises.

CALLOUSNESS, s. insensibility of the body, wherein the skin grows into knobs, and loses all sensation; the hardness of the joints which knit together the extremities of a broken bone. Figuratively, insensibility, applied to the mind.

CALLOW, a. unfledged; without feathers.

CALLOS, s. [Lat.] See CALLOSIITY.

CALM, a. [calm, Belg.] undisturbed by tempests or violent winds, applied to the sea and elements. Undisturbed by boisterous passions, applied to the mind.—s. a freedom from tempests or winds at sea; or from passion, as to the mind.

To CALM, v. a. to put an end to a tempest. Figuratively, to soothe or pacify; to appease.

CALMER, s. the person or thing which reduces from a state of turbulence or violence to one of quietness, rest, and serenity.

CALMET, AUGUSTINE, a learned theologian of the Benedictine order at the beginning of last century. He wrote a great number of works; and of them his Dictionary of the Bible is most widely known. He died in 1757, aged 85 years.

CALMLY, ad. free from violence, furiousness, or tempestuous commotion. Figuratively, in a serene, cool manner.

CALMNESS, s. a state of quiet free from the disturbance of violent winds. Figuratively, a state of cool and sedate tranquillity; mildness.

CALMUCKS, a branch of the Mongolian race, inhabiting the plains near the Caspian Sea, in Asiatic Russia; and spread thence in wandering parties over almost all Siberia and Tataria. They belong to the great Buddhist sect of Asiatic religionists, and in physical conformation are the type of one of the great varieties of the human race.

CALNE, Wills. It has a manufactory of cloth, and is situated on a river of the same name. It has a fine church, some good public buildings, and is, in general, well built. It is 88 miles from London. Market, Tuesday. Pop. 5128.

CALOMEL, s. [calos and melas, Gr.] in Chemistry, the common name of the protochloride of mercury, used in medicine very much as an alternative.

CALORIC, s. in Chemistry, the name given to the principle of heat.

CALORIFIC, a. [calorificus, Lat.] that has the power of heating.

CALORIMETER, s. in Chemistry, an instrument for ascertaining the quantity of caloric disengaged from any substance that may be the object of experiment.

CALOTTE, s. [Fr.] a cap or coif of hair, worn first by Cardinal Richelieu. A red calotte is become the badge of a cardinal. In Architecture, a red cavity or depression in form of a cap or cup, lathed and plastered, used to diminish the rise or elevation of a chapel, cabinet, alcove, &c.

CALOYERS, s. [kalos and geras, Gr.] monks of the Greek church, who live a very retired and austere life, eat no flesh, keep four lents, and never break their fasts till they have earned that meal by their labour.

CALTROPS, s. [coltrappe, Sax.] an instrument with four iron spikes, disposed in such a manner that one of them will always be upright, and three of them in the ground. They are used to annoy, embarrass, and wound the horses' feet of the cavalry. In Botany, a plant so called from its resembling the instrument just described, and being very troublesome to cattle by pricking their feet.

CALVADOS, a department of France, lying on the English Channel, and bounded inland by the departments of Manche, Orne, and Eure. The Vire, the Orne, the Dives, and the Touques are its chief rivers. The land on the S. border is rather high, but there are no hills worthy of special mention. It is a thoroughly agricultural district, its soil fertile, its pastures good, its products in grain, vegetables, fruits, &c. &c., and in cattle, horses, &c., abundant. It also produces a little coal, and some slate and iron. Its population is about 500,000. Caen, Lisieux, Falaise, &c., are its towns.

To CALVE, v. n. to bring forth a calf.

CALVES-SNOUT, s. in Botany, a plant, called also snapdragon.

CALVILLE, s. [Fr.] a sort of apple.

CALVIN, JOHN, the Swiss Reformer, was born in France, of poor parents, but brought up to the church, and in orders, when he turned his attention to law. The study of the Scriptures, especially the Greek Testament, led him to forsake the church, and after many changes, he settled at Geneva, as teacher of theology. He was banished from this place for a short time, and went to Strasburg; but returned to Geneva, where he died in 1564, aged 55 years. His works are numerous, and expressed his peculiar views in relation to doctrines, and rites, and discipline, in which he opposed the Lutherans particularly. His consent to the burning of Servetus, shows no more than that he had not in all things renounced the doctrines of Rome, or else that he had fallen into the opposite error, the Erastianism of Protestantism.

CALVINISTS, s. in Church History, are those who follow the opinions of John Calvin, either in respect of his doctrines, which are Augustinian, and affirm all that is usually associated with unconditional personal election, such as the Calvinists of England; or in respect of both doctrines and discipline, as is yet the case both at Geneva and in Scotland. Modern Calvinists, or moderate Calvinists, is a name assumed by those whose feelings have interfered with their logic, and led them to the views of Baxter and Fuller.

CALUMET, s. a symbol of peace among the Indians of North America. It is made of a red stone, like our marble; the head resembles that of a tobacco-pipe, but larger, and is fixed in a hollow reed, to hold it for smoking. They adorn it with fine wings of various colours, and is the calumet of the sun, to whom they present it, especially if they want fair weather or rain. This pipe is a pass or safe-conduct amongst all the allies of the nation that has it given. In all embassies the ambassador carries it as an emblem of peace, and is always received with a profound regard; the savages being persuaded that a violation of the calumet would be attended with some dire misfortune.

To CALUMNIATE, v. n. [calumniator, Lat.] to accuse falsely; to charge without just ground.—v. a. to slander.

CALUMNIATION, s. a false representation of a person's words and actions, in order to render his character suspected.

CALUMNIATOR, s. [Lat.] one who slanders another to ruin his reputation.

CALUMNIOUS, a. slanderous; falsely accusing.

CALUMNY, s. [calumniæ, Lat.] the falsely accusing of a person with crimes, or misrepresenting his words and actions, in order to make his character suspicious.

CALX, s. [Lat.] lime; an old term made use of to describe a metallic oxide.

CALYCLE, s. [calyculus, Lat.] in Botany, a small bud of a plant. CALYX, s. [Lat.] in Botany, the external protecting leaves and cover of the petals, stamina, and pistils of flowers.

CAMAIEU, s. [camachia, Ital.] See CAMEO.

CAMBAY, a city of Guzerat in Hindustan, situated on a gulf of the same name, which is full of rocks, covered at low water. The country abounds in corn, cattle, silk, &c., and cornelian and agate stones are found in the rivers. The inhabitants are noted for embroidery. They trade in spices and grain with Bombay, &c. It is 57 miles nearly S. of Amedabad, of which it is the port. Lat. 22. 23. N. Long. 72. 45. E.

CAMBER, s. a piece of timber cut arching.

CAMBODIA, or CAMBOYA, formerly a kingdom of Asia, lying between Siam and Cochin China. Its principal river, and chief city, bore the same name. It is now shared by its neighbours. Lat. 13. 10. N. Long. 105. 5. E.

CAMBRA'Y, a large city in the department of Nord, France. It has a considerable manufactory of lace, linen, leather, soap, and cambrics, which took their name from this city. It is seated on the Scheldt, which divides it into two, and has a good cathedral, being the see of an archbishop. It is 102 miles from Paris. Population about 15,000.

CAMBRIC, s. [toile de Cambray, Fr.] a species of linen, made of flax, very fine and white, at first manufactured at Cambray. The cambrics now allowed in this country are manufactured in Scotland and Ireland.

CAMBRIDGE, Cambridgeshire. It is the county town and seat of a celebrated university, and is seated on the river Cam, which divides it into two unequal parts. The university contains 13 colleges and 4 halls. Its buildings are elegant, and its libraries and cabinets valuable and extensive. The Fitzwilliam Museum, Senate House, Observatory, &c., are connected with it. The town-hall and county-hall are the only buildings of note that do not appertain to the university. The streets are narrow, but well paved, and the houses are old; the market-place is spacious, and in it is a handsome stone conduit, to which water is conveyed by an aqueduct. It communicates with London and the north by railway. It is 51 miles from London. Markets every day in the week, Sunday and Monday excepted. Pop. 24,453.

CAMBRIDGE, a town of Massachusetts, United States, the seat of Harvard University, which is the most richly endowed institution in the States. The buildings are extensive and commodious, but not built with any regard to the impression of the whole. It has a good museum and library, and other needful appurtenances to such a place; and it has a medical school attached. There is a large glass manufactory in the town. It lies in Massachusetts Bay, and is connected with Boston and Charlestown by a bridge. It is 437 miles from Washington. Pop. 8,409. There are eight places beside which bear this name in the States.

CAMBRIDGESHIRE, a county of England, bounded by the counties of Bedford, Huntingdon, Northampton, Lincolnshire, Norfolk, Suffolk, Essex, and Herts. It is 30 miles in length from N. to S., and 25 broad from E. to W. The air and soil vary; the S. and E. parts are pleasant and healthy, but the N. or fenny country is low and watery. The Nen and Ouse, the Cam, and the Lark, are its rivers; and the only hills of any note are the trifling elevations called the Gogmagog Hills. It is an agricultural county, and not unproductive. See LEVEL (BEDFORD). Pop. 164,459. It returns seven members to parliament.

CAMDEN, the learned and famous antiquary, author of Britannia, and other works greatly esteemed by the curious in such inquiries. He had the head-mastership of Westminster School; and was, moreover, Clarencieux king at arms; and he died in 1623, aged 72 years; and has his tomb in Westminster Abbey.

CAMDEN, CHARLES PRATT, EARL OF, a distinguished statesman of the reign of George III. He was early called to the bar, and by the personal favour of Pitt, as early introduced into the path of advancement. He was made lord chancellor in the Duke of Grafton's ministry, and afterwards, by Lord Rockingham and Pitt, president of the council. He opposed the American war; and took a part in reference to the law of libel that rendered him highly popular. He died in 1794, aged 80 years.

CAME, the preter. of the verb TO COME.

CAMEL, s. [gamel, Heb.] a large and very useful animal, an inhabitant of Arabia and the adjacent countries, and of all the N. of Africa. It is particularly valuable on account of the heavy weights it can carry, and the long journeys it can perform without eating or drinking. It is only by means of the camel that the deserts of Arabia and the N. of Africa are at all habitable. The Bactrian camel has two humps on its back, and the dromedary has one.

CAMELEON, s. in Natural History, a little animal of the lizard kind. Its tongue is half as long as itself, and is used by it in catching flies, on which it subsists. It was fabled of this creature that it could change its colour at pleasure.

CAMELFORD, Cornwall. A great quantity of yarn is spun in this place and neighbourhood. It is seated near the river Camel, or Alan. It is 229 miles from London. Market, Friday. Pop. 705.

CAMELEOPARD, s. [camelus and pardus, Lat.] See GIRAFFE. 'CAMELOT, CAM'LET, CAM'LET, s. [camelot, Fr.] a stuff made of goats' hair, with wool or silk, or both. The true oriental camelot is made of the hair of a kind of goat, frequent about Angora in Syria; but no European camelots are made of goats' hair alone. The camelots of Brussels are considered as of the first-rate excellency, and those of England claim the second.

CAMERA LUCIDA, s. [Lat.] in Optics, an instrument consisting of a small quadrangular glass prism, having one angle of 135°, fixed so that rays of light may be admitted on one side directly to the object, and that the eye may be able to look down perpendicularly upon another side, through which those rays, by means of that obtuse angle, pass at right angles to their original direction. Looking at the object thus with one eye, with the other looking in the same line at a sheet of paper placed on the table to which the instrument is fixed, a drawing may be made in excellent perspective of a building, landscape, &c. &c.

CAMERA OBSCURA, s. [Lat.] in Optics, an instrument whereby, as by the eye, the images of external things are exhibited in their true proportions, colours, &c. It is either made by fixing a tube with two convex lenses in a shutter opposite to a white wall, or screen; or by fixing one convex glass in the end of an oblong box, and in its focus a plane mirror inclined at an angle of 45°, to reflect the image to a plate of ground glass, which is to form the top of the box towards the beholder.

CAMERATED, a. [cameratus, Lat.] arched or vaulted.

CAMERATION, s. [cameratio, Lat.] a vaulting or arching.

CAMERONIAN, a sect or party in Scotland, who separated from the Presbyterians in 1696, and continued to hold their religious assemblies in the fields. The Cameronians took their denomination from Richard Cameron, a famous field preacher, who refused to accept the indulgence to tender consciences granted by King Charles II., as such an acceptance seemed an acknowledgment of the king's supremacy, and that he had before a right to silence them, made a defection from his brethren, and even headed a rebellion in which he was killed. This sect exists in Scotland and some of the colonies, under the title of Old Presbyterian Dissenters.

CAMIL'US, MARCUS FURIUS, one of the last of the early Roman heroes, whose history is so intermingled with fable, that the facts are difficult of discovery. He was a successful general against many of the surrounding towns, and was banished once on a false charge of embezzlement of spoils. He delivered the city from the Gauls, and died about 400 B. C.

CAMISADO, s. [camisa, Ital.] a military term, denoting an attack by surprise in the night, in which the assailants wear their shirts outward, as a distinction to know their own men from the enemy.

CAM'LET, s. See CAMELOT.

CAMLIN, s. in Botany, a species of myagrum, found in fields amongst flax, and also called gold of pleasure; it flowers in June.

CAMOENS, LOUIS DE, the great poet of Portugal, was well trained for the course that promised distinction in his age, by his mother's care. His ambitious love procured his exile, and through the course of his long life he had but his gift of song to give unity to his varied course, and cheer him under his extraordinary vicissitudes. He lost an eye in a sea-fight with the Moors; he failed again of obtaining favour at court; he hardly reached India, whither he sailed, for storms; he gained fame for his bravery in many parts of the East; he was banished, shipwrecked, again banished, and then returned to Lisbon to starve, and end his days in an hospital, in 1579, aged about 60 years. His "Lusiad," which is his great epic, celebrates the famous deeds of heroes of Portugal, and ranks amongst the books that are for the world.

CAMOMILE, s. See CHAMOMILE.

CAMP, s. [camp, Fr.] the order of tents pitched by an army when they keep the field; the place where an army rests, or dwells in tents or barracks. A flying camp, is a strong body of horse which always keep the field, and are continually in mo-

GLORIA REGUM IN EXCELSIS

REFERENCE TO THE HUNDREDS

- 1. Woburn
- 2. Whitchurch & Thorney
- 3. Whitchurch 1st
- 4. Whitchurch 2nd
- 5. Ely
- 6. Peterborough
- 7. North Star
- 8. North Star
- 9. North Star
- 10. North Star
- 11. North Star
- 12. North Star
- 13. North Star
- 14. North Star
- 15. North Star
- 16. North Star
- 17. North Star
- 18. North Star
- 19. North Star
- 20. North Star

WILMOT HOUSE

ELY CATHEDRAL

Cambridgeshire.

Scale of Miles

Railway Stations, thus

The County returns 5 members

tion, either to cover any place, or to surprise, or to fatigue an enemy, and cause a diversion.

To CAMP, v. a. to fix tents, and remain in a field, applied to an enemy.

CAMPAGNA OF ROME, that district of the Papal States of Italy, which lies between the Tiber, the Arno, the Apennines, the kingdom of Naples, and the Mediterranean Sea. The uplands are healthy and fertile, but the region nearer the Tiber is in the summer most unwholesome. All kinds of grain are grown, excellent wine is produced, and the pastures feed abundance of sheep and cattle. There is a considerable tract of marshy land, parts of which are used for pasture, but the greater part is quite useless. Its towns are Frosinone, Alatic, Anagni, Tivoli, Vellitri, &c. &c. The population is about 300,000.

CAMPAIGN, (campain) s. [campagne, Fr.] that space of time during which an army keeps the field, without going into winter quarters.

CAMPANELLA, THOMAS, an Italian philosopher of the 16th century, was a Dominican, and experienced some of the persecution which always has followed the exercise of freedom of thought. After living awhile in Tuscany and at Padua, he returned to his native town in Calabria, and there on pretext of conspiracy was tortured and imprisoned for nearly 30 years. A gleam of court favour then fell on him, but new troubles having arisen, he was conveyed from Rome to Paris, where he died in 1639, aged 81 years. His voluminous writings treat of philosophy, theology, and politics. He was opposed to the philosophy of the schoolmen. His political works caused some stir in England in the 17th century.

CAMPANILE, s. [Ital.] in Architecture, the name given to a tower built for the purpose or appearance of hanging bells in.

CAMPANULA, s. in Botany, the bell-flower, of which there are several kinds.

CAMPBELL, DR. GEORGE, an eminent Scotch theologian and author. He was Principal of Marischal College, Aberdeen. His reply to Hume's Argument on Miracles, and his work on the Gospels, are of great value. His Ecclesiastical History and Systematic Theology are of less worth; and his Philosophy of Rhetoric is quite superseded. He died in 1796, aged 85 years.

CAPOBELL, THOMAS, the poet, who wrote the Pleasures of Hope, and some lyric pieces, which breathe a noble spirit of independence and patriotism. He wrote many other works and poems, was for several years Lord Rector of Glasgow, helped in the formation of London University, and died in 1844, aged 67 years.

CAMPBELL, the family name of the Lords of Argyle, Scotland, the most famous of whom was Archibald the eighth earl with this title, who took part in the troubles of the 17th century. He aided the Scots in the party they took against Charles I., and against Cromwell and the Independents afterwards. But when Cromwell was undisputed master of England, Argyle took part under his government. At the Restoration he was convicted of high treason for this, and was beheaded in 1661, aged 63 years.

CAMPBELLTOWN, Argyleshire, Scotland. It is situated on a bay, towards the southern extremity of the peninsula of Cantyre. It has a considerable trade in coal and spirits, and is the general rendezvous of the fishing vessels that annually visit the W. coast. The bay is beautiful, capacious, and safe, being 2 miles in length, half a mile in width, and having from 5 to 9 fathom water, with a stiff clay bottom; it is also sheltered on every side. Lat. 55, 29. N. Long. 5, 42. W. Pop. 9834.

CAMPDEN, Gloucestershire. It is large, but a poor town, and gives title to a viscount. It is 86 miles from London. Market, Wednesday. Pop. 2087.

CAMPFOR, (kämpfor) s. [camphora, Lat.] in Pharmacy, a white crystalline substance, of a very strong taste and agreeable smell, obtained from many trees and plants in the East. It is very inflammable. It is a very powerful stimulant.

CAMPHORATE, CAMPHORATED, (kämpforated) a. that has camphor mixed with it.

CAMPHORIC, a. belonging to camphor.

CAMPION, s. in Botany, a common plant, of which there are several species.

CAN, s. [canne, Sax.] a drinking vessel, or cup, made of wood in the form of a cask or barrel. Figuratively, any drinking vessel not made of earth.

CAN, v. n. [kommen, Belg.] It is sometimes used as an absolute verb, but more frequently joined with another verb, as a sign of the potential mood. Its present is declined thus, I can, thou canst, he can, we can, &c.; and its preter, I could, thou couldst, &c. To be able; to have power sufficient to do an action. Though taken as a sign of the potential mood, yet it differs very much from may; may denoting right, lawfulness, or a permission to do a thing; but can, the power or strength of the doer or agent, and with the verb active is applied to persons; as, I can do it; but with the passive, relates to things; as, it can be done.

CANADA, the most easterly of the British possessions in N. America, lying immediately N. of the United States; bounded on the E. by New Brunswick and the Atlantic Ocean; and on the N. and W. extending so as to include the countries watered by the Ottawa and its tributaries, and by the streams falling into Lakes Tomisicaming, Huron, and Superior, from the N. and N. W. It was divided into Upper and Lower Canada, but they are united now under one government. It presents every variety of physical feature. A branch of the Alleghanies reaches to the side of the St. Lawrence opposite Quebec; and the Rocky Mountains are touched by its W. border. Wide expanses of prairie and hunting ground, of marsh and swamp, occupy some parts. Trackless forests cover others. Those parts which are laid out in townships are beginning to present a peaceful and agricultural appearance. Amidst the country flows the St. Lawrence, one of the largest and most beautiful rivers in the world, winding its way through some of the most extensive lakes, or inland seas rather, in the W. world; and diversified by frightful rapids, and the magnificent cataract of Niagara. Canada is rich in iron, silver, lead; tin and copper also of good qualities, and in some abundance, have been found; with many other minerals, the worth of which is acknowledged in commerce. Fruits and all the most useful grain are produced, and other vegetables. The fisheries are valuable, and the W. districts yield good furs. The capital is Quebec; the other chief places are Montreal, Three Rivers, Toronto, Kingston, &c. &c. The population is 1,133,891.

CANAULE, s. [Fr.] the lowest rank of people; the vulgar. A word used in contempt.

CANAL, s. [canalis, Lat.] an artificial river, formed either for the purpose of conveying the water to places where it is needed, or to supply water-carriage for heavy goods. In Anatomy, a duct or passage through which any of the juices flow.

CANALES, The first canals in Europe were constructed in Italy, and to a far greater extent in Holland. England had no canal till 1760, when the enterprising Duke of Bridgewater succeeded in an undertaking which was at the time considered an act of consummate indiscretion. The first canal, in the United States was completed in 1804. There are now 120 canals in Great Britain and Ireland, many of them with branches, the total length of which is about 2700 miles. The most remarkable are the following: The Duke of Bridgewater's canal, from Manchester to Runcorn, in length about 40 miles, having 10 locks. The Grand Junction, from the Oxford canal at Braunston to Brentford, 90 miles in length, having 98 locks. The Leeds and Liverpool canal, from the Aire and Calder navigation at the former place to Liverpool, nearly 130 miles long, with 56 locks. The Staffordshire and Worcestershire canal, from the Severn to the Grand Trunk canal, nearly 50 miles long, with 44 locks, securing one line of inland navigation completely intersecting the country. The Thames and Severn canal, from Stroud to Lechlade, with 42 locks; and the Wiltshire and Berkshire canal, 52 miles long, with 42 locks; by each of which a line of inland navigation is carried quite through the country. The Grand Trunk canal, from the junction of the Derwent and Trent to the Duke of Bridgewater's canal at Preston Brook, 93 miles in length, having 91 locks. In Scotland; the Caledonian canal, from Loch Eil to Murray Frith, along a chain of lakes, 60 miles long, with 28 locks; and the Forth and Clyde canal, 35 miles long, with 39 locks; each of which communicates both with the Irish and the North Seas. In Ireland, the Grand canal, from Dublin to Balinasloe, nearly 90 miles long, with 44 locks; and the Royal canal, from Dublin to the Shannon, nearly as long, with 42 locks; each opening a communication across the island. In the United States there are about 70 trunk canals, which with their branches extend above 4000 miles. The most remarkable of these are, the Erie canal, which is 364 miles long, reaching from Albany, on the Hudson, to Buffalo, on Lake Erie. The Pennsylvania canal, with all its branches, is about 500 miles long; it joins the Delaware with the Ohio. The Illinois and Michigan canal is 100 miles in length, and connects the lakes with the Gulf of Mexico, by the Mississippi. The Ohio and Erie canal, from Portsmouth to Cleveland, 307 miles in length, also connects the lakes with the Gulf of Mexico. And the Chesapeake and Ohio, from George Town to Pittsburg, 360 miles, connecting the Ohio with the Atlantic.

CANALETTO, ANTONIO, a well-known Venetian painter. He has transferred to his canvass most successfully the impression of transparency which so remarkably characterizes the landscapes of Italy. He died in 1768, aged 70 years.

CANALICULATED, a. [canaliculatus, Lat.] made like a pipe or gutter; channelled.

CANARA, a province of Hindustan, lying on the Indian Ocean, immediately N. of Malabar; bounded by Mysore on the E., and on the N. by the Portuguese possessions and Bejapore. It is about 200 miles long, and 50 in breadth. The mountainous region and the coast are alike not very productive, but there are good rice grounds in the valleys. The province also produces pepper, turmeric, betel, &c. &c. The only rivers are mere mountain torrents. Both Mohammedans and Hindus occupy it. The population is about 600,000. Mangalore, Batticolla, and Barkalore, are the chief places.

CANARY, a. a sort of wine brought from the Canaries, called also sack. Also a sort of grass, so called on account of its seeds being found to be the best food for the Canary-bird. Also an old dance.

CANARY-BIRD, a. a singing bird, formerly peculiar to the Canaries, of the linnet kind, of a yellow, or yellowish green colour, a very loud note, and of great boldness.

CANARY ISLANDS, a group in the Atlantic Ocean, near the continent of Africa, 7 in number. Grand Canary and Tenerife are plainly volcanic. The height of the peaks in the former is above 6000 feet. They are subject to the Spaniards, and produce wheat, sugar canes, wine, and excellent fruits. The population is about 250,000. Lat. from 27. 39. to 29. 26. N. Long. from 13. 20. to 18. 10. W.

TO CANCEL, v. a. [cancell, Fr.] to cross a writing, and thereby render it of no effect. Figuratively, to destroy a deed by tearing off the seal or name; to efface or obliterate.

CANCELLATION, s. an expunging or annulling the power of an instrument.

CANCER, s. [Lat.] in Astronomy, a sign of the Zodiac, into which the sun enters on the 21st of June, and represented on globes by the figure of a crab. The tropic of Cancer is a less circle of the sphere, parallel to the equator, and passing through the beginning of the sign Cancer. The inhabitants in the space between the tropics have the sun perpendicular or vertical twice a year, and are situated in the Torrid Zone. In Surgery, a roundish, hard, ragged, immovable swelling, of an ash or bluish colour, encompassed round with branched turgid veins. There is another kind, which has an ulcerated appearance. The only way of removing these dreadful diseases is by a surgical operation.

TO CANCERATE, v. n. to grow cancerous; to turn to a cancer.

CANCEROUS, a. having the virulence of a cancer.

CANDAHAR, a kingdom of Asia, between Persia and the river Indus. Its capital is Candahar, a rich trading town situated on the river Hermand. The country is part of Afghanistan, which see. Lat. 33. 0. N. Long. 65. 30. E.

CANDENT, a. [candens, Lat.] hot; in the highest degree of heat next fusion.

CANDIA, an island in the Mediterranean, formerly Crete, S. of the Archipelago, about 150 miles in length, and from 15 to 35 in breadth. It produces corn, wine, oil, wool, silk, and excellent honey, and is chiefly inhabited by Greeks. Mount Ida, in the mountain range running through the middle of the island, is a huge, barren, sharp-pointed eminence, nearly 8000 feet high. Its capital, Candia, though formerly populous, is now in a manner deserted, and the harbour is only fit for boats. Lat. 35. 16. N. Long. 25. 4. E. The population of the island is about 250,000.

CANDID, a. [candidus, Lat.] white. Figuratively, impartial; mild; uninfluenced by sinister motives, malice, or prejudice.

CANDIDATE, s. [candidus, Lat.] because candidates for offices among the Romans used to appear in white robes, one who solicits the votes of others, in order to attain any place or office conferred by a majority; one who opposes another; a competitor.

CANDIDLY, ad. in an impartial manner, without prejudice, malice, or envy; fairly.

CANDLE, s. [candela, Lat.] a wick of cotton dipped in and coated with wax, spermaceti, or tallow, of a cylindrical form, burnt to supply light at night. Sale by the candle, or inch of candle, is an auction which lasts only while a piece of candle lighted for that purpose continues burning, the last bidder before it is extinct being adjudged the purchaser.

CANDLEBERY-TREE, s. in Botany, a species of sweet willow.

CANDLELIGHT, s. the light afforded by a candle.

CANDLEMAS, s. a festival observed on the second of February, in honour of the purification of the blessed Virgin Mary, by the Churches of Rome and England. It was celebrated by the ancient Christians; who, on that day, used abundance of lights in their churches, and procession, in memory, as is supposed, of our Saviour's being on that day declared to be a light to lighten the Gentiles. In imitation of which, the Roman Catholics, on this day, consecrate all their tapers and candles which they use in their churches during the whole year.

CANDLESTICK, s. a household utensil contrived to hold one or more lighted candles.

CANDOCK, s. a weed that grows in rivers.

CANDOUR, a. [candor, Lat.] a temper of mind unsoured by envy, unruined by malice, and unobscured by prejudice; sweet without weakness, and impartial without rigour.

CANDY, a kingdom of Ceylon, containing about a quarter of the island. It is mountainous, and abounds with rivulets, which the inhabitants are dexterous in turning to water their land, which is fruitful in rice, pulse, and hemp. The capital is of the same name, and is meanly built on the side of a hill, and meanly fortified. The palace is the chief building in it. Population about 5000. Lat. 7. 23. N. Long. 80. 47. E.

TO CANDY, v. a. to preserve by boiling in sugar; to melt and crystallize sugar several times, to render it hard and transparent. Figuratively, to freeze, to be covered with a hard substance, or flakes; to flatter, or make use of soothing and insinuating expressions.—v. n. to grow hard; to grow thick, or be covered with flakes.

CANDY, s. a preparation of sugar, made by melting and crystallizing it six or seven times over to make it hard and transparent.

CANE, s. [canna, Lat.] in Botany, a kind of reed growing in several joints, and of different dimensions. The bamboo, which grows in the Indies, especially at Bengal, to a prodigious size, is wrought into bowls, or other household utensils, by the inhabitants; the smaller sort is made into fishing rods. The walking cane is that which grows in the East Indies; those which are without joints are by far the best, and more elastic. Hence the word signifies, figuratively, a walking-staff.

TO CANE, v. a. to beat a person with a cane, or a walking-staff.

CANES VENATICI, in Astronomy, the Grey-hounds, two constellations in the northern hemisphere.

CANICULA, s. [Lat.] in Astronomy, the name of one of the stars in the constellation of Canis Major, called the Dog-star, or Sirius; from whose heliacal rising the ancients reckoned their dog-days, and the Egyptians and Ethiopians began their year.

CANICULAR, a. [canicularis, Lat.] of or belonging to the dog-days. The canicular days are a certain number of days preceding or ensuing the heliacal rising of the Canicula, or Dog-star.

CANINE, a. [caninus, Lat.] having the properties of, or resembling, a dog. Canine hunger, in Medicine, is an appetite which cannot be satisfied.

CANINE-TEETH, s. [dentes canini, Lat.] in Anatomy, two sharp-pointed teeth in each jaw, between the incisors and molars, so called from their resembling the correspondent teeth in a dog.

CANIS MAJOR, s. [Lat. the great Dog,] in Astronomy, a constellation in the southern hemisphere, of which Sirius is the principal star.

CANIS MINOR, s. [Lat. the lesser Dog,] a constellation in the southern hemisphere, of which Procyon is the principal star.

CANISTER, s. [canistrum, Lat.] in its primary sense, which is now obsolete, a basket. In its secondary, a small box or receptacle made of tin, or other metal, or porcelain, to hold tea, sugar, &c.

CANKER, s. [cancer, Lat.] in Natural History, a small worm which preys upon fruit, joined with the word worm. A disease incident to trees, which makes the bark rot and fall off. In Veterinary Surgery, a fungous disease in the horse's foot. Also an ulcer of a particular kind in a dog's ear. Figuratively, that which gradually and inevitably destroys. Applied to brass, a kind of rust or verdigrise, which covers its surface with a green colour.

To CANKER, v. n. to rust, or grow green, applied to brass or other metals; to be corroded, or grow foul or corrupt.—v. a. to corrode; to pollute; to eat or gnaw; to infect: including the idea of acrimony.

CANNABIN, s. [cannabinus, Lat.] hempen.
CANNEL-COAL, s. a substance which is often confounded with jet. It is dug up in many parts of England in great abundance; particularly in Lancashire, where it is burnt as common fuel. It is worked into toys and utensils of various kinds under the name of jet.

CANNES, a town on the sea-coast of the department of Var, France. It is principally a fishing town, its bay being a shelter for boats, but not admitting vessels of any size to come in. Round the town, the vine, lemon, olive, and other fruits grow plentifully. It stands on a hill and is slenderly fortified. It is 440 miles from Paris. Population about 4000.

CANNIBAL, s. one who lives upon human flesh.
CANNIBALLY, ad. after the manner or practice of cannibals.

CANNING, GEORGE, a statesman of the last generation, who reached the highest point of political ambition just before his death. Educated at Eton and Oxford, he had devoted himself to the law, but was persuaded to turn his attention to politics. At this time he renounced his youthful popular views and followed Pitt. He was 34 years in parliament, and for 30 years, with few intervals, was connected with the government. Catholic emancipation and slave-trade abolition were the two measures, especially the first, which owed much to his eloquence for their success. He opposed other similar measures, which were successful soon after his death. He died in 1827, aged 57 years.
CANNON, s. [canon, Fr.] a gun, to throw balls of many pounds' weight. Cannons were first used in England in the 14th century. They are now cast solid in iron, or bronze, and afterwards bored in a lathe by drills.

CANNON-BALL, CANNON-BULLET, CANNON-SHOT, s. the ball or bullet with which a cannon is charged.

To CANNON-DE, v. a. to attack with or fire cannon against.—v. n. to batter or attack with great guns.

CANNONIER, (cannonier) s. the person who discharges or fires a cannon.

CANNONSBURG, a town of Pennsylvania, United States, supported chiefly by Jefferson College, located here. This institution has a good library, and medical and theological schools connected with it. It is 243 miles from Washington. Pop. 687.

CANNOT, not able, not having power enough for the performance of a thing. Joined with but, it implies necessity, and signifies must. "I cannot but believe," Locke.

CANOE, (canôo) s. a vessel or boat, made of the hollowed trunk of a tree, pieces of bark sewed together, or of the small sticks of a pliant wood covered with seal skins, used by rude nations to this day.

CANON, s. [kanon, Gr.] in Ecclesiastical History, a law or rule relating either to the doctrine or discipline of a church, enacted by a general council, and confirmed by the principal magistrate. A person who possesses a prebend or revenue, allotted for the performance of Divine service in a cathedral or collegiate church. Applied to Scripture, such books as are received as really inspired. A law, or rule, or collection of formulae, in any science. In Surgery, an instrument used in sewing up wounds. In Geometry and Algebra, a general rule for the solution of all questions of the same nature. In Music, a composition in two or more parts, so constructed that each voice sings the same part, but at different intervals from each other, and not all beginning at the same time. Canon Law, is the body of rules, precriptions, &c., compiled during ages, by which the Church of Rome is regulated.

CANONESS, s. in the Romish Church, a woman who enjoys a prebend, and lives after the manner of secular canons, without being obliged to renounce the world, or make any vows.

CANONICAL, a. [canonicus, Lat.] applied to ceremonies and discipline, those which are established by the laws of the church. Applied to books, those which are generally allowed to be Divinely inspired. Applied to time, or hours, those which are prescribed or limited by the church, for the performance of, or celebrating of, any ceremony or act of religion.

CANONICALLY, ad. in a manner agreeably to the prescriptions and laws of the church.

CANONIST, s. one who makes the canons his peculiar study; a professor of the canon law.

CANONIZATION, s. in the Roman Church, a declaration of the pope's, whereby, after some solemnity, a person who has been eminent for an exemplary life, and a supposed power of working miracles, is entered in the list of the saints.

To CANONIZE, v. a. to enter a person's name in the list of saints; to make a saint.

CANONRY, CANONSHIP, s. an ecclesiastical benefice in some cathedral or collegiate church, which has a prebend, or stated allowance out of the revenues of such church, commonly annexed to it.

CANOPIED, a. covered above with a canopy; spread above, or over the head.

CANOPEY, s. [canopeum, Lat.] any thing which is extended over the head.

To CANOPEY, v. a. to form a canopy over a person's head; to cover with a canopy.

CANOROUS, a. [canorus, Lat.] given to singing; musical; tuneful.

CANOVA, ANTONIO, a very celebrated modern sculptor of Italy. He studied at Venice, and afterwards settled at Rome, where, in addition to monuments to some of the popes, he produced those groups and figures, plates and models of which are familiar to all, the Graces, Venus, Cupid and Psyche, &c. &c. He was as fine a character in other respects as he was in art. He died in 1822, aged 65 years.

CANT, s. [cantus, Lat.] applied to language, a dialect made use of by beggars and vagabonds, to conceal their meaning from others; a whining tone of voice; a particular form of speaking peculiar to any body of men; a whining, formal pretension to goodness, generally attended with hypocrisy; pretence in general.

To CANT, v. n. to make use of the dialect, absurd jargon, or private gibberish, of vagabonds and thieves; to speak or read in a whining tone; to endeavour to impose upon a person by a formal pretence of uncommon piety; to flatter.

CANTAL, an inland department of France, surrounded by Puy-de-dôme, Corrèze, Lot, Aveyron, Lozère, and Haute Loire. It is very mountainous, comprising the southern part of that singular district of recent, but extinct volcanoes, which is usually called by the old name Auvergne. The height of the mountain which gives name to the department is nearly 7000 feet. It has excellent pastures, and fattens great herds of cattle, &c. for purposes of commerce. Coarse grain and fruits are also produced. In some parts are manufactories of lace and linen. The population is about 300,000. Aurillac and St. Flour are its chief places.

CANTATA, s. [Ital.] in Music, a song composed of recitative airs, and a variety of motions, generally for a single voice, with a thorough bass; sometimes for two, three, or more voices, with different instruments.

CANTATION, s. [cantatio, Lat.] the act of singing.

CANTER, s. one who endeavours to pass himself upon the world as a religious person, by a fair outside, and formal appearance of religion, without obeying it in his heart.

CANTERBURY, Kent. This ancient city is the see of the archbishop, primate of all England. The cathedral is a large superb structure, and was once very famous for the shrine of Thomas Becket. There are the ruins of a castle near. It was once famous for silk manufactures, but the progress of machinery in the N. has destroyed them. It is also noted for its fine brawn, and the adjacent country produces abundance of hops. It is situated on the river Stour, 56 miles from London. Markets, Wednesday and Saturday. Pop. 15,435.

CANTERBURY-BELLS, s. in Botany, a species of bell-flower, frequent in gardens.

CANTHARIDES, s. [plural of cantharis, Lat.] in Natural History and Pharmacy, called Spanish flies, but properly a beetle of a brilliant green colour, which in Spain, France, and Russia, is found on ash trees. The grubs live in the ground. The beetles that feed on the rose petals, though of a different form, being of a similar hue, are often put amongst cantharides in adulteration. It is needless to mention their service in blisters, or the danger of too free a use of them, since experience has confirmed the former, and given us too many dreadful examples of the latter.

CANTHUS, s. [Lat.] the corner of the eye, formed by the meeting of the eyelids.

CANTICLE, s. [canto, Lat.] a song; applied to some hymn in Scripture, and used in the plural to signify Solomon's Song.

CANTLIVERS, s. in building, pieces of wood framed into the front or sides of a house, to sustain the mouldings or eaves over it.

CANTING, s. a sea-phrase, which denotes the act of turning any thing about, or over. Canting-arms, in Heraldry, are those which express their owner's surname.

CANTLET, s. [kant, Belg.] a piece with corners.

CANTLET, s. a piece; a fragment.

CANTO, s. [Ital.] a division, section, or book of a poem. In Music, a song, or the treble part of it.

CANTON, or QUANG TCHOU FOU, a large, populous, and wealthy city of China, seated on one of the finest rivers in the empire. It is the capital of the province of Quantong, and the centre of the European trade in that country. It consists of three parts, divided by high walls. Temples, magnificent palaces, and courts are numerous. The streets are long and straight, paved with flag-stones, and adorned with lofty arches. The houses are remarkably neat, but consist of only one story, and they have no windows to the streets. The covered market-places are full of shops. They have manufactures of their own, especially of silk stuffs. A large portion of the inhabitants reside in boats on the river. Canton is one of the 5 ports opened to English trade, by the treaty of Nankin. The population is now 1,000,000. Lat. 23. 7. N. Long. 113. 14. E.

CANTON, s. [canton, Fr.] a small part of a city detached from the rest; a parcel or division of land; a district or part of a country governed by its own chief or magistrates; a small community or clan. In Heraldry, a square portion of an escutcheon separated from the rest, when on the left side, called sinister; and like the space between the cross or saltire.

To CANTON, v. a. to divide into small parts, parcels, or districts, with the particle into, and sometimes both with out and into.

To CANTONIZE, v. n. to parcel out; to allot in small divisions, used with among.

CANTRED, CA'NTREF, s. a British word, which signifies a hundred villages.

CANTYRE, a peninsula of Argyleshire, 50 miles long from N. to S., and from 5 to 8 broad.

CANVASS, s. [canevas, Fr.] very clear unbleached cloth of hem or flax, wove in little squares, used for working tapestry by the needle; for blinds of windows, towels, and to cover staves, &c.; likewise a coarse cloth of hem, of which sails are made. Canvass, also, is the cloth on which painters usually draw their pictures.

To CANVASS, v. a. [canvasser, Fr.] to search a truth to its first principles; to inquire into; to examine; to debate, or dispute; to controvert.—v. n. to solicit; to ask people for their votes or interest at an election.

CANUTE, or K'NUTE, the son of Sweeney of Denmark, one of the Northern Vikings, who had shared the kingdom of England with Edmund Ironside, and became, on Edmund's death, or murder, sovereign of the whole. He was a monarch of considerable skill and power, and shows by much of his conduct that he had felt the humanizing influence of Christianity, as it was taught at the time. He had not been very scrupulous as to the means by which he gained the supreme power. He discharged the duties of royalty with wisdom and firmness; and by a pilgrimage to Rome endeavoured to show his compunction and remorse. The tales of his silencing the flattery of his courtiers, and of his renouncing the use of his crown, are well known. He patronized the bards and learned men of his day, and built the abbey at Bury St. Edmund's, and at Hulme in Norfolk, which last is the only abbey now in England, and is held by the Bishop of Norwich. He died in 1035, having reigned for 18 years alone, and in peace.

CANY, a. abounding in canes; consisting of canes.

CANZONET, s. [canzonetta, Ital.] a little song.

CAOU'TCHOU, s. in Natural History, an elastic gum obtained from several trees both in Asia and America, by making an incision and letting the juice flow out and harden. When pure it is transparent and colourless, but it is dried in smoke, which gives it its usual black colour. Its elasticity and impermeability by water, together with the discovery of means of dissolving it without destroying its adhesive powers, have introduced the use of it very extensively into our manufactures, both for elastic bands and webbing, and for waterproof and airtight cloth.

CAP, s. [cap, Brit.] a part of dress made to cover the head; the ensign of a cardinalate. When the Romans gave a slave the cap, it entitled him to liberty. Students at law, physic, &c., as well as graduates in most universities, wear caps of a particular shape. Doctors are distinguished by peculiar caps, given them in assuming the doctorate. In Italy, the cap is used as a mark of infamy. At Lucca, the Jews are distinguished by a yellow cap, or an orange colour. It also signifies a square piece of timber, put over the head of a mast, to keep it steady. In Gunnery, a piece of lead laid over the touch-hole to preserve the prime. Percussion-cap, a little cap of copper with a small portion of explosive preparation inside, used now to fire guns with, the lock being made with a perforated nipple to put the cap on, and a hammer to explode it. Cap of maintenance, one of the regalia carried before the king at a coronation. In Botany, the membranaceous empalement of funguses surrounding the pillar.

To CAP, v. a. to cover the top of a thing; to pull off a cap in play.

CAP-A-PIE, CAP-A-PE', [cap-à-pié, Fr.] from head to foot, all over, used with the verb arm.

CAP-PAPER, s. a sort of coarse, thick, brownish paper.

CAPABILITY, s. the quality of being able to undertake or perform a thing.

CAPABLE, a. [capable, Fr.] endowed with power or understanding equal to an undertaking; susceptible; fitted for, or adapted to.

CAPACIOUS, a. [capaz, Lat.] applied to bodies of large dimensions, or of a large cavity, able to contain much. Applied to the mind, extensive, or containing a great stock of knowledge.

CAPACIOUSNESS, s. the quality of containing or receiving a great number of things or large bodies.

To CAPACITATE, v. a. to render a person fit by instruction, discipline, study, or exercise; to qualify a person for an undertaking.

CAPACITY, s. [capacité, Fr.] the dimensions of other bodies. Applied to the mind, understanding; a power of receiving instruction; a state, condition, or character.

CAPA'RISON, s. [caparazon, Span.] the clothing or covering spread over any horse of state, or sumpter-horse.

To CAPA'RISON, v. a. to dress a horse in its housings for show and ostentation. Figuratively, to adorn a person with pompous and splendid dress.

CAPE, s. [cape, Fr.] in Geography, a piece of land running or projecting into the sea; a head-land, or promontory; the neck piece of a coat.

CAPE BRETON, an island of British N. America, between Nova Scotia and Newfoundland, being divided from the former by St. George's Bay and the Strait of Canseau, and from the latter by the S. entrance to the Gulf of St. Lawrence. It is about 100 miles in length, and in breadth about 75; and the E. side is deeply indented by a vast inlet, named Bras d'Or, which, entering by two narrow passages, and afterwards spreading into numerous bays and arms, nearly divides the island in two. The N. coasts present an almost unbroken face of perpendicular rock to the sea. It is romantic and mountainous in its aspect, but woods, with the exception of small patches cleared for cultivation, and spots where rocks occupy the surface, cover the whole island. Coal, iron, copper, and other ores have been found, with various excellent building stones. Timber, grain, and cattle, with the products of its fisheries, are its exports. Its population is about 30,000. Its capital is Sydney.

CAPE CAPRICORN, in New South Wales; it is exactly under the line which bounds the Tropic of Capricorn.

CAPE COAST CASTLE, a fortress belonging to the English, on the coast of Guinea, in Africa. Lat. 5. 18. N. Long. 22. W.

CAPE DESEADO, a head-land of Terra del Fuego, in the most southern part of America. Lat. 55. 48. S. Long. 74. 18. W.

CAPE DOUGLAS, a very lofty promontory in the N. W. part of America, on the North Pacific Ocean, discovered by Capt. Cook. Lat. 48. 15. N. Long. 153. 50. W.

CAPE FLATTERY, a cape on the N. W. coast of America. Lat. 48. 15. N. Long. 124. 22. W.

CAPE FINISTÈRE, a head-land of Galicia, in Spain. Lat. 42. 56. N. Long. 9. 13. W.

CAPE FRANÇOIS, a cape of the island of St. Domingo, in the West Indies. Lat. 19. 46. N. Long. 72. 16. W.

CAPE OF GOOD HOPE, one of the most southerly points of the African continent, projecting at the head of a small peninsula into the Atlantic Ocean. Lat. 34. 22. S. Long. 18. 23. E.

Cape Colony is one of the most important British settlements, and is bounded by the Great Key river on the E.; on the N. it reaches nearly to the parallel of 30°, whence, to the S. Ocean, the boundary passes with an irregular curve. The country is not generally mountainous, but consists of ranges of table land at different elevations, not unlike the steppes of Russia. There are mountains near Algoa Bay: Table Mountain is well known. Another mountain range lies between Algoa Bay and Cape Town. The upland steppes are very barren, furnishing at best a poor pasture ground for cattle and sheep. More southerly, the soil is good, and grows corn and fruits, while the mountain sides yield excellent wines. In the remoter parts, lions, leopards, rhinoceroses, hyenas, &c., are occasionally seen; and quaggas and giraffes; there are also various species of antelopes. Ostriches, eagles, and condors, also occur. The Great Fish river, Sunday river, and Oliphant's river, are the principal streams. The climate is healthy, though by no means cold. The population is about 200,000; of whom a large proportion are coloured, and most living in the interior are of Dutch extraction. Cape Town is the capital, and stands on Table Bay, about 30 miles from the Cape. It is well built, and strongly fortified. Here are commodious churches belonging to various communions, the government buildings, and an observatory. Table Bay is a good harbour, but not always calm, being open to the W. and the Atlantic. Table Mountain, which overlooks the town, is 3500 feet in height, and commands a noble and beautiful prospect. Pop. about 20,000. Lat. 34. 0. S. Long. 18. 25. E. Graaf Reynet, Graham's Town, Uitenhage, &c. &c. are its other towns.

CAPE HORN, the southern extremity of Terra del Fuego. Lat. 55. 58. S. Long. 67. 46. W.

CAPE NORTH, the most northern promontory in Europe, in the island of Maggero, on the coast of Norway. Lat. 71. 11. N. Long. 25. E.

CAPE PAULMAS, a promontory on the Guinea coast, Africa. Lat. 4. 10. N. Long. 9. 10. W.

CAPE DE VERD, a cape on the western coast of Africa. Lat. 14. 45. N. Long. 17. 28. W.

CAPE DE VERD ISLANDS, so called from their being situated to the westward of the above cape, about 80 miles. They lie between 23 and 26 degrees of W. Long., and between 15 and 18 degrees of N. Lat. Many of these islands are little more than barren rocks. They were discovered by Antonio Noel, a Genoese, in the service of Portugal, in 1460. The natives are of a middle stature, ugly, and almost perfectly black; their hair is woolly and frizzled, and their lips thick. A company of merchants, belonging to Lisbon, have the exclusive right of trading to these islands; and they keep an agent here for that purpose, who perfectly tyrannizes over the inhabitants, and sells the wretched commodities carried from Portugal at exorbitant prices.

CAPE LLA, a very bright star in the constellation Auriga, in the N. hemisphere.

CAPER, s. caper, Lat. a goat. In Dancing, a spring or leap in which the feet are moved across each other several times before a person reaches the ground again.

CAPER, s. caparris, Lat. the flower-bud of the caper-bush, a well-known pickle brought from the neighbourhood of Toulon in France.

To CAPER, v. n. to cross the feet several times in the air in a leap, applied to dancing; to skip for joy; to dance with great activity.

CAPERCAILLIE, s. in Natural History, a kind of grouse, called also the cock of the woods, once very abundant in the N.

of Britain, but now extinct. It is still found on the continent, especially in the N. parts.

CAPERER, s. one who cuts capers in dancing.

CAPERNAUM, a city of Galilee in the time of our Lord, overlooking the Lake of Genesaret. It is now a place of little note, and is called Tel-Houm.

CAPET, the name of a dynasty of kings of France, which has held the throne, with the brief interruption of the republic and the empire, from about the year 1000. Hugh Capet, the founder, died in 990.

CAPIAS, s. [Lat.] in Law, a writ of two sorts, one before judgment, called capias ad respondendum; the other is a writ or execution after judgment.

CAPILLACEOUS, a. See CAPILLARY.

CAPILLAMENT, s. [capillus, Lat.] in Botany, the small threads or hairs which grow in the middle of a flower, adorned with little knobs at the top; the strings or threads about the roots of plants.

CAPILLARY, a. resembling hairs. In Botany, applied to such plants as have no main stem, their leaves arising from the roots, and producing their seeds in little tufts or protuberances on the back of their leaves; as the fern maiden-hair, of which the syrup of capillaire is made. In Anatomy, applied to the minute arteries, which in the brain are not equal to one hair, and the smallest lymphatic vessels, which are a hundred times smaller than the smallest arteries. In Physic, capillary tubes are those whose diameter is one half, one third, or one fourth of a line, or the least that can be made.

CAPILLATION, s. a dividing into branches as small as hairs; a small ramification.

CAPITAL, a. [capitalis, Lat.] in its primary sense, that belongs or relates to the head. Applied to crimes, that affects a person's life; criminal in the highest degree; chief or principal. Capital stock, the fund of a trading company.

CAPITAL, s. in Political Economy, that accumulation of the profits of labour, or trade, &c., our own, or inherited by us, or borrowed, which is devoted in trade to the production of further profit. It is this which makes the difference between a dealer and a trader or merchant, as is particularly seen in transactions with uncivilized nations. In Geography, the chief city of a kingdom, or residence of its monarch. Applied to letters, large; such as are written at the beginnings or heads of books. In Architecture, the topmost member of a column.

CAPITALLY, ad. in such a manner as affects a person's life. Capitally convicted, is applied to a person who is cast for his life, or condemned to die. Applied to productions of art, in a perfect, high finished, or excellent manner.

CAPITATION, s. [caput, Lat.] a numbering by the heads; a certain sum of money imposed at so much per head in exigencies of state.

CAPITOL, one of the seven hills on which Rome stood; perhaps the first rude fortress of the villages over whom Romulus is said to have been first king. In the days of the glory of the eternal city, it was covered with temples, (that of Jupiter Capitolinus being the most magnificent,) and public buildings. In earlier days it was the citadel, whither, on the sack of the city by the Gauls, the survivors retired and maintained their ground till succour arrived. At one end the hill was very precipitous, and down it state criminals were cast headlong. This was called the Tarpeian rock, in memory of a legend of treason in early days.

CAPITULAR, s. [capitulum, Lat.] a book divided into chapters; also a collection of civil and canonical laws.

To CAPITULATE, v. n. [capitulum, Lat.] to draw articles; to set down the heads of a remonstrance; to make head. Mostly used by moderns for surrendering a place upon certain conditions.

CAPITULATION, s. the surrender of a place upon certain conditions.

CAPON, s. [capo, Lat.] a castrated cock.

CAPONNIÈRE, s. a work sunk on the glacis of a place about four or five feet deep, to afford a passage from one work to another; the earth dug out serves for a parapet, and is made with loop-holes and embrasures, covered with strong planks, on which are clays, or hurdles, that support the earth which covers all. It holds 15 or 20 men, who fire through these embrasures.

CAPOT, s. [Fr.] at piquet, when one party wins all the tricks.

To CAPOUT, v. a. to win all the tricks at the game of piquet.
CAPOUCH, s. [capuce, Fr.] a monk's hood.

CAPPADOCIA, a country of ancient Asia Minor, lying on the Euphrates, and bordered by Pontus, Galatia, Phrygia, and Cilicia. It was intersected by various mountain chains, the Taurus, Anti-Taurus, Paraydars, and Scydisms; and was watered by the Halys, and some tributaries of the Euphrates. Comana, Tyana, Caesarea, and Melitene, were its principal places.

CAPREOLATE, a. [capreolus, Lat.] in Botany, applied to those plants which turn, wind, and creep along the ground, by means of their tendrils, as gourds, melons, cucumbers, &c.

CAPRI, a small rocky island of the Mediterranean, close to the coast of Italy, on the S. side of the Bay of Naples. Two towns stand on the summits of the two precipitous rocks which are nearly the whole island, Capri the lowermost, and the capital, and Anacapri the loftiest. Besides these, huts and small villages are scattered amongst the vineyards, which are famous for the wine they yield. The population is under 4000.

CAPRICE, (caprice) [caprice, Fr.] CAPRICHO, s. [Span.] sudden change of sentiment, not founded on reason; a whimsy, freak, or fantastic humour.

CAPRICIOUS, a. [capricieux, Fr.] applied to a variable and inconstant behaviour, founded on mere whim and fancy; applied also to a sudden and frequent change of opinion or sentiment, inconsistent with reason.

CAPRICIOUSLY, ad. in a whimsical, humourous, fanciful manner.

CAPRICIOUSNESS, s. the quality of changing or commanding, according to the starts of fancy, without any regard to reason or propriety.

CAPRICORN, s. [capricornus, Lat.] in Astronomy, the tenth sign of the zodiac, represented on ancient medals in the form of a goat with the hinder parts of a fish. The sun enters this sign at the winter solstice, or 21st of December. Tragic of Capricorn, that circle on the globe, parallel to the equator, beyond which the sun never passes southerly. See CANCER, TROPICS, TORRID ZONE.

CAPRIFICATION, s. in Horticulture, the fertilizing of some particular plants, by the artificial application of pollen to the female flowers; the forcing the ripening of figs by puncturing them.

CAPRIOLES, s. [Fr.] are leaps that a horse makes in the same place, without advancing.

CAPSIUM, m. s. in Botany, a plant allied to the potato, whose seed vessel when ripe is of a brilliant scarlet, and is extremely hot to the palate. It is used as a pickle.

CAPSTAN, s. corruptly spelt capstern [castetan, Fr.] a large cylinder, placed perpendicularly on the deck of a ship, and turned by levers or bars, which cross it, serving, by means of a cable which winds round it, to draw up heavy burthens. It is likewise used to tow a ship, and to weigh the anchors.

CAPSULAR, a. [capsula, Lat.] hollow, like a chest or pouch.

CAPSULATE, a. [capsula, Lat.] enclosed as in a box. Capculated plants, in Botany, are such as produce their seeds in short dry pods or husks.

CAPSULE, s. [capsula, Lat.] in Botany, a dry hollow seed-vessel that opens naturally in some determinate manner; as at the side by a small hole, in orchis and campanula; horizontally, in impineral; longways, in convolvulus; at the bottom, in arrow-grass; or at the top, as in most plants. Generally, a small vesicle containing a fluid; or a covering so closely fitting to a bottle or jar as to exclude the air entirely.

CAPTAIN, s. [capitaine, Fr.] a military officer, whereof there are various kinds; as a captain of a troop or company, one who commands a troop of horse, and the other a company of foot, under a colonel. Captain-General is he who commands an army in chief. Captain-Lieutenant is one who commands a troop or company, in the room of another whose absence is dispensed with. Captain of a ship of war is the commanding officer. Captain of a merchant ship, more properly the master, is he who has the direction of the ship, crew, and cargo.

CAPTAINRY, CAPTAINSHIP, s. the power over a certain district; the chiefship; the rank or post of a captain.

CAPTION, (kápsion) s. [capio, Lat.] in Law, the act of taking a person by a judicial process.

CAPTIOUS, (kápsious) a. [captivus, Lat.] given to cavils, or forming objections; insinuating; insidious.

CAPTIOUSLY, (kápsiously) ad. in such a manner as shows a great inclination to raise objections; in a sly, insidious manner.

CAPTIVOUSNESS, (kápsivousness) s. the quality of forming cavils, or unnecessary objections; peevishness.

To CAPTIVATE, v. a. [captivo, Lat.] to take prisoner. Figuratively, to charm or subdue by the power of superior excellence. To enslave; with to.

CAPTIVATION, s. the act of taking a person prisoner; the state of a person taken prisoner.

CAPTIVE, s. [captivus, Lat.] one taken prisoner in war. Figuratively, one charmed or subdued by the beauty or excellence of another.

CAPTIVE, a. [captivus, Lat.] taken prisoner in war; in confinement; imprisoned. Figuratively, subdued, or kept under great restraints.

To CAPTIVE, v. a. to take or make a person prisoner.

CAPTIVITY, s. [captivitas, Fr.] a state of servitude, owing to a person's being taken prisoner in war.

CAPTOR, s. [capio, Lat.] the person who takes a prisoner or prize.

CAPTURE, s. [captura, Lat.] the taking of any prey; the thing taken. In Law, the seizing a person for debt, or the apprehending a criminal.

CAPUA, a city of Lavoura, in the kingdom of Naples, on the Volturno. Here anciently was a noble and very large city, a rival of Rome in the earlier days of its history, which fell before it in the Punic wars, having sided with Hannibal. Relics both of Roman and Etruscan art abound here. It is about 15 miles from Naples. Its population is about 10,000.

CAPUCHINS, (capuchéens) [capuce or capuchon, a stuff cap or cowl wherewith they cover their heads, Fr.] monks of the order of St. Francis, founded by Matthew Baschi. See FRANCISCANS.

CAPUT MORTUUM, s. [Lat.] a term signifying dead-heads, being that which remains in a retort after distillation or dryness. The modern term is Residuum.

CAPYBARA, s. a kind of cavy which resides much in the water, and is eaten by the Indians in South America.

CAR, s. [car, Brit.] a small carriage with one or two horses. Figuratively, used by the poets for a chariot, or genteel vehicle, in which a person is drawn.

CARABINE, s. [carabine, Fr.] a small kind of fusée, or fire-arm, about two feet long in the barrel.

CARABINIER, (carabinier) s. a sort of light horse, carrying longer carabines than the rest, used sometimes on foot.

CARACALLA, M. A. ANTONINUS BASSIANUS, one of the later emperors of Rome, son of Septimius Severus, and successor to him. He began his reign by murdering his brother who was associated with him in the empire. His career was one of cruelty and folly. At length he was assassinated, in 217, having reigned somewhat more than 6 years.

CARACAS, or ST. JUAN DE LEON, a town of Colombia, S. America, near the Caribbean Sea. It stands on a small stream at the foot of the mountains. It is regularly built, and has some good public buildings. It is about 20 miles from La Guayra, which serves as its port, by which it has the means of carrying on a considerable trade. Its population is about 40,000. It is nearly 700 miles from Santa Fe de Bogota.

CARACCI, the name of three celebrated Italian painters of the 16th century; Ludovico, and his cousins Agostino and Annibale. Ludovico imitated the antique, and studied Corregio; he taught his cousins. Agostino was also an engraver. Annibale painted the Farnese Palace at Rome, and was the greatest painter of the three. They founded that school of artists, known as the Bolognese School, which retains its character still for the purity of taste and style which characterized it, and the names which adorn it. Ludovico died in 1619, aged 64 years; Agostino in 1602, aged 45 years; and Annibale in 1609, aged 49 years.

CARACK, s. [caraca, Span.] a large ship of burthen; a galloon.

CARACTACUS, the Latinized form of the name of an ancient British chieftain, who for some time withstood the encroachments of the Romans in the reign of Claudius, and being at last defeated by Ostorius Scapula, in 51 A. D., and sent prisoner to Rome, was released by the emperor, because of the magnanimity he displayed.

CARANNA, s. a hard, brittle resin, though some call it a gum. It is brought principally from New Spain, is of a dark colour, and bitterish taste. A fine odoriferous oil is distilled from it, esteemed a very powerful external remedy in cases of pain, tumours, and wounds.

CARAT, s. [carat, Fr.] a term used to express the fineness of gold; thus, every mass of alloyed gold is supposed to be divided into 24 equal parts; then, if, as in gold coin, 2 parts are alloy, it is 22 carats fine; if, as in rings, &c., 6 parts are alloy, it is 18 carats fine: this last is the new standard. Carat is weight used by jewellers, equal to 3 $\frac{1}{2}$  grains.

CARAVAGGIO, the name by which two distinguished painters of the Lombard or Bolognese School are known. Polidoro Caldari was a pupil of Raffaele, and effected his greatest works in conjunction with Maturino; he died in 1543, aged 48 years. Michael Angelo Amerigi was a bold and successful imitator of rude and low models. He was an outré colourist, but produced great effect, and he never idealized a subject. He died in 1600, aged 40 years.

CARAVAN, s. [caravanne, Fr.] a body or company of merchants or traders travelling together in great numbers, through deserts, or other dangerous places, in the East, for their mutual safety and defence. Their beasts are horses, but most commonly camels, and they are escorted by a chief or aga, with a body of janizaries.

CARAVANARIES, s. a sort of public inns built on great roads in the East, for the accommodation of caravans; there being no inns for passengers, as in Europe. Some of these are very magnificent; and there are people who attend, to accommodate travellers; there is, however, no furniture, and in some places no other provisions but what the caravans bring with them. There are many of these in the great towns of Asia and Africa, especially in the Turkish and Persian dominions. They are generally built in the form of a square, and round a quadrangle, like a college.

CARAVEL, CA'RAL, s. [caravela, Span.] a round, light, old-fashioned ship.

CARAWAY, s. [carum, Lat.] in Botany, an umbelliferous plant, the seed of which is stomachic and carminative, and is used by confectioners and brewers.

CARBON, s. in Chemistry, an elementary substance, which occurs under some most remarkable forms, and is one of the most important, in respect of the vegetable and mineral kingdoms. Its purest form is the diamond: it is the base of black lead, anthracite, and all the varieties of charcoal.

CARBONADO, s. [Span.] meat cut across, or in squares, with a knife, to be broiled.

TO CARBONADO, v. a. to cut across, in Cookery. Figuratively, to cut or hack.

CARBONATES, s. in Chemistry, salts formed by the combination of any base with carbonic acid.

CARBONATED, a. in Chemistry, impregnated with carbon. CARBONDALE, a village of Pennsylvania, United States, situated on Lackawanna Creek. This flourishing village owes its existence to the Lackawanna coal mine, which is a very productive one, and by means of the Honesdale canal, the Delaware, and the Delaware and Hudson canal, sends a prodigious quantity of coal into the most profitable market. It is 264 miles from Washington. Pop. 2398.

CARBONIC, a. in Chemistry, belonging to carbon. Carbonic acid and carbonic oxide gas, are the two most important compounds of carbon and oxygen. Carbonic acid gas enters into the composition of the atmosphere: it is fatal to animal life; but necessary to vegetable; and is the peculiar principle that makes spring water, bottled beers, and champagne so agreeable.

CARBONOUS, a. in Chemistry, belonging to carbon.

CARBUNCLE, s. a very elegant stone, of a deep red colour, with a mixture of scarlet, known among the ancients by the name of Anthrax.

CARBUNCLED, a. set with carbuncles.

CARBU'NCULAR, a. resembling, or partaking of the qualities of a carbuncle.

CARBUNCULATION, s. [carbunculatio, Lat.] the blasting of the young buds of trees or plants, either by excessive heat or cold.

CARBURETS, s. in Chemistry, compound substances, of which carbon forms one of the constituent parts. Thus, plumbago, which is composed of carbon and iron, is called carburet of iron.

CARBURETTED, part. formed into a carburet.

CARCANET, s. [carcan, Fr.] a chain or collar of jewels.

CARCASSE, CA'RCASSE, s. [carcasse, Fr.] a dead body. Figuratively, a body or person, in a reproachful sense; the decayed parts, ruins, or remains of a thing. In Guntery, a kind of bomb of an oblong form, filled with combustibles, and thrown from a mortar.

CARCASSONNE, capital of the department of Aude, France. It stands on both sides the Aude, and has a bridge over it. The old town has some interesting ruins, but it is ill built; the newer part has some good buildings. It has a great help to trade in the Languedocian canal; and it does not lack literary and scientific institutions. It manufactures woollen cloth; and the neighbourhood produces fruit, wine, and spirits. It is a bishop's see. It is 450 miles from Paris, and its population is 15,000.

CAR'CELACE, s. [carcer, Lat.] fees paid by prisoners before they can be discharged.

CARCINOMA, s. [harkinos and nemo, Gr.] a cancer.

CARD, s. [kaarde, Belg.] an instrument or comb composed of several small pieces of iron wire, hooked in the middle, fastened by the feet in rows; they are generally used in pairs, placed with their points opposite to each other, having the materials between them, and serve to comb, disentangle, and range wool or flax, in a proper order for spinning.

TO CARD, v. a. [kaerden, Belg.] to comb wool, &c., or make it fit for spinning, by drawing it through the card or comb. Neuterly, to game; or play inordinately at cards.

CARDS, s. [carte, Fr. charta, Lat.] in Gaming, pieces of thin pasteboard, cut in oblong squares, on which are painted four kinds of marks and figures, and used in several games. Court cards are those which, in addition to one of these four marks, have either a king, or queen, or servant, (knave,) painted on them. In Navigation, the upper part of the mariner's compass, on which the names of the different quarters of the horizon are marked.

CARDAMOM, s. [cardamomum, Lat.] a medicinal seed, that assists digestion, strengthens the head and stomach, and is diuretic.

CARDAN, JEROME, a very celebrated physician, metaphysician, mathematician, and enthusiast, of the 16th century. His permanent fame rests upon his eccentricities and follies, which cannot be forgotten, and on his mathematical discoveries, which helped forward the study of Algebraic science, and prepared it for the more effectual labours of Vieta. The number of his works is very great, their real worth not so. He starved himself to death in 1576, to fulfil one of his own prophecies, aged 75 years.

CARDER, s. one who combs or prepares wool by passing it through a card.

CARDIAC, a. [kardia, Gr.] an appellation given to cordial medicines that strengthen and invigorate the heart, whereby a brisker and freer circulation is occasioned.

CARDIALGIA, or HEART-BURN, s. [kardia and algos, Gr.] a disorder of the stomach, occasioned by the acidifying of some food or drink.

CARDIFF, Glamorganshire. It is the county town, seated on the river Taff, or Tave, with very extensive and considerable old walls, and a harbour three miles down the river; but vessels of 200 tons burthen can come up to the town. This town has a considerable trade with Bristol and other places; and near it are works of cast and wrought iron. A ship canal and a railroad have greatly increased its prosperity. It is 164 miles from London. Markets, Wednesday and Saturday. Pop. 10,077.

CARDIGAN, Cardiganshire, a large, populous, and pleasantly seated town on the river Tivy, over which there is a handsome bridge. In its neighbourhood are iron and tin works. It is a sea-port, and has a harbour, which is not always safe for vessels of burthen. The old castle still stands near the town. It is the county town. It is 225 miles from London. Market, Saturday. Pop. 2925.

CARDIGANSHIRE, a county of South Wales, is bounded on the W. by Cardigan Bay, in the Irish Channel; on the N. and N. E. by Merioneth and Montgomery; on the E. and S. E. by Radnor and Brecknock; and on the S. by Carmarthen. It extends 42 miles in length, and 20 in breadth, and contains 66 parishes. To the S. and W. are plains fruitful in corn; but the N. and E. parts are a continued ridge of bleak mountains, yet there are pastures well stocked with sheep and cattle. It is well supplied with fish from the sea, and from its own lakes and rivers, in which beavers lived within the period of true British history. The mountains abound with lead and silver ore. The principal rivers are the Tivey, Rydal, and the Istwith. Cardigan Bay lies on the coast. Pop. 68,766. It returns two members to parliament.

CARDINAL, a. [cardinalis, Lat.] principal, chief, supreme. The cardinal points of the compass, are the north, south, east, and west, and the winds that blow from those points are called the cardinal winds. Cardinal signs in the Zodiac are Aries, Libra, Cancer, and Capricorn. In Arithmetic, cardinal numbers are such as express positively how many things there are, as 1, 2, 3, not their order, as, 1st, 2nd, 3rd. In schemes of morality, the cardinal virtues are, justice, prudence, temperance, and fortitude.

CARDINAL, s. the title of the highest dignities of the Roman Church next to the Pope. The number is 70, and they are called the Sacred College. Their title is  Eminence: and they wear as their special distinction, a red cap, or hat, or a hat with red edges. On the death of the pope, on the college devolves the election of a successor. These dignities have risen step by step from the rank of parish priests of Rome, and other large places; and are to this day named from some one or other of the churches of the Papal city. Also, a particular kind of ladies' cloak. Also, a beautiful American bird, so denominated from its shining red plumage.

CARDINAL-FLOWER, s. in Botany, a plant with strap-shaped leaves, almost naked stem, and pale purple blossoms: found in lakes, in hilly countries, and flowering in July and August.

CARDINALATE, CARDINALSHIP, s. the office and rank of a cardinal.

CARDITIS, s. in Medicine, inflammation of the heart; a disease in most cases fatal, because its presence is not detected till it is beyond remedial treatment.

CARDUUS, s. [Lat.] See THISTLE.

CARE, s. [care, Sax.] attention to a particular subject; concern or anxiety of mind, arising from the uncertainty of something future, or the oppression of the present calamity; a too great anxiety for the events of this world; an affectionate regard for a person. Caution, protection, regard, and support, when followed with the particle of. SYNON. Prudence signifies wisdom applied to practice; discretion is the effect of prudence, and means a knowledge to govern or direct oneself; by care we understand heed in order to preservation; caution implies a greater degree of wariness.

To CARE, v. n. to be anxious, solicitous, or concerned about any thing; to be disposed, or inclined; with for before nouns, and to before verbs.

To CAREEN, v. a. [caréner, Fr.] to lay a vessel upon one side in order to calk, stop the leaks, trim, or repair the other side. — v. n. to be in a state of careening.

CAREER, s. [carriere, Fr.] a course or race; the ground on which a race is run; full speed; very swift motion.

CAREFUL, a. abounding or perplexed with great solicitude, apprehensions, or anxiety.

CAREFULLY, ad. in an attentive, cautious, circumspect, and diligent manner.

CAREFULNESS, s. cautious, diligent, and constant application; heedfulness; vigilance.

CARELESS, a. without due attention, labour, application, caution, or concern; without thought, or premeditation.

CARELESSLY, ad. without anxiety; without care; with negligence; in a manner void of care.

CARELESSNESS, s. heedlessness; inattention; negligence; absence of care; manner void of care.

To CARESS, v. a. [caresser, Fr.] to embrace with great affection; to treat a person with great civility and endearment.

CARESS, s. an embrace of great affection; an endearing profusion of civilities and kind actions.

CARET, s. [Lat.] in writing, a mark implying that something is omitted, which ought to come in where this sign (Λ) stands under the line.

CARGO, s. [chargo, Fr.] the lading of a ship; all the merchandises and wares on board a ship.

CARIBBEE ISLANDS. See INDIES, WEST.

CARIBES, s. Caribs, an aboriginal race of the W. hemisphere, which was found in the 16th century, spread over all the shores and islands from the mouth of the Amazon to the Orinoco, and the neighbourhood of Porto Rico, also over the lesser Antilles. Included under the same generic designation are the Tamanacs of the Orinoco, the Arawaks of Surinam and Berbice, the Guaranas of the delta of the Orinoco, who live in trees, the Cumanagotos, and the Chayma, who live in Cumana, &c. The race is almost extinct on the islands; but some of this, and other kindred races, live still on the continent.

CARICATURE, s. in Painting, is the concealment of real beauties, and the exaggeration of blemishes, but still so as to preserve a resemblance of the object.

CARIES, s. [Lat.] in Medicine, the solution of continuity in a bone, attended with a waste of its substance, occasioned by the corrosion of some acrimonious matter.

CARPINTHIA, part of the Austrian empire, with the title of a duchy, bounded by Styria, Salzburg, the Tyrol, Venice, and Carniola. It is a very mountainous district, being traversed by the Noric Alps, of which the Gross-Glockner and the Fuschberg attain an elevation of above 12,000 feet. Between the branches of this chain the Drave runs; and there are other streams which flow into the Drave; and some large lakes. There is not much arable land in proportion to its extent, but it has excellent pastures. Grain, but not in large quantities, cattle, swine, &c., are produced here. Iron, copper, lead, zinc, quicksilver, and antimony are abundant. The mountains also furnish quarries for marble and building stone. The iron manufactories are the principal source of employment and wealth; in this department there are also some small manufactures of silk, woollen goods, &c. The population is about 300,000. Klagenfurt and Villach are its chief towns.

CARIOUSITY, s. that quality of a bone which putrefies and wastes its substance.

CARIOUS, a. [cariousus, Lat.] rotten, generally applied to bones.

CARK, s. [cearc, Sax.] care; anxiety. Obsolete.

To CARK, v. n. [carcean, Sax.] to be solicitous, careful, anxious.

CARLE, s. [ceorl, Sax.] a rude, brutish fellow; a churl; also an old man.

CARLINE THISTLE, s. [carlina, Lat.] in Botany, a biennial plant found in dry pastures.

CARLINGS, CARLINES, s. in a ship, two pieces of timber lying fore and aft, along from beam to beam, whereon the ledges rest on which the planks of the ship are fastened.

CARLISLE, (Karlisle) Cumberland. It is pleasantly situated on a rising ground, in a fertile country, near the confluence of 3 fine rivers, the Eden, the Peterell, and the Cauda, or Caude, all abounding with fish, and by which it is nearly surrounded. It has long been noted for making whips and fish-hooks; there are also considerable quantities of printed linens, checks, cottons, fustians, hats, tanned leather, nails, coarse knives, stockings, &c., manufactured here. It is 301 miles from London. Markets, Wednesday and Saturday. Pop. 23,012.

CARLISLE, a town of Pennsylvania, United States. It is regularly laid out and neatly built. The Cumberland Valley railroad passes through it. There are barracks sufficient for 2000 men here. Dickinson College is located here. It was founded by the Presbyterians, but is now in the hands of the Methodists. The buildings are elegant, and there is a good library. It is 103 miles from Washington. Pop. 4351. There are 6 other places in the States bearing this name.

CARLISLE, SIR ANTONY, an eminent surgeon of London. He studied under the Hunters and their coadjutors, and held as his first appointment the surgery of Westminster Hospital: he rose to be President of the College of Surgeons, and Anatomical Professor to the Royal Academy. He published many papers and works, relating to his profession, and to scientific matters generally. But they do not procure him a very high place amongst medical writers. He died in 1840, aged 72 years.

CARLOW, or CATERLOUGH, a county of Leinster, Ireland, 23 miles in length, and 26 at its greatest breadth. It is bounded on the W. by Queen's county; on the N. and N. E. by Kildare and Wicklow; on the E. by Wicklow and Wexford; and on the S. S. E. and S. W. by Wexford and Kilkenny; and contains 50 parishes. It is for the most part level, and adapted to agriculture, which is more flourishing here than in Ireland generally. It has coal in one part, and a continuation of the E. hills gives it some most useful granite. Its chief stream is the Barrow.

Its wealth and productions are almost wholly agricultural. Pop. 86,228. It sends three members to parliament. Its chief town is Carlisle, a neat place, seated on the E. side of the river Barrow, by which it communicates with Waterford river and the Grand canal. It has some handsome public buildings, and is the locality of a good college belonging to the Roman Catholics. It is 50 miles from Dublin. Pop. 10,409.

CARLSBAD, a town of Bohemia, Austria, famous for its hot springs. It stands on the Tepl, in a valley, or rather in several ravines that join there, under mountain heights whence there are noble prospects. Beside the trade occasioned by the influx of visitors at the bathing season, it has some small manufactures. The population is under 5000.

CARLSKRONA, or CARLSKROON, a town of Blekinge, in Sweden, with a harbour large and commodious, but of difficult entrance, on account of the shoals and rocky sands at its mouth. The town mostly stands upon a small rocky island, which rises gently in a bay of the Baltic; the suburbs extend over another small rock, and along the mole, close to the bason, where the fleet is moored. The way into the town from the main land, is carried over a dyke, over an island, and thence along two long wooden bridges, joined by a rock. The town is spacious, and some of the buildings are of brick, but generally they are of wood. Here is a dock hollowed out of the solid rock, capable of receiving the largest vessels, and a covered one, whose bottom and sides are of hewn granite; rows of granite pillars support the roof, and bear rather the appearance of a colonnade to a temple, than of a receptacle for ships. It is 220 miles from Stockholm. Population about 15,000. Lat. 56. 20. N. Long. 15. 25. E.

CARLSRUHE, the capital of Baden, in Germany. It is a very regularly built town, all the streets radiating from the palace of the Grand Duke; and there are many public squares, one of which is used as the market-place. The houses are built well, and the churches, the palaces, the town-hall, museum, academy, government buildings, &c. &c., make it a very fine place. There is an excellent public library in the Duke's palace. The population is under 30,000. Lat. 49. 0. N. Long. 8. 25. E.

CARLMAN, s. one who drives a cart, or keeps a cart for hire.

CARMARTHEN, Carmarthenshire, S. Wales. It is a well-built town, pleasantly situated in a fertile country, on the river Towy, (near its conflux with the Gwily,) over which it has a stone bridge, with a very commodious quay, to which vessels of 200 tons burthen may come up. It is 212 miles from London. Markets, Wednesday and Saturday. Pop. 9526.

CARMARTHENSHIRE, a county of S. Wales, lying on the Bristol Channel, 45 miles in length, and 20 at its greatest breadth, bounded by Pembrokeshire, Cardiganshire, Brecknockshire, and Glamorganshire. It contains 87 parishes. It is hilly, one point, the Beacon, being above 2500 feet high. The Towy is its principal stream. It produces coal and iron, and, in the cultivated districts, good corn. It has some fisheries also. Pop. 106,326. It returns three members to parliament.

CARMEL, MOUNT, a mountain famed in sacred story, standing on the S. of what is now the Bay of St. Jean d'Acre. It is a promontory, and the end of a range of hills, running from the S. E., and forms the most remarkable headland of all the Syrian coast. It is reckoned to be 1500 feet high, and is a very beautiful mountain, from the rich woods that cover it, and its profuse vegetation. There are many caverns in it, one of which is called Elijah's, and 'another the Monks'. The plain at its base, and the brook once called Kishon, still continue to testify of the wonderful and sublime trial which ended with the discomfiture and destruction of the priests of Baal. A Carmelite monastery stands on the mountain now.

CARMELITE, s. [Fr.] a sort of poor.

CARMELITES, the friars of our Lady of Mount Carmel, making one of the four Mendicant orders. They pretend to derive their original from the prophets Elijah and Elisha. See WHITE FRIARS.

CARMINATIVES, s. medicines prescribed for the colic disorder, to dispel the wind.

CARMINÉ, s. a powder of a very beautiful red colour, bordering upon purple, and used by painters in miniature, though rarely, on account of its great price.

CARNAC, a village in the department of Morbihan, France, near Auray, where is a very remarkable Celtic relic, being a number of rows of huge stones, more numerous, but not so artfully disposed as those of Stonehenge. The nature of this monument has quite escaped the ingenuity of antiquaries.

CARNA'K, a town of Egypt, where are some very remarkable ruins; anciently named Thebes, which see.

CARNAGE, s. [carnage, Fr.] slaughter, havoc, or heaps of bodies slain in battle.

CARNAL, a. [carnal, Fr.] proceeding from, or belonging to, the fleshy part of a man, opposed to spiritual. Figuratively, sensual, lustful, lecherous, voluptuous.

CARNALITY, s. lust, wantonness, propensity to lust; unchaste pleasure. Figuratively, immersed in sensuality.

CARNALLY, ad. in a gross, sensual manner, opposed to spiritual.

CARNARVON, Carnarvonshire, N. Wales. It is a well-built and walled town, with a celebrated castle, in which Edward the II. was born: it is surrounded on all sides except the E. by the Menai Strait, and the river Seiont. The harbour is tolerably good, with 9 feet at low water. Carnarvon has no manufactures, but carries on a considerable trade with Ireland, Liverpool, Bristol, and London. It is 251 miles from London. Market, Saturday. Pop. 7972.

CARNARVONSHIRE, a county of North Wales, about 45 miles in length, and 13 in breadth, forming the promontory at the N. E. corner of Wales, bounded by Denbighshire and Merionethshire, and separated by the Menai Straits from the Isle of Anglesey. It has 68 parishes. It is the most mountainous district in N. Wales, its central part being entirely occupied by Snowdon, and the several craggy summits, deep dells, moors, chasms, and lakes, which constitute its dreary region. It is 3557 feet in height. Several copper mines have been worked in various parts, and there are some of these at present about Llanberis. Other places afford lead; and slates, with quantities of stone, excellent for hones, are dug near Snowdon. It furnishes some pastures for goats, sheep, and cattle. Pop. 81,093. It returns two representatives to parliament.

CARNATIC, THE, a rich country of Hindustan, extending along the coast of Coromandel to Cape Comorin, being 570 miles long from N. to S., and from 120 to 75 wide. A range of mountains called the Eastern Ghauts runs through it. The Palaur and the Pennar are its principal rivers. Its chief produce is rice, the cultivation of which is very assiduously attended to; millet, sugar, indigo, &c. are also produced. Madras, Pondicherry, Tanjore, Arcot, Tinnevely, &c. &c. are its towns.

CARNATION, s. [caro, Lat.] in Botany, a species of the clove gillyflower. In painting, a lively red colour.

CARNEADES, a Greek philosopher, regarded as the founder of that sect of Platonists called the New Academy. He was a pupil of Diogenes the Stoic, and afterwards of Hegesinus the Academician. He also studied the writings of Chrysippus with great diligence, for the exercise of his dialectical skill. He was sent as an ambassador to Rome, and being too fond in showing his argumentative subtilty, was soon dismissed from the stern republic. He was in his doctrines a sceptic, that is, he affirmed that there was no criterion to determine the truth of our impressions and thoughts, and that, therefore, we could never regard them as more than probably to be relied on. He was a little too prone to forget the requisitions of cleanliness, &c. in his studies and polemics. He flourished about 160 B. C., and lived to the age of 90 years.

CARNE'LION, s. [improperly spelt cornelian.] in Natural History, a species of agate, of a flesh colour, not uncommon.

CARNIVAL, s. [carnaval, Fr.] the season of mirth and luxury celebrated by the Italians, and especially at Venice, lasting from Twelfth-day to Lent, and attended with balls, feasts, operas, concerts, and every thing which pomp, ostentation, or festivity can furnish.

CARNIVOROUS, a. [caro and voro, Lat.] eating flesh; that lives on flesh.

CARNOSITY, s. [carnositè, Fr.] in Surgery, a fleshy excrescence; a fungus, or proud flesh.

CARNOT, LAZARE NICHOLAS, a distinguished actor in the French Revolution. He was originally a soldier, and became a member of the legislative assembly, and afterwards of the Committee of Public Safety, attending almost exclusively to the war department, in which he was held unrivalled. Under Napoleon, both as consul and emperor, he served in the same province. He also took part in active service, and received due praise. He died in exile in 1823, aged 70 years. His writings respecting mathematical science are reckoned valuable.

CARNEOUS, CARNEOUS, a. [carneus, Lat.] fleshy, applied to animals. In Botany, of a soft substance, similar to that of flesh in animals.

CAROL, s. [carola, Ital.] a song of joy, exultation, or festivity, applied to the rustic anthems of country singers at Christmas; any kind of song.

To CAROL, v. n. [carolare, Ital.] to sing with great joy and festivity.—v. a. to praise in anthems or songs.

CAROLINA, the name of two of the United States of N. America. North Carolina lies on the Atlantic, and is bounded by Virginia, Tennessee, and S. Carolina. It is 430 miles long, and 180 broad, and is divided into 68 counties. Along the whole coast is a ridge of sand, separated from the main land by bays and sounds of various width; and having only one inlet through which vessels pass. Capes Hatteras and Lookout are projecting points of this belt, and Cape Fear is on an island. For 60 or 80 miles inland the country is a dead flat; to this succeeds a belt of about 40 miles wide, fertile, though uneven; and beyond this are the mountains and high table-land. This high land is 1800 feet above the sea level, and among the peaks are, Black Mountain, 6476 feet high, the highest land of the States E. of the Rocky Mountains; Roan Mountain, 6038 feet; and Grandfather Mountain, 5556 feet high. In the N. part of the State is the Dismal Swamp, 30 miles long and 10 broad, which is thickly wooded, and if drained would afford fine arable land. Cape Fear river, the Chowan, the Yadkin, and the Catawba, are its chief rivers. Gold, lead, and iron are found in the mountains. Corn of all kinds, and fruits, tobacco, cotton, hemp, silk, and sugar, are produced in the cultivated part; and the pastures abound with cattle of all kinds. Its manufactures are not very extensive; those of iron, cotton, and gold are the most important. Not having any good sea-ports, it has not a great foreign trade. It has six banks. There are two colleges, one designated a university. The capital is Raleigh. Pop. 753,419, of which 245,817 are slaves. South Carolina also lies on the Atlantic, and is bounded by N. Carolina and Georgia. It is 200 miles long and 125 broad, and is divided into 29 districts. The sea-coast is bordered with a fine chain of islands, between which and the shore there is a very convenient navigation. The country to 80 or 100 miles inland is low and swampy, and covered with forests of pitch-pine, having, however, tracts of rich soil. Above the Ridge is an open and diversified table-land, about 800 feet above the sea, very productive. In the W. is the Alleghany range, one peak of which, Table Mountain, is 4000 feet high. The Savannah, the Pedee, the Congaree, and a few other rivers of note water this State. The mineral productions of this state resemble those of N. Carolina, as do the agricultural productions. Its manufactures are chiefly those of the metals, and cotton. It has some good sea-ports, and a good foreign trade. There are 14 banks. This State has a university; there is also another college. Columbia and Charleston are its principal places, the first being the seat of government. Pop. 594,398, including 327,038 slaves. These are amongst the slave-holding States, and the laws respecting the slaves are cruelly unjust: their children must not be taught to read; nor have their free descendants, till the fifth generation, the right of suffrage in N. Carolina.

CAROLINE ISLANDS, in the North Pacific Ocean, between New Guinea and the Ladrone Islands: the largest is named Yap, but they are little known. Lat. 6 to 10. N. Long. 136 to 156 E.

CAROTID, a. [carotides, Lat.] applied to those two arteries which arise out of the ascending trunk of the aorta, near where the subclavian arteries arise.

CAROUSAL, (CAROL), s. a festival or holiday, celebrated with mirth, pomp, and festivity.

To CAROUSE, (caroûze) v. n. [carousser, Fr.] to drink freely.—v. a. to drink up lavishly; to drink a health.

CAROUSE, (caroûze) s. a drinking match, a large draught.

CAROUSE, (caroûzer) s. one who drinks freely; a toper.

CARP, s. [carpe, Fr.] in Natural History, a large fresh-water fish, remarkable for its being able to live a long time out of water. This fish, which is reckoned the most valuable of all for the stocking of ponds, was introduced into this country by Leonard Maschal, about the year 1514.

To CARP, v. n. [carpo, Lat.] to censure, find fault with, or blame, including the idea of forwardness and reproach.

CARPATHIAN MOUNTAINS, a range, forming part of the great Alpine system, occupying the centre and the E. part of Europe, which lies round Hungary, being separated from the Balkan by the Danube at Orsova. Their length is about 900 miles, and their greatest breadth 300. The Theiss, the Vistula, the Dniester, and the Pruth, the Sereth, the Aluta, and the Maros, which flow into the Danube, have their rise in these mountains. Gold, silver, copper, lead, iron, quicksilver, &c. are found in greater or less abundance. There is also connected with them a very extensive bed of rock salt. The highest peaks are the Ruska-Poyana, 9912 feet high; the Buthest, 8698 feet high; and that point of Mount Tatra, called Eisthalerspitze, which is 8524 feet high.

CARPENTER, s. [charpentier, Fr.] one who performs the several offices of cutting, joining, flooring, or other wood-work, relative to houses, buildings, or ships.

CARPENTER, DR. LANT, an eminent minister of the Unitarian denomination at Bristol. He held the situation of librarian to the Athenæum at Liverpool, on his leaving Glasgow, and afterwards settled at Exeter. At Bristol he resided nearly 20 years; and at length, whilst travelling for his health, was accidentally drowned, in 1840, aged 60 years. His numerous writings are chiefly theological and moral.

CARPENTRAS, a town in the department of Vaucluse, France, situated on the Auzon, a tributary of the Rhone. It was once the capital of the papal province round Avignon. It is pleasantly situated, and is adorned with many fine buildings, and relics of its former importance. It has a good trade, the country round cultivating grapes and olives extensively. It is nearly 400 miles from Paris. Population about 8000. Lat. 44. 0. N. Long. 5. 3. E.

CARPENTRY, s. the art of building either houses or ships with wood.

CARPER, s. a person fond of raising objections; a caviller, or censorious person.

CARPET, s. [carpet, Belg.] a covering of stuff or other material, commonly spread over tables, or laid on floors. The phrase of a thing's being on the carpet, is to express its being in hand, in debate, or the object of consideration.

To CARPET, v. a. to spread with a carpet. Figuratively, applied with great elegance to the earth, to embellish or adorn with flowers and herbs.

CARPET-KNIGHT, a denomination given to men of peaceable professions, who are raised to the dignity of knighthood. They take the appellation carpet, because they usually receive their honours from the king's hands in the court, kneeling on a carpet. By this they are distinguished from knights created in the camp or field of battle on account of their military prowess.

CARPING, part. fond of cavilling, raising objections, or finding fault; censorious; captious.

CARPINGLY, ad. in a captious and censorious manner.

CARPUS, s. [Lat.] in Anatomy, the wrist, a congeries of eight small bones, gronped together into a very narrow space, and tied together very firmly by cross ligaments, making a sort of solid foundation for the hand.

CARRACK, s. a Portuguese vessel, trading to the East and West Indies, which is very large, round built, and fitted for fight as well as burthen.

CARRARA, a principality of Italy, taking its title from a town and its territory, which lies on the Mediterranean, and is bounded by the Sardinian states, Fivizzano, and Massa. The town stands about 4 miles from the sea, on a small river, named the Carrone. It is handsomely adorned, has an academy of sculpture, and a trade arising from the products of the district. The chief of these are marble, which is of various qualities, and is most abundant in the mountains which form the inland barrier of Carrara. Wine and oil are grown in the lower parts. The population of the principality is under 15,000.

CARRIAGE, (in prn. the r and a are dropped.) s. [carriage, Fr.] a vehicle used to convey persons or goods from one place to another; the act of conveying things from one place to another; the price paid for the conveying of goods. Figuratively, personal address and behavior; conduct, or practices; proceedings, or the manner of transacting any affair. The carriage of a cannon is, the frame of timber on which it is mounted.

CARRICKFERGUS, Antrim, in Ulster, Ireland. It is seated on a safe and spacious bay of the same name, called also Belfast Lough, with an excellent harbour. The town is mostly well built; it has some good public buildings. The ancient castle is a curious relic of former times. The fisheries of the bay furnish the principal trade to the town. It is 88 miles from Dublin. Pop. 3885.

CARRIER, s. one who conveys or moves a thing from one place to another; one who conveys goods from one town or place to another. In Natural History, a species of pigeons, so called from their carrying letters, &c. tied to their necks, to the place where they were bred, be it ever so remote.

CARRION, s. [charogne, Fr.] the flesh of a dead carcass; and putrefied flesh, not fit for food. Figuratively, a coarse, gross, disagreeable person; a term of reproach.

CARRION, a. relating to a dead or putrefied carcass; feeding on dead carcasses.

CARRON, Stirlingshire, Scotland. It stands on a stream which flows into the Frith of Forth, below Falkirk. Here are the celebrated Carron works, founded in 1761, which were once the largest iron foundry in Europe, but are now superseded in all but the name. It is 40 miles from Edinburgh. Pop. 838.

CARRONA/DE, s. a short kind of ordnance, capable of carrying a large ball, and useful in close engagements at sea. It takes its name from the above-mentioned place, Carron, in Scotland, where it was first made.

CARROT, s. [carote, Fr.] a garden root; of which there are two sorts, the yellow and the orange; the last of which is reckoned by much the better.

CARROT, a. red; applied to red-haired people, from the resemblance of the colour of their hair to that of a carrot.

To CARRY, v. a. [charier, Fr.] to remove a thing from one place to another; to convey, transport, bear; to gain in competition, or rather resistance; to behave, conduct, obtain, import, support, sustain. Used with off, to kill or put an end to a person's life. To carry on, to prosecute, continue, or persevere in an undertaking, notwithstanding all oppositions. Joined with through, to support, or enable a person to sustain and surmount.

CARSTAIRS, WILLIAM, a Scottish minister well known in English history, for the part that he took in the intrigues of William III. during the reigns of Charles II. and James II., and after the Revolution. He was a man of great shrewdness and power; and had an intimate knowledge of the state of parties, which enabled him to serve his patron with great success. He was once put to the torture on suspicion of being concerned in the unhappy attempt of the Duke of Monmouth, but he confessed nothing. He died in 1715, having held for some years the Presidency of Edinburgh University, aged 66 years.

CART, s. [crat, Brit.] a land carriage with two wheels, drawn by horses. Figuratively, any vehicle or carriage.

CARTE BLANCHE, s. [Fr.] a blank paper; a paper or instrument to be filled up with such terms and conditions as the person to whom it is sent thinks fit.

CARTEL, s. [cartel, Fr.] certain terms or stipulations settled between persons at variance. In War, applied to the conditions made by enemies for the mutual exchange of prisoners.

CARTER, s. one who drives, and gets his living by driving a cart.

CARTESIANS, s. a sect of philosophers, who adhere to the opinions advanced by Des Cartes, which see.

CARTHAGENA, a town of Murcia, Spain, seated on a bay of the same name. Here is a very large arsenal, with every requisite for building and fitting out ships of the line. The harbour is spacious and deep, being a basin hollowed by nature, and sheltered from the winds by several hills, placed round it at equal distances. Its trade is considerable; and its exports are wine, oil, &c., with metals from the neighbouring mountains. Its population is about 30,000. It is 27 miles nearly S. of Murcia. Lat. 37. 38. N. Long. 0. 36. W.

CARTHAGENA, a large and rich sea-port of New Grenada, S. America. It has one of the best harbours in S. America; the entrance however is so narrow, that only one vessel can enter at a time. This town is fortified and well built, although the streets are narrow. Its trade is not very great now. Its population is about 20,000. Lat. 10. 27. N. Long. 75. 22. W.

CARTHAGE, once a celebrated city of Africa, and rival of Rome, but now in ruins. It is 10 miles E. of Tunis, near the promontory called Cape Carthage. It was originally a Phœnician colony, and grew to be a great mercantile and commercial state. The country belonging to the city was laboriously cultivated, and being exceedingly fertile, the state was not dependent on foreign supplies of grain, &c., as Rome was, which gave it for a time no small advantage. The government was an oligarchy; and the character of the religion may be known from the fact that Moloch was the chief object of worship. See HANNIBAL, and SCRIPTO.

CART-HORSE, s. an unwieldy horse, fit only for the cart. CARTUSIANS, a religious order founded by one Bruno, in the year 1080. They were a branch of the Benedictines, remarkable for the austerity of their rule, which obliged them to a total abstinence from flesh, even at the peril of their lives, and to feed on bread, water, and salt one day in every week. The peculiar dress of the order, was a white gown, and over it a black cloak with a cowl. They also wore hair-cloth under garments.

CARTILAGE, s. [cartilago, Lat.] in Anatomy, a smooth, solid, uniform, elastic substance, softer than bone, but more solid than any other part, without cavities for marrow, or any nerves or membranes for sensation.

CARTILAGINOUS, a. consisting of cartilages.

CARTMELL, Lancashire, a town seated among the hills, called Cartmell Fells, near the river Ken and the Ken Sands, a sandy shore, which requires guides to direct strangers on their way. It has a harbour for boats, and a market for corn, sheep, and fish. It is 200 miles from London. Markets, Tuesday and Saturday. Pop. 4927.

CARTOON, s. [cartone, Ital.] in Painting, a drawing or sketch upon strong paper, made before commencing a painting on canvass, or in fresco; or to guide embroiderers in working tapestry, as the cartoons of Raphael now at Hampton Court were intended.

CARTOUCHE, (cartioch) s. [cartouche, Fr.] a case of wood three inches thick at the bottom, girl round with marlin, containing 48 musket balls, and six or eight balls of iron of a pound weight; being fired out of a hobit, or small mortar, for the defence of a pass; likewise used for a cartridge.

CATRAGE, s. [catridge, Fr.] a charge of powder wrapped up in thick paper, pasteboard, or parchment, used for charging fire-arms; or in flannel, for great guns.

CART-ROPE, s. a strong cord used to fasten the load on carts; proverbially, any thick cord.

CARTULARY, s. [charta, Lat.] a place where papers or records are kept.

CARTWRIGHT, s. a maker of carts.

CARTWRIGHT, DR. EDMUND, the inventor of power-looms, and other machines. He was an English clergyman, and had addicted himself in his younger days to literary pursuits, and had acquired some little name for authorship. He died in 1823, aged 80 years.

CARTWRIGHT, MAJOR JOHN, the father of Radicalism in England. He had a commission in the navy throughout his life, but derived the title of major from a post in the Militia of his native county, to which he was chosen during the American war. The part that he took in endeavouring to diffuse his principles, made him an object of suspicion and of prosecution by the various governments of the country, but he continued to the end of his long life to aim steadily at the object he had set before him from the first. His character stood so high that not his warmest opponents could attempt to sully it. His writings contain abundant material for the use of those who would study politics ethically, and see what is to be advanced against the theories of the school of Bentham. He died in 1824, aged 84 years.

To CARVE, v. a. [carvare, Ital.] to cut or divide into several parts; to dissect or cut up a fowl or joint of meat at a table; to cut flowers, knots, figures, or other devices, in wood or stone. — s. n. to exercise the trade of a sculptor; to perform at table the office of supplying the company from the dishes.

CARVER, s. one who forms statues, or other likenesses, in wood, stone, or marble. In Cookery, one who cuts the meat.

CARVING, s. the art of cutting images, or other likenesses, in wood, stone, or marble.

CARUNCLE, s. [caruncula, Lat.] in Anatomy, a little piece of flesh. The carunculae lachrymales are two small eminences in the inner corners of the eyes.

CARUS, s. in Medicine, is a species of the apoplexy, being a deprivation of sense and motion, affecting the whole body; yet the faculty of respiration is still left; in short, the carus differs little from a lethargy.

CARY, HENRY FRANCIS, the well-known translator of Dante's Commedia. He had a small benefice in the English Church, and was the author of many poems and poetical translations, and the editor of some of the classic poets of England. He died in 1844, aged 72 years.

CARYATIDES, s. in Architecture, a kind or order of columns or pilasters, used by the ancients, made in the form or figure of a woman, dressed in long robes, and serving to support the entablature. It is said that the Greeks, having taken the city of Cary, led away their women captives, and to perpetuate their servitude, represented them in their buildings as charged with burthens such as those supported by columns.

CASAL, a town in the kingdom of Sardinia, in a province of the same name, lying on the river Po, near Turin. The province has good pastures, and produces wine and silk. The town is rich in noble buildings, in paintings, and other memorials of its former splendour. It has a population of about 18,000. It is 34 miles from Turin.

CASAS, BARTHOLOMEW DE LAS, a Dominican friar, and bishop of part of Mexico, when first overrun by the Spaniards, who devoted himself throughout his life to the protection of the aborigines of those early colonies. But whose zeal for the prevention of wrongs which so wounded his benevolent disposition, which he witnessed, led him to be, ignorantly, the inventor of the most monstrous wrong ever perpetrated—negro slavery. He died in 1566, aged 92 years.

CASAUON, ISAAC, a divine of the latter part of the 16th century, a native of Geneva, but born of Huguenot parents; was early noted for his learning, and was distinguished by Henry IV. of France, in consequence; emigrated to England at that monarch's death, and was patronized by James I. In addition to editions of Classics, he wrote on polemical subjects. His name is regarded as an authority in his own department of learning. He died in 1614, aged 55 years.

CASCA-DE, s. [Fr.] a fall of water from a higher to a lower place.

CASCARILLA, s. in Medicine, the bark of a plant of the species that yields the Croton oil, growing in the W. Indies, valuable for its tonic properties. It has also an agreeable odour when burnt.

CASE, s. [casse, Fr.] something made to cover or contain a thing; a covering, sheath, or box.

CASE, s. [casus, Lat.] the outward or external condition, circumstance, or state of a person; the state of a thing. In Physics, the state of the body; used with the particle in, and the word good, fat and plump; and with the word bad, lean or emaciated. In Law, the representation of any fact, question, or the whole arguments of counsel on a particular point or circumstance of a trial. In Grammar, the changes made in nouns, pronouns, participles, and adjectives, either by inflexion, or by the affixing of prepositions, to indicate the relation of the thoughts expressed by them to other thoughts in the same or another sentence. In case implies, if it should happen.

TO CASE, v. a. to put in a case or cover. Figuratively, to surround or enclose, like a case. In Building, to cover with materials different from those in the inside—n. to represent an affair in all the various lights it will bear; to put cases.

TO CASE-HARDEN, v. a. to prepare iron, so as to render its outward surface hard, and capable of resisting the file, or any edged tool, to turn the surface of the iron into steel.

CASEINE, s. in Chemistry, a modification of proteine found in milk, coagulable by acids only. Cheese is almost pure caseine. It is found in the seeds of leguminous plants, and in other vegetables.

CASEMATE, s. in Fortification, a certain retired platform in the flank of a bastion, for the defence of the moat or face of the opposite bastion; a kind of vault or arch of stone-work.

CASEMENT, s. [casamento, Ital.] a window opening upon hinges.

CASEOUS, a. [caseus, Lat.] resembling cheese; cheesy.

CASERN, s. [caserne, Fr.] a little room or lodgment erected between the rampart and the houses, in a fortified town, for the ease of the garrison.

CASH, s. [caisse, Fr.] in Commerce, the ready money a person is possessed of.

CASHIEL, Tipperary, in Munster, Ireland. This ancient city stands not far from the river Suir, and is not in a very flourishing condition. The most remarkable feature is a rock which stands in a singularly solitary position, all round being rather flat. On it are relics of ancient fortifications, the old cathedral, and other ecclesiastical buildings. The town has one good street, and is adorned with a fine new cathedral, and the episcopal palace. It was an archbishopric till 1839, and then was reduced to a bishopric, by the Church Temporalities Bill of 1833. It is 108 miles from Dublin. Pop. 7036.

CASHEW-NUT, s. the nut of the cashew tree, which grows in the West Indies. The nut is small, the kernel sweet and pleasant, but between the layers of the shell is a caustic inflammable oil, which will blister the lips and tongue the moment it touches them.

CASHIER, (cashier) s. a person who keeps the money at a banker's, or any public office.

TO CASHIER, (cashier) v. a. [casser, Fr.] to discard; to deprive a person of his place or post for some mal-practice.

CASHMERE, or CASHMIR, a district lying N. of the Panjab, in the kingdom of Runjeet Singh, the celebrated Sikh monarch. It is embosomed in the Himalayan range, and is watered by one of the large tributaries of the Indus, which receives the waters of countless mountain streams. It is more than 5000 feet above the level of the sea, but the height of the surrounding mountains is not known. It enjoys a temperate climate, and produces, under the cultivation it has from the natives, all kinds of grain, and the fruits, &c. of more northerly latitudes. For honey, and saffron, it is noted; and was so for silk. It feeds cattle and sheep in abundance. Its manufactures also are known through the world, though in good part superseded by the products of the power-looms in Europe and the United States. The people are a branch of the great Indian family. Their numbers are about three-quarters of a million. Siranagur is the principal place.

CASHMERE, s. in textile manufactures, the name of a particular kind of twined cloth, originally manufactured in Cashmere from a special kind of Thibetian wool, and used for shawls. It has been successfully imitated in Europe. Many common kinds of twined woollen cloth are called by this name.

CASK, s. [casque, Fr.] a round hollow cycloidal vessel, used for keeping liquors, provisions, or dried goods; a helmet, from cassis, Lat.

CASKET, s. a small box for jewels, or things of small dimensions, but great value. Figuratively, any thing which contains something of great value.

CASPIAN SEA, a great lake or sea of Asia, bounded by the country of the Calmuc Tatars on the N., by Bucharia and part of Persia on the E., by another part of Persia on the S., and by another part of Persia and Circassia on the W., being about 646 miles in length from N. to S., and 205 in breadth from E. to W. It receives the waters of the Volga, the Oural, the Kur, and of a multitude of small streams. It presents some very extraordinary peculiarities, most of which are traceable to the fact that its level is above 100 feet lower than that of the average sea level. The evaporation is so great as to keep it at an average level in spite of the enormous quantities of water continually poured into it. It has a decidedly salt flavour, and, indeed, abounds with marine animals and plants, identical with those found on the Mediterranean and Black Sea. From the strata found in its margin, it is believed to have been of much greater extent, till a late period. The Russians and Persians have vessels of small burthen on it. And there are fisheries which support many tribes and towns on its borders. It has several islands, which partake of the mineralogical character of its shores.

CASSANDER, one of the successors of Alexander the Great. He obtained Macedonia as his quarter of the empire. His reign was one of constant war and intrigue, and his maintenance of his throne to the last seems to have been due rather to the troubles of his opponents, than to his own success. He died in 296 B. C.

CASSATION, s. [causatio, Lat.] in Civil Law, the annulling or abrogating any proceeding.

CASSAVA, s. a S. American root, of which the natives make a kind of bread, said to be a wholesome and nourishing food: when raw it is a deadly poison.

CASSEL, capital of Hesse Cassel. It is divided into the Old and New Towns, the latter of which is well built and spacious; it has also extensive suburbs. The castle or palace commands a delightful prospect, and has fine gardens and a curious cabinet. It has some fine public buildings, and some very excellent literary, and philosophical, and charitable institutions. It is seated on the river Fulda, 40 miles S. of Paderborn. Pop. about 30,000. Lat. 51. 19. N. Long. 9. 44. E.

CASSIA, s. in Botany, a genus of plants belonging to the tropics and countries bordering on them, in the E. hemisphere, which yield the excellent and simple purgative commonly known by the name of senna. In the Bible, it is the translation of the name of a costly sweet-scented drug, apparently a kind of bark. The Cassia of Cookery is an E. Indian species of laurel.

CASSIMERE, s. See CASIMERE.

CASSINI, the name of a family of eminent astronomers, at Paris, four of whom, in succession, held the Observatory at Paris from 1671 to 1793. Giovanni Dominic Cassini, the first of this illustrious line, and the most famous, was of Italian origin, and was induced by the celebrated Colbert to settle in France. He was one of the greatest observers Europe has produced. He discovered the times of rotation of Jupiter, Venus, and Mars; the division of the ring of Saturn, and four of his moons; the peculiar form of Jupiter's disc. In addition to which, he observed and tabulated the fact of the revolutions and eclipses of Jupiter's satellites, and constructed more accurate tables of refraction;—he completed the theory of the moon's libration, and determined the value of the sun's parallax;—and lastly, was the first speculating observer of the zodiacal light. He died in 1712, aged 87 years; having always estimated his discoveries at a higher rate than even the scientific world did. Jacques Cassini, his son, Cassini de Thury, his grandson, and Count Cassini, his great-grandson, succeeded him. The last was in some respects superior to the other two; but a less distinguished post would have sufficed for all they have done, and a less extensive fame had been an ample reward. Count Cassini died in 1845, aged 96 years.

CASSIOPEA, in Astronomy, a constellation in the northern hemisphere.

CASSIUS, C. LONGINUS, one of the leaders of the conspiracy which overthrew Julius Caesar. He was a partisan of Pompey, and joined Caesar during the campaign in Spain, after the death of Pompey. He was defeated by Octavianus (afterwards Augustus Caesar) and Marcus Antonius, near Philippi, and destroyed himself, in 42 B. C.

CASSOCK, s. [casque, Fr.] a close, long garment, worn by clergymen, when in their robes, under their gown.

CASSONADE, s. in Commerce, cask sugar, or sugar put into casks or chests, after the first purification, but which has not been refined.

CASSOWARY, s. in Natural History, a very large bird, which much resembles the ostrich, and is a native of Africa.

CASSWEED, s. in Botany, a very common plant, the same with the shepherd's pouch.

To CAST, v. a. preter. and part. passive cast, [kaster, Dan.] to throw with the hand; to throw a net; to throw dice, or lots; to throw in wrestling; to let fall; to expose; to shed; to moult; to condemn in a trial or law-suit; to lay aside, as unfit for wear; to have an abortion, as a cow, when she slinks her calf; to compute, reckon, calculate; to contrive or plan out; to form or model a thing in a mould with melted metals. To cast aside, to lay by as useless. Used with down, to fling or throw from a high place. To cast an eye, to glance, or look at. To cast a light, to reflect, or impart. Joined with away, to wreck or shipwreck, applied to sea-affairs. To be cast down, to be disconsolate, low-spirited, or dejected on account of some misfortune. Used with out, to speak, give vent to, or utter with rashness and vehemence. Used with upon, to be driven by violence of the wind, or stress of weather. Used with off, to discard; to disburthen oneself off; to leave behind.—v. n. it implies, to contrive; to turn the thoughts; to admit of a form, by casting or melting; to warp.

CAST, s. the act of throwing a thing at a distance by the hands; a specimen, or stroke; a particular motion of the eye; a throw, or chance of a throw, at dice; a mould, a form; exterior appearance; manner; air; mien. In Painting, a shade or tendency to any colour.

CASTALIO, SEBASTIAN, one of the learned men of the time of the Reformation, who being unhappily in advance of his age in his opinions, was left to stave by it. He has left many works; one, a Latin translation of the whole Bible, respecting which he had a life-long controversy with the Genevese Reformers, who at first had been his warm friends. He died of want at Basle, in 1563, aged about 50 years.

CASTANET, s. [castaneta, Span.] a musical instrument, made of two little round pieces of wood or ivory, hollowed like a spoon, fastened to the thumb, and beat with the middle finger, serving to direct the time and measure of the dances.

CAST-AWAY, s. a person that is involved in a multiplicity of misfortunes, and seemingly abandoned by Providence.

CASTE, s. a class or order of society separated from other classes, by rank, privileges, occupation, &c., and with whom no intercourse is permitted. This social system is seen most injuriously carried out in Hindustan; but it prevails amongst other Asiatic nations; and existed in ancient Egypt. The state of society called feudalism in many respects resembled it; and many of our modern conventionalities partake of the same character.

CASTELLAIN, s. [castellano, Span.] the constable of a castle.

CASTELLANY, s. the manor or lordship belonging to a castle, or the territory of a city or town.

CASTELLATED, a. enclosed within a building or fortified place.

CASTER, s. one who flings or throws. In Arithmetic, one who calculates.

CASTIGATION, s. [castigatio, Lat.] punishment inflicted on a person in order to make him amend his faults; penance, or correction.

CASTIGATORY, a. punishing to make a person amend.

CASTILE, NEW, or TOLEDO, a province of Spain, 200 miles in length, and 184 in breadth; bounded on the W. by Estremadura and part of Leon; on the N. by Old Castile; on the E. and S. E. by Arragon, Valencia, and Murcia; and on the S. by Murcia and Andalusia. There are two ranges of mountains running through it; and it is watered by the Tagus, the Guadiana, and the Xucar. It produces in the N. fruits and wine, and in the S. good pastures and fine wool. It has mines of iron and quicksilver, and some of its manufactures, that at Toledo for sword cutlery, for instance, are celebrated. Its population is about 2,000,000. Madrid is the capital.

CASTILE, OLD, a province of Spain, about 250 miles in length, and 80 in average breadth; bounded on the W. by Leon; on the N. by Biscay, Asturia, and Navarre; on the E. by Navarre and Arragon; and on the S. by New Castile. It is separated from its neighbouring provinces, both N. and S., by mountains; and another range crosses it almost from N. to S. The Douro is its chief stream. It produces excellent wine; its plains are covered with herds of large and small cattle, particularly sheep, which yield the finest wool in Spain. It has also a few manufactures, and some foreign trade by means of St. Andrew, a seaport and district belonging to this province on the Bay of Biscay. The population is less than 2,000,000. Burgos is the capital.

CASTING, s. the running of metal, plaster, &c., into a mould prepared for that purpose.

CASTING-NET, s. a net which is spread by throwing it in the water, used in fishing.

CASTLE, s. [castellum, Lat.] a fortified building erected either as a strong-hold, or as a defence to a city. Castles in the air, imply some chimerical project.

CASTLEBAR, Mayo, in Connaught, Ireland. It stands on the Clydagh, over which are three bridges, and it is the assize town for the county. It has some small linen manufactures. It is 114 miles from Dublin. Pop. 5137.

CASTLE-CARY, Somersetshire. It is 117 miles from London. Market, Tuesday. Pop. 1942.

CASTLE-COMB, Wiltshire, so called from its old castle. It is 112 miles from London. Pop. 600.

CASTLE-RISING, Norfolk. The castle, whence it has its name, is still standing; and here is an alms-house for 24 poor widows. It is 103 miles from London. Pop. 358.

CASTLETOWN, or CASTLE-RUSHIN, the principal place of the Isle of Man, with a strong, beautiful castle, of free-stone, still entire. At the entrance is a great stone chair for the governor, and two smaller ones for the deemsters; and beyond this court is a room where the keys sit. On the other side are seen the governor's house, the chancery offices, and good barracks. It is situated on the S. E. point of the island, with a shallow, rocky harbour. Pop. 2283. Lat. 54. 2. N. Long. 4. 35. W.

CASTLE-SOAP, s. a corruption of Castle Soap.

CASTLING, s. the young of a brute animal, which is cast before its time.

CASTON, or CA'WSTON, Norfolk, a town seated on the Bure, over which it has a bridge. It is 120 miles from London. Market, Tuesday. Pop. 1130.

CASTOR, called by the Saxons Thuang Caston, i. e. Thong Castle, Lincolnshire, a town said to be built by Hengist, on a tract of ground which he encompassed with an ox's hide, cut into thongs, pursuant to a grant of Vortigern. It is 140 miles from London. Market, Monday. Pop. 1988.

CASTOR, s. in Natural History, the generic name of the beaver, an amphibious animal, the feet of which have five toes, and the hinder ones formed for swimming, with a black, flat, and oval tail.

CASTOR and POLLUX, s. in Meteorology, the name by which the balls of electric fire, which during a storm are often seen in S. latitudes on the masts and other prominences of ships, were known, when they were regarded as omens rather than as natural phenomena. In Astronomy, the two principal stars in the constellation of Gemini.

CASTORINE, s. in Chemistry, the essential oil of the substance called castor, or castoreum, found in glands near the anus of the beaver. It has a strong and peculiar scent, and was formerly more used in medicine than now.

CASTOR OIL, s. in Medicine, a pale, viscid oil, nearly tasteless and scentless when pure, extracted from the seeds of ricinus communis: in general use as a gentle purgative.

CASTRAMETATION, s. [castrametatio, Lat.] the art of encamping.

TO CASTRATE, v. a. [castro, Lat.] to geld. Figuratively, to cut sentences out of any book.

CASTRATION, s. the act of gelding.

CASTRES, a considerable town of the department of Tarn, France. It is seated on the river Agout, over which are two bridges. It has some good manufactures. It is 350 miles from Paris. Its population is about 13,000. Lat. 43. 30. N. Long. 2. 20. E.

CASUAL, (kásual) a. [casual, Fr.] accidental; arising from chance; done without design; happening contrary to the common laws of nature.

CASUALLY, (kázually) ad. in an accidental manner; without design; by chance.

CASUALTY, (kázualty) s. an event that is not foreseen or intended. Figuratively, any accident which puts an end to a person's life.

CASUIST, (kázuiist) s. [casuiste, Fr.] one who studies and resolves nice points in cases of conscience.

CASU/STICAL, (kázuiistical) a. belonging to cases of conscience, or practical parts of ethics.

CASUISTRY, (kázuistry) s. the pretended science of cases of conscience, or nice points in practical morality.

CAT, [chat, Fr.] in Natural History, the common domestic animal, whose appearance, &c. are too familiar to need description. It is of the same genus as the lion, the tiger, &c.

CATACHRESIS, (katakresis) s. [katachraomai, Gr.] in Rhetoric, is when a word whose natural meaning is good and innocent, is used abusively; as, you are a pretty fellow indeed, meaning, you are a sad wretch.

CATACHRE/STICAL, a. applied to language, improper; far-fetched; forced.

CATACOMBS, s. [kata and kumbos, Gr.] grottoes or subterraneous cavities for the burial of the dead.

CATACOSTICS, s. [kata and akouo, Gr.] the science of reflected sounds or echoes.

CATALE/PSIS, s. [katalambano, Gr.] a disease by which a person is rendered in an instant motionless and senseless, and continues in the same posture that he was in when the fit seized him, with his eyes open, but without sight or understanding. The effects of a certain kind of religious excitement, that used to be regarded as a peculiarly supernatural manifestation by the Revivalists of a century ago; and those of the modern Mesmerists may be classed under the general head of catalepsy.

CATALOGUE, (catálog) s. [katalogos, Gr.] a list or particular enumeration of things in some order, wherein they are mentioned in separate lines or articles.

CATALONIA, a province of Spain, bounded on the W. by Arragon and a part of Valencia; on the N. by the Pyrenees; and on the E. and S. by the Mediterranean and Valencia. Its greatest extent from E. to W. is 112 miles, and from N. to S. 148. It is watered by the Ebro, the Segra, and the Llobregat. Its mountains, which are numerous, and, in the instance of some of the Pyrenees, above 10,000 feet high, are covered with forest and fruit trees, and yield coal, marble, lead, &c. It abounds in wine, corn, and pulse. It exports timber, especially the cork tree. There are good manufactures in many of its towns. It has a population of about 2,000,000. Barcelona is the capital.

CATA/MARAN, a rude kind of raft used by the fishermen both on the coasts of Hindustan and in S. America.

CATANANIA, an ancient rich and celebrated city of Val di Noto, in Sicily. The city stands on the east coast, on a Gulf of the same name, near Mount Etna, and has often suffered by earthquakes and volcanic eruptions. It is a handsome and regularly built town, has several fine edifices, and is the seat of a university of some note. The land about it is fertile in corn, wine, fruits, &c., but the port is too small for much trade. It is 47 miles S. S. W. of Messina. Its population is about 50,000. Lat. 37. 30. N. Long. 15. 6. E.

CATAPLASM, s. [kataplasso, Gr.] a poultice, or plaster.

CATAPULT, s. [katapulta, Lat.] an ancient military engine, for throwing stones, and sometimes huge darts or javelins, of 10 or 12 feet in length. It consisted of two large timbers, like masts of ships, placed against each other, and bent by an engine for the purpose; these being suddenly unbent again by a stroke of a hammer, threw the javelins with incredible force. The invention of gunpowder made it useless.

CATARACT, s. [katarasso, Gr.] in Natural History and Cosmography, a precipice in the course of a river, over which the water falls with great violence and noise. In Surgery, a disease of the eye, in which by a peculiar affection of the crystalline humour, or the vesicle in which it lies, a greater or less obscuration of sight ensues. It is often completely cured by the operation called couching.

CATARRH, (kátarr) s. [katarreo, Gr.] in Medicine, an inflammation of the mucous membrane in the nostrils, which occasions the secretion of great quantities of fluid, partly of a very acid character, causing a great soreness to the mouth, throat, &c. Its common name is a cold; and it is commonly treated with too little care.

CATARRHAL, CATARRHOUS, a. proceeding from a catarrh.

CATASTROPHE, (kátastrofi) s. [katastrophi, Gr.] in Poetry, the change or revolution in the last act of a play, or the turn which unravels the intrigue, and concludes the piece. Figuratively, a dreadful event or accident, which terminates in a person's ruin, misery, or death.

CATCAL, (kátcaul) s. a shrill whistle, used by the gallery critics of the theatre, to show their dislike of a piece, or a performer. Any disturbance produced by such means.

TO CATCH, v. a. preter. I catched, or caught, I have catched, or have caught; [katsen, Belg.] to seize or lay hold on suddenly with the hand; to pursue or take any thing that is running from one; to receive any falling body, or prevent it from reaching the ground; to receive a disease by infection; to contract; to seize suddenly; to captivate, charm, or seize the affections, allying to their taking prey in toils. Figuratively, to apprehend the meaning of any word, &c., which was not seen at first.—v. n. to be infectious; to spread by contagion. Figuratively, to spread or increase from one to another, applied to bodies or things which lie near one another.

CATCH, s. the act of seizing any thing which flies or hides; the posture proper for seizing; an advantage taken; hold laid on the thing caught; profit; a short interval of action; a taint; any thing which fastens by a sudden spring, or entering into a loop or cavity. In Music, a short song, in which the singers all sing the same part, but begin at different intervals.

CATCHER, s. one who catches, or that in which any thing is caught.

CATCHFLY, s. in Botany, a common genus of plants, nearly allied to the campion.

CATCH-POLL, s. at present a word of reproach and contempt for a ballif and his followers; formerly used without reproach for a sergeant-at-mace, or any other, who used to arrest men upon any just cause.

CATECHETICAL, (katekhtikal) a. [katechizo, from katechoo, Gr.] consisting of questions and answers.

CATECHETICALLY, ad. by way of question and answer.

To CATECHISE, (kátékize) v. a. [Gr.] to ask a person questions in order to discover secrets; to examine, to interrogate.

CATECHISER, (kátékizer) s. one who teaches a person, or tries whether he can say his catechism; one who questions, examines, or endeavours to make discoveries by questions.

CATECHISM, (kátékizem) s. a system of instruction by question and answer. According to the liturgy of the Church of England, an institution to be learned by every person before he is brought to be confirmed by the bishop. There are many of these compositions that have gained great notoriety, but few greater than the Longer and Shorter Catechisms of the famed Assembly of Divines at Westminster, which the Scotch Kirk, and many bodies of English Dissenters, have adopted as their symbol or creed.

CATECHIST, (kátékist) s. one who teaches or instructs persons in the first principles by way of question and answer.

CATECHU, s. in Pharmacy, the extract of a species of acacia, growing in Hindustan, used as an astringent.

CATECHUMEN, (kátékímen) s. in the primitive church, a candidate for baptism; one engaged in the preliminary study, with a view to entering the church.

CATECHUMENICAL, (kátékímeníkal) a. belonging to a catechumen.

CATEGORICAL, a. positive; absolute; affirmative; adequate.

CATEGORICALLY, ad. in a positive, express, absolute manner.

CATEGORY, s. [kategoreo, Gr.] in Logic, the name given to those general classes, under one or more of which, what may be affirmed or denied of any subject may be arranged. The particular good to be derived from such arrangements has not been made clear to all minds; and almost all logicians are at odds respecting the number of them.

CATENARY, a. [catena, Lat.] relating to a chain; resembling a chain. In Mathematics, the catenary curve is formed by a rope or chain hanging freely between two points whereon its extremities are fastened.

CATENATION, s. the act of linking together, or connecting like a chain.

To CATER, v. a. to provide food; to buy in victuals.

CATERER, s. a man employed to provide and buy in victuals for a family.

CATERPILLAR, s. a woman who buys in provision for a family.

CATERPILLAR, s. in Natural History, the larva, or first stage in the development of insects of the Lepidopterous kind. They have long soft bodies, of various colours, and various coverings and forms; they walk by means of numerous feet ranged in pairs from the tail towards the head, and have also six legs, more like insects, which they do not much use, save for feeling, at the head; and when full-grown, they adopt various plans for securing their safety in the second or chrysalis state, some spinning a cocoon of silk, some rolling up leaves together round them, others tying themselves by a band, and others suspending themselves by one end beneath some shelter; and others, again, burying themselves in the earth. See CHRYALIS.

CATES, s. [katter, Belg.] nice and elegant food; cakes; or rich dishes.

CATFISH, s. in Natural History, the name of a sea-fish in the West Indies; so called from its round head and large glaring eyes, by which it is discovered in hollow rocks.

CATGUT, s. a kind of cord made from the intestines of sheep, used in the stringing of musical instruments, suspending of clock weights, manufacture of fishing-lines, &c. &c.

CAT-HARPINGS, s. small ropes in a ship, running on little blocks, from one side of the shrouds to the other, near the deck.

CATHARINE, the name of two empresses of Russia; the first being the wife and successor of Peter the Great; the second, the notorious woman, who with transcendent intellectual abilities united a heart that seemed utterly void of good. The great crime of her reign, and perpetrated chiefly through her influence, was the partition of Poland amongst the three neighbouring states, by which it was utterly destroyed as a kingdom. In the administration of her empire, and in the promotion of its solid advancement as an empire, she was unvaried. She died in 1796, aged 65 years.

CATHARINE DE MEDICI, the queen of Henry II. of France, who, during the reigns of her three sons who were the immediate successors of Henry II., had actually the sovereign power. She was involved in an unbroken course of intrigues for the gratification of her ambition. Her name is everlastingly condemned by the memory of the massacre of the Huguenots on St. Bartholomew's day in 1572. She died in 1589, aged 70 years.

CATHERINE HALL, a college of Cambridge, founded in the 15th century. It is neither a very rich foundation, nor a very imposing building; but it has produced some famous scholars and divines.

CATHARINE OF ARRAGON, and CATHARINE PARR, the first and last wives of Henry VIII. The first was divorced on the plea that she had been married to his brother; the latter survived him. See HENRY VIII.

CATHARTIC, CATHARTICAL, a. [kathario, Gr.] cleansing. Applied in Medicine to purgative medicines; and in a more extensive sense, to all kinds of medicine which cleanse the body.

CATHARTICALNESS, s. the quality of cleansing or purging.

CATHEAD, s. the vulgar name for the casts of separate chambers of a shell called Anemonites, which is known only in the fossil state, and greatly resembled the Nautilus. On board a ship, a piece of timber, with two shivers at one end, having a rope and block.

CATHE'DRAL, a. episcopal, or containing the see or seat of a bishop; belonging to a cathedral.

CATHE'DRAL, s. [kathedra, Gr.] the chief church of a diocese, where the bishop's chair is placed.

CATHETER, s. [katheti, Gr.] in Surgery, a hollow tube or instrument, usually of silver, and crooked, generally used to assist the discharge of urine, when the passage is stopped by any disorder.

CATHOLIC, a. [kata and olos, Gr.] universal. The Church Catholic, is by its users meant for theirs, or the true church, in opposition to heretical or schismatical churches, and is a title which the papists arrogate to themselves. Roman Catholic, and Anglo Catholic, are terms, not wholly correct, but sufficiently so to describe the two great branches of the self-named true church: which branches, however, most generally repudiate each other. Catholic King, or Majesty, is the title of the king of Spain.

CATHOLICISM, s. universality; something common to all of the same kind.

CATHOLICON, s. [katholikos, Gr.] in Medicine, a remedy which cures all disorders. Figuratively, that which is a universal preservative.

CATILINE, or CATILINA, L. SERGIUS, a Roman patrician who has obtained an infamous notoriety for his conspiracy against his country, in which he fell. That he was as bad as the young nobility of his time usually were as to his private character, is quite evident; whether his scheme, abating its failure and its appeal to arms, was wholly bad, may be questioned. He had been a partisan of Sylla, which would sufficiently account for some of his plans. He was foiled through the treason of one of his party, and the eloquence of Cicero; and he fell in a desperate engagement, by which the whole affair was defeated, in 63 b. c., aged about 45 years.

CATKINS, s. in Botany, the long branches of flowers of some trees, as the willow, hazel, pine, &c., which contain only the stamens.

CATLING, s. [kata leins, Teut.] in Surgery, a dismembering knife, used for cutting off any corrupted part of the body. In Botany, the down or moss growing about walnut trees, resembling the hair of a cat.

CATO, the surname of two celebrated Romans: the first, M. Porcius Cato, lived about two centuries b. c., and was distinguished for the stern simplicity of his principles and manners, for his oratory, for his military skill, and for his statesmanship. He fought in Spain and in Greece, and had a triumph for the victories gained in the former. He was an author, and a patron and encourager of poets and literature. The name by which he is commonly known—the Censor—is taken from the last public office he filled. He died in 149 b. c., aged about 80 years. M. Porcius Cato, his great-grandson, lived in more troubled times. His character resembled his great ancestor's, and he added all the gloomy grandeur which the Stoical philosophy threw round its earnest votaries. He opposed Catiline, and embarked on Pompey's side, in the struggle for the world. In the ruin of the cause he retired to Utica, and unconquerable, even in defeat, slew himself. This was in 47 b. c.

CATOPTRICAL, a. relating to catoptrics, or vision by reflection.

CATOPTRICS, s. (katoptron, Gr.) the doctrine of reflex vision, or that part of optics which treats of light reflected from polished surfaces.

CATS-EYE, s. among jewellers, a stone of the opal kind, but far inferior to it in beauty.

CATSLIVER, s. in Natural History, a fossil composed of plain, parallel, flexible, elastic plates, and of a yellow or golden, white, silvery, or black colour.

CATSKILL MOUNTAINS, a range of mountains in New York, United States, the principal branch of the Alleghany chain in that state. Round Top, the highest peak, is 3804 feet high. In them the bear, wolf, wild cat, and wild deer are still found.

CATSKILL, a town of New York, situated on the Catskill river, near its junction with the Hudson; the boundary of the land belonging to it extends on the W. to the mountains, and on the E. to the Hudson, over which is a ferry. Pine Orchard, a favourite summer resort, is situated here on the brow of the Catskill mountains, where is an hotel commanding a wide and most beautiful prospect; there are two fine waterfalls near it, and it stands 2212 feet above the Hudson. The town is 330 miles from Washington. Pop. 5330.

CATS-TAIL, s. in Botany, the name of a common kind of grass.

CATSUP, s. a kind of Indian pickle; the spiced juice of mushrooms.

CATTÉGAT, the strait lying between Denmark, Sweden, and Norway, by which the Baltic communicates with the Northern Ocean. It contains several islands.

CATTERICK, Yorkshire. It has a bridge over the river Swale, and a sort of cataract near it. It appears to have been a great city in the time of the Romans. It is 220 miles from London. Pop. 2965.

CATTLE, s. a collective name for such animals as are useful either for tilling the ground, or for food for mankind, as horses, oxen, sheep, goats, &c. They are distinguished into great cattle, comprehending horses and oxen, and small cattle, such as sheep and goats. Black, or neat cattle, are collective names for all animals of the ox kind. Figuratively, persons; a word of reproach and contempt, as it places the human species on a level with brutes.

CATULLUS, C. VALERIUS, a Roman poet who wrote immediately before the Christian æra. He was by improvidence and prodigality during the greater of his life sufficiently poor for a poet; but he enjoyed both the patronage and friendship of the great men of Rome. His poetry is graceful, harmonious, and at times lofty; but it is disfigured with obscenities. He died about 40 B. C., aged about 45 years.

CAVALCADE, s. [Fr.] a pompous procession on horseback, or in coaches.

CAVALIER, (cavalier) s. [Fr.] a knight, gentleman, or soldier, who rides on horseback; a horseman. Also, in the 17th century, the name assumed by the partisans of Charles I.

CAVALIER, a. gay, sprightly, warlike, brave, generous, polite. Sometimes in a quite contrary sense, i. e. proud, haughty, disdainful.

CAVALIERI, BUONAVENTURA, a learned Jesuit, the friend and disciple of Galileo, but much more profound in mathematics. He invented a method which he called that of Indivisible, which was in substance that of limits. He assumed every solid to be made up of an infinite number of planes; every surface, of an infinite number of lines; and every line, of points. He obtained some useful results, and paved the way for the discoveries of the greater mathematicians who followed. He died a professor in the Bolognian University, in 1647, aged 49 years.

CAVALIERLY, ad. in a brave or polite manner; also in a disdainful, haughty, and arrogant manner.

CAVALLO, TIBERIUS, an indefatigable experimenter in electricity during the latter part of the last century. The use of two pith balls on very slender silver wire for an electrometer, and the instrument which he called the multiplier, are his only original suggestions. He died in 1809, aged 60 years.

CAVALRY, s. [cavalerie, Fr.] soldiers who fight and march on horseback, divided into horse and dragoons. The horse never serve but on horseback, being named likewise troopers or heavy cavalry. The dragoons fight either on horseback or on foot, as occasion requires, and are named light-horse. When an army is drawn up in battle-array, the cavalry are posted in the wings; and bodies of cavalry ranged in order of battle are termed squadrons.

CAVAN, a county of Ulster, Ireland, bounded on the W. and S. W. by Leitrim and Longford; on the N. W. and N. by Fermanagh and Monaghan; on the N. E. by Monaghan; and on the E. and S. by E. and W. Meath. It is about 40 miles long and 28 broad, and contains 33 parishes. In many parts it is open, bleak, and dreary, but from Cavan to Lough Erne it is fertile, well wooded, and extremely picturesque. It is a hilly county, and in the N. W. part mountainous; and at the foot of the hills are many beautiful lakes, mostly small, but some of a larger size. In the hills are mines of several metals and coal, besides quarries of various kinds of stone and earth. The Erne is the chief river. The linen manufacture is carried on in it pretty extensively, but neither agriculture nor grazing are in a very flourishing state. Pop. 243,158. It returns two members to parliament. Cavan, its county town, is in the heart of the county, on a stream flowing into the Erne. It has the county courts, and a good barracks. It is 54 miles from Dublin. Pop. 3749.

To CAVATE, v. a. [caro, Lat.] to scoop, bore, or dig any solid matter into a hollow; to make hollow.

CAUCA'SIAN, the name by which that variety of the human race is known which exhibits the highest degree of intellectual development. It comprehends the nations extending in the E. hemisphere from Hindustan to the N. Atlantic; the Semitic tribes seem also to belong to it.

CAUCASUS, a chain of mountains in Asia, which extend from the Black to the Caspian Sea, in length about 700 miles, some of whose peaks rise 10,000 feet in height, and are perpetually covered with snow. There is iron in these mountains which has long been worked; gold and copper are found in the rivers which flow from them. The Kur, the Pamara, the Kuma, and the Kalum, have their origin in this range. The lower parts abound in honey, corn, wine, fruits, gom, a species of grain resembling millet, but cultivated like rice; hogs, and horned cattle. The vines hereabouts grow winding round the high trees. The northern parts are mostly subject to Russia, and the southern to Turkey. The inhabitants are amongst the most beautiful in the world. There are many different tribes of them, no fewer than seven distinct languages exist amongst them. Some of them are very warlike in their habits, and are with difficulty kept in subjection by the Russians.

CAUCUS, s. a refinement of spelling on Caulkers, from whose meetings at Boston, U. S., to concert plans for their protection, this party epithet, applied specially to political party meetings, was derived.

CAUDLE, s. [caudeau, Fr.] a liquor made with water, oatmeal, spices, and wine, used by women in their lying-in.

To CAUDLE, v. a. to make caudle; to mix as caudle.

CAVE, s. [caue, Fr.] a hollow place made in a rock or under ground, which runs in a horizontal direction. Figuratively, a hollow thing. SYNON. Cave is a habitation under ground, made either by art or nature. Cell is some little dwelling raised above the ground. We dig a cave; we build a cell.

To CAVE, v. n. to dwell in a cave, or subterraneous place.

CAVE, WILLIAM, author of Primitive Christianity, and other works of that kind, was an English clergyman in the latter part of the 17th century. He wrote his books, and enjoyed his preferments, and died in 1713, aged 76 years.

CAVE, EDWARD, the printer who patronized Dr. Johnson in his days of need, and sent forth the Gentleman's Magazine, as a monument for himself, from St. John's Gate, Clerkenwell. He died in 1754, aged 63 years.

CAVEAT, s. [Lat.] in Law, a kind of process in the spiritual court to stop the probate of a will, the granting letters of administration, or the institution of a clerk to a benefice, &c.

CAVENDISH, SIR THOMAS, a privateer or buccaner of the time of Elizabeth, who entered into that line as a profitable speculation, which it proved to him, and who circumnavigated the globe, adding not a little to the geographical knowledge of the times. He attempted another cruise, but failed, and died in 1593, aged about 30 years.

CAVENDISH, HENRY, a natural philosopher of the last century, belonging to a noble family, who is known as the first accurate experimental observer in chemistry, and the discoverer of many facts relating to gases. In electricity he was equally illustrious, introducing there the accurate quantitative observation which, as much as recent discoveries, has contributed to the advance of the science. He also invented a beautiful experiment for determining the density of the earth. He died in 1810, aged 79 years.

CAVERN, s. [caverna, Lat.] a hollow place under ground.
CAVERNED, a. full of caverns; hollow; undermined. Figuratively, dwelling in a cavern.

CAVERNOUS, a. full of caverns or hollow places under ground.

CAVETTO, s. [Ital.] a hollow member or round concave moulding, containing a quadrant or quarter of a circle.

CAVEZON, CAVESSON, s. [caisson, Fr.] a sort of nose-band of iron, leather, or wood, clapped on the nose of a horse to wring it, in order to supple and break him in.

CAUGHT, (kind) participle preter. of CATCH.

CAVIAR, s. [Ital.] the hard roes of a sturgeon salt, made into small cakes, and dried in the sun.

To CAVIL, v. a. [caviller, Fr.] to raise frivolous objections.—v. n. to receive or treat with objections.

CAVIL, s. a groundless or frivolous objection.

CAVILLATION, CAVILLING, s. a disposition, inclination, or quality of raising groundless objections, or finding fault with things without reason.

CAVILLER, s. [cavillator, Lat.] one who makes groundless, frivolous, or impertinent objections.

CAVILLINGLY, ad. objecting in a groundless or frivolous manner.

CAVILLOUS, a. fond of objecting, or making groundless objections.

CAVIN, s. [Fr.] a natural hollow, fit to cover a body of troops, and favour their approaches.

CAVITY, s. [cavitas, Lat.] hollowness; a hollow; a hollow place.

CAUK, s. in Natural History, a coarse talky spar.

CAUKY, a. resembling cauk; of the qualities of cauk.

CAUL, s. [Brit.] a kind of netting or hair cap, used by women to enclose their hair in; the hinder part of a woman's cap; the silk netting in the inside of a wig, on which the rows of curls are sewed. Figuratively, a kind of net. In Anatomy, the omentum, or reticulum, a membrane in the abdomen. Likewise a membrane found on the heads of some children at their birth.

CAULIFEROUS, a. [caulis and fero, Lat.] in Botany, applied to such plants as have a true stalk.

CAULIFLOWER, (generally pronounced cillyflower), s. [caulis, Lat.] in Botany, a species of cabbage, the peculiarity of which consists in its being principally a cluster of undeveloped flower-stems.

CAUSABLE, a. [causa, Lat.] that may be produced or effected.

CAUSAL, a. relating to causes.

CAUSATION, s. the action of a cause.

CAUSATIVE, a. that expresses a cause or reason.

CAUSATOR, s. a causer; an author.

CAUSE, (the s in this word and its derivatives is usually pronounced like z), s. [causa, Lat.] that which makes a thing begin to be; that which produces any thing. A first cause, is that which operates of itself, and from its own proper power or virtue. A secondary cause, is that which derives its power from some other. Final cause, in Natural Theology, is the purpose for which any thing in nature exists, or takes place. Figuratively, the reason or motive for any undertaking. In Law, the matter in dispute, or subject of a law-suit.

To CAUSE, v. a. to produce any effect; to effect.

CAUSELESS, a. derived from no cause; without just grounds, reasons, or motives.

CAUSELESSLY, ad. in a groundless manner; without foundation; without reason; unjustly.

CAUSER, s. he that produces, or the agent by which any thing is effected or produced.

CAUSEWAY, s. a solid raised path, beside a carriage-road, for foot passengers; or across a marsh, or place not adapted for pedestrians.

CAUSTIC, CAUSTICAL, a. [kaio, Gr.] in Medicine, that which consumes or destroys organic matter. Caustic curve, in Optics, the curve of brilliant illumination formed by rays reflected from the concave of a cylindrical mirror, on a surface at right angles with it.

CAUSTIC, LUNAR, s. in Medicine, a name by which the nitrate of oxide of silver is known; called so from its effects when applied to animal textures.

CAUSTICITY, s. the quality of burning.

CAUSTICULOUS, a. [cauteleux, Fr.] wary, cautious, circumspect. Sometimes used in a bad sense for wily, cunning, treacherous.

CAUTERIZATION, s. [cauteriser, Fr.] the act of consuming flesh by burning-hot irons or caustic medicines.

To CAUTERIZE, v. a. in Surgery, to eat or consume a part by the application of a cautery.

CAUTERY, s. See CAUSTIC.

CAUTION, (adushon) s. [cautio, Lat.] a prudent manner of acting; wariness; foresight; warning.

To CAUTION, v. a. to warn; to give notice of a danger.

CAUTIONARY, (adushonary) a. given as a pledge or security.

CAUTIOUS, (kashous) a. [cautus, Lat.] guarded against any suspected trick; wary; watchful.

CAUTIOUSLY, (kashously) ad. in a wary manner, opposed to rashness.

CAUTIOUSNESS, (kashousness) s. the quality of taking such measures as may prevent any misfortune; a prudent, wary conduct.

CAVY, s. in Natural History, a genus of small S. American animals, of which the best known is the restless cavy, or Guinea pig.

To CAW, v. n. [formed from the sound,] to make a noise like a crow, raven, or rook.

CAWNPOOR, a town and military station on the Ganges, in the province of Allahabad, and capital of a district of the same name. It is a well-built town, but subject to all the inconveniences of the climate, on account of its position. Lat. 26. 30. N. Long. 80. 13. E.

CAWOOD, Yorkshire. It is 186 miles from London. Market, Wednesday. Pop. 1108.

CAXTON, Cambridgeshire. It is but small, though a post-town, and a good thoroughfare. It is 49 miles from London. Market, Tuesday. Pop. 558.

CAXTON, WILLIAM, the first printer in England. He was a man of some learning, and not ill-to-do in the world, having travelled on the continent, and had dealings with governments respecting commercial treaties. He printed his first book in England between 1470 and 1480. He died in 1492, aged about 80 years.

CAYENNE, a town and island of Guiana, S. America, which see.

To CEASE, v. n. [cesso, Lat.] to forbear or discontinue an action or custom a person is engaged in. To rest, used with from,—v. a. to put a stop or end to. SYNON. We finish by putting the last hand to a work. We cease in quitting it entirely. We leave off in discontinuing.

CEASE, s. death or extinction, perhaps for decease.

CEASELESS, a. without stop, intermission, pause, respite, or discontinuation; without end.

CE/BES, a moralist of Thebes, who learnt of Socrates, and wrote an allegory called the Picture, which is often read in schools. He lived about 400 a. c.

CECIL, the name of two distinguished statesmen of the 16th century. The first, William, Lord Burleigh, was Elizabeth's prime minister, and had been in the service of Henry VIII. and Edward VI. He appears to have been a man of high principle and sound judgment, united with consummate skill in business; and to him is attributed most of the peculiar glory that distinguishes the reign of the hero-queen. He died in 1598, aged 77 years. The second, was his son, Robert, Earl of Salisbury, who was in the service of Elizabeth and James I., and with great ability resisted the fondness for arbitrary power displayed by the latter. Yet by all historians his conduct respecting Raleigh is allowed to have been fully treacherous. Nor was the part he took in respect of Essex's fall, and in having secret correspondence with James whilst ostensibly the servant of Elizabeth, much better. He died in 1612, aged about 60 years.

CECUTENCY, s. [cecus, Lat.] a tendency to blindness; a dimness of sight.

CEDAR, s. [cedrus, Lat.] in Botany, a species of pine, which grows to a very great size, and is exceedingly long-lived. The foliage of this tree is peculiarly arranged, being in thin flat masses, and the wood is very durable, and has an agreeable aromatic scent. Mount Lebanon, in Palestine, is famed for its cedars, many of which bear marks of great antiquity. In the Psalms and prophetic writings of the Old Testament, the cedars of Lebanon are often alluded to. As an ornamental tree it is much cultivated. The timber is used where lightness and freedom from destroying insects are desired. Some other and commoner species of pine are possessed of similar qualities, and are employed under its name.

CEDARN, CEDRINE, a. [cedrinus, Lat.] of or belonging to a cedar tree.

To CEIL, (seel) v. a. [celo, Lat.] to overlay or cover the inner roof of a building.

CEILING, (seeling) s. the upper part or roof of a room.

CELANDINE, s. [chelandinum, Lat.] in Botany, a genus of plants nearly allied to the poppy, differing therefrom in its seed-vessel being a pod. There are three British species.

CELEBES, an island of Asia, in the Indian Ocean, called also Macassar, S. of the Philippines, E. of Borneo, and W. of the Moluccas. It is divided into four long and narrow portions by the Bays of Serva, Tolo, and Tomiui. It has mountains and some large rivers. Mines of gold and other metals are known to exist; but are not much worked. Agriculture flourishes rather by the excellence of the soil, than by the skill and industry of the natives. Rice and some other grains, tobacco, and cotton are its chief products, and are not great. Wild animals of a dangerous kind, such as boars, elks, monkeys, and serpents, abound. The natives are allied to the Malays, and are divided into many small and independent tribes, who use different languages. Macassar is the largest place, and there the Dutch have a fort and establishment.

To CELEBRATE, v. a. [celebro, Lat.] to make honourable mention of; to make a thing famous. Figuratively, to praise or commend; to enumerate the blessings received from the Divine Being, with a heart full of gratitude; to perform the solemn rites appropriated to any particular day or festival. SYNON. Famous, celebrated, and renowned, are equally applied to persons or things; but illustrious to persons only, at least when we would be nice in our choice of words.

CELEBRATION, s. [celebratio, Lat.] the performance of any rite appropriated to some festival or solemnity. Figuratively, praise, fame, renown, memorial, or honourable mention.

CELEBRIOUS, a. [celeber, Lat.] famous; renowned.

CELEBRIOUSLY, ad. in a famous manner; in such a manner as to communicate fame.

CELEBRIOUSNESS, CELEBRITY, s. [celebritas, Lat.] renown, fame, or qualities which are the objects of esteem and approbation.

CELEBRITY, s. [celeritas, Lat.] swiftness of motion; velocity; rapidity.

CELERY, s. in Botany, a species of umbelliferous plant, a native of this country, but grown in gardens with great care, so as to lengthen and blanch the stem, and used uncoked as a vegetable, or to flavour soups.

CELESTIAL, a. [caelestis, Lat.] in the heavenly regions; belonging to heaven, or angelical. Used substantively for an inhabitant of heaven.

CELESTIALLY, ad. in a heavenly manner, opposed to earthly.

To CELESTIFY, v. a. [caelestio, Lat.] to communicate or endue with the properties of heaven.

CELESTINES, in Church History, a religious order of Christians, reformed from the Bernardines by Pope Celestine. Their rules are divided into three parts; the first, of the provincial chapters, and the elections of superiors; the second contains the regular observances; and the third, the visitation and correction of the monks. They rise two hours after midnight to say matins. They eat no flesh unless they are sick; they fast very rigorously.

CELVIAC, s. [cholicia, Gr.] relating to the lower belly. Celivac passion, is a sort of diarrhoea, in which the aliment is passed through the bowels before any of it has been assimilated.

CELIBACY, s. [celibis, Lat.] the unmarried or single state, opposed to marriage.

CELIBATE, s. [celibatus, Lat.] a single life; the same as Celibacy.

CELL, s. [cella, Lat.] a hollow place; a little house, apartment, or chamber, wherein the ancient monks used to dwell in their retirement; a small or close apartment in a prison; the innermost part of the ancient temples. In Anatomy, little bags, bladders, or cavities, wherein fluids or other humours are lodged. In Botany, a vacuity in a capsule for lodging the seed. It also signifies the vacuity in the anthers that contains the pollen. In Natural History, the little divisions of the combs of bees, in which the honey is stored.

CELLAR, s. [cella, Lat.] in Building, a place under ground for keeping stores, or the lowest room of a house.

CELLARAGE, s. the part of a building appropriated to cellars; cellar-room.

CELLARIST, s. [cellarius, Lat.] the butler of a monastery.

CELLARIUS, CHRISTOPHER, the writer on the geography of the ancients, who was, till lately, the standard authority on that subject. He held several professorships successively in different universities of Germany, and published various works on Antiquities and History; and died in 1707, aged 69 years.

CELLINI, BENVENUTO, the celebrated sculptor and decorator of goldsmiths' work, &c. He was engaged at various times as engraver to the mint at Rome and Florence, and was honourably entertained at the courts of most of the potentates of the Italian states, and of Francis I. of France. He had great taste and ability as an artist, great vanity and irascibility as a man. He led a life of continual troubles and wandering, from his practice of appealing to his fatal skill with the sword. His autobiography exhibits not only himself, with all his worth and all his folly, but his times also; and as they were the most memorable of all modern history, it is well worthy of study. He died in 1570, aged 70 years.

CELLULAR, a. [cellula, Lat.] consisting of, or abounding in, little cells or cities. Cellular tissue, one of the simplest and most general of the elementary substances, which enter into the structure of all organized matter. It is the basis of both vegetable and animal bodies.

CELSITUDE, s. [celoitudo, Lat.] height, tallness, stature. Also, a note of dignity, by which some persons in high offices are distinguished.

CELSUS, AURELIUS CORNELIUS, the well-known Latin writer on Medicine, whose work continues to be used in medical colleges to this day. He wrote also works on other practical sciences, which are unfortunately lost. He flourished at some time during the 1st century A. C.

CELSUS, an Epicurean philosopher, who flourished toward the close of the 2nd century, and wrote a work against Christianity, called the True Word, which is known only by the passages transcribed in the work of Origen in reply to it.

CELTS, or KELTS, the name of one of the great races that peopled W. Europe when it first appears in History. The various tribes of Gaul, and some of the tribes of Spain, formed one subdivision of this race, and the different British and Erse tribes another. Also, a name given to rude axe-heads of stone, and others more finished of bronze, found in various parts of Britain, and presumed to be of Celtic origin.

CEMENT, s. [cementum, Lat.] a glutinous substance, used to stick two bodies together. Figuratively, that which unites, or forms a union between things.

To CEMENT, v. a. to unite by some glutinous substance such as mortar, &c. Figuratively, to unite different people in the bonds of friendship, or by some common tie of interest, &c.

To CEMENT, v. n. to join together, so as not to be easily divided.

In Surgery, applied to the healing of broken bones.

CEMENTATION, s. the act of joining bodies together by cement.

CEMETERY, s. [koimao, Gr.] a place wherein the bodies of the dead are buried, a church-yard, or burying-ground.

CENATORY, a. [cena, Lat.] relating to supper.

CENOBIOTICAL, a. [koinos and bios, Gr.] living in community.

CENOTAPH, s. [kenos and taphos, Gr.] an honorary monument erected for a person whose remains are buried in another place; such as most of the monuments in Westminster Abbey.

To CENSE, v. a. [censeo, Fr.] to perfume with incense. Used only in poetry.

CENSER, s. [censensor, Fr.] the pan or vessel in which incense is burnt.

CENSOR, s. [Lat.] a Roman magistrate employed to survey and rate the people, and to inspect and correct their manners. Used by moderns to signify a person given to find fault with and censure the conduct, actions, or productions of others.

CENSORIAN, a. relating to a censor.

CENSORIOUS, a. morosely animadverting on the faults of others. Used with of or upon, before the object of censure.

CENSORIOUSLY, ad. in a severe manner; in such a manner as to condemn the foibles of others with the greatest rigour.

CENSORIOUSNESS, s. a disposition of finding fault with the actions of others.

CENSORSHIP, s. the office of a censor; or the time during which he continued in his office. Censorship of the press, the office exercised by persons appointed by government to inspect every printed work, and to prevent any that they please from being published. It was once exercised in England, and is still throughout Europe.

CENSURABLE, a. liable to be found fault with; worthy of censure; blamable.

CENSURABLENESS, s. the quality which makes a thing the object of blame or censure.

CENSURE, s. [censura, Lat.] the act of blaming, or noting the defects which make any thing blamable; a reproof or reprimand given by a person in authority. In Ecclesiastical discipline, a punishment inflicted on a person for any misdemeanor.

To CENSURE, v. a. [censuror, Fr.] to reprove a person publicly for some misdemeanor, applied to the reproofs of a superior; to reprimand, blame, or find fault with.

CENSURER, s. a person who is fond of taking notice of the faults of others; one who is addicted to reproving others for their defects.

CENSUS, s. [Lat.] an enumeration of the inhabitants of any country. In this country and the United States there is a census every ten years. The last in Great Britain was in 1841, and was made with great care, the ages, occupation, and county of birth, of each individual being ascertained. The last in the United States was in 1840. The population of the towns, &c. in these two countries are given in this work from these returns. A quinquennial census is taken in France, but the returns are not so specific nor so interesting as those published in this country.

CENT, s. [an abbreviation of centum, Lat.] in Commerce, used in stating the profit or loss arising from the sale of any commodity, the rate of commission, exchange, or the interest of money, &c., and signifies the proportion or sum gained, &c. in every 100; thus 10 per cent. gain implies that the seller has gained 10 pounds on every 100 pounds of the price for which he bought the commodity.

CENTAUR, s. [centaurus, Lat.] an imaginary being, represented by ancient poets as composed of the body and upper part of a man attached to the body and legs of a horse. In Astronomy, a constellation in the southern hemisphere, joined with the Wolf. The Centaurs were probably an ancient nation of Greeks, who early acquired the art of riding horses.

CENTAURY, s. in Botany, a plant, some species of which are wild in England, which was once esteemed for its supposed medical properties.

CENTENARY, s. [centenarius, Lat.] the number of a hundred.

CENTESIMAL, s. [centesimus, Lat.] hundredth.

CENTIFOLIUS, a. [centum and folium, Lat.] having a hundred leaves.

CENTIGRADE, a. [centum and gradus, Lat.] applied to the scale of a thermometer, divided into 100 degrees.

CENTPEDE, s. [centum and pes, Lat.] in Natural History, a poisonous insect in the West Indies, commonly called by the English forty-legs.

CENTO, s. [Lat.] in Poetry, a piece wholly composed of verses from other authors, wherein sometimes whole lines, and at others half-verses, are borrowed, but set down in a new order, and applied to a subject different from that in which they were originally introduced.

CENTRAL, a. relating to the centre, or placed in the centre. Central forces are those by which a body tends to, or removes from, the centre.

CENTRALLY, ad. entirely; perpendicularly; in a manner relating to the centre of gravity.

CENTRE, CENTER, s. [centrum, Lat.] in its primary sense, a point equally remote from either of the extremities of a line, figure, or body; of the point or middle of a line or plane, which divides it into two equal parts. The centre of a circle, is a point within it, from whence all lines drawn to the circumference are equal. Centre of gravity, is that point about which all the parts of a body, in any situation, balance each other. Centre of oscillation, is that point in which, if the whole gravity of the pendulum were collected, the time of its vibration would receive no alteration. Centre of percussion, is that point in which the force of a stroke is the greatest possible. Centre of pressure, is that point on which if the pressure exerted on the whole surface be collected, the result would be the same. Centre is used figuratively for the earth, in the Ptolemaic system placed in the centre.

To CENTRE, v. a. to fix on, or as a centre; to tend to, or be collected together, as in a centre.—v. n. to meet, like rays in a centre; to be placed in the centre of the mundane system.

CENTRIFUGAL, a. [centrum and fugio, Lat.] that endeavours to fly or recede from its centre or fixed place. Centrifugal force, is that force which impels a body moving in a curvilinear orbit, instead of continuing its orbit, to go on in the direction in which it may at any instant be moving, that is, in a tangent to the curve it was describing. A familiar example of this is the hurling of a stone from a sling.

CENTRIPETAL, a. [centrum and peto, Lat.] tending towards the centre. Centripetal force, is that by which a body tends, acts, or is impelled towards the centre.

CENTRY, s. See SENTRY, or SENTINEL.

CENTUPLE, a. [centuplex, Lat.] a hundred-fold.

To CENTURIATE, v. a. [centurio, Lat.] to divide into hundreds.

CENTURIATOR, s. an historian who divides time into centuries, or spaces consisting of a hundred years.

CENTURION, s. [centurio, Lat.] a military officer among the Romans who commanded a hundred men.

CENTURY, s. [centuria, Lat.] in Chronology, is a period of one hundred years. In Church History, the method of computing by centuries is generally observed, commencing from the time of our Saviour's incarnation; in which sense we say, the first, second, third century, &c.

CEPHALALGY, [cephalalgia] s. [kephale and algos, Gr.] the head-ache.

CEPHALIC, [cephalike] a. [kephale, Gr.] in Medicine, applied to remedies for disorders in the head.

CEPHALONIA, a large island to the W. of Greece, and one of the republic of the Ionian Islands. It is about 30 miles long, and has an average breadth of about 15 miles. A mountain ridge crosses it lengthwise, the highest point of which is about 4000 feet. It grows cotton, fruits, oil, and wine; grazes abundance of cattle; manufactures carpets and cotton goods; and has a good and spacious bay for the advantage of its trade. It has a population of about 60,000. Its capital is Argostoli, and it has also some other towns. Lat. 38. 22. N. Long. 20. 40. E.

CEPHEUS, in Astronomy, a constellation in the northern hemisphere.

CERAM, the largest island but one of the Moluccas, in the Sea of Banda, lying midway between New Guinea and Timor and Celebes. It has been little explored, the Dutch having been contented with seizing its vegetable riches, and vilifying the character of its barbarous inhabitants. At its E. extremity, and nearer to New Guinea, lie the Ceramlaut islands, which produce spices, and are claimed by the Dutch. But the people seem to be more advanced in civilization, through the influence of commerce.

CERASTES, s. [keras, Gr.] in Natural History, a venomous serpent having two protuberances resembling horns.

CERATE, s. [cera, Lat.] in Medicine, a kind of stiff ointment, made of oil, wax, and other ingredients.

CERATED, a. covered with wax or cerate.

CETBERUS, in Mythology, a name given to a dog with three heads, which was the fabled guardian of the passage to the shades below.

To CERE, v. a. [cera, Lat.] to rub upon or cover with wax.

CEREBEL, s. [cerebellum, Lat.] the hinder part of the brain.

CEREBRUM, s. [Lat., the brain properly so called. See BRAIN.

CERECLOTH, s. a cloth covered or spread with cerate or other ointment.

CEREMENTS, s. [cera, Lat.] cloths dipped in melted wax or gum, in which dead bodies were formerly wrapped when embalmed.

CEREMONIAL, a. that relates to a ceremony or external rite. Figuratively, consisting in mere external show, formal. Substantively, an external rite, or book containing the ceremonies to be observed in religious worship.

CEREMONIALNESS, s. the quality of abounding in external rites and modes of worship; the mere external show of devotion, piety, or virtue.

CEREMONIOUS, a. consisting in external or outward rites; superstitious, or fond of ceremonies; formal; too much given to the practice of external acts of civility and polite address. Figuratively, awful.

CEREMONIOUSLY, ad. in a polite and civil manner.

CEREMONY, s. an outward rite, and external form in religion; polite address. Master of the ceremonies, is an officer, instituted by King James I., for the more honourable reception of ambassadors and strangers of quality. He wears about his neck a chain of gold, with a medal under the crown of Great Britain, having on one side an emblem of peace, with this motto, beati pacifici, (blessed are the peacemakers,) and on the other, an emblem of war, with Dieu et mon droit (God and my right).

CERES, in the Heathen Mythology, the goddess who taught mankind the use of corn, and presided over harvests. See ELEUSINIAN MYSTERIES. In Astronomy, one of the five small planets between Mars and Jupiter, called asteroids.

CERIGO, an island off the E. of the two promontories on the S. of the Morea, in Greece; one of the republic of the Ionian Islands. It is about 20 miles long, by 12 broad. Although on the whole mountainous, there is good soil in many parts, which yields fruits, wine, grain, and cotton, and furnishes, moreover, excellent pastures. Its population is about 1000. Its capital is Capsali.

CERINTHIANS, in Church History, the followers of Cerinthus.

CERINTHUS, one of the earliest speculators about Christianity who have received from ecclesiastical historians the general title of Heretics. It is about him that the worse than apocryphal story is related of John the evangelist leaving the bath. The only opinions that are authentically ascribed to him, are manifestly attempts to elucidate the facts of Christianity by the help of the philosophy of Alexandria; and, as this was little better than a dream of fancy, it made the facts of the Gospel no better. It is possible that John's Gospel was written on occasion of the spread of this scheme, though it seems more probably intended to give the higher aspect of the character of our Lord, which in the simpler narrations of the other evangelists is not so clear.

CERIUM, s. in Chemistry, a metal discovered in two rare minerals, cerite and allanite. But as it has been confounded with another metal, now termed lantanum, but little is positively known respecting it.

CERNE ABBAS, Dorsetshire, stands on the river Cerne, in a pleasant vale, surrounded with steep hills, on one of which, Tremble Hill, a little to the N. is a gigantic figure, cut in the chalk, which covers nearly an acre. It is 130 miles from London. Market, Wednesday. Pop. 1342.

CERTAIN, a. certus, [Lat.] that cannot be denied without obstinacy; resolved or determined; sure, so as to admit of no doubt.

CERTAINLY, ad. without doubt, question, scruple, or fail.

CERTAINTY, s. the state of a person's mind which has full and complete conviction respecting any thing, generally implying the existence of sufficient ground for this conviction. Thence transferred to truths or events respecting which this conviction is rationally entertained. A physical certainty, is that which depends on the evidence of the senses. A mathematical certainty, is that which depends on necessary principles, and can in no wise be doubted. A moral certainty, is that which depends on a due connexion of circumstances, and clearness of testimony. Figuratively, an event which must necessarily and unavoidably happen.

CERTIFICATE, s. [certifico, law Lat.] a testimony given in writing, to certify or make known any truth. Figuratively, any testimony.

To CERTIFY, v. a. [certifier, Fr.] to give certain notice of a thing.

CERTIORARI, s. [Lat.] a writ issued out of the Chancery, or court of King's Bench, directed to an inferior court, to call up the records of a cause there depending.

CERTITUDE, s. [certitudo, Lat.] an act of the judgment, importing the adhesion of the mind to the proposition it affirms, or the strength of evidence which occasions that adhesion; free from doubt. See CERTAINTY.

CERVANTES, MIGUEL DE, (SAAVEDRA,) the renowned author of Don Quixote. He was born of nobly connected parents, in Castile, Spain. He was a scholar and a soldier, and fought under Don John of Austria, at Lepanto, where he lost an arm. Afterwards, as he was proceeding to the Netherlands, with a regiment he had, he was captured by an Algerine pirate, and endured slavery not only with fortitude but with mirth, so as to have overmastered his owner by it. Ransomed at last, he returned to his military career, and finally to the humiliating career of literature. He was imprisoned once, and was always poor. But his works have achieved a fame for him that is their richest reward. Don Quixote is his greatest production, but his others, which are numerous, are stamped with the same genius. He died in 1616, aged 69 years.

CERVICAL, a. [cervix, Lat.] belonging to or situated in the neck. The cervical nerves and vessels in Anatomy, are so called from their being situated in the neck.

CERVIX, s. [Lat.] in Anatomy, the hind part of the neck, opposed to the jugulum, throat, or fore part.

CERULEAN, CERULEOUS, a. [ceruleus, Lat.] blue, or sky-blue.

CERUMEN, s. [Lat.] ear-wax.

CERUSE, s. [cerussa, Lat.] white lead reduced to a powder, diluted with water on porphyry, and formed into a paste.

CESAREAN, a. [from Cesar,] in Anatomy, is the cutting of a child from its mother's womb, either dead or alive, when it cannot be otherwise extracted; which circumstance, it is said, first gave the name of Cesar to the Roman family so called.

CESS, s. a tax; the act of levying rates, or taxing.

CESSTATION, s. [cessatio, Lat.] a pause, rest, stop, or vacation, including the idea of a change from a state of activity or motion to its contrary, that of rest. Figuratively, a truce, or forbearance of hostile acts between two armies, without a peace.

CESSAVIT, s. [Lat.] in Law, a writ, which lies against a person who has not paid his rent or performed his due service for the space of two years, and has not sufficient goods and chattels to make an equivalent distress.

CESSEBILITY, s. [cessum, Lat.] the quality of ceasing or giving way.

CESSEBILITY, a. [cessum, Lat.] easy to give way.

CESSIO BONORUM, in the Bankrupt laws of Scotland, is the giving up of the property of a person to his creditors, and operates much in the same way as the Insolvent laws of England do, in releasing a debtor from liability to be imprisoned.

CESSTION, (césson), a. [cession, Fr.] the act of yielding or giving way to a stroke or force without resistance. In Common Law, an act whereby a person transfers his right to another.

CESSTIONARY, (cessionary), a. implying a resignation.

CESSEOR, s. [cesso, Lat.] in Law, a person who ceaseth or neglecteth to pay rent, or perform duty, so long, that a writ of cessu may be taken out against him.

CESSTUS, s. [Lat.] a girdle which the poets ascribe to Venus, and pretend that it adorns the person who wears it with irresistible charms.

CETACEOUS, a. [cete, Lat.] resembling a whale; of the whale kind.

CETTE, a town in the department of Hérault, France. It stands on the entrance of the canal of Languedoc into the Mediterranean, partly on a strip of land running between a sheet of water communicating with the sea, and the sea. It has a good bridge, and is a very pretty place. It has a superior trade, from its commanding situation; and good fisheries. It has also some sugar manufactories, &c. It is above 400 miles from Paris. The population is about 11,000. Lat. 43. 25. N. Long. 3. 42. E.

CETUS, in Astronomy, the Whale, a constellation in the southern hemisphere.

CEVENNES, a mountain chain belonging to the great Alpine system, running through the S. part of France, formerly the province of Languedoc. It is about 300 miles long. Its E. declivity is more sudden than the W. From its N. and W. sides, the Loire, the Allier, the Cher, the Indre, the Creuse, &c. run into the Atlantic; and from its E. and S. part, the Ardèche, the Gard, the Hérault, &c. into the Mediterranean. The loftiest points are the Puy de Cadacogne, which is 5929 feet high, and the Puy de Gros, which is 5925 feet high: there are several others above 5000 feet in elevation. Slate and granite abound, and in the streams is found gold dust.

CEUTA, a town of Africa, in the territory of Fez, opposite to Gibraltar, strongly fortified by land and by sea. It has a harbour, but of no value. Its population is about 11,000.

CEYLON, or, in Arabic, SERENDIB, a large and mountainous island of Asia, in the Indian Ocean, S. E. of Cape Comorin, on the coast of Coromandel, about 300 miles in length, and 140 in breadth. Many of its heights exceed 7000 feet. Its rivers are numerous. In some places there are mines, whence are got rubies, sapphires, topazes, and other stones of less value. It abounds in elephants, buffaloes, goats, hogs, deer, hares, dogs, jackals, monkeys, tigers, and bears. It produces corn, rice, indigo, cinnamon, and pepper, various kinds of palm, and a great variety of wood; the most remarkable tree in the island is the talipot. The natives on the north belong to the Tamulian race; and on the south to the Cinghalese, who are divided into several tribes, some of which live almost in a savage state. The religion is for the most part Buddhism, but Hinduism also prevails. The institution of caste was found here, as amongst other nations of these races. Other races, and religions, and customs have been introduced by immigration. It belongs to the English, and has a considerable trade. The population is about 2,000,000.

CHABLIS, a kind of wine, grown at a place of the same name, in the department of Yonne, France.

CHACE, s. See CHASE.

CHAD, (shad) s. in Natural History, a round kind of fish.

CHAETODON, s. in Natural History, a genus of fishes with teeth divided into fine thin filaments resembling bristles. One species is remarkable for its method of procuring fish, on which it feeds, shooting them with a drop of water propelled through its singularly formed snout.

TO CHAFE, v. a. [schaff, Fr.] to warm by rubbing. Figuratively, to make sore by friction and heat; to make a person grow warm with anger.—v. n. to grow angry, or fret at any opposition or disappointment; beautifully applied to inanimate things.

CHAFE, s. anger, or peevish warmth; owing to opposition, slight, contempt, or disappointment.

CHAFER, s. in Natural History, a kind of beetle, with comb-like antennae, appearing generally in the month of May, whence they are called May-bugs.

CHAFERY, s. in the iron works, the name of one of the two principal forges. The other is called the finery. When the iron has been wrought at the finery into what is called an ancony or square mass hammered into a bar in its middle, but with its ends rough, the business to be done at the chafery is the reducing the whole to the same shape by hammering down these rough ends to the shape of the middle part.

CHAFREWAX, s. an officer belonging to the lord chancellor, who fits the wax for the sealing of writs.

CHAFF, s. [ceaf, Sax.] the husks or outward skins of corn, which are separated from the flour by thrashing and winnowing. Figuratively, any thing of small value; any thing worthless.

TO CHAFFER, v. n. [kauffen, Teut.] to treat about or make a bargain; to haggle, to beat down a person in his demands or price.—v. a. to buy; to truck or exchange one commodity for another.

CHAFFERER, s. one who buys bargains, or endeavours to purchase a thing at less than the market-price; a haggler.

CHAFFERY, s. the art of buying or selling; traffic.

CHAFFINCH, s. in Natural History, a common English bird, whose short and peculiar song is greatly admired by some bird-fanciers. It is one of our prettiest birds, and builds an exquisitely neat nest.

CHAFFWEESE, s. without defect or levy.

CHAFFWEED, s. in Botany, a plant with small white blossoms at the base of the leaves; found in moist sandy ground, and flowering in June. It is also called bastard pimpernel.

CHAFFY, a. full of chaff; like chaff. Figuratively, light.

CHAFFING-DISH, s. an utensil made use of to contain coals for keeping any thing warm, or warming it when cold.

CHAGRIN, (shagreen) s. [Fr.] unevenness of temper; ill humour, displeasure, or peevishness, arising from any thing done to vex, or in opposition to a person's inclinations.

TO CHAGRIN, (shagreen) v. a. to tease; to make uneasy.

CHAIN, s. [chaîne, Fr.] a collection of rings, or pieces of metal linked to each other, of divers lengths and thickness; an ornament used by several magistrates, and borrowed from the Goths. In Surveying, a series of iron links, distinguished into 100 equal parts, used for measuring land. Figuratively, a state of slavery or confinement; a series of things linked to and dependent on one another.

TO CHAIN, v. a. to fasten, secure, or confine with a chain. Figuratively, to enslave, or bring into a state of slavery; to be defended by a chain; to unite in firm and indissoluble friendship.

CHAIN-CABLE, s. cables for ships made of chain, which are now used for all large vessels, and frequently for those of less tonnage, from their superior strength, in proportion to their bulk, &c.

CHAINPUMP, s. a double pump used in large ships.

CHAINSHOT, s. two balls fastened together by a chain, used in an engagement at sea.

CHAINWORK, s. work with open spaces, or interstices, representing the links of a chain.

CHAIR, s. [chair, Fr.] a movable seat for a single person, with a back to it. Figuratively, the place or post of a great officer. Above the chair, in London, is applied to those aldermen who have borne the office of lord mayor; below the chair, to those that have not yet enjoyed that dignity. The seat of justice or authority; a covered carriage in which persons are conveyed from one place to another, borne by two men; a sedan. To take the chair, or be in the chair, implies that a person is president, and presides at an assembly.

CHAIRMAN, s. one who sits in a higher chair than the rest of the members, and presides at an assembly or club; one who carries a chair or sedan.

CHAISE, (chaise) s. [Fr.] a high open carriage, running on two or more wheels, and drawn by one, two, or more horses.

CHALCEDONY, s. a kind of agate, of various colours, &c. In some places, fossil oyster shells are found converted into chalcedony.

CHALCITIS, (chalcitis) s. a caustic vitriolic mineral, imported from Germany, which is used in the composition of Venice treacle.

CHALCOGRAPHY, (chalcography) s. [chalkos and grapho, Gr.] the art of engraving upon copper.

CHALDEA, the name that strictly appertained to a portion of the Babylonian empire, but is generally applied to the whole. The province called by this name lay between the Euphrates and Arabia. The people gave their name not only to the whole country, but to the language and to the inhabitants of the empire. They were famed as the first astronomical observers. Various strange sciences and arts were reputed to be their invention and study. They often appear in the Scripture history, as opposing and invading the land of Israel, and at last as carrying away part of the nation into captivity.

CHALDAIC LANGUAGE, a branch of the Semitic family of languages, spoken throughout Chaldaea. Some parts of Scripture, in the books of Ezra and Daniel, are written in this tongue.

CHALDRON, s. a measure formerly used for coals, containing 12 sacks, or 36 bushels heaped measure.

CHALICE, (calice, Sax.) formerly used for a cup or drinking vessel, with a foot to it. At present appropriated to the vases or vessels used at the celebration of the eucharist, or Lord's supper.

CHALK, (chalk) s. [cale, Sax.] an exceedingly well-known, soft, white earth, used extensively as a manure. In Geology, it is the name given to the highest formation of the series of rocks commonly called secondary. It immediately underlies the beds of sand, gravel, and clay, which are found universally in the W. of Europe. The character of this formation varies very greatly; in the highest beds it is almost pure carbonate of lime, and is a soft, friable stratum, having strata of flint running through its mass, at regular intervals, abounding in fossils; in the lower beds, flint nodules are occasionally met with, but the mass is of a very close texture, and may be used even for building purposes and statuary; fossils are not so abundant. It varies in its characters in different countries, but can always be identified by its position, general structure, and fossils. It is every where burnt for lime. In England it forms the range of low, round-browed hills running S. from Flamborough Head, and those running from Cambridgeshire diagonally across England to Wiltshire, and thence in a double range across Surrey and Kent to the N. Foreland, and across Sussex to Brighton; all of which afford excellent sheep walks. In Drawing, it signifies that material prepared usually in white, red, or black colours, for drawing on roughish paper in a bold, effective style. See CRAYON.

To CHALK, (chalk) v. a. to rub with chalk; to manure with chalk; used with to, to mark or describe with chalk. Figuratively, to direct, point out, or discover.

CHALKY, (chalky) a. consisting of chalk; white with chalk. Applied to fluids, such as have chalk steeped in them, and are impregnated with it.

To CHALLENGE, v. a. [challenger, Fr.] to call, dare, or provoke a person to fight, either by speaking or writing. Figuratively, to dare or defy a person to enter into a literary contest on any subject; to lay claim to as a right.

CHALLENGE, s. provocation or summons to engage in a duel or combat, either uttered or written; a claim of a thing as a due or right, used with of. In Law, an exception against either persons or things.

CHALLENGER, s. one who defies, provokes, or summons another to fight him; one who claims a superiority; one who claims a thing as his due; claimant.

CHALMERS, ALEXANDER, part-author and editor of the well-known Biographical Dictionary, was an indefatigable litterateur of the beginning of this century. His Shakspeare, and British Poets and Essayists, are also widely known. He died in 1834, aged 75 years.

CHALONS-SUR-MARNE, the capital of the department Marne, France, standing on the river whence it is named. It is a good-looking town, with some handsome public buildings. It is a bishop's see, and has a considerable trade, being well situated for that purpose, but little manufacturing importance. Here also is an excellent library, and a good government commercial school. It is 100 miles from Paris, and has a population of about 15,000. Lat. 49. 0. N. Long. 4. 25. E.

CHALONS-SAÛNE, in the department Saône et Loire, France, stands on the former river, whence the department is named, and has a stone bridge over it. It has a good trade, and some good manufactures. It is 200 miles from Paris. Its population is about 15,000. Lat. 47. 0. N. Long. 5. 0. E.

CHALYBEATE, (chalybeate) a. [chalybs, Lat.] partaking of the qualities, or impregnated with steel.

CHAM, (kam) s. the title given to the sovereign princes in Tartary.

CHAMADE, (shamde) s. [Fr.] a certain beat of a drum or sound of a trumpet, whereby notice is given to the enemy of some propositions to be made to them, to surrender, have leave to bury the dead, make a truce, &c.

CHAMBER, s. [chambre, Fr.] in Building, any room situated between the ground floor and the garrets of a house. Figuratively, a retired room in a house; an apartment occupied as a public office, or court of justice; also the members of such office or court; any cavity or hollow; that part of a gun or mortar, wherein the charge is lodged.

CHAMBER OF DÉPUTÉS, the name of the assembly of the representatives of the Commons of France.

CHAMBERLAIN, s. an officer who has the care of a chamber. The lord great chamberlain is the sixth great officer of the crown. Lord chamberlain of the household has the oversight of all the officers belonging to the king's chambers, except the precinct of the bed-chamber. In great towns, a receiver of their rents and revenues; and in London, the chamberlain has likewise the cognizance of all disputes between masters and apprentices, the power of imprisoning the latter for misdemeanors, and makes freemen, &c.

CHAMBERLAINSHIP, s. the office of a chamberlain.

CHAMBERMAID, s. a maid-servant who takes care of the chambers, the lady's dressing-room, and assists the lady's woman in dressing her.

CHAMBERRI, the capital of Savoy. It is well built, and watered by many streams, which run through several of the streets; there are piazzas under most of the houses. It has large and handsome suburbs, and is situated on an eminence, surrounded by mountains. It is 85 miles from Turin. Population, about 12,000. Lat. 45. 35. N. Long. 6. 4. E.

To CHAMBLET, v. n. to be variegated; to appear like cloth or silk watered by the calenderer.

CHAMBEREL, s. in Farriery, the joint or bending of the upper part of the hinder leg of a horse.

CHAMELEON, (kamdeon) s. [Gr.] See CAMELEON. This is the proper spelling.

To CHAMFER, v. a. [chamfrer, Fr.] to furrow; to make channels or hollow places in a column.

CHAMFLET, s. See CAMELOT.

CHAMOIS, s. [chamois, Fr.] in Natural History, an animal of the goat kind, inhabiting the Alps, whose skin is made into soft leather, called among us shammy. The hunting of this animal furnishes subsistence to most of the mountaineers.

CHAMOMILE, CA'MOMILE, (kamomile) s. [chamai and melon, Gr.] in Botany, a plant so called from its trailing along the ground. It has an aromatic smell, especially when bruised, and is much used in medicine.

CHAMOUNI, the name of a beautiful valley on the N. side of Mont Blanc, in the Alps, through which the Arve runs. It has several villages in it, the chief of which is Le Prieuré. Its inhabitants, about 3000 in number, graze a good many cattle, and cultivate a little grain, but are chiefly supported now by the visitors to the Alps, who purchase herbals, minerals, &c. &c., which they collect in the mountains, and who employ them as guides. The valley is about 3000 feet above the sea-level. It is about 35 miles from Geneva.

To CHAMP, v. a. [champayer, Fr.] to bite with a frequent and forcible action of the teeth; to grind any hard and solid body with the teeth, so as to render it fit to swallow. Used with up, v. n. to close and open the jaws together, or perform the action of biting off.

CHAMPAGNE, a ci-devant province in the N. E. of France; bounded by the Netherlands, Picardie, Isle of France, Orléanais, Burgundy, Franche Comté, and Lorraine. It is a level country, watered by the Seine and its tributaries, and is fertile in grain, pasturage, &c., and produces the celebrated wine called after its name. Troyes was the capital. It now forms the departments of Ardennes, Aube, Marne, Haute Marne, Aisne, and Yonne.

CHAMPAIGN, (shámpain) s. [champagne, Fr.] a flat, open, or level country.

CHAMPERTORS, s. in Law, such as move suits, or cause them to be moved, either by their own or others' procurement, and pursue, at their proper costs, to have part of the gains.

CHAMPIGNON, (shámpinon) s. [Fr.] in Botany, a plant of the mushroom kind.

CHAMPION, s. [Fr.] one who undertakes a combat in behalf of another. The royal champion was an officer, who, while the sovereign was at dinner on his coronation-day, challenged any to contest the king's right with him in combat; after which the king drank to him, and sent him a gilt cup and cover full of wine, which he kept as a fee. Figuratively, any one who undertakes the defence of any sentiment or topic in literature and religion.

CHAMPLAIN, a lake on the frontiers of the United States and Canada, lying between New York and Vermont, in length about 120 miles, and varying in width from half a mile to 10 miles. The scenery along its shores is highly picturesque, lofty mountains being but a little way from both shores. It has a great many islands, and receives the waters of many rivers, and communicates with the St. Lawrence by the Richelieu river. It is navigable by vessels of about 100 tons burthen. It abounds in fresh-water fish, and in the winter is frozen over.

CHAMPOLLION, JEAN FRANCOIS, (the younger,) a distinguished student of Egyptian antiquities of this century. He began his career at Grenoble, where he held an historical professorship; and early directed his attention to the hieroglyphics of Egypt. He adopted and improved on the discovery of Dr. Young respecting them, and applied it with considerable success; but estimated his own scheme in a higher degree than other scholars have. He was engaged with Rosellini in the exploring expedition to Egypt which was sent out by the French and Tuscan governments in 1828. He died in 1832, aged 42 years. His works on this subject in his last years are highly valuable.

CHANCE, s. [Fr.] a term we apply to events, to denote that they happen without any ascertained cause. It is also used to denote the bare possibility of an event when nothing is known either to produce or hinder it. SYNON. Chance forms neither order nor design; we neither attribute to it knowledge nor will, and its events are always very uncertain. Fortune lays plans and designs, but without choice; we attribute to it a will without discernment, and say that it acts blindly.

To CHANCE, v. n. to fall out unexpectedly, or contrary to the necessary laws of motion or nature; to proceed from some unknown cause, or without any design of the agent.

CHANCE-ME'DLEY, s. the killing of a person without design, but not without some fault; as when a person, in lopping a tree, should kill a passenger by means of a bough he flings down; for though it may happen without design, yet, as he ought to have given notice, it is not without fault.

CHANCELLOR, s. [cancelli, Lat.] the eastern part of a church.

CHANCELLOR, s. [cancellarius, Lat.] a very ancient and honorable officer, who was formerly the king's or emperor's notary or scribe, and presided over the secretaries, for the writing of treaties and other public business, and, afterwards, over the court of equity. At first the chancellor, as a judge, heard and determined petitions to the king, which were preferred to him; and in the end, as business increased, the people addressed their suit to the chancellor, and not to the king; and thus the chancellor's equitable power commenced. The lord high chancellor, is the chief administrator of justice next the king, and occupies the highest station in the department of law in the kingdom; enters into his office by taking an oath, and having the great seal committed to him by the king; has the disposition of all ecclesiastical benefices in the gift of the crown under 20*l.* per annum; summons parliaments; appoints magistrates; peruses all patents before they are signed; and takes place of all the nobility, excepting those of the royal family, and the archbishop of Canterbury. He is the guardian of all infants, idiots, and lunatics, and superintendent of all charitable institutions. He has twelve assistants, called Masters in Chancery, the first of whom is the master of the rolls. Chancellor in an ecclesiastical court, is a doctor of civil law, appointed by a bishop to direct them in their legal business, and hold their legal courts. Chancellor of the Exchequer, is an officer who used to preside in that court, and take care of the interest of the crown. He now has the entire control and management of all matters relating to the receipt and expenditure of public money, arising from all sources; conducts the financial business of the government; and decides all questions arising between the sovereign and the subject, respecting these matters. Chancellor of an University, is the chief magistrate, who seals diplomas, letters of degrees, and defends the rights and privileges of the place; in Oxford this place is enjoyed for life; but at Cambridge only for the space of three years. Chancellor of the order of the Garter, is the person who seals the commissions and mandates of the chapter; keeps the register, and delivers transcripts of it under the seal of their order. Chancellor of the duchy of Lancaster, is an officer appointed to determine controversies between the king and his tenants of land belonging to the duchy, being assisted in difficult points by two judges of the common law.

CHANCELLORSHIP, s. the office of a chancellor.

CHANCERY, s. the court of the lord high chancellor, and is the grand court of equity in the country. All the business of the chancellorship is transacted here. Beside which, all frauds and deceits, for which there is no redress at common law; all breaches of trust, confidences, and accidents, as to relieve obligers, mortgagers, &c., against penalties and forfeitures, where the intention was honest, are here relieved; but in no case where the plaintiff can have his remedy at common law. Here all patents, most sorts of commissions, deeds between parties touching lands and estates, treaties of foreign princes, &c., are sealed and enrolled. It also serves as a court of appeal to moderate the rigour of other courts, which are obliged to act according to strict legal maxims, and may therefore decide wrongly. The appeal from the Chancery court is to the House of Lords. From hence are issued writs to convene the parliament and convocation, proclamations, charters, &c.

CHANDELIER, (chandeler) s. [Fr.] a branch for holding candles. In Fortification, a wooden frame on which fascines or faggots are laid for covering the workmen, instead of a parapet. CHANDLER, s. [chandelier, Fr.] a seller of divers sorts of wares.

To CHANGE, v. a. [changer, Fr.] to give or take one thing for another. To resign or quit one thing for the sake of another, used with for. "Cannot change that for another," South. To give a person the value of money in coin of a different metal; to alter.—v. n. to undergo change, to suffer alteration; to change, as the moon; to begin a new monthly revolution. SYNON. We vary in our sentiments, when we give them up, and embrace them again. We change our opinions, when we reject one in order to embrace another. He who has no certain principles is liable to vary. He who is more attached to fortune than truth, will find no difficulty in changing his doctrine.

CHANGE, s. the alteration of a person's circumstances; the act of taking or giving any thing for another; a succession of things in the place of one another. In Astronomy, the time in which the moon begins a new revolution. Figuratively, novelty. In Fencing, the alteration of the order in which any set of bells are rung. Money of a different metal, in trading transactions.

CHANGEABLE, a. that may be altered; that does not always remain in the same situation or circumstances; inconstant; fickle.

CHANGEABLENESS, s. applied to the mind, want of constancy; fickleness. Applied to laws or qualities, liable to alteration.

CHANGEABLY, ad. in a manner subject to alteration; inconstantly.

CHANGEFUL, a. altering very often, and upon slight grounds; fickle, inconstant; full of change: used as a word of reproach.

CHANGELING, s. a child left or taken in room of another; a person who does not enjoy a proper use of his understanding; a fool, natural, or idiot; one apt to alter his sentiments often; a fickle person.

CHANGER, s. one that is employed in changing or discounting money; money-changer.

CHANNEl, s. [canal, Fr.] in Cosmography, the hollow or cavity in which running waters flow; the arm of a sea or a narrow river, between two adjacent islands or continents. Generally, any narrow passage for running water.

To CHANNEl, v. a. to cut any thing in narrow cavities, for containing water, or for the sake of ornament; applied to buildings.

CHANNING, DR. WILLIAM ELLERY, an eminent divine of the Unitarian communion at Boston, United States. His works, which consist almost wholly of Sermons, Lectures, and Essays, are characterized by clear thought, high principle, and lucid expression. His reputation as an orator depended chiefly on his mode of delivery. His zeal in the cause of slavery abolition will ever be his noblest characteristic. He died in 1842, aged 62 years.

To CHANT, v. a. [chanter, Fr.] to sing; to celebrate in songs; to perform divine service by singing, as in cathedrals.—v. n. to harmonize and sound a chord with the voice to any musical instrument, used with the participle to.

CHANT, s. a song; a particular tune; the particular tune used in a cathedral.

CHANTER, CHANTOR, s. one who sings in a cathedral; a singer; a songster.

CHANTICLEER, s. the cock, so called from his clear, shrill voice.

CHANTRY, s. a female who sings.

CHANTRY, SIR FRANCIS, an eminent sculptor of busts, &c., was a farmer's son by birth, and being brought under the notice of Nollekens by one of his first attempts at this style of portraiture, was helped by him, so that he rapidly rose to the very summit of his reputation. Portraits were his forte; no one has ever admired him as a genuine artist, for he was notoriously deficient in the power of idealizing his subject. Few parts of this kingdom are without some specimens of his skill. He died in 1841, aged 59 years.

CHANTRY, s. a church or chapel endowed for one or more priests to say mass daily.

CHAOS, (chaos) s. [Gr.] the original confused mass of matter out of which it was believed all visible things were made. Figuratively, any confused, irregular mixture; any thing whose parts are not easily distinguished.

CHAOTIC, (chaotic) a. resembling or like a chaos.

To CHAP, v. a. [keppen, Belg.] to break into chips by excessive heat; applied to the effects of cold on the hands.

CHAP, s. an opening, cleft, or chink in the ground, owing to excessive drought or heat.

CHAP, s. the upper or under part of a beast's mouth.

CHAPE, s. [chappe, Fr.] the catch of any thing by which it is held in its place; the hook by which a sword is fastened in its scabbard; the steel ring with two points by which a buckle is held to the back strap; a piece of brass or silver which covers the end of the scabbard of a sword.

CHAPEL, s. [capella, Lat.] a building which is sometimes part of a church or adjoining to it; or separate, and called a chapel of ease, where a parish is large, as a relief to the distant parishioners. There are also free chapels, endowed with revenues for maintaining a curate without any expense to the rector or inhabitants.

CHAPEL-EN-LE-FRITH, Derbyshire. It is seated on the utmost confines of the Peak, near Cheshire, and has some small manufactures. It is 165 miles from London. Market, Thursday. Pop. 3199.

CHAPEL-HILL, a town of N. Carolina, United States. Its situation is elevated and healthy, and it is surrounded by a very fertile country. It derives its importance from its being the seat of the university of the State; which is a respectable institution, with a fine library. It is 286 miles from Washington. Pop. about 400. There is another Chapel-Hill, in Tennessee.

CHAPELRY, s. the jurisdiction or bounds of a chapel.

CHAPERON, (chaperon) s. [Fr.] a kind of hood or cap worn by knights of the Garter when dressed in their robes.

CHAPELAIN, (châpelaîn) a. having the mouth shrunk, or the projecting part fallen down, applied to a helmet.

CHAPEITE, s. [chapiteau, Fr.] in Architecture, the upper part or capital of a pillar.

CHAPLAIN, s. [capellanus, Lat.] a person who performs divine service in a chapel; or is retained in the service of some family to perform divine service.

CHAPLAINSHIP, s. the office, possession, or revenue of a chaplain.

CHAPLET, s. [chaplet, Fr.] a garland or wreath of flowers to be worn round the head. In the Romish Church, a string of beads. In Architecture, a little moulding carved into round beads, pearls, or olives. In Farriery, a couple of stirrup-leathers, mounted each of them with a stirrup, and joining at top in a sort of leather buckle, which is called the head of the chaplet, by which they are fastened to the pommel of a saddle, after they have been fastened to the length and bearing of the rider.

CHAPMAN, s. [ceapman, Sax.] one that cheapens or buys goods; a buyer and seller.

CHAPMAN, GEORGE, a dramatic writer and translator of the beginning of the 17th century, whose translation of Homer is the best known of his works, and most commonly associated with his name. He died in 1634, aged 77 years.

CHAPPE, CLAUDE, the inventor of the telegraph, or semaphore, first used by the French during the first Revolutionary war. He died in 1805, aged 42 years.

CHAPTAL, JEAN ANTOINE, an eminent chemist of France, who first came into notice during the unparalleled activity of Paris in the first Revolutionary war. He afterwards held several offices of the state under Napoleon, and exerted himself indefatigably in behalf of the manufactures of France. He was the author of many works on Practical Chemistry, &c., and died in 1832, aged 75 years.

CHAPTER, s. [chapitre, Fr.] the division of a book. In Canon Law, a congregation of clergymen under the dean, in a cathedral church; an assembly held both by religious and military orders for deliberating their affairs, and regulating their discipline; the places in which assemblies of the clergy are held.

CHAR, s. in Natural History, a fish; a kind of golden alpine trout.

To CHAR, v. a. to burn wood to a black cinder.

CHAR, s. work done by the day by a woman; a single job or task.

To CHAR, (chair) v. n. to do the house-work of a family occasionally, opposed to regular service.

CHARACTER, (karakter) s. [Gr.] a figure or mark drawn upon paper, or other substance, to convey some idea to the mind; a letter of the alphabet; an assemblage of virtues or vices, whereby one person is distinguished from another; or that which a person has peculiar in his manners, which makes him differ from others; office, dignity, or authority.

To CHARACTER, (karakter) v. a. used with in or upon, to engrave.

To CHARACTERIZE, (karakterise) v. a. to describe a person or thing by the properties which distinguish it from others; to impress a thing in lasting characters on the mind; to mark with a peculiar stamp or form.

CHARACTERISTIC, CHARACTERISTICAL, (karakteristisk) a. that distinguishes a person or thing from others of the same species.

CHARACTERISTIC, (karakteristisk) s. a peculiar mark, or assemblage of qualities, which distinguish a person or thing from others of the same kind. Characteristic of a Logarithm, is the same with the index or exponent.

CHARACTERLESS, (karakterless) a. without any mark to distinguish a thing.

CHARACTERY, (kaktery) s. a mark which distinguishes a thing from others of the same kind.

CHARADE, s. the name of a sort of riddle, in which the syllables of a word, and the whole word, are concealed in enigmatical descriptions, which should have some association with each other.

CHARCOAL, (charköl) s. the cinder that remains when wood or any vegetable substance is burnt without free access of air. It is almost entirely carbon, and is used as a fuel, but needs great care, since by burning it in confined rooms death has often been occasioned by the carbonic acid gas evolved.

CHARD, Somersetshire. It consists chiefly of four streets, which terminate near the market. It has several streams running through it. Here is a small woollen manufacture. It is 141 miles from London. Market, Monday. Pop. 5788.

CHARDIN, SIR JOHN, a distinguished French traveller, of the 17th century. He spent very much of his time in Persia, and his observations made during his journeys in that country have been employed in illustration of the manners and customs described or alluded to in the Scriptures. He resided latterly in England, where he died in 1713, aged 70 years.

CHARENTE, the name of two departments of France, named from a river, which rises in the hills dividing the W. part of the basins of the Loire and the Garonne, and after a circuitous course of nearly 200 miles, enters the Bay of Biscay, opposite the Isle of Oleron, some few miles north of the mouth of the Garonne. Charente is bounded by Deux Sevres, Vienne and Haute Vienne, Dordogne, and Charente Inferieure. It is about 70 miles in length, and 50 in breadth. The hills from which the Charente rises run through it, and it is watered by that river and by the Vienne, which flows into the Loire. The soil is good, and amongst its productions brandy ranks first in quality and importance; Cognac, the name given commonly to the superior kinds, being here. It has some manufactures, those of linen being the first in importance. Its population is about 400,000. Its capital is Angoulême. Charente Inferieure lies on the Bay of Biscay, and is bounded by Vendee, Deux Sevres, Charente, and Gironde. It is 100 miles in length, and its breadth is 50 miles: the islands of Oleron and Rhe are included in it. It is low and marshy, and the Charente, and several other small streams, some running into it, and others directly into the sea, water it. Brandy and salt are its principal products; some corn is grown; it has good fisheries; and manufactures of earthenware, &c. Its population is about 500,000. Its capital is Rochelle.

To CHARGE, v. a. [charger, Fr.] to intrust, or commit to a person's care; to make a person debtor; to adjure, or to command. Figuratively, to impute or ascribe; to impose as a task; to accuse, applied to crimes, sometimes having the particle with. To attack, applied to a battle. To load a person, applied to burdens. Applied to fire-arms, to load with powder and shot.—v. n. to make an onset.

CHARGE, s. in Gunnery, is the quantity of powder and shot with which a gun is loaded for execution. In Electricity, the accumulation of electric fluid on one surface of an electric, as a pane of glass, Leyden phial, &c., whilst an equal quantity passes off from the opposite surface; the equilibrium is restored by a communication by means of conducting substances between the two opposite surfaces. Generally, care, trust, custody, precept, mandate, commission, accusation, imputation; the thing intrusted; expense; attack; the signal for battle. In Heraldry, it is applied to the figures represented on the escutcheon, by which the bearers are distinguished from one another; and it is to be observed, that many charges are not so honourable as fewer.

Charles I. taken prisoner to Carabrook Castle.

Charles I

CHARGEABLE, a. expensive; costly; liable to be blamed or accused.

CHARGEABLENESS, s. expensiveness; costliness.

CHARGEABLY, ad. in a costly, expensive manner; at a great expense.

CHARGÉ D'AFFAIRES, s. [Fr.] a subordinate kind of ambassador, sent to states of inferior importance, or left in charge of the business of the embassy during the absence of the higher officer. Such ambassadors are sent now to the new republics of America, and to the Hanse towns of Germany. And from the same states the chief ambassador to this country bears the same title, whilst in one or two other cases a Chargé d'Affaires is on the staff of the envoy extraordinary.

CHARGER, s. a very large dish.

CHARIER, ad. in a deliberate, circumspect, cautious manner.

CHARINESS, s. a nicety, or delicacy, whereby a person is offended at any thing which is inconsistent with the highest degree or idea of justice; scrupulousness.

CHARIOT, s. [charrette, Fr.] a covered four-wheeled carriage, suspended on leather or springs, drawn by two or more horses, and having only back seats. War chariots, used by our ancestors, were open vehicles drawn by two or more horses, with scythes at the wheels, and spears at the pole. Chariot race, a public game among the Romans, &c., wherein chariots were driven for a prize.

TO CHARIOT, v. a. figuratively, to convey as in a chariot.

CHARIOTEER, s. one who drives a chariot.

CHARITABLE, a. [Fr.] having a benevolent and humane disposition, inclining a person to assist the afflicted.

CHARITABLY, ad. in a kind, benevolent, tender, affectionate manner.

CHARITY, s. [charitas, Lat.] a benevolent principle, exerting itself in acts of kindness and affection to all persons, without respect to party or nation; aims given to the poor; used for the widest exercise of love, in the sacred Scriptures.

TO CHARL, v. a. to burn to a black cinder, as wood is burnt to make charcoal.

CHARLATAN, s. [Fr.] a person who pretends to a knowledge of physic; a quack; a mountebank.

CHARLATANICAL, a. vainly pretending to a knowledge of physic; quackish.

CHARLATANRY, s. the practice of a quack.

CHARLEBURY, Oxfordshire. Distant from London 68 miles. Market, Friday. Pop. 2982.

CHARLES I., king of England from March 27, 1625, to Jan. 30, 1649. He was badly taught in the duties of his station, by his father, James I., with his boasted kingcraft, and by the Duke of Buckingham, who was his leader and companion. This man retained his influence over Charles when he ascended the throne, and with him his fatal mistakes began. His marriage with the Princess Henrietta Maria of France, a zealous Romanist, owing to the feeling of the times, produced by the late escape of the nation from the Romanism of Philip II. of Spain, and the prevalence of doctrines and practices amongst the English clergy which differed from Romanism in name only, would alone have been enough to inflame against him the passions of a class of men, who, by acquaintance with the realities and glories of gospel truth, had come to the knowledge of their prerogatives as citizens and men. During the first four years of his reign, he summoned three parliaments, and with each he found the same difficulties, but increasing in their measure, and the spirit displayed respecting them. He could not obtain supplies for his injudicious schemes, without declarations of rights and impeachments of his favourite and minister. These last were silenced by the assassination of Buckingham, on the ground of some private enmity. The former, Charles attempted to silence by collecting monies by virtue of his royal edict. Buckingham's place was filled by one who had been a leader against Charles, Wentworth, Earl of Strafford, aided by Laud, who had risen to the highest dignity of the church, and held and acted on the highest church doctrines, and the queen, who was fast gaining that ascendancy over her husband which she used so cruelly for her own purposes and his ruin. One man resisted the royal edict of taxation, John Hampden, and contested it in law courts, and was of course cast in his suit. But the nation learned why the king of England should dare to exercise arbitrary power. At this same time Charles took another step in his infuriated course. He determined on carrying out one of his father's darling schemes, the converting of the Scotch Kirk to Episcopacy. A woman, here, led the opposition. Old Jenny Geddes, who sat under the pulpit on the stool she had brought with her, flung it at the head of the innovator; and Scotland not only could not be converted, but was roused to rebellion by the attempt. Another parliament was called, but it was just as the others had been, and was hurried out of existence as they had been. And now the struggle began in earnest. An army of Scots marched into England that same year, 1640, as resolutely bent on converting England to Presbyterianism, as Charles had been on forcing Prelacy on them. Another parliament was summoned, Charles's last, the famed Long Parliament. The steps they took were of the most determined kind. They set themselves to work on purifying the state of traitors and the church of hypocrites; and with a high hand procured the committal of both Strafford and Laud to the Tower. Strafford's execution soon followed; and then came Charles's visit to Scotland with all its plots, and the Irish massacre. Some of the king's movements alarmed the leaders of the parliament, and the Remonstrance, and the king's futile attempt on the five members, was the result. Next came the king's refusal to suffer the power of summoning the Militia to go out of his hands, and then the war. The parliament seized Hull, and the schemes of the king and his party were frustrated at all points. Most of the Lords were with the Commons in the struggle, and the Earl of Essex was appointed general for the parliament. At Edgehill the parliament gained their first victory, on October 23, 1643. Attempts at a treaty ensued, which failed; and then again, war. The king now gained some advantages, and the parliament lost some of its leaders; he called his Oxford anti-parliament, therefore, which answered no purpose, for the Scots had joined the parliament, and the Solemn League and Covenant was adopted, and on July 2, 1643, Charles suffered a most disastrous defeat at Marston Moor. A few successes followed, but these were useless. Laud was now executed, and the Assembly of Divines held, at which appeared a new phase of this nation's controversy. A party, small in number, but strong in their position and character, amongst them Oliver Cromwell, maintained religious liberty, and opposed Romanism only because it owned a foreign lord paramount. This party, under this man, now came rapidly to the foremost place. The self-denying ordinance cashiered the nobles; Cromwell's regiments of religious men, from the middle class, gave a new tone to the army; and on the 14th of June, 1645, at the battle of Naseby, Charles lost all, and fled. After a year spent in fruitless intrigues, he surrendered himself to the Scottish army; who, in the beginning of 1647, made him over to the parliamentary army. Charles was now the centre of endless plots and intrigues, and, unwarned by all that had happened, his natural love for that plan of action induced him to the madness of attempting to play off the two parties of the parliament against each other, till he could get his own again. But both parties discovered him; the strongest party proved to be the Independents, with whom monarchy itself was growing into disrepute; his attempts to escape only hastened the end; and on Jan. 30, 1649, aged 49 years, after having been tried by a high court of justice specially appointed by the parliament, he was beheaded in front of Whitehall. His character has never yet had justice done to it, because the church and state doctrines, which brought him to the scaffold, are not yet extinct; and because the pity naturally excited by his misfortunes and death, the attribution to him of an exalted strain of piety, and the maligning of the characters of his opponents by the court wits and historians of the next generation, have called the attention of men away from the facts of his career. He had most of the private virtues, was kind-hearted and compassionate, and his domestic character was unsullied. He had every vice that can make a monarch, whether in prosperity or adversity, suspected, hated, scorned. His own personal power was his idol, and no hypocrisy nor falsehood was too mean or too wicked to be adopted in the attempt to secure it in its place. Yet after all he fell a victim rather to the fouler duplicity and treason of his queen, to whom he deferred with most mad fondness, than to the power or malice of his enemies.

CHARLES II., king of England, according to legal fiction, from the 30th of January, 1649, but in fact, from the 29th of May, 1660, to the 6th of February, 1685. He took part in the war, and shared in the overthrow of Naseby. At Paris, the Hague, and Jersey, he spent his time, till, on the beheading of his father, the Scotch made overtures to him, conditioned only by the adoption of the Solemn League and Covenant. This, which his father had refused, and so was sold by the Scots, he took, and was crowned at Scone, on the first day of 1651. He at once invaded England, and on the 3rd of September was utterly unkinged and routed by Cromwell, at Worcester. After wanderings romantic enough in themselves, and made miracles of by the royalists of the day, he escaped to France, and being joined by all who were attached to himself or his station, or who hoped to gain any thing by plots against the peace of England, he passed his time in France first, and afterwards in the Netherlands, having the shadow of royal state and attendance, but destitute of any thing like royalty, save the profligacy, which to him was all its value. On Cromwell's death, there was no one with sufficient power to carry on his rule, nor any with enough vigilance to detect plots. Charles began to entertain hopes of regaining England. On the abdication of Richard Cromwell, he prepared for his return. An agent fitted to his hand was found in General Monk, and on May 29, 1660, Charles entered London. The nation was beside itself with joy, save the men who had been the pillars on which Cromwell's rule was built. At one step every thing that had been purchased at so fearful a cost was renounced, and the gibbeted remains of the chief regicides gave fitting augury of the coming age. Episcopacy was set up in Scotland, and the Covenant was publicly burnt. The Test Act and Act of Uniformity redeemed Charles's engagements when in exile; and 2000 of the best ministers in England were ejected on the 24th of Aug., 1662, to be hunted by act after act, from hiding-place to hiding-place, till they rested from their labours, through starvation in dungeons, or met the harder doom of the rack and the scaffold. Scotland fared worse. The numbers who perished in Great Britain, solely for their religious opinions, exceeded belief; whilst a greater number by far suffered by fines and punishments short of death. The court was a scene of unblushing crime. The king's mistresses were its most conspicuous ornaments, and the queen, whom Charles espoused from Portugal, was compelled to admit them to all the honours of her court. The money needful for all this extravagance was gathered together from all and any quarters; the sale of Dunkirk was the first public infamy of the kind. A disgraceful war with France and Holland was followed by a more disgraceful peace; and the English court became the hiring of the king of France. Clarendon had till now been the king's adviser; he was now dismissed and banished, and the famous Cabal ministry followed. The great plague, and the fire of London; a war with Holland; political intrigues; new acts against Nonconformity, in which Shaftesbury played a most prominent part, in endeavouring to set aside the Duke of York from his heirship to the crown, and afterwards in leading the opposition against Lord Danby his successor, fill up the interval to the famous Popish Plot. This wretched affair assumed an importance it would never else have gained, from the murder of Sir Edmundsbury Godfrey. It brought some of the most wretched villains into the pages of history, branded with the rankest perjuries that ever swore away human lives; and answered no assignable end, unless it prepared men's minds for the change of governors, which not many years after took place. Episcopacy was not, after all, suited for Scotland, and the assassination of an archbishop, and the general rising of the Covenanters, to be defeated at Bothwell-brig, and persecuted by novelties of horrible cruelty, showed it. New plots were now hatched by every one that had an itching for notoriety, and some were formed by men who groaned for their nation's freedom: there was a Meal-tub plot; Fitzharris's plot, the Rye-house plot, the Assassination plot; and Lords Stafford and Russell, and Algernon Sidney, died on the scaffold; whilst one of the most savage desperadoes was advanced to honour as Lord Chief Justice Jeffreys. The remainder of Charles's reign was characterized by the same determined absolutism on his part, conjoined with the most dependence on secret money from France; by the same ceaseless intrigues in his court; and by like restlessness amongst the people. This had, when and monarch died on the 6th of February, 1685, aged 55 years, avowed himself a Romanist. It were idle to linger over such a reign. The abolition of military tenures, and the Habeas Corpus Act, were almost the only benefits which parliaments were able to confer on the nation throughout it.

CHARLES I. of France and Germany, commonly called CHARLEMAGNE, was joint successor with his brother Carloman, to Pepin, and by his death was sole king of the Franks. All the early part of his reign was taken up in war. He first subdued the Aquitaniens, who, in his own kingdom, had rebelled. Next he turned his arms against the Saxons, and from them was called into Italy against the Longobards, and where his conquests were productive of more important events than in any other part, as he assumed the crown of Lombardy, and established the right of controlling the election of the popes. After some years spent thus, he entered Spain, and drove back the Moors beyond the Ebro; and returning, lost his rearguard, with some of his bravest captains, at Roncesvaux. He then completed the subjugation of the Saxons, which was testified by their submission to baptism and the form of Christianity; he also overran Bavaria. After this, he restored Pope Leo III. to his throne, from which he had been driven by a formidable conspiracy, and received from his hands the crown of the Western empire. The protection of the N. coasts of his wide dominions from the incursions of the Danes, or Northmen, as they were called, was all the military service he afterwards knew. Charlemagne was a man of extraordinary mind and powers. As a general and conqueror he was then unequalled, and also as a legislator and statesman. He was a diligent student, and a patron of letters. Offa of Mercia, and Egbert of Wessex, two Saxon Bretwaldas, or chief kings of Saxon Britain, and the famous Caliph Haroun Alraschid, were his friends and allies. Of his own personal character it can only be said, that he stood many ages in advance of his own day, although not free from stain. He died in 814, after a reign of 47 years, and aged 72.

CHARLES V. of Germany, filled the throne at the time of the Reformation, and is known from the part he took in relation to it, and the singular conclusion of his reign. He was the grandson of the emperor Maximilian I., and when he was but six years old inherited Austria and the Low Countries from his father. Ten years afterwards the united kingdoms of Castile and Arragon, and all their vast dependencies, became his, through his mother. And three years later, he was chosen, in opposition to Francis I. of France, emperor of Germany. He had been notorious for his arbitrary disposition, which the proud independence of the Spanish nobility could hardly keep in check. He was met at the outset of his imperial career by a more determined opponent, one whom he could not subdue. Luther in that very year held his solemn public controversy with Eck, at Leipsic; and in the next year he dared the papal authority to the utmost by burning the bull of excommunication against him. Some steps must be taken to put down this man, but Charles was not to be cajoled or terrified into staining his new dignity with such blood. He summoned Luther to the diet of Worms, and gave him assurance of safety, and kept his word, but placed him under the ban of the empire. An insurrection in Spain now diverted Charles's attention, but it was quelled before he reached that country. War with Francis, his rival candidate for the empire, followed, in which his forces took his foe prisoner. In this war he was embroiled with the pope, and Rome was taken and sacked by his troops. The issue of this war was his obtaining the crown of Lombardy. In Germany, shortly after this, he attempted to reconcile the Lutherans and Romanists at the diet of Augsburg, rendered memorable by the presentation of the great Confession of the Lutheran Faith there. For twenty years after this Charles was engaged in various wars, with France, with the Lutherans of the League of Schmalkald, with the Turks, and with Tunis and Algiers. In 1552, the treaty of Passau put an end to the religious wars of Germany. The war with France Charles left to his successor. It was three years after this peace that Charles abdicated, leaving the empire to his brother Ferdinand, and his hereditary dominions to his son, the too well-known Philip II., and retired to a monastery near Placentia, in Spain; where, till 1558, he lived in complete seclusion from all the business and toils he had borne so long. He died at the age of 58. During the latter years of his life the Council of Trent was sitting. Charles was not naturally a bigot; and his wars against the Lutherans rose more from his perceiving the elements of hostility to his power in their principles, than from fanatical zeal against their doctrines. His administration in Germany was productive of many and lasting political advantages to that country. Seven emperors of Germany have borne this title, of whom these are the most famous. There were three other kings of Spain, after the Emperor Charles, of this name. In France, after Charlemagne there have been nine kings of this name, the most noted of whom are:—

CHARLES V., surnamed the Wise, who was possessed of considerable learning for his age, and promoted literature by all means that he could. In his reign the revolt of the peasantry, commonly called the Jaquerie, occurred; and the wars with England, at first so disastrous, from the courage and conduct of Edward III. and the Black Prince, and afterwards so successful. He reigned from 1364 to 1380.

CHARLES VI., who retrieved the fortunes of the French monarchy, which had trembled on the verge of ruin from the successes of Henry V. of England; and, in great part through the enthusiasm kindled by Joan of Arc, recovered all but Calais. He reigned from 1423 to 1461.

CHARLES IX. has the infamy of the Huguenot massacre of St. Bartholomew, in 1572, attached to his name.

CHARLES X., the last king of France, by his policy, provoked the Revolution of 1830, when, in three days, the ascendancy of the Bourbons, so laboriously restored by the allied powers of Europe, and twenty years of war, was completely overthrown. He died in exile in 1836, aged 79 years.

CHARLES MARTEL, the grandfather of Charlemagne, held an office called the Mayoralty of the Palace, under Chilperic II. and Thierry, the last of the dynasty called Merovingian. He was a successful warrior against the Moors in Spain and the Saxons of Germany, and against the Frisians, Bavarians, and Swabians, who sought independence from the Frankish sway. He saved Europe by the check he imposed on the Mohammedans of Spain; and he was the founder of the German empire, and the new dynasty of Frank monarchs, though he never wore a crown himself. He died in 741, having been absolute master of the empire for 22 years.

CHARLES XII. of Sweden, with CHARLES XIV., (see BERNADOTTE,) the most famous monarchs of that kingdom of this name. Charles XII. has gained his by military madness, and the genius of his historian, Voltaire. He began his career when in his 19th year, by coping single-handed with Russia, Poland, Saxony, and Denmark. By victory after victory, he compelled the latter power to peace, dethroned Augustus of Poland, and advanced so far into Russia as to lose all. After staying for five years under the protection of the Sultan, he returned to Sweden, and again found himself opposed to a league of the neighbouring powers. He was not so successful in this war. Afterwards he obtained the alliance of Russia; and in seeking the subjugation of Norway, the world was happily rid of him, by a shot before Fredericks-hall, in 1718, aged 36 years.

CHARLEROI, a town of Belgium, seated on the Sambre, which has lately acquired considerable importance from its coal and iron mines, and its iron works. It has other manufactories; and by canal, and by railroads, has great facilities for trade. It is about 30 miles from Brussels. Its population is about 10,000. Lat. 50. 24. N. Long. 4. 25. E.

CHARLESTON, a city and sea-port of S. Carolina, United States, situated on a tongue of land formed by the junction of the Ashley and Cooper rivers. There is a bay formed by their junction 2 miles wide, and extending 7 miles to the Atlantic. A bar with four entrances protects the harbour's mouth; there are also three forts. The city is regularly built, and abounds with elegant houses and gardens. It has also some fine public buildings, an orphan asylum, and an excellent museum and library. There is a college here with a small library. The commerce of Charleston comprises nearly all that belongs to the State. Packets ply continually hence to New York. A canal 22 miles long connects the harbour with the Santee river; and there is a railway to Hamburg on the Savannah. It is 540 miles from Washington. Pop. 29,261, of whom 14,673 were slaves. This is 1028 less than it was in 1830. There are ten other places of this name in the States.

CHARLESTOWN, a town and port of Massachusetts, United States, situated on a peninsula lying between the Charles and Mystic rivers, and connected with Boston by Charles and Warren bridges. The streets are wide and ornamented with trees. The public buildings are, a model prison, a lunatic asylum, &c. &c.

There is also an extensive navy yard, with a dry dock built of granite. An obelisk on Bunker's Hill in the rear of this place, commemorates the famous battle there during the war of Independence. It is 441 miles from Washington. Pop. 11,484. There are six other places so called in the United States.

CHARLES'S-WAIN, in Astronomy, seven remarkable stars in the constellation of Ursa Major.

CHAR'LOCK, s. in Botany, a weed growing among the corn, with a yellow flower. It is a species of mustard.

CHAR'LOTTE'S ARCHIPELAGO, a group of islands in the S. Sea, almost due N. of the New Hebrides, and almost due E. of Solomon's Archipelago.

CHAR'LOTTEVILLE, a town of Virginia, United States, deriving its chief importance from its being the seat of the university of Virginia. This institution has some fine buildings, with a good library and museum. It does not include theology in its curriculum. The town is 121 miles from Washington. Pop. about 1500. Two other towns in the States bear this name.

CHARM, s. [charme, Fr.] a kind of spell, supposed to have an irresistible influence, by means of the concurrence of some irresistible power, both on the mind, lives, and properties of those whom it has for its subject. Figuratively, any excellence which engages and conquers the affections. SYNON. The word charm carries an idea of force, which puts a stop to ordinary effects and natural causes. The word enchantment is used properly for that which regards the illusion of the senses. The word spell bears particularly an idea of something which disturbs the reason.

To CHARM, v. a. to fortify or secure against evil by some spell; to influence or subdue the mind by some excellence or pleasure.

CHAR'MER, s. one who deals in spells or magic; one whose personal perfection irresistibly attracts admiration and love. SYNON. The body seems to be more susceptible of graces; the mind, of charms. We say of a lady that she walks, dances, and sings with grace; and that her conversation is full of charms.

CHAR'MING, part, possessed of such perfections as work irresistibly on the mind, and fill it with pleasure.

CHAR'MINGLY, ad. in such a manner as to convey inexpressible pleasure.

CHAR'MINGNESS, s. that quality which renders a thing capable of working on the affections, and filling the mind with pleasure.

CHAR'NEL-HOUSE, s. [charnier, Fr.] a place in or near a church, where the bones of the dead are deposited.

CHAR'ON, in Classic Mythology, the ferryman who carried the souls of the dead over the river Styx, to the abodes of the shades.

CHART, (hart) s. [charta, Lat.] an hydrographical map, or projection of some part of the earth's superficies, for the use of navigation.

CHARTÉ, s. [Fr.] that instrument determining the form of the French constitution, which was first drawn up on the restoration of the Bourbons, in 1814; the violation of which produced the three days of July in 1830; and which, slightly altered in a few points, forms the basis of the present monarchy, &c.

CHART'ER, s. [chartre, Fr.] in Law, a written evidence or instrument of things done between two parties. The king's charter, is where he makes a grant to any person or body politic; such as charter of exemption, &c. Charters of private persons, are deeds and instruments. Figuratively, the act of bestowing any privilege or right, exemption or claim.

CHART'ERED, a. invested with privileges by charter, beautifully applied in the following sentence: "The air, a charter'd libertine, is still," Shak.

CHART'ER-HOUSE, a public school in London, situated where there was a Carthusian priory, established in the reign of James I.

CHART'ER-LAND, s. land which is held by charter, or evidence in writing.

CHART'ER-PARTY, s. [chartre partie, Fr.] a deed or writing indented, made between merchants and seafaring men concerning their merchandise.

CHART'ISM, a name given in England to that set of political tenets embodied in what is called the People's Charter. This document is drawn up in the style of an act of parliament, and promulgates a representative system based on universal suffrage, electoral districts, vote by ballot, annual parliaments, no property qualification, and paid representatives. It has been associated with lawless violence and oligarchy, partly through the panic terrors of such as see revolution in every reform, and partly through the conduct of some who hold these opinions. These are now very much divided respecting the method of realizing them.

CHÂRTRES, the capital of the department of Eure et Loire, France. It is a very ancient city, and stands on a hill near the Eure, over which is a bridge, built by Vauban. Here are a good library, a museum, and some manufactures. But its principal trade consists in corn. Its cathedral, which was built during the 13th century, is esteemed one of the most beautiful in France, not only for its architectural proportions, &c., but for its ornaments and works of art. It is 45 miles from Paris. Population, about 15,000. Lat. 48. 25. N. Long. 1. 29. E.

CHARY, a. cautious, scrupulous, careful of giving any cause for suspicion or censure.

CHARYBDIS, a whirlpool formerly in the Strait of Messina, between Calabria and Sicily, much celebrated by the old poets.

TO CHASE, v. a. [chasser, Fr.] to follow after a beast, &c., for pleasure; to hunt; to pursue as an enemy; also to engage gold or silver for the purpose of ornament.

CHASE, s. the pursuit or following of game; hunting; that which is the proper object of hunting; the pursuit of an enemy, or of some desirable object. Figuratively, pursuit; the object of pursuit, in naval matters. In Law, a large extent of woody ground, privileged for the reception of deer and game.

CHASER, s. one who pursues; also the name of guns carried fore and aft, to be used in the chase, in naval affairs.

CHASM, (kazm) s. [chasma, Gr.] a breach or hollow space separating the parts of any body; a vacant space.

CHASTE, a. [chaste, Fr.] free from any breach of modesty. Applied to expressions, free from any obscenity or immodest words. In Grammar, free from any foreign mixture.

TO CHASTEN, v. a. [chastier, Fr.] to correct or punish a child, in order to deter him from faults.

CHASTELY, ad. without the least incontinence, or any inclination to lust.

CHASTENESS, s. freedom from incontinence, or any breach of modesty.

TO CHASTISE, (chastice) v. a. formerly accented on the first syllable; [chastier, Fr.] to punish or afflict for faults. SYNON. We chastise him who has committed a fault, to prevent his doing the same again. We punish the person guilty of a crime, by way of expiation, and as an example to others. To correct, signifies to amend by means of chastisement. To discipline, means to regulate and instruct.

CHASTISEMENT, s. correction or punishment, generally applied to the discipline of parents and tutors.

CHASTISER, s. the person that chastises.

CHASTITY, s. [castitas, Lat.] an entire freedom from any imputation of lust, either in thought or deed. In expressions, free from immodest words.

TO CHAT, v. n. [a contraction of the verb chatter,] to talk on different subjects, or without any deep thought or profound attention.—v. a. to talk of.

CHAT, s. trifling and miscellaneous discourse, made use of to pass time away.

CHATELLANY, (shâtellany) s. [chattelano, Fr.] the district belonging to any castle.

CHATHAM, Kent, a town adjoining Rochester, and seated on the Medway. It is chiefly celebrated for being the principal station of the army and navy; as likewise for its dock-yard; and it is thought that there is not a more complete arsenal in the world. There are warehouses here for naval stores, ordnance, &c., of which there are whole streets, and rope-houses and smiths' forges proportionably extensive. There are also wet docks, in which vessels of the largest size can float; barracks for the artillery and other troops stationed here, &c. &c. It is 30 miles from London. Market, Saturday. Pop. 21,341.

CHATHAM ISLAND, an island lying in the S. Pacific Ocean, due W. of the southmost island of New Zealand. The surface is very varied, being hilly in some parts, and boggy in others; but it has a good proportion of fertile soil. It now belongs to the British in New Zealand. The group of small islands round this is sometimes known by the general name of Chatham Islands.

CHA TOYANT, in Chemistry, a term introduced by the French chemists, to describe a property in some metallic and other substances, of varying their colours according to the way in which they are held; as is the case with the feathers of some birds, which appear very different when seen in different positions.

CHÂTTELS, s. in Law, possessions movable or immovable, which are strictly personal, and cannot, for what they are, be entailed.

TO CHATTER, v. a. [caqueter, Fr.] to make a noise like a pie. Figuratively, to talk very much.

CHATTER, s. a noise like that of a pie, or monkey when angry: "The mimic ape began his chatter," Swift. Figuratively, impertinent talk.

CHATTERER, s. one who spends his time in idle or unimproving talk.

CHATTERTON, THOMAS, a youth of Bristol, who, in the last century, excited some controversy in the literary world by an alleged discovery of many ancient documents relating to Bristol, and particularly of some poems professedly written by one Rowley in the 15th century. These were discovered to be forgeries, but the poetic powers displayed in them were even greater than those displayed in his acknowledged productions. He was ever of a restless humour, and at last, being sunk in destitution in London, after having indulged the most ambitious hopes, he poisoned himself, in 1770, aged nearly 18 years.

CHATTWOOD, s. little sticks; fuel.

CHAUWER, GEOFREY, the father of English poetry, lived in the 14th century. The facts that are preserved respecting him, represent him as a law student, a courtier, and statesman, a soldier in the French wars of Edward III., and a prisoner in France. But he lives as the poet; for though the English language was then so unsettled, and all things so rude and immature, he has gained an imperishable fame by his verses, in which not the men and manners of his own age appear, so much as what all times and nations have shown of common humanity. The association of this genius, as to his age, with the political stir of the commons, known as Wat Tyler's insurrection, and with the religious stir begun by Wicliffe, ought to be remembered by such as would watch the course of the history of man. He died in 1400, aged 72 years.

CHAUMONT, the capital of the department of Haute Marne, France, standing at the entrance of the Sûze into the Marne. It is well placed, and has some manufactures, and a good trade. It is 145 miles from Paris. Population, about 7000.

CHAW'DRON, s. the entrails or maw of a beast.

CHAWLEY, Devonshire. It is 190 miles from London. Pop. 850.

CHEADLE, Staffordshire. It is seated in a country abounding with coals, near the source of the Dove, and in the neighbourhood are very extensive copper and brass works. It is 156 miles from London. Market, Saturday. Pop. 4339.

CHEAP, (cheep) a. [ceapan, Sax.] to be purchased with little money; of small value.

TO CHEAPEAN, v. a. to bargain for or ask the price of a commodity; to endeavour to purchase a thing at a less price than the seller first asks for it.

CHEAPLY, ad. at a very low price or rate; with very little money.

CHEAPNESS, s. lowness of price.

TO CHEAT, (cheet) v. a. to deceive or impose upon; to defraud a person by some artifice or low cunning.

CHEAT, s. a fraud, or imposture, whereby a person is deceived and imposed upon; a person who imposes on others.

CHEATER, s. one who practises fraud, in order to deprive people of their property.

TO CHECK, v. n. to restrain the cravings of any appetite; to stop a thing in motion; to chide or reprove a person.

CHECK, s. a restraint, disappointment, repulse, curb, reproof. Figuratively, a counter-cipher of a bank bill; an account kept privately to examine that which is kept with a banker, or public office; a person who examines any account; a kind of linen with blue stripes crossing each other, used by sailors for shirts, &c. Clerk of the check, in the king's household, has the controlment of the yeomen of the guard, and all the ushers belonging to the royal family, allowing their absence or defaults in attendance, or mulcting their wages for the same, &c. He, or his deputy, takes cognizance of those who are to watch in the court, and sets the watch, &c.

CHECK, s. [echec, Fr.] that position of the king of either side, in the game of chess, which would expose him to being taken by the opposite player, if he were any other piece.

To CHECKER, CHEQUEER, v. a. [echées, Fr.] to vary with different colours like a chess-board; to variegate. Figuratively, to diversify with different states of prosperous and unsuccessful circumstances.

CHECKER, CHEKER-WORK, s. any thing painted in squares, with different colours, like a chess-board.

CHEKMATE, s. [echec et mat, Fr.] that position of the men on one side of a chess-board, which puts the king of the opposite side into check, and makes it necessary for him by any means to get out of check; which wins the game.

CHECK-ROLL, s. a book or roll containing the names of the king's household servants.

CHELDAR, Somersetshire. A village on the Mendip Hills, famous for its cheeses. The scenery near it is very romantic. It is 130 miles from London. Pop. 2325.

CHEEK, s. the fleshy part of the side of the face below the eye. Among mechanics, cheeks are a general name for almost all those pieces of machines and instruments that are double and perfectly alike. The cheeks of a grate, are flat plates of iron, standing perpendicular, and serving to confine the dimensions of a fire. The cheeks of a mortar, are two strong planks of wood, bound with thick iron plates, which are fixed on each side of the mortar to keep it in the elevation that is given it.

CHEEKBONE, s. the jaw.

CHEER, s. [chere, Fr.] provisions for an entertainment, gaiety, or fulness of spirits.

To CHEEK, v. a. to inspire with courage; to animate, or incite; to make joyful.

CHEERER, s. the person or thing which communicates joy, or comforts in distress.

CHEERFUL, a. that abounds in gaiety, life, and spirits, opposed to dejection.

CHEERFULLY, ad. without dejection, willingly.

CHEERFULNESS, s. a disposition of mind unclouded by despair, or laboured with vigour.

CHEERLESS, a. sad, dejected, comfortless.

CHEERLY, ad. in a gay, cheerful, joyous manner.

CHEERY, a. gay, joyful, or communicating pleasure and gaiety.

CHEESE, (cheese), s. [cyze, Sax.] a food made of milk, curdled by means of rennet, squeezed dry in a press, or suffered to drain till free from whey, and hardened by time. Those called cream cheeses are very soft and rich, and soon spoil. Gloucester, Derby, and the common cheese made in most dairies, are in the greatest demand. Cheshire, Cheddar, and Stilton, are most costly. Of foreign cheese the Dutch is most used, and the American. Parmesan, Pergolesi, Gouyere, are richer and rarer kinds.

CHEESECAKE, s. in pastry, is made of soft curds, butter, and sugar, baked.

CHEESEMONGER, s. one who deals in cheese.

CHEESEPRESS, s. a press, wherein the curds of which the cheese is made are pressed dry from the whey.

CHEESEVAT, s. the wooden case in which the curds are confined, when pressed for cheese.

CHEESY, (cheesy) a. having the qualities of cheese.

CHEKE, SIR JOHN, a name that frequently occurs in the history of the mid-part of the English (so-called) Reformation. His learning was such as to obtain him the tutorship of Edward VI.; and the satisfaction he gave, and his zeal for the new forms, raised him very high in the favour of the court during Edward's reign. Being an adherent of the Lady Jane Grey, he was soon marked for Mary's vengeance, and after imprisonment and pardon, followed by voluntary exile, he was seized in the Netherlands, and brought back to England, where he unworthily repented his faith, and, harassed by his conscience and his converters, soon after died, in 1547, aged 43 years. His writings are numerous, and are valuable in all respects.

CHELMSFORD, Essex. It is pleasantly situated in a valley, at the confluence of the Chelmer and the Cam, the gardens of the inhabitants on each side of the town extending to those rivers. Here are some good public buildings, and a fountain, or conduit, of excellent water; and the assizes and quarter sessions for the county are held here. The great eastern road from London formerly passed through it, and the railroad now going by it at a short distance, has nearly doubled the size of the town. It is 29 miles from London. Market for corn, cattle, and provisions, Friday. Pop. 6789.

CHELSEA, Middlesex. It stands on the banks of the Thames, and is now a suburb of London, being about 4 miles from the city boundaries. Here is an extensive and well-stocked botanical garden, belonging to the company of apothecaries in London, and a bridge over the river to Battersea; here also is a magnificent hospital erected for the disabled and superannuated soldiers of the English army. Pop. 40,179.

CHELTENHAM, Gloucestershire. It is noted for its mineral waters, and extensive prospects from its adjoining hills. It is much improved of late years, with a new market-house, and many handsome public buildings. It used to have a little trade from the neighbouring manufacturing towns; but now derives all its subsistence from its spa. It is 95 miles from London. Market, Thursday. Pop. 31,411.

CHELY, s. [chela, Lat.] the claw of the shell-fish.

CHEMISE, (shamés) s. [Fr.] in Fortification, a wall lining a bastion or ditch, in order to strengthen and support it. Also the French name for a shirt, or linen under-dress.

CHEMISTRY, s. [chemia, Gr.] the science which investigates the intimate structure of bodies, aims at the discovery of their elementary substances, the nature of the various compounds producible from these, and the laws of their production. This study has not long existed in the form of a science. Whatever facts were ascertained were the isolated results of accident, or of such attempts as the alchemists'. Its laws were mere empirical rules. But the theory of Lavoisier, and the discoveries of Davy, Berzelius, Faraday, and Liebig, have set it in such a position that every year changes its whole aspect, and every new acquisition promises a wider field and clearer knowledge respecting its old and well-established possessions. Organic chemistry, is that branch of the science which specially relates to organized bodies.

CHEMNITZ, MARTIN, a distinguished Lutheran theologian, who was the associate of Melancthon, and by his writings against Romanist doctrine, and in exposition of Lutheran, abundantly supported the great Reformation. He died in 1586, aged 64 years. Some of his works are yet of great worth.

CHEPSTOW, Monmouthshire, a flourishing town, seated on the river Wye, near its confluence with the Severn. It is the port for all the towns that stand on the Wye and Lug. Ships of 6 or 700 tons burthen are built here, or come up to the town. The merchants import wine from Oporto, and flax, deal, pitch, &c., from Norway and Russia. The tide is said to rise higher here than in any other part of Europe, the spring tides rising fifty or sixty feet perpendicular. It is 127 miles from London. Market, Saturday. Pop. 3366.

CHEQUE, s. [Fr.] a draft on a banker, made on unstamped paper, and under certain restrictions, preventing it from being negotiable as bills are; one characteristic mark of which is, its being payable to the bearer.

CHER, a department of France, named after the principal stream it contains, bounded by the departments of Loiret, Loire et Cher, Indre, Allier, and Nievre. It is watered by the Loire, the Auron, and some other rivers, beside the Cher. It is quite an agricultural district, from the nature of the soil, which affords excellent pastures, and is abundantly productive of grain, &c. The wine called Chablis is produced in this department. It has also much mineral wealth, and iron is the most valuable of its productions of this kind. Manufactures of woollen goods and of iron, and of some articles of less importance, are here. Its extensive forests supply plenty of timber for trade, even. The population is about 300,000. Bourges is its capital.

CHERBURG, a maritime town in the department of La Manche, France. The docks and the breakwater are very great works. The harbour will admit vessels of 900 tons at high water, and of 250 at low. Woollen stuffs are manufactured here, and the inhabitants build small vessels. Cherbourg is 200 miles from Paris. Population, under 20,000. Lat. 49. 38. N. Long. 1. 33. W.

To CHERISH, v. a. [cherir, Fr.] to nourish or promote the growth of a thing; to help; to encourage; to protect, shelter, and nourish.

CHE/RI/SHER, s. one who protects and contributes to the growth of a thing.

CHE/RO/KE/ES, the name of one of the aboriginal tribes of N. America, whose territory was to the N. and S. of the Appalachian Mountains. They were a branch of the Iroquois. They have now settlements on the Arkansas river in Louisiana, and are progressing in civilization, under written laws, and possessed of land and the skill to cultivate it; their language being reduced to writing, and schools and churches established amongst them. They are in number about 15,000.

CHE/RRY, s. in Gardening, a fruit tree, with shining leaves; its fruit is juicy and pulpy, grows on long stems, and is roundish or heart-shaped. Though included by Linnaeus under the genus of prunus, or plum, yet they cannot be ingrafted on each other.

CHE/RRY, a. resembling a cherry in colour; red.

CHE/RS/ON, a town of Russia, on the banks of the river Dnieper, not very far from its mouth. It is not very large, but the houses are of stone, and neatly executed. It has a dock for the construction of large vessels, and an arsenal for the S. part of the empire and the Black Sea. The public works are executed by criminals, who amount to some hundreds. In this city the humane Howard ended his days; he was to the last engaged in the merciful employment of visiting those who were sick and in prison. It is above 900 miles from St. Petersburg. Lat. 46. 0. N. Long. 32. 26. E.

CHE/RS/ON/SE, CHE/RS/ON/SUS, (herseonēz) s. [cherous and mesos, Gr.] in Geography, amongst the Greeks, a peninsula.

CHE/RT, s. (Germ.) a species of silicious stone which is coarser and softer than the common silex. It is often found in large masses or quarries of limestone.

CHE/RTSEY, Surrey. It stands in a low situation near the Thames, over which there is a handsome bridge of seven arches. It was formerly the residence of some of the Saxon kings. It has a trade in malt, which it conveys in barges to London. It is 20 miles from London. Market, Wednesday. Pop. 5347.

CHE/RUB, s. [Heb.] a celestial being, in Scripture variously described under the shapes of men, eagles, oxen, lions, &c.

CHE/RU/BIC, a. angelic, or partaking of the nature of a cherub.

CHE/RUB/IN, s. the plural of cherub.

CHE/RUB/INI, MARIA LUIGI SALVADOR, an eminent composer of the end of the last and the commencement of the present century. He studied at Florence and Bologna, and at the former place, and in London, gained deserved renown before he settled at Paris, where he spent the greater part of his life. His chief fame rests on his sacred music, though his operas, and other compositions of a secular character, are esteemed very highly. He died in 1842, aged 82 years.

CHE/RVIL, s. in Botany, a very common weed in many places of Britain. There are several species of it. Garden cheevil is otherwise called sweet fern.

CHE/SA/PEAK, the largest bay of the United States, 200 miles long, and from 7 to 20 broad, and generally 9 fathoms deep. Its entrance is wholly in the State of Virginia, but the greater part is in Maryland, which it divides into two parts, called the E. and W. shores. It has many fine harbours; and receives the waters of the Susquehanna, the Potomac, the James, and other rivers, draining a surface of 70,000 square miles.

CHE/SEL/DEN, WILLIAM, an eminent lithotomist and surgical operator of the beginning of the last century. His success in his own department was most distinguished; as an anatomist he was scarcely less eminent; his works were long used as class-books. He died in 1752, aged 64 years.

CHE/SHAM, Buckinghamshire. It is seated on the borders of Hertfordshire, and trades in laces, shoes, and wooden ware. It is 29 miles from London. Market, Wednesday. Pop. 5593.

CHE/SHIRE, a county Palatine of England, lying on the Irish Sea, and bounded by Lancashire, Yorkshire, Derbyshire, Staffordshire, Shropshire, and Wales. It is about 60 miles in length, and 30 in breadth. The surface is generally even, but it has some hills. It is watered by the Mersey, the Dee, and the Weaver, with their lesser tributary streams. It has also some great canals, and railroads, as means of communication. Coal and rock-salt, with some useful kinds of sandstone, are found here; and the salt is a very prominent feature in the wealth of the county. Dairy-farming is extensively pursued, and much cheese produced. There are some manufactures in this county, principally on the borders of Lancashire, of cotton, silk, woollens, &c. &c. And these, with its salt, and its cheese, are its exports, not only to other parts of the kingdom, but all over the world. It has 101 parishes. Besides its rivers, there are many good-sized lakes in this county. It is also famed for its forests and plantations. Its population is 395,600. Chester is the county town; Altringham, Congleton, Macclesfield, Stockport, &c. &c., are places of note.

CHE/SHUNT, Hertfordshire, a village where is one of the colleges or academies founded by the Countess of Huntingdon. It is 10 miles from London. Pop. 5042.

CHE/SHUNT, CHE/SHUNT-TREE, s. the timber of it, next to the oak, is the fittest for building, being very durable. As to the nut or fruit of this tree, the biggest are accounted the best.

CHE/SS, s. [ceches, Fr.] a game played on a board divided into 24 squares, of alternate colours, each side having 16 pieces, having various moves and powers. The object of the game is to surround the principal piece of your adversary, so that it would be in danger of being taken, were it another piece, and cannot be moved or protected from this danger.

CHE/SS-APPLE, s. a species of wild service.

CHE/SS-MAN, s. the name of the pieces used in the game of chess.

CHE/SS-PLAYER, s. a gamester at chess.

CHE/SSOM, s. in Gardening, a mellow earth, between the two extremities of clay and sand.

CHE/ST, s. [cygt, Sax.] a large, strong wooden box, greater than a trunk, used for keeping clothes, linen, &c. Figuratively, the cavity of the human body from the neck to the belly, called the breast or stomach. A chest of drawers, is a wooden frame which contains several drawers placed above each other.

CHE/STER, Cheshire, a large and ancient city, seated on the Dee, over which there is a noble bridge, by which vessels come from the sea to the quay; and having, by a canal, communication with most of the inland navigations. The main streets are hollowed out in the rock to a considerable depth, and the houses have, elevated in front, covered porticoes, which are called rows, and afford a sheltered way for foot passengers. The city has four gates and three posterns, and is 2 miles in compass. It consists chiefly of four large streets, which are pretty even and spacious, and as they cross one another in straight lines, meeting in the centre, they make an exact cross, with the town-house or exchange, a neat structure, near the middle. In the old castle, where the Earls of Chester formerly held their parliaments, was a stately hall, somewhat like that at Westminster, where the Palatine courts and assizes were held, before the erection of the new prison. It has nine well-built churches, and a cathedral, dedicated to St. Werburgh, which is very ancient. Chester has a manufactory of gloves and tobacco-pipes, and a considerable traffic of shop goods into North Wales. It has also a constant communication with Ireland. It is 181 miles from London. Markets, Wednesday and Saturday. Pop. 23,115.

CHE/STERFIELD, Derbyshire. It is seated on a gentle rise, between two small rivers, and is, next to Derby, the most considerable town in the county. It has one of the largest free-schools in the north of England. Here is a manufactory of worsted and cotton stockings, and of carpets; also silk mills, and potteries for brown ware; and near the town are large iron foundries, which are supplied with ore and coal dug in the vicinity. The country round Chesterfield produces great quantities of camomile. The church is a fine building, but the spire, which is very lofty, is considerably awry. It is 149 miles from London. Market, Saturday. Pop. 11,231.

CHE/STERFIELD, PHILIP DORMER STANHOPE, EARL OF, the well-known authority on matters of worldly wisdom and politeness. He enjoyed some reputation as a parliamentary speaker, especially in the Upper House. He was engaged more than once in an embassy to Holland, and was at last made chief-secretary of state. He rendered some service to the country in his different stations, and amongst other things, he contributed materially to the correction of the Calendar, which had got 12 days apart from the true reckoning. He was a witty, slight man, and appears to the new tastes of the present day, in his writings, by no means as he showed to his own age. He died in 1773, aged 79 years.

CHE/ST-FOUND/ERING, s. in Farriery, a disease in horses which resembles a pleurisy or peripneumony in men.

REFERENCE TO DISTRICTS
 Division 1. Munster 2. Leinster 3. Ulster 4. Connaught
 Railway Stations 5. Waterford 6. Dublin 7. Belfast

County names & numbers
 Scale of Miles
 0 1 2 3 4 5 6 7 8 9 10
 Railway Stations 11. 12. 13. 14. 15. 16. 17. 18. 19. 20.

CELTIC

CHESVAN, s. [Heb.] the name of one of the Jewish months, corresponding with parts of our October and November.

CHEVALIER, (chevalier) s. [cheval, Fr.] a knight. In Heraldry, a horseman armed at all points, or in complete armour.

CHEVAUX DE FRISE, (cheval de frise) s. [Fr.] in Fortification, pieces of timber traversed with wooden spikes, five or six feet long, pointed with iron, used for stopping up breaches, or securing any avenue from the enemy's cavalry.

CHEVERIL, (shéveril) s. [cheverez, Fr.] a kid. Figuratively, kid leather.

CHEVIOT, a mountainous district, separating the N. W. part of Northumberland from Scotland. The hilly country is called the Cheviot Hills, as the adjoining fenny grounds are called the Cheviot Moors. The cattle and wool are excellent. The highest point is more than 2500 feet in height.

CHEVRON, (shéerving) s. [Fr.] in Heraldry, one of the honorary ordinaries, representing two rafters of a house joined together, so as to form an angle, and is the symbol of protection. Party per chevron, is when the field is divided only by two single lines, rising from the two base points, and meeting in a point above, like the chevron.

To CHEW, v. a. [ecorag, Sax.] to bite or grind meat into small pieces between the teeth, proper for swallowing.—v. n. to revolve often in the thoughts; to ruminate or meditate upon. Used with on, or upon.

CHIFAN EARTH, (kian erth) s. in Pharmacy, is a dense and compact earth, sent hither in small flat pieces from the island whose name it bears; it is recommended as an astringent, and as the greatest of all cosmetics.

CHIAROSCURO, s. [Ital.] the judicious and effective arrangement of light and shade, and opposed tints of deep and light kinds, in painting. The paintings of Rembrandt are the most striking illustration of this branch of art.

CHICAGO, a town of Illinois, United States. It is beautifully situated on a level ground on both sides of the river of the same name, not far from its entrance to Lake Michigan. An artificial harbour has been made, extending for some way into the lake. It has constant communication by steam-boats with Buffalo, and other places on the lakes. It contains the county buildings, and has a good trade, which will be increased by the canal to the Illinois river. It is 717 miles from Washington. Pop. 4470.

CHICANE, (sheekane) s. [Fr.] in Law, an abuse of judiciary proceeding tending to delay the cause, and deceive or impose on the judge or the parties. In the schools, vain sophistry, tending to perpetuate disputes, and obscure the truth.

To CHICANE, v. n. [chicaner, Fr.] to prolong a contest by artifice and subtleties.

CHICANER, s. [chicaneur, Fr.] one who makes use of quirks, subtleties, or other artifice, to obscure the truth.

CHICANERY, s. [chicanerie, Fr.] an artful prolonging any dispute by frivolous objections or subtleties.

CHICHESTER, Sussex. It is a neat and handsome city, seated in a plain, by the river Lavant, by which it is encompassed on every side except the N. The market-place is in the centre of the town, from which the four principal streets are directed to the cardinal points of the compass, and bear the names of E. W. N. and S. Street. Its market is well supplied with provisions; it exports corn, malt, &c., has some foreign commerce, a manufacture of needles, and of haize, blankets, and coarse cloths. The haven, formed by a canal, cut from the city down into the bay, affords excellent lobsters. It is 61 miles from London. Markets, Wednesday, Friday, and Saturday. Pop. 5312.

CHICK, CHICKEN, s. [cicn, Sax.] the young of a fowl, or hen. Chick is used figuratively for a word of tenderness. Sometimes it is used for a person not arrived to the years of maturity, and void of experience.

CHICKEN-HEARTED, a. timorous; cowardly.

CHICKEN-POX, s. in Medicine, a species of the small-pox, but the pustules are not so large.

CHICKLING, s. a small or young chicken.

CHICKPEA, s. a kind of degenerate pea.

CHICKWEED, s. in Botany, a species of star-wort, with divided petals, leaves between egg and heart-shaped, and upright white blossoms, which open from nine in the morning till noon, except in rainy weather, when they do not open at all. It is very common in rich cultivated ground, and flowers from April to October.

CHICORY, Su'CORY, s. [cichorium, Lat.] in Botany, a common plant with straggling bare stems, and large blue composite flowers, found much in corn-fields and road-sides, flowering all harvest-time. The root is largely used to mix with common coffees, and it imparts to them a flavour by no means disagreeable.

To CHIDE, v. a. preter. chid, particip. pass. chid, or chidden: [chidan, Sax.] to reprove with some degree of warmth and anger for faults. To blame or find fault with, beautifully applied to inanimate things. "Fountains, o'er the pebbles, chid your stay," Dryd.—v. n. to scold or reprove severely. To make a noise as in a passion, elegantly applied to inanimate things. "As doth a rock against the chiding flood," Shak.

CHIDER, s. one that is addicted to reproof, or fond of blaming.

CHIEF, (cheef) a. [chef, Fr.] the major part, or greatest number; principal, including the idea of superior rank and activity.

CHIEF, s. a commander, applied to one who commands an army.

In Heraldry, the upper part of an escutcheon, running across from side to side.

CHIEFLESS, a. without chief or commander.

CHIEFLY, ad. generally; for the most or greatest part; principally.

CHIEFRIE, (cheefry) s. an acknowledgment paid to the lord paramount.

CHIEFTAIN, (cheeftain) s. one who commands an army; the head of a clan.

CHILBLAIN, s. a very troublesome kind of cutaneous inflammation, which affects the feet and hands, and other exposed parts of the body, during winter, when they are subject to frequent and sudden alternations of heat and cold. In the worst form they become imperfectly suppurating sores, and require great attention. Friction and stimulating lotions are the best cure. But by proper care they may be avoided.

CHILD, s. plural children: [child, Sax.] an infant or person in its tenderest years; the offspring of a person.

To CHILD, v. n. to bring forth or bear children. Figuratively, to be prolific or fruitful, opposed to barren.

CHILDBEARING, s. the act of bearing children; pregnancy.

CHILDBED, s. a lying-in; or the state of a woman just after her delivery.

CHILDBIRTH, s. labour; travail; delivery.

CHILDERMAN-DAY, s. the 28th of December; on which day Herod's massacre of the children at Jerusalem, on account of Christ's birth, is commemorated.

CHILDHOD, s. the state of a child; the interval between infancy and youth.

CHILDISH, a. resembling a child in ignorance, simplicity, and trifling.

CHILDISHLY, ad. in such a manner as only becomes a child; in a trifling manner.

CHILDISINESS, s. want of discretion, knowledge, experience, and gravity.

CHILDLLESS, a. without children.

CHILDLIKE, a. that resembles the actions and sentiments of a child.

CHILI, a republic of S. America, lying between the Andes and the Pacific; bounded by Bolivia on the N., by La Plata on the E., and reaching, according to its own claims, to the Straits of Magellan. Some parts of the Andes are computed to exceed 16,000 feet in height. From these mountains flow many mountain torrents, but there are no rivers in Chili. In the neighbourhood of these streams occur portions of fertile ground. But the wealth of the country lies in its metallic treasures, with which the Andes abound; gold, silver, copper, &c. &c., with coal, being plentiful. The climate of different parts of Chili differs very much; but the whole length of it is subject to earthquakes. Olives and other fruits, capscum, &c., are produced abundantly, and some good wine and spirits. Cattle, &c., which were introduced from Europe, are reared plentifully. It exports, in addition to what has been enumerated, cotton and wool. There are no manufactures worth naming. The population is about 1,500,000. Santiago is its capital; Valparaiso, Valdivia, San Fernando, San Felipe, &c. are also places of importance.

CHILLAD, (chilad) s. [chillas, Gr.] a thousand, or a collection of things or years amounting to a thousand.

CHILLAE'DRON, s. [chillas, Gr.] a figure of a thousand sides.

CHILLIQUÉ, s. a kind of American camel-sheep, serving the ancient inhabitants of Chili as a beast of burthen and of draught, and producing them a kind of wool.

CHILL, s. [cele, Sax.], cold, or that which stops the circulation of any fluid by its coldness. Figuratively, shivering with, or having the sensation of cold; depressed, dejected; discouraged, or rendered inactive by some disappointment or terrible object.

To CHILL, v. t., to reduce from a state of warmth to that of coldness. Figuratively, to stop or repress any motion; to discourage and deject; to blast or destroy by cold.

CHILLINESS, s. cold; a sensation which produces shivering.

CHILLINGWORTH, WILLIAM, an eminent Protestant controversialist of the 17th century. He studied at Oxford, dialectics principally, was reasoned into Romanism by Fisher, and out of it again by Laud. He then wrote his great work on the Religion of Protestants. After having given unanswerable reasons against entering the English church, he was argued out of them and into it by Laud and Sheldon. In the civil wars, he was of course in the royalist party, and being taken prisoner at Arundel Castle, shortly after died in 1644, aged 41 years. He is esteemed very highly for his work on Protestantism, and was the author of that party saying, "The Bible, and the Bible only, is the religion of Protestants."

CHILLY, a., that proceeds from chilliness or cold.

CHILMINAR, s. a beautiful piece of ancient architecture, being the ruins of the famous palace of Persepolis, which was burned by Alexander the Great.

CHILNESS, s. the sensation of cold productive of shivering; the quality of producing the sensation of cold.

CHILÓE, an island of Chili on the W. coast of S. America. It is above 100 miles long, and about 50 broad. It is very rocky, but grows good wood, and excellent grain, and furnishes fine pastures. These form its trade. S. Carlos is its chief town. Its population is about 50,000, including the small islands which are clustered round it.

CHILTERN, a chain of chalky hills, separating the counties of Bedford and Herts, and running through the middle of Bucks, from Tring, Herts, to Henley upon Thames, Oxfordshire. They are covered, in various parts, with woods, and some of the eminences are of considerable height, and afford rich prospects. To these hills is annexed the nominal office of steward under the crown, the acceptance of which, of consequence, enables a member of the British parliament to vacate his seat.

CHIMB, s. [kime, Belg.], the end of a barrel or tub.

CHIMBORAZO, the name of one of the loftiest mountains in the range of the Andes. It is in Colombia, between Quito and Guayaquil. Its height is about 21,600 feet above the sea.

CHIME, s. in Music, formerly used for a concord, or the sounding of the same note on several instruments at once. In Ringing, the sounding all the bells of a steeple after one another, with all the variations in their order that can produce music, or an agreeable harmony. Applied to clocks, a kind of periodical music produced by a particular apparatus, wherein hammers of different sizes are put in motion, and play some tune on bells. Figuratively, harmony of tempers, proportion, or other relations.

In Poetry, the syllable at the end of a verse, which has the same sound as that of the preceding one.

To CHIME, v. n. to sound a concord; to agree in sound. Figuratively, to be musical. To answer each other, applied to relative terms; to acquiesce in; to agree with. Applied to poetry, to make the concluding syllables of two verses end with the same letters or sound,—v. a. to cause to sound harmonically; to strike a bell with a hammer.

CHIMERA, (chimæra) s. [Gr.] a poetical monster, composed of parts of a lion, a goat, and a serpent. Figuratively, a groundless or vain imagination, which has no foundation in reason or nature.

CHIME/RICAL, (chimérical) a. that is the mere product of fancy or imagination; imaginary; fantastic.

CHIME/RICALLY, (chiméricaly) ad. in a wild, fantastic, vain manner; without any reality.

CHIMINAGE, s. [chimín, or chemin, Fr.] a toll for passage through a forest.

CHIMLEIGH, Devonshire. It is 193 miles from London. Market, Wednesday.

CHIMNEY, s. [cheminée, Fr.] in Architecture, the passage or funnel through which the smoke ascends in a building. Chim- ney-piece, the ornamental piece of wood or stone that is set round the fire-place.

CHIMNEY-SWEEPER, s. one whose trade it is to clean foul chimneys of soot.

CHIMPANZEE, s. in Natural History, a species of ape which approaches in physical characters nearest of all animals to man. It is found in Africa, principally on the W. coast. It is distinguished by many very marked characteristics from the human species; and so as to deprive those speculators of any show of reason, who pretend that man is but the highest development of the lower genera of animals.

CHIN, s. [chine, Sax.] the lower part of the face from the under lip.

CHINA, a very large country in the farthest E. of Asia, lying on that part of the Indian Ocean that flows between Japan and the Indian Archipelago, and bounded by Tatar, great part of which is subject to itself, the Burman Empire, Siam, and Cochinchina. It is about 1200 miles in each direction; and it has connected with it two islands of some extent, Formosa and Hainan. Its N. E. boundary is a large gulf called the Yellow Sea. The surface rises generally in terraces from the sea to the W., and there are two principal mountain-chains, but neither attain any considerable elevation. The greatest rivers are the Yangtsé-kiang, and the Yellow River, which in length are secondary only to the Amazon and Mississippi. The most N. part of its coast is rocky, but it abounds with commodious harbours. Gold, silver, copper, &c. &c. have been obtained abundantly; coal also occurs, and there are marble quarries, and quarries of felspathic rocks, whence the porcelain is made: the mineral called jade is very abundant. The soil is in general good, and it is irrigated with great care. There are many large forests. The wild animals are not of a very dangerous kind; but China is rich in peculiar species both in the animal and vegetable worlds. It has a singular variety of dog (used by the people for food); three beautiful kinds of pheasants, the gold and silver species, and another whose tail feathers are often above five feet long; the gold and silver fish; the fishing cormorant, and some species of swimmers. The tea plant, the camellia, the deep-coloured rose, the rice-paper plant, &c. &c. are its native plants. The tea, rice, millet, and many other grains are largely cultivated. In manufactures it is very rich; silks, porcelain, paper, &c. &c., and all products of the imitative arts, are furnished by industry and skill that is most wonderful. Its chief export is tea, with which it furnishes nearly all the world; it also exports its silk and porcelain, and, in small quantities, most of its peculiar manufactures. The people of China are allied to the Tatars, and the reigning dynasty are actually a Tatar race, called the Mandcheou, who obtained the sovereignty of the country about 200 years ago.

The government is a rigid despotism, being a sorrowful application of parental rule; but it appears that as far as their means will allow, educated capability is recognised as the qualification marking out the officers of state. The people are quick-witted and ingenious, as is proved by their having discovered the arts of paper-making and printing, gunpowder, and the mariner's compass, before they were known in Europe; but they are the most prodigious realization of conservatism the world ever saw, and are ages behind the least advanced nations of the West. The great wall of China, and the Imperial canal, are specimens of what they have been able to do, in the shape of works on a very large scale. The jealousy with which they regard foreigners, is but partly broken down by their late disastrous war with England. The religion of Fo is the most popular; and that of Buddha next. Their earliest writer, and greatest authority, is Confucius, who lived about the fifth century B. C. The population of China is reckoned to exceed 300,000,000, but this statement can neither be proved nor refuted. Nanking is the residence of the government; Peking is the old capital; Canton the chief port; this with Amoy, Ningpo, Foochoo, and Shanghai, by the late treaty with England, are opened to the commerce of the world.

CHINESE LANGUAGE: the spoken language differs in almost every province, but the written language, which consists of symbols for thoughts and things, can be read all over that vast empire, and most of the adjoining kingdoms. In its characteristics it differs from most of the other languages of the world, and is the type of a peculiar class, called by philologists, monosyllabic.

CHINA, s. a species of earthenware, very fine and translucent, made originally in China; generally known by the name of porcelain.

CHINA-ORANGE, s. the sweet orange brought originally from China.

CHINA-ROOT, s. a medicinal root brought originally from China, esteemed as a sudorific.

CHINCHILLA, s. in Natural History, a genus of animals allied to the hare and the mouse, found in S. America, whose skin is very valuable, and is made into boas and muffs for ladies.

CHIN-COUGH, (chin-coff) s. in Medicine, a violent, dry cough, affecting children, even to a danger of suffocation.

CHINE, s. [eschine, Fr.] the part of the back containing the spine or back-bone.

TO CHINE, v. a. to cut into chines; to split along the back-bone.

CHINK, s. [cinan, Sax.] a narrow gap, or opening lengthwise.

TO CHINK, v. a. to make money or pieces of any metal sound by shaking them together.—v. n. to sound by striking each other; to break in clefts or gaps, applied to ground.

CHINKY, a. full of narrow holes, gaps, or clefts.

CHINTZ, s. a fine cloth manufactured of cotton in the East Indies, and generally printed with lively and durable colours.

CHITOPPE, s. [chapin, Span.] a high shoe formerly worn by ladies.

CHIOS, an island of the Ægean Sea, near the coast of Asia Minor, opposite Smyrna. It is about 30 miles long, and 10 broad; is mountainous towards the north part, but has good and fertile soil more to the south. It is frequently mentioned in ancient Grecian history. It was famous for its wines and fruits. It still produces them, with silk and cotton. There is good marble also still found here. It is now in a very degraded state, owing to the cruel massacre of almost all the people during the war in 1822.

TO CHIP, v. a. to cut wood into small pieces. To cut off the crust of a loaf, applied to bread.

CHIP, s. [cyp, Sax.] a small piece of wood separated from a larger by a bill or cutting tool; any small piece cut off from a larger.

CHIPPENHAM, Wilts. It was the seat of Alfred, and other West-Saxon kings, and is seated on the Avon, over which is a stone bridge of 16 arches. It has a considerable manufacture of woollen cloth. It is 94 miles from London. Market, Thursday. Pop. 5498.

CHIPPWAYS. See OGBIBWAYS.

CHIPPING, s. the action of cutting off small pieces from timber or other matters.

CHIPPING-NOTTON, Oxfordshire. It has a dry situation on the side of a hill, and near a small rivulet, and is a straggling town, except about the market-place. It is a corporate town; and the market is good for corn, cattle, and provisions. It is 74 miles from London. Market, Wednesday. Pop. 3031.

CHIPPING-ON'GAR, Essex, 20 miles from London. Market, Saturday. Pop. 870.

CHIPPING-SO'DBURY, Gloucestershire. It is seated in a bottom, near the Downs, on the road from Bristol to Cirencester, and has a great market for corn and cheese. It is 111 miles from London. Market, Thursday. Pop. 1273.

CHIPPING-WYCOMB, or HIGH WYCOMB, Buckinghamshire. It is seated on the river Wyck, on which, as well as on the Loddon, are many corn and paper mills. It is 31 miles from London. Market for corn, Friday. Pop. 6480.

CHIRAGRA, (kiragra) s. [Lat.] in Medicine, the gout in the hand.

CHIRAGRICAL, (kiragrical) a. being subject to the gout in the hands.

CHIROGRAPHY, (kirography) s. [cheir and grapho, Gr.] a person's own hand-writing.

CHIROMANCEI, (kironanser) s. one who pretends to foretell future events by inspecting the hand.

CHIROMANCY, (kironansy) s. [cheir and manieia, Gr.] the pretended art of foretelling what shall happen to a person, by inspecting the lines of his hand.

TO CHIRP, v. n. [formed from the sound.] to make a noise like a sparrow, or birds which call to one another.

CHIRPER, s. a bird that makes a noise like a sparrow, or calls to another; a person that is gay, cheerful, or merry.

TO CHIRRP, v. n. to make a noise by drawing in the air through the lips, after they are drawn into a kind of circle, in order to encourage any beast, or to set a song-bird a singing.

CHIRURGEON, (kirarjun) now disused, being supplanted by surgeon, s. [cheir and ergon, Gr.] one who cures such disorders, hurts, or ailments, as require external applications, or the operations of the hand.

CHIRURGERY, s. the art of curing wounds and diseases, by external applications, or operations of the hand.

CHIRURGIC, CHIRURGICAL, (kirarjik, kirarjikal) a. having qualities fit for external or outward application; belonging to external or manual operation.

CHISEL, (chisel) s. [ciseau, Fr.] a tool made of iron, pretty long, thin, and sometimes ground to an edge, used in carpentry, joining, masonry, sculpture, &c.

TO CHISEL, v. a. to cut with a chisel.

CHIT, s. [cido, Ital.] a young little child; a mere baby; a word used in anger, and expressive of contempt.

CHIT-CHAT, s. [a cant word formed from the reduplication or repetition and corruption of the word chat.] idle and unimproving discourse.

CHITTAGONG, a province of Hindustan, lying on the Bay of Bengal, N. of Arracan, in length about 120 miles, and in breadth about 30. The greater part of the country is hilly, and it is watered by the Chittagong river, the Nauf, and some tributaries of the Irrawaddy. The soil by the rivers is fertile, and produces the commodities usually grown in these countries. Its inhabitants are principally Mohammedans. It now belongs to the East India Company. Population, about 1,000,000.

CHITTERLINGS, s. not used in the singular; [schyterlingh, Belg.] the guts or bowels, generally applied to those of beasts fit for food; likewise the frill or border sewed on the bosom of a man's shirt.

CHIVALROUS, a. of or belonging to chivalry.

CHIVALRY, s. [chevalerie, Fr.] knighthood, or military dignity. The objects of this institution were, to check the insolence of overgrown oppressors, to vindicate the helpless, especially females, and to redress grievances. Knighthood was esteemed more honourable than royalty itself, and monarchs were found to receive it from the hands of private gentlemen. As valour, gallantry, and religion equally entered into the character of a true knight, it is believed that the spirit of chivalry had a great share in refining the manners of the European nations, during the twelfth and three following centuries.

CHIVES, s. [ceve, Fr.] in Botany, those threads or filaments in flowers, bearing the antheræ or tips on their extremities. They are the male organization of plants; and called by Linneus, stamina. Also a small kind of onion.

CHLORINE, s. [chloros, Gr.] in Chemistry, a simple or elementary gas, discovered by Sir Humphrey Davy, of a yellowish-green colour, an astringent taste, and a disagreeable odour. Under great pressure it assumes first a liquid, and afterwards a solid form. It is very inflammable, and some metals take fire if exposed to it. Its most important property is its bleaching power. Its compounds are very numerous, and some of them are exceedingly valuable. Chloride of lime exercises a most powerful influence in disinfecting unwholesome atmospheres, and in purifying them from unpleasant odours. Chlorine has also been applied in cases of consumption; but it is a powerful poison.

CHLOROSIS, (chlorosis) s. [chloros, Gr.] in Medicine, the green sickness.

CHO COLATE, s. [Mexican,] a composition of cocoa, sugar, and vanilla. Chocolate-house, is a place where only chocolate is sold ready made, and resembling a coffee-house.

CHOCTAWS, and CHICKASAWS, which means "Flat-heads," formerly inhabited most of the country on the Mississippi, as far up as the Ohio; but now occupy only portions of the State of Mississippi, United States. They have partially renounced their wandering manner of life, and are reckoned to be in number about 24,000.

CHOICE, s. [choix, Fr.] a faculty of preferring one thing to another, including that it is in our power to have determined otherwise. Figuratively, the deferring or determining in behalf of a thing on reasonable motives; the thing chosen; that which merits a preference, or ought to be preferred; a variety of things offered to the mind or judgment, that it may select from thence those which are best. To make choice of, is to prefer or select one or more things from several which are proposed to the judgment or will.

CHOICE, a. comparative choicer, superlative choicest, [choisi, Fr.] of superior excellence; most valuable, or best; careful, frugal, opposed to prodigal or profuse.

CHOICELESS, a. without the power of choosing.

CHOICELEY, ad. with all the qualifications which should determine the will to give a preference.

CHOICENESS, s. that quality which determines the will to give it a preference; value, or superior excellence which claims a preference.

CHOIR, (choir) s. [chorus, Lat.] a band or company of singers; that part of the church where the chorists and clergy are placed.

To CHOK, v. a. [ceocan, Sax.] to stop up the passage of the throat so that a person cannot breathe; to kill by stopping a person's breath; to stop up any passage; to intercept or obstruct the motion of any thing. SYNON. Death brought on by a stopping of breath is the general idea of the words suffocated, smothered, choked; but that of suffocated implies an extinction of life, occasioned by being in a place where we cannot breathe; that of smothered, by being in a place where we are not suffered to breathe; that of choked, by having the wind-pipe closed.

CHOK, s. in Botany, the filamentous or capillary part of an artichoke, immediately covering the fleshy part of the bottom.

CHOKEDAMP, the name given by miners to carbonic acid gas, which collects at the bottom of mines, and often occasions death by suffocating those who are not aware of its presence.

CHOKEDAMP, s. in Gardening, a rough, harsh, unpalatable pear. Figuratively, any sarcasm that stops the mouth.

CHOKY, a. that cannot easily be swallowed, but is apt to stick in the passage, and stop the breath.

CHOLAGOGUES, (cholagogos) s. [chole and ago, Gr.] medicines which have the power of purging the bile.

CHOLER, (choler) s. [cholera, Lat.] in Anatomy, the bile; which abounding very much in angry persons, is used figuratively for anger.

CHOLERA, s. [chole and reo, Gr.] a somewhat dangerous disease, whose seat is the liver, and which arises in most cases from the temperature of the atmosphere, aided by the diffusion of the odours, &c. of decaying vegetable substances, as is usually the case in autumn. Where there has been insufficient or improper food, there it is so much the more dangerous. It consists in an excessive and diseased secretion of bile, and is accompanied by violent pain and spasms, with sickness and diarrhoea. It is common in this country, but is rarely fatal. Cholera Morbus, or pestilential cholera, is a disease of a very different kind from the English cholera, being a very fatal species of epidemic. Its origin appears to be Hindustan, and in its ravages it has proceeded chiefly in a westerly direction. It is attended by pain, cold, and cramp, vomiting and diarrhoea, and the blood seems to lose its serum and approach congestion; this is the fatal part of the disease. It is followed by a sort of recoil into high febrile action, which also is very frequently mortal. The quickening of the circulation, and prevention of the cold, is the best course to take. But no course has proved certainly successful.

CHOLERIC, (choleric) a. abounding with cholera. Figuratively, angry; easily provoked; passionate.

CHOLULA, a town in Mexico, near which is one of the largest of the Mexican pyramids, built of bricks, and having a flat summit. Cholula has many manufactures, and a population of about 20,000. Lat. 19. 3. N. Long. 98. 20. W.

To CHOOSE, (choose) v. a. preter. I chose, I have chosen or chose; [ceosan, Sax.] to prefer or take from several things offered; to give the preference to; to will; to elect, or pick out of a number. SYNON. When we would take a thing, we determine upon one, because we cannot have all. We choose by comparing things, because we would have the best. We do not always choose what we prefer; but we ever prefer that which we choose.

CHOOSEER, (chooseer) s. one who has the power of choosing; one who has a right to vote for a person who is candidate for any post; an elector.

To CHOP, v. a. preter. chopt, or I have chopt; [skappen, Belg.] to cut with a cleaver, axe, or chopping-knife, by a quick or sudden stroke; to devour or eat quickly, used with up—v. n. to change with a quick and unexpected motion; to appear as if cut, applying to the effects of cold or hard weather on the hands.

To CHOP, v. a. [ceapan, Sax.] to purchase by exchanging one thing for another; to take a thing back again which had been given in exchange; to be fickle in one's choice.

CHOP, s. a piece cut off by a sudden blow; a piece of meat cut off from a joint, generally applied to mutton; a chink, cleft, hole, or vacancy made by the warping of wood. Chop-house, a kind of cook's shop, where meat is ready dressed, so called from their dealing mostly in mutton chops.

CHOPPING, a. large or lusty, applied to infants. Chopping-block, a long thick block of wood, used by butchers to cleave or chop their meat upon. Chopping-knife, a large sort of knife, used for chopping or mincing meat.

CHOPPY, a. full of holes or clefts; appearing as if cut or chopt, owing to the effects of cold, applied to the hands, &c.

CHOPS, s. no singular, [a corruption of chaps], the mouth of a beast. Figuratively, used in contempt for the mouth of a man.

CHORAL, (choral) a. [chorus, Lat.] belonging to or composing a choir or chorus.

CHORD, (pronounced hard, kord, as if the h was dropped. When it implies a string made of hemp or silk, it is spelt cord; but when it retains its primitive sense, the h is retained;) s. [chorde, Gr.] the string of a musical instrument, by the vibration of which all sounds are excited, as by its divisions the several degrees of time are determined. Also, the combination of certain sounds in such a way as that their conjoint effect shall be in the highest degree harmonious, arising from commensurability of the rates of their vibrations. In Geometry, a right line, terminated at each end of its extremities in the circumference of a circle, but not passing through its centre. Line of chords, is one of the lines of the sector or plain scale; used in the measuring of an arch of any circle of which it is the radius. In Anatomy, a little nerve extending over the drum of the ear, supposed by some to vary and modify sounds that beat on the tympanum, in the same manner as the braces or strings stretched over the war-drum.

CHORDE, (chorde) s. a violent pain or contraction of the thumb.

CHOREA, s. [Gr.] in Medicine, the disease commonly known as St. Vitus's dance. Its symptoms are the loss of power of controlling the muscles of the limbs, &c., accompanied by general debility, and producing very serious effects on the mind. It is peculiarly a disease of youth, and more especially of females.

Various causes have been known to give rise to it, and occasionally it has proved fatal.

CHORION, (chorion) s. [chorea, Gr.] in Anatomy, a thick, strong, whitish membrane, covered with a great number of branches of veins and arteries, which is the outward membrane which wraps the fetus.

CHORISTER, (chorister) s. one who sings in a choir, generally applied to signify a singing boy. Figuratively, one who sings or makes part of a chorus. Beautifully applied to birds.

CHORLEY, Lancashire. It has large manufactures of cottons, fustians, calicoes, and muslins. The environs abound in mines of coal, lead, and alum, and with quarries of flag, slate, ashler, and mill-stone. It is seated on the rivulet Chor, near the river Yarrow. It is 203 miles from London. Markets, Tuesday and Saturday. Pop. 13,139.

CHOROGRAPHER, (chorografer) s. [choros and grapho, Gr.] he that describes particular regions or countries.

CHOROGRAPHICAL, a. descriptive of particular regions or countries; laying down the boundaries of countries.

CHOROGRAPHY, (chorography) s. the art of describing particular regions and countries, either in words or in maps.

CHORUS, (chorus) s. [Lat.] a number of singers joining in the same piece or tune. Figuratively, that part of a song in which a whole company join. In the ancient Greek drama, a group of persons present during a dramatic performance, supposed sometimes as by-standers, at others serving to introduce or prepare the audience for the introduction of any particular incident; and originally the only performers on the stage. They sang their part, and accompanied it with a kind of dance, whence their part of the theatre was called the orchestra.

CHOUGH, (chuff) s. [coo, Sax. choucas, Fr.] in Natural History, a bird like a jackdaw, but somewhat bigger, which frequents rocks by the sea-side.

CHOLE, (commonly pronounced and written jowl.) s. [gula, Lat.] the crop of a bird, adhering to the lower side of the bill, and descending by its throat, somewhat resembling a bag or satchel, and serving as a kind of first stomach, to prepare its food for digestion.

To CHOUSE, v. a. to deprive a person of any thing by plausible stories or false pretences.

CHOUSE, s. one who is a proper object for fraud; a bubble or tool; a trick or sham.

CHRISM (krisim) s. [chriso, Gr.] the act of anointing; applied generally to anointing as the initiation into some office, or rendering a person qualified for some profession in a scriptural sense.

CHRIST, (krist) s. one of the appellations given to our Lord and Saviour Jesus, signifying the same as Messiah, used by the Jews, and both importing the validity of his claim to the high character he assumed, as coming from God to accomplish the great work of man's redemption.

CHRISTCHURCH, Hants. A town trading in knit silk stockings, gloves, and watch-chains. Here is a good salmon fishery. It is seated at the confluence of the rivers Avon and Stour, with a small, barred, tide haven. It is 95 miles from London. Market, Monday. Pop. 5944.

CHRIST CHURCH, one of the colleges of Oxford university, founded by Cardinal Wolsey in 1524, and remodelled by Henry VIII. after the Cardinal's fall. It is a very noble institution, and is immediately connected with the bishopric of Oxford; its chapel being the cathedral church, and the dean and chapter having the sole management of all its affairs. It has a good library. Its buildings are on a very fine scale, and in the gate-way hangs the bell, famed as Great Tom of Oxford.

CHRIST'S COLLEGE, one of the colleges of the university of Cambridge, which was founded by the Countess of Richmond in 1505, and is not meanly endowed. The edifices are not of a very imposing character. Some writers of distinction have been trained here, foremost amongst whom stands John Milton.

To CHRISTEN, (kristen) v. a. [christian, Sax.] to initiate or enter into the church of Christ by the sacrament of baptism. Figuratively, to give a thing a name, alluding to the practice of naming persons at this ceremony.

CHRISTENDOM, (kristendome) s. [christendome, Sax.] the collective body of Christians; those parts wherein Christianity is professed.

CHRISTENING, (kristening) s. the ceremony of baptism.

CHRIST'S HOSPITAL, an educational institution of the city of London, founded by Edward VI., and enriched by subsequent bequests, so as to be one of the wealthiest of the public free-schools of England. It is under the government of the corporation of the city of London, who present to it annually as vacancies occur. The whole of the buildings which are on the N. side of Newgate Street, have been within the last 20 years rebuilt on a very noble scale. Connected with this school is an establishment for such as are too young to enter it, at Hertford.

CHRISTIAN, (kristian) s. [Christos, Gr.] a person who believes in Christ, and the principles of his religion. They who professed the religion of Jesus were at first termed Disciples; but the title of Christians was first given to those of Antioch, as appears from the Acts of the Apostles.

CHRISTIAN, (kristian) a. [christianus, Lat.] professing the Christian religion. The most Christian King was a title assumed by the kings of France; supposed by French antiquaries to have been given originally by Gregory the Great to Charles Martel. Christian name is that name which is given a person at his baptism. Christian era, the point of time from which Christianized nations reckon, and which is believed to be fixed four years before the actual birth of Christ.

CHRISTIANIA, the capital city of Norway, seated pleasantly on the shore of the N. extremity of the Gulf of Christiania. The streets are projected in straight lines, and at right angles to each other, and are uniformly 40 feet broad. It has an excellent harbour, and carries on a considerable trade. Its principal exports are tar, iron, copper, planks, deals, and alum. The saw-mills here are numerous; and it has a few manufactures. There is an excellent university here, with a good library. Lat. 59.55. N. Long. 10.48. E.

CHRISTIANITY, (kristianity) s. [christienté, Fr.] the religion inculcated by Christ and his apostles, and professed by Christians.

To CHRISTIANIZE, (kristianize) v. a. to convert a person; to convince him of the truth of Christianity; to make Christian.

CHRISTIANLY, ad. like a Christian.

CHRISTIANSAND, a town in the S. of Norway, standing on a bay in the N. part of the Skagerack. It has a good harbour, and is built with great regularity. Fishing, ship-building, and the export trade of fir-wood, are the chief occupations of the people. Its population is about 10,000. Lat. 58. 9. N. Long. 8. 19. E.

CHRISTINA, one of the most celebrated Swedish monarchs, daughter and successor of Gustavus Adolphus, who fell in the battle of Lützen, in 1632. Being then a mere child, she was trained as her father had directed, under the superintendence of the Chancellor Oxenstiern. This education was such as would have made a noble public man; but it was unfitted to produce a queen. Having arranged with considerable tact the affairs she found unsettled on attaining her majority, she devoted herself to art and learning, and had a court adorned with some of the greatest men, and rendered motley by the mixture of some of the least men of the day. She abdicated the throne in 1654, having been an unfettered sovereign for 10 years; and turned Romanist. The remainder of her life she spent at Rome and Paris, engaged in broils with Mazarine and the pope, and signaling herself by putting one of her attendants to death, at Fontainebleau, in virtue of her sovereign power, which she declared that she retained. She died in 1689, aged 62 years. A most favourable account of her is given by the Commonwealth's ambassador, Whitelocke, who visited her court in 1653 and 1654.

CHRISTMAS, (kristmas) s. the day on which the nativity of Christ is celebrated by most of the old churches. Christmas-box, a box in which money collected as gifts by servants at Christmas is kept. Figuratively, the collections made at Christmas.

CHRISTMAS-FLOWER, s. in Botany, the same with the black hellebore.

CHRISTMAS-ISLAND, nearly in the centre of the Pacific Ocean, is 60 miles in circumference, bounded by a reef of coral rocks, on the W. side of which is a bank of fine sand, extending a mile into the sea, and affording good anchorage. The soil is light and black, composed of decayed vegetables, the dung of birds, and sand. Here are a few cocoa-nut and other trees, shrubs, and plants, some birds, and plenty of fish and turtles. Lat. 1. 59. N. Long. 157. 32. W.

CHRISTOPHE, HENRI, the friend and coadjutor of Toussaint L'Ouverture in the liberation of St. Domingo, and afterwards king of part of the island. He was a cook at Cape Town, and by his intelligence and skill did good service to the new cause of freedom. On the treacherous seizure of Toussaint by Napoleon's orders, against whom the climate had waged a deadly warfare in his attempt to recover the island and re-enslave the blacks, Christophe joined Dessalines; afterwards he conspired against him, and became the president of the Haitian republic. Being opposed, however, by one of his fellow-conspirators, he assumed the title of king, but could not dispossess his opponent of his territory and title. He ruled very arbitrarily, and being deserted at last by his own court, shot himself in 1820, aged about 50 years.

CHRISTOPHER, s. in Botany, an herb with flowers in egg-shaped bunches, a slender, jointed, scored stem, white blossoms, and black berries, called also baneberries. It is found in woods and hedges, and flowers in May and June.

CHRISTOPHER'S, ST., or Sr. Kyr's, one of the Caribbee and Leeward Islands in the West India, about 18 leagues N. W. of Antigua. It is 15 miles in length, and 4 in breadth, and has high mountains in the middle, whence rivulets flow, which are of great use to the inhabitants. Between the mountains are rocks, precipices, and thick woods; and in the S. W. parts, hot, sulphurous springs at the bottom of them. The air is good, and the soil is light, sandy, and fruitful: they are, however, subject to hurricanes. The produce is chiefly sugar, cotton, ginger, indigo, and the tropical fruits. It belongs to the English, and is under the government of Antigua. Its population is about 30,000, both white and coloured. Basseterre is its chief town, and is in Lat. 17. 15. N. Long. 63. 14. W.

CHRIST'S THORN, s. in Botany, a large thorny shrub, a native of Africa, and introduced into this country in the end of the 16th century.

CHROMATES, s. in Chemistry, salts formed by the combination of any base with chromic acid.

CHROMATIC, (kromátic) a. [chroma, Gr.] in Painting, relating to colour. In Music, the chromatic scale, is the scale of semitones.

CHROMATICS, s. that part of the science of Optics by which the several properties of the colours of light and of natural bodies are illustrated and explained.

CHROME, CHROMIUM, s. in Chemistry, a metal, which, in a pure state, is of a yellowish white colour, and a distinct metallic lustre. It was discovered in red lead; and has since been found in composition with other metals, to which it imparts various colours. Many very useful colours for dyeing, painting on glass and porcelain, &c., &c., are formed with this base.

CHROMIC ACID, in Chemistry, belonging to chromium.

CHROMULE, s. in Organic Chemistry, and Botany, the coloured grains which give the green tinge to the leaves of plants.

CHRONIC, CHRONICAL, (krónich, krónikal) a. [chronos, Gr.] that endures or lasts a long time. In Medicine, applied to those diseases which are opposed to the acute, or such as soon come to a crisis.

CHRONICLE, (krónikle) s. [crónique, Fr.] a regular account of transactions in the order they happen; a. history.

To CHRONICLE, (krónikle) v. a. to insert in a history; to be recorded; to be made famous, or handed down to the memory of posterity.

CHRONICLER, (krónikler) s. one who writes a regular account of transactions, according to the order in which they were performed; an historian.

CHRONICLES, s. two books of the Old Testament, which contain an abridgment of sacred history, to the return of the Jews from the Babylonian captivity. The first book traces the genealogies of the Israelites from Adam, relates the death of Saul, and gives a brief account of the reign of David. The second traces the progress of the kingdom of Judah, its various revolutions, its period under Zedekiah, and the restoration of the Jews by Cyrus. These books are ascribed with some show of probability to Ezra; but it must be observed that there are many discrepancies between the narrative contained in them, and that of the Books of Kings; some, as the numbers of armies, are the mistakes of copyists; but others arise from the prevalence of various reports of the same event, which the different recorders of the events have used in the two books.

CHRONOGRAM, (krónogram) s. [chronos and grapho, Gr.] an inscription whose numeral letters compose some particular date.

CHRONOGRAMMATIST, s. a writer of chronograms.

CHRONOLOGER, CHRONOLOGIST, (krónológier, krónológist) s. [chronos and logos, Gr.] one who makes the settling the dates of former transactions his particular study.

CHRONOLOGICAL, (krónológical) a. relating to chronology, or the period in which any transactions happened.

CHRONOLOGICALLY, (krónológically) ad. in such a manner as is consistent with the rules of chronology.

CHRONOLOGY, (krónológý) s. the record of events simply with regard to the order of time in which they occurred.

CHRONOMETER, (krónómeter) s. [chronos and metreo, Gr.] an instrument used for the measuring of time, chiefly at sea. They are larger than a common watch, but made almost in the same manner, except that they have a detached escapement, and that the balance-wheel is composed of two different metals, which are affected by temperature in different degrees, and therefore it vibrates more equally. They are made with such accuracy as not to vary half a second in twelve months.

CHRY/SALIS, (krý/sális) s. [chrysoos, Gr.] in Natural History, the second state into which insects of the Lepidopterous class pass in the course of their development. In it they continue for various lengths of time, and during this time they have but little power of motion, and take no food. They are enveloped in a case, on the outside of which the outline of folded wings are seen, but no organs of locomotion or feeding; and within this they change gradually to their perfect state, when they burst this case, expand their wings, and perform the functions of their position in the animal kingdom.

CHRYSA/NTHEMUM, s. in Botany, the name of two tribes of flowers introduced from America and the Cape of Good Hope.

CHRY/SOLITE, (krý/solíte) s. [chrysoos and lithos, Gr.] a general term given by the ancients to all precious stones that had a cast of gold or yellow in their composition. Among moderns, a precious stone of a dusky green colour, with a cast of yellow.

CHRYSO/PRASUS, s. [chrysoos, Gr. and prásinus, Lat.] a precious stone mentioned in Scripture, of a yellow colour, approaching to green.

CHRY/SOSTOM, JOHN, one of the most distinguished Greek Fathers for the eloquence of his discourses and his writings. He studied law and philosophy at Antioch and Athens, but became an anchorite at an early age, and afterwards gained great renown at the former place for his preaching. He was afterwards made Archbishop of Constantinople, and devoted himself so earnestly to the realization of his notions of Christian perfection, that he gave great offence to the highest authorities, and was twice exiled from the city. He died in exile in 407, aged about 60 years. His writings are very voluminous, and of these his homilies are most admired; but his excellence as an expositor of Scripture, and expounder of Christian truth, are not very great.

CHUB, s. in Natural History, a non-spiny fish, or that which has no prickly fins, and only one on its back.

CHUBB, THOMAS, an English writer of the beginning of the last century, who has gained a place amongst the list of infidels. He seems to have been a self-taught man, of a very inquisitive disposition, and of Arian sentiments as it regards theology; and he wrote on some of the profoundest spiritual parts of the Christian scheme, with insufficient knowledge of the original records of Christianity, and without being aware that accurate logic is less required for right understanding of it, than a spiritual mind. So greatly have things changed since his time, that some of the points he contended for are maintained by writers of unquestioned piety now. He died in 1746, aged 68 years.

CHUBBED, a. Figuratively, having a large head, alluding to that of a chub.

To CHUCK, v. a. to make a noise like a partridge, or a hen calling her chickens.

To CHUCK, v. a. [choc, Fr.] to give a person a gentle chuck under the chin; to throw any thing with a peculiar jerk.

CHUCK, s. the noise of a hen; an expression of endearment; a cast, by which a person throws any thing from him in a peculiar way.

To CHUCKLE, v. n. [schaecken, Belg.] to laugh vehemently, so as to be out of breath.—v. a. to call like a hen. Figuratively, to fuddle or chuck under the chin.

CHU/DLEIGH, Devonshire. It is seated near the river Thames, and the market is good for corn and provisions. Chulleigh Rock, in the neighbourhood, is a bold perpendicular rock, having on one side a cleft, whence a stream of water rushes very impetuously. It is 183 miles from London. Market, Saturday. Pop. 2415.

CHUFF, s. a coarse, heavy, surly, and passionate clown.

CHUFFY, a. surly; morose.

CHU/FFILY, ad. surly; stomachfully.

CHU/LMLEIGH, Devonshire. It is seated on the river Dart, which, fetching a compass like a bow, surrounds three sides of it. It is but a small place, and the market is inconsiderable. It is 193 miles from London. Market, Wednesday. Pop. 1647.

CHUM, s. [chom, Amoric.] a chamber-fellow; a term used in the universities.

CHUMP, s. a thick, heavy piece of wood, less than a block.

CHU/QUISA/CA, one of the names by which the capital of Bolivia, S. America, is known. See LA PLATA.

CHURCH, s. [kurikos, Gr. circe, A. Sax.] a word used in many different significations, the confounding of which has caused many grievous practical errors amongst men. 1. It means the collective body of all that are or will be saved, viewed as a unity, as God only can regard them. This is the church of God in Christ. 2. It is used for the aggregate of such as truly believe in Christ, of whatever communion they may be, at any time on the earth. 3. It signifies any particular congregation, or association of Christians, who unite together for worship and edification, the observance of the Lord's supper, and vital and practical testimony of the truth of Christ to other men; presided over by ministers of its own choosing, and maintaining itself and its discipline according to the spirit and example of the New Testament. 4. It is applied to incorporations of congregations into distinct parties, or bodies of professed Christians, as the Church of Rome, the Lutheran Church, &c. 5. It is used to mean all who, in some particular way, or who in any way, openly profess themselves disciples of Christ. This is usually called the visible or Catholic Church. In this sense also it includes all who have openly belonged to any particular communion, according to some writers. 6. In some countries it signifies that denomination which is established by law, in opposition to other denominations which are simply tolerated, as the Church in England, the Kirk in Scotland. 7. It is employed as a designation of the ministers of all grades, as an ecclesiastical class, or clergy, in opposition to the laity, the non-ecclesiastical class, in some communions. 8. It means a certain kind of building specially and solely set apart for the celebration of divine service, in some denominations, and distinguished from chapels, and into several orders according to the form, use, &c. &c. Church militant, and Church triumphant, are titles of distinction made by some between the faithful on earth and those in heaven; to which the Romanists add, the Church patient, or the faithful in purgatory. Church and state, is a phrase employed to designate the two great institutions which, according to some, are essential parts of any perfect constitution. It is used, however, chiefly by such as seek the sanction of sacred pretences for secular ends; and as the watch-word of a party, rather than as the expression of any clearly apprehended idea. An established Church, is any communion which is specially protected, patronized, supported, or maintained by the law of any land, whether its forms and formularies be under the same supervision and sanction or not.

To CHURCH, v. a. to read the peculiar service of returning thanks to God for a happy delivery, with the person who is recovered from child-bed.

CHURCHILL, CHARLES, one of the poets of England, who lived during the last century; and beginning his mature life as a clergyman, ended it as a debauchee. His writings are mostly satirical, and do not lack fire of imagination, nor force of expression, whilst there is a generosity of sentiment about them that has been mistaken by many for the genuine poetic spirit. He died in 1765, aged 34 years.

CHURCHMAN, s. one who professes the religion or mode of worship by law established; one of the clergy.

CHURCH-RATES, s. taxes levied by the vote of a vestry-meeting on the parishioners, according to an assessment, for the prospective expenses of maintaining the celebration of service in the churches of the English Establishment, and for the repair, &c., of the building, &c., except the chancel.

CHURCH-STREET, s. Shropshire. It is seated between two hills, and is but a small place, though the market is good for corn. It is 153 miles from London. Market, Thursday. Pop. 1604.

CHURCH-WARDEN, s. an officer elected yearly, in Easter week, by the minister and parishioners of every parish, to look after the church, church-yard, and the things belonging to them; and also to observe the morals, and attendance at church, of the parishioners.

CHURCH-YARD, s. the ground adjoining to a church, where-in the dead are buried.

CHURL, s. [coorl, Sax.] a clown, or unpolished countryman. Figuratively, a morose, surly, or ill-bred person; a niggard, or a miser.

CHURLISH, a. brutal, rude, ignorant, ill-bred, uncivil, sour, selfish, avaricious.

CHURLISHLY, ad. in a rude, uncivil, unkind, or brutal manner.

CHURLISHNESS, s. rude, obustinate, and surly behaviour.

CHURN, s. [kern, Belg.] a vessel in which cream, by violent or long agitation, is turned into butter.

To CHURN, v. a. [kernen, Belg.] to make butter by frequent and continual motion.

CHURN-OWL, s. in Natural History, the common name of the bird called the Goat-sucker.

CHURNSTAFF, s. in Botany, a species of spurge, called also wartwort, with wedge-shaped leaves, and yellowish green blossoms, found in cultivated places and gardens, and flowers in July.

CHURRWORM, s. in Natural History, an insect that turns about nimbly, called also a fan-cricket.

CHUSAN, the name of an island on the E. coast of China, about 30 miles in length, and 6 in width, with a good harbour, and a most delightful climate. It is about 50 miles from Ningpo, and was formerly the centre of European traffic, till the jealousy of the government removed it to Canton, as farther from Peking. Some smaller islands around this are called by the general name of Chusan. The capital is Tinghae.

To CHUSE. See CHOOSE.

CHYLACEOUS, (chylaceus) a. consisting of chyle; partaking of the qualities of chyle; resembling chyle.

CHYLE, (chyle) s. [chylus, Gr.] in Physiology, a milky insipid liquor, consisting of nutritive particles, extracted from dissolved aliments of every kind, and by a special set of vessels added to the blood.

CHYLIFICATION, (chylifikation) s. the act of converting the nutritive parts of aliments into chyle.

CHYLIFACTIVE, CHYLOPŒTIC, (chylifictive, chylopoëtik) a. [chylus, Gr and facio, Lat. and poiesis, Gr.] having the power of making chyle; endowed with the quality of converting aliment into chyle.

CHYLOUS, (chylous) a. consisting of chyle, resembling or partaking of the qualities of chyle.

CHYME, s. [chymos, Gr.] the product of the action of the gastric juice on the various aliments in the stomach.

CIBARIOUS, a. [cibus, Lat.] proper for food; partaking of the qualities of food.

CIBBER, COLLEY, one of the English poet laureates, and a dramatist and actor in the last century. He occupied a conspicuous place in the fashionable world of his day, and has a small renown in second-rate characters, which he usually took on the stage. His dramas are ranked after the second-rate authors of that class, and his poems are almost wholly unknown. He died in 1757, aged 86 years.

CIBOL, s. [ciboule, Fr.] a small sort of onion used in salads.

CICATRICE, CICATRIX, s. [Lat.] a little seam or elevation of callous flesh, rising and remaining on the skin after the healing of a wound; a scar.

CICATRISANT, CICATRISIVE, a. in Medicine, applied to such applications as are desiccative, aid nature to repair the skin of a wound, and form a scar.

CICATRIZATION, s. in Surgery, the act of healing a wound; the state of being healed or skinned over.

To CICATRIZE, v. a. to apply such medicines to wounds as heal and skin them over; to heal and skin a wound over.

CICELY, s. in Botany, a sort of herb, called also fool's parsley, or lesser hemlock.

CICERO, MARCUS TULLIUS, one of the most eminent statesmen and philosophers of Rome, and her noblest orator, lived just at the culminating period of the true greatness of the city, and saw the beginning of her decline. In his younger days he enjoyed the assistance of the best teachers of rhetoric and philosophy of the times, which completed the advantages of an excellent home education. His first essays were in poetry, a walk in which he failed so signally, as to be the butt of the satirists for attempting it. He no sooner, however, commenced the work of advocacy, than he rose to the highest rank. Having set out on his political career, he received a severe lesson in finding that his absence from Rome in his province, Sicily, where he had most diligently bought up corn for the city, had rendered him almost forgotten. From the questorship he advanced to the ædileship without difficulty, and in his 42nd year he was chosen consul. Not being of patrician blood, he had sided with the commonalty to this time, and had had to contend against the reproach of being a new man. He now veered round to the aristocratic party, and was marked for the hostility of his former friends. He distinguished his consulship by the prominent part he took in the suppression of Catiline's conspiracy. The next event of his life was his exile, which he chose in preference to exposing himself to the open attacks of one of his hottest opponents. From this he returned after a year, and was received with almost the honours of a triumph. He never gave up his forensic engagements, and at this time produced some of his finest speeches. In the struggle between Julius Cæsar and Pompey, Cicero sided with the latter; and after his cheaply purchased distinctions in his new province, Cilicia, gained an eminence that made it difficult for him to temporize without detection and danger; but the victory of Cæsar, and his own overtures made to the orator, restored him to his composure for a time. Domestic griefs and authorship filled up his time to the assassination of Cæsar, in which he was implicated by Brutus's appeal to him at the time. To the party of Octavianus, afterwards Augustus Cæsar, he gave his help, and uttered his famed Philippics against Antony; but his hopes proved futile, the rivals effected a compromise, and Cicero's head was part of the purchase-money his friend Octavianus paid. He was taken in an attempt at flight, and killed, in 43 B. C., aged 63 years. The character of this great man has little in it worthy of admiration; he was profoundly selfish and covetous, and a vain-glorious coward. But his writings are invaluable. His letters record the events of the most perplexed part of Roman history with the particularity and regularity of a newspaper. His Orations are beyond praise. His philosophical writings, though containing nothing new, are most beautiful developments of the metaphysics and ethics of the Academy. His political works are not without their use, even to such as may reasonably withhold their trust from his principles. His poetry he had better not have written. Yet he has not lacked panegyrists and imitators, even of the most lamentable features of his conduct.

CICHORACEOUS, (sikardecous) a. [cichoreum, Lat.] having the qualities of succory.

CICUTA, s. [Lat.] in Botany, hemlock, a poisonous waterplant, but not so fatal as the true hemlock.

CID, the name of the hero of a famous old Spanish epic, given him by the Moors of Spain, against whom he waged a ceaseless war. His name was really, Rodrigo Diaz de Bivar, and his adventures have been magnified and multiplied in the poem as much as is customary in such compositions. He lived in the 11th century; the epic was written in the course of the next.

CIDER, s. [cidre, Fr.] a brisk cool liquor, prepared from the juice of apples, made vinous by fermentation.

CIDERKIN, s. the liquor made of the muck or gross matter of the apples, after the cider is pressed out, by the addition of boiling water, which is sufficed to infuse for 48 hours.

CIDEVANT, ad. [Fr.] heretofore, before, formerly. A word not much used.

CIGAR, a. a small roll of leaf tobacco, twisted tightly at one end, used for smoking. It was in this form that Columbus first observed the use of this pleasant amongst the aborigines of the W. Indian island which he first discovered. Cheroot, is a small roll of leaf tobacco, open at each end, used for smoking. Cheroots are chiefly made in the E. Indies, cigars in the W. Indies.

CIGARETTO, a. a small roll of fragments of tobacco leaf, in thin paper, or thin vegetable tissue, used for smoking in Spain, Mexico, and S. America.

CILIA, s. [Lat.] in Anatomy, the stiff hairs wherewith the eyes are guarded; the eye-lashes. In Physiology, the name given to the minute, hair-like processes, capable of motion, which are discovered on many animal bodies, especially of the Infusorial order, which seem to have a conspicuous part assigned them in the economy of their life.

CILIARY, a. [cilium, Lat.] in Anatomy, belonging to the eyelids.

CILICIA, a district of Asia Minor, lying on the Mediterranean, opposite Cyprus, and bounded by Pamphylia, Lycaonia, Cappadocia, and Syria. It consisted of the plain between Mount Taurus and the sea, and was a fertile and productive region. The rivers Pyramus, Cydnus, Sarus, and Calycadnus, watered it. Its chief towns were Tarsus, of no mean note, Issus, Soli, Seleucia, Selinus, &c.

CILICIOUS, a. [cilicium, Lat.] made of hair.

CIMABUE, GIOVANNI, a pupil of the Greek painters at Florence, an artist of little ability, but regarded as the father of painting amongst the moderns: he died in 1300, aged about 60 years.

CIMAROSA, DOMENICO, a celebrated Italian composer of the last century, who produced operas at Naples, Petersburg, and Venice, and is now known by his Il Matrimonio Segreto. He died in 1801, aged 74 years.

CIMETER, s. [cimitarra, Span.] a sort of sword, used by the Turks, short, heavy, flat, with but one edge, and curved towards the point. Sometimes spelt scymetar, or scimetar.

CIMMERIAN, a. [cimmerii, Lat.] dark, dismal, gloomy, a term derived from the Scythians, whose country was presumed to be full of woods, and covered with continual clouds, that but very little sun was seen among them.

CIMON, the son of the famous Athenian general Miltiades, and rival of his father's fame, as to his public deeds, not as to his private character. He took Eion from the Persians, and gained the victory of the Eurymedon over them. He was banished by the citizens because he seemed to be too friendly with Sparta.

He was recalled, effected a truce with Sparta, and went out in aid of the king of Egypt with the Athenian fleet. Before Cimon in Cyprus he died, in 449 B. C., aged about 50 years. He was a thorough aristocrat in sentiment, and did much to produce dissension and after-trouble in his native city, by raising up a party of nobles, who, by their wealth and their vices, obstructed the course of Athenian glory. He spent much of his wealth in adorning the city, which, together with his military success, gained him a popularity that overlooked his bad politics and his worse character.

CINCIONA, s. in Botany, the generic name for the plants, one of which yields the Peruvian bark.

CINCINNATI, the largest city of Ohio, United States. It stands on the river Ohio, and has, in addition to the river, the Miami canal, which communicates with Lake Erie, to give it importance as a port. It is pleasantly situated in a valley skirted by hills, and is regularly laid out, the streets and lanes crossing each other at right angles. It is generally well built, and has some fine public edifices, as the churches, the court-house, the bank, &c. There is a college here, having academical, medical, and law departments; and also a Medical College, and College of Professional Teachers. In addition to these is the Athenæum, a Romanist institution; Lane Seminary, which has an excellent library; and the Mechanics' Institute and Lyceum, two institutions for the benefit of the citizens. It is the emporium of the W., and continually rising in extent and importance. It is 492 miles from Washington. Pop. 46,338.

CINCTURE, s. [cingo, Lat.] a girdle or clothing worn round the body. Figuratively, an enclosure.

CINDER, s. [cindre, Fr.] coals burnt till most of their sulphur is consumed, reduced to a porous cake, and quenched before they turn to ashes; a red-hot coal that has ceased to flame.

CINERATION, s. [cineres, Lat.] in Chemistry, the act of reducing a body to ashes.

CINERITIOUS, (cineritious) a. [cinerius, Lat.] having the form of, or resembling ashes.

CINGLE, s. [cingo, Lat.] a girth for a horse.

CINNABAR, s. [cinnabaris, Lat.] is an ore of quicksilver, moderately compact, heavy, and of an elegant, striated, red colour. In this ore the quicksilver is blended with sulphur, which is commonly no more than one part in six, in proportion to the mercury. It is found lodged in a bluish indurated clay, though sometimes in a greenish talcy stone.

CINNAMON, s. [cinnamomum, Lat.] the bark of an aromatic tree allied to the laurels, growing in Ceylon and other parts of Asia. Cinnamon water, is made by distilling the bark, first infused in barley-water, in spirit of wine, or white wine.

CINQUE, (sink) s. [Fr.] in Gaming, a five on dice, &c.

CINQUEFOIL, (sinkfoil) s. [cinquefeuille, Fr.] a kind of five-leaved clover.

CINQUE-PORTS, [Fr.] five havens that lie on the east part of England towards France, thus called by way of eminence, on account of their superior importance, as having been thought, by our kings, to merit a particular regard for their preservation against invasions. They have a particular policy, and are governed by a keeper, with the title of lord-warden of the Cinque-ports. They are Hastings, Dover, Hithe, Romney, and Sandwich, to which Winchelsea and Rye have since been added.

CIPHER, (sifer) s. [zifra, Ital.] an arithmetical character or number marked thus 0; though of no value itself, in integers it increases the value of figures, when set on the right hand, and decreases them in the same proportion, when set before them, in decimal fractions; a collection or assemblage of letters consisting of the initials of a person's name, interwoven together, and engraved on plate, or painted, instead of escutcheons, on coaches; certain characters made use of by persons to conceal the subject they write about from others; the key to explain any private characters. A mere cipher, a person of no importance or interest.

TO CIPHER, (sifer) v. n. to perform the operations of arithmetic.

CIRCARS, THE N., a province of British India, lying on the Bay of Bengal, and bounded by the Carnatic, and Cuttack, on S. and N.; and separated by a chain of mountains on the W. from Orissa, the dominions of the Nizam, &c. It is nearly 500 miles in length, and not quite 100 in width. It has a few small streams, and the Godavery and Kistna. The country is fertile where it has been cultivated, but forests and jungle are still abundant; the usual products of agriculture are obtained here, and good timber. The inhabitants are wholly Hindu, and are in number about 4,000,000. The chief places are Vizagapatam, Chicacole, Ellore, &c. &c.

CIRCASSIA, a territory on the N. side of Mount Caucasus, extending from the Black Sea to the Caspian, and bounded on the N. by the Terec and the Kuban rivers. This country is very mountainous, having fertile strips of ground along the valleys, on which the inhabitants rear grain, and pasture their horses and cattle. The people are nominally subject to Russia, but have never been subdued, and maintain a constant war of out-posts against them. They are Mohammedans, and sufficiently destitute of the habits of civilized life. The beauty of the women has long been proverbial. There are no towns, the people living in semi-nomadic style.

CIRCLE, s. [circulus, Lat.] in Geometry, a plane figure, formed by one line, and having all lines drawn to it from a point in the middle equal. Figuratively, a curve line, which being continued, ends in the point from whence it began, having all its parts equidistant from a point in the middle called the centre; but this is properly the periphery or circumference of a circle. Circles are regarded as divisible into 360 degrees for purposes of measurement. A Great Circle of the sphere is that whose plane passes through its centre, and whose centre is the same with that of the sphere, dividing the globe into two equal parts. A Lesser Circle is that which divides the globe into two unequal parts, as the tropics, parallels of latitude, &c. A Primitive Circle is that described on the plane of the projection. A Right Circle is that whose plane stands at right angles with the plane of the projection, and is a diameter of the primitive. An Oblique Circle is that whose plane inclines to the plane of the projection, or makes oblique angles therewith. Parallel Circles are those lesser circles of the sphere, whose planes are parallel to the planes of any great circles; thus the circles of latitude on the globe are called the parallels of latitude, because parallel to the plane of the equator. An Astronomical Circle is an instrument to measure the distance of a heavenly body, either from the horizon, or the zenith. The circumference or extremities of any round body; an assembly of people forming a ring; a company; a series of things following one another alternately. Circles are the names of the political divisions of some of the states of Central Europe.

To CIRCLE, v. a. to move round any thing; to surround, encompass, or enclose; to confine or keep together.

CIRCLED, part. having the form of a circle.

CIRCLET, s. [diminutive of circle,] a circle; an orb.

CIRCLING, a. surrounding or encompassing like a circle.

CIRCUIT, (skrit) s. [circulus, from circueo, Lat.] the moving round any thing; the motion or revolution of a planet round its orbit; a space enclosed within a circle; the circumference of any thing; the space which any thing measures in going round it; a ring, a crown, or that which encircles any thing. Also the progress which the judges take twice every year through the several counties of England and Wales, to hold courts, and administer justice. Hence England is divided into six circuits, viz. the Home circuit, Norfolk, Midland, Oxford, Western, and Northern circuit.

To CIRCUIT, v. n. to move round, or in a circle.

CIRCUITEER, CIRCUITER, s. one that travels in a circuit; that which moves in an orbit.

CIRCUTION, s. [circueo, Lat.] the act of going round about. Figuratively, circumlocution; comprehension of argument.

CIRCULAR, a. [circularis, Lat.] round, in the form of a circle. Figuratively, succession, in which that which proceeds first returns again. Circular letter, a letter addressed to several persons who have the same interest in some common affair, called usually, by abbreviation, simply a circular. Circular lines, such straight lines as are divided by the divisions made in the arch of a circle. Circular sailing, that which is performed in the arch of a great circle.

CIRCULARLY, ad. in the form of a circle; with a circular motion.

To CIRCULATE, v. n. [circulus, Lat.] to move in a circle; to be in use, so as to be constantly changing its owner; to be dispersed.—v. a. to put about.

CIRCULATION, s. the act of moving in a circle; a motion whereby a body returns in a curved line to the point from which it set out; a series or succession, in which things preserve the same order, and return to the same state. The circulation of the blood, is the motion of the blood as propelled from the heart through the arteries to every part of the frame, charged with the materials for restoring the waste of the system, and returning through the veins, to be propelled from the other side of the heart, round a shorter course, in which it receives the chyle, and passing through the lungs, is aerated, and on its return to the heart is sent forth again on the first-named circuit. See HARVEY. Circulation of the sap in vegetables, the motion of the fluids imbibed by the roots, by a force named by naturalists, endosmose, through the interior structure of the plant, to the leaves, &c., and back to the root, by the bark. In Chemistry, it is an operation whereby the same vapour, raised by fire, falls back, by which means it is distilled several times, and reduced to its most subtle parts.

CIRCULATORY, s. in Chemistry, a glass vessel, consisting of two parts, luted on each other, wherein the finest parts mount to the top, and finding no passage, fall down again.

CIRCUMAMBIENCY, s. [circum ambo, Lat.] the act of encompassing or surrounding.

CIRCUMAMBIENT, part. [circumambiens, Lat.] compassing a thing round; encircling; enclosing; surrounding; encompassing.

To CIRCUMAMBULE, v. n. [circum ambulo, Lat.] to walk round about.

To CIRCUMCISE, (skrumise) v. a. [circum and cedo, Lat.] to cut off the prepuce or foreskin.

CIRCUMCISION, s. the ceremony of religious initiation amongst the Jews, enjoined on them in the law, after the example of Abraham. It was observed on the 8th day, with great form. It is still practised by them, and by the Mohammedans, and a few other sects.

CIRCUMFERENCE, s. [circum and fero, Lat.] the periphery of a circle; the line including and surrounding any thing; the space enclosed in a circle; the extremities of a round body. Figuratively, any thing of a round form.

To CIRCUMFERENCE, v. a. to include in a circle; to circumscribe, or confine.

CIRCUMFERENTOR, s. an instrument used by surveyors in taking angles, consisting of a brass index with sights, and a compass, and mounted on a stand with a ball and socket.

CIRCUMFLEX, s. [circumflecto, Lat.] alluding to the shape of the accent, an accent marked ( ) to represent the union of the acute and grave accents on the same syllable.

CIRCUMFLUENCE, s. [circumfluo, Lat.] an enclosure made by water flowing round any thing.

CIRCUMFLUENT, part. flowing round any thing, or enclosing any thing with water.

CIRCUMFLOUS, a. envolving with water.

To CIRCUMFUSE, v. a. [circumfundo, Lat.] to pour round; to diffuse, or spread every way.

CIRCUMFUSILE, a. that may be poured, diffused, or spread round any thing.

CIRCUMFUSION, s. the act of spreading round.

To CIRCUMGYRATE, v. a. [circum and gyro, Lat.] to roll round.

CIRCUMJACENT, part. [circum and jaceo, Lat.] lying round any thing; bordering on any side; contiguous.

CIRCUMLOCUTION, s. [circum and loquor, Lat.] the expressing a sentiment in a number of words; a paraphrase; an indirect way of expressing a person's sentiments.

CIRCUMMURED, a. [circum and murus, Lat.] encompassed or surrounded with a wall.

CIRCUMNAVIGABLE, a. [circumnavigabilis, Lat.] that may be sailed round.

To CIRCUMNAVIGATE, v. a. [circum and navigo, Lat.] to sail round.

CIRCUMNAVIGATION, s. the sailing round any tract of land.

CIRCUMNAVIGATOR, s. one that sails round.

CIRCUMPOLAR, a. [circum and polus, Lat.] in Astronomy, applied to such stars near the north pole, which move round it without setting, as viewed from any particular place north of the equator; and vice versa.

CIRCUMPOSITION, s. [circum and positio, Lat.] the act of setting or placing any thing in a ring or circle.

CIRCUMROTATION, s. [circum and roto, Lat.] the act of whirling a thing round with a motion like that of a wheel; the state of a thing whirled round.

To CIRCUMSCRIBE, v. a. [circum and scribo, Lat.] to enclose in certain lines or limits.

CIRCUMSCRIPTION, s. the determination to a particular figure; limitation, restraint, confinement, boundary.

CIRCUMSCRIPTIVE, a. that determines the shape or figure of a body.

CIRCUMSPECT, a. [circum and specio, Lat.] cautious; a person attentive to the effects of his actions, and who weighs the dangers and difficulties with which they are attended.

CIRCUMSPECTION, CIRCUMSPECTNESS, s. looking round about one; a cautious or wary conduct, wherein a person weighs the dangers and difficulties with which his actions are attended, and endeavours to guard against them. SYNON. To be well with the world requires circumspection, when we are speaking before those with whom we are not acquainted; consideration for people of rank and quality; and regard toward those with whom we are interested.

CIRCUMSPECTIVE, a. looking round about; taking all the measures which may prevent a disappointment, or secure a person from any maliciousness of an enemy.

CIRCUMSPECTLY, ad. in a cautious, discreet, and prudent manner; guarding against accidents, and precluding any disappointments.

CIRCUMSTANCE, s. [circumstance, Fr.] an event. Used in the plural for the sum of the things which make up the state or condition of a person; bad circumstances, signifying distress or poverty, and good circumstances, riches or affluence.

To CIRCUMSTANCE, v. n. to be placed in a particular light; to be attended with peculiar incidents.

CIRCUMSTANT, part. [circum and sto, Lat.] standing round, surrounding.

CIRCUMSTANTIAL, (circumstantial) a. accidental, opposite to essential; minute, particular, wherein all the different relations and attendant reasons of an action are enumerated.

CIRCUMSTANTIALITY, (circumstantiality) s. the state of a thing, with all the peculiarities attending it.

CIRCUMSTANTIALLY, ad. according to circumstance; minutely, exactly.

To CIRCUMSTANTIATE, (circumstantiate) v. a. to place a thing or action in a particular situation or relation, with respect to the accidents which attend or determine its quality.

To CIRCUMVALLATE, v. a. [circum and vullo, Lat.] to enclose or surround with trenches and fortifications.

CIRCUMVALLATION, s. the art of trenching or fortifying a camp or place with works. In Fortification, a line or trench with a parapet thrown up by the besiegers, encompassing all their camp, to defend it against any force that may attempt to relieve the place.

To CIRCUMVENT, v. a. [circum and venio, Lat.] to overreach a person by superior craft; to deceive or impose upon by specious pretences and secret artifices.

CIRCUMVENTION, s. [circumventio, Lat.] the imposing upon or overreaching a person by secret artifices and subtlety.

To CIRCUMVEST, v. a. [circum and vestio, Lat.] to clothe all over with a garment; to clothe, or surround with a garment.

To CIRCUMVOLVE, v. a. [circum and volvo, Lat.] to roll round; to roll any body in an orbit or circle.

CIRCUMVOLUTION, s. [circumvolutus, Lat.] the act of rolling round; the state of being round; the thing rolled round.

CIRCUS, s. [Lat.] in Antiquity, a spacious building of an oblong or oval figure, erected to exhibit shows and games to the people. The Roman Circus had a low wall or fence running part of the way along the centre, and adorned with obelisks, statues, &c.

CIRENCESTER, usually called CIRESTER, Gloucestershire. A town formerly surrounded by walls, of which some vestiges are yet visible. It has manufactures of cutlery ware, carpeting, wool-combing, wool-stapling, and yarn-making, and a communication with Stroudwater, from which it derives great advantage. It is seated on the river Burn, and near it is the Royal Agricultural College. It is 89 miles from London. Markets, Monday and Friday. Pop. 6014.

CIRRUS, s. in Natural History, a sort of beard which grows on the under jaw of certain fishes. Also the name given to that peculiar form of cloud commonly called the curl-cloud. The combination of this with the huge piles of mountainous-looking clouds is called cirrocumulus; and with the long horizontal clouds, cirrostratus.

CIST, s. [cista, Lat.] a case; a covering. In Medicine, the coat or enclosure of a tumor.

CISTED, a. enclosed in a bag or membrane.

CISTERICIANS, in Church History, a religious order founded in the eleventh century, by St. Robert, a Benedictine, at Cîteaux, France. They became so powerful, that they governed almost all Europe, both in spirituals and temporals. Their observances were characterized by great austerity in diet; they lay upon straw beds, in their tunics and cowls; they rose at midnight to prayer; they spent the day in labour, reading, and prayer; and in all their exercises observed a continual silence. The habit of their order is a white cassock and gown, with a black scapulary and hood, and girt with a woollen girdle. The nuns wear a white tunic, and a black scapulary and girdle. See BERNARDINES.

CISTERN, a. [cisterna, Lat.] a receptacle for water or rain, placed in yards or kitchens for family use; a large reservoir of water, or enclosed fountain.

CISTUS, s. in Botany, a genus of plants, of which species five are natives of England, viz. the hoary, annual, narrow-leaved, sunflower, and dwarf cistus. All these species flower in June or July.

CITY, s. [a contraction of citizen,] one who lives in the city, opposed to one at the court. A word of contempt.

CITADEL, s. [citadelle, Fr.] a fort, or place fortified with four, five, or six bastions, built sometimes in the most eminent part of a city, and sometimes only near a city, in order to defend the city against enemies, and to keep the inhabitants in their obedience.

CITALE, s. a reproof, or impeachment; a summons, or a call to appear in a court.

CITATION, s. [citatio, Lat.] in Law, a summons to appear before any ecclesiastical judge, on some cause relating to the church; quoting or mentioning an author's name; the passage quoted from an author; a mention, detail, enumeration.

CITATORY, a. having the power of a summons, or used as a summons.

To CITE, v. a. [citō, Lat.] to summons or call a person to appear in a court of justice; to enjoin, or call on a person with authority; to quote.

CITER, s. one who summons a person to appear in a court; one who quotes a passage from an author.

CITESS, a. a city woman.

CITHARA, CYTHERN, s. [cithara, Lat.] a kind of harp, a musical instrument used by the ancients, the precise form or structure of which is not known: at first it had only 3 strings, but the number was increased afterwards to 8, 9, and lastly to 24; it was played upon with a plectrum or quill, like the lyre.

CITIZEN, s. [citoyen, Fr.] a person who is free of a city, one who carries on a trade in a city, opposed to a gentleman or soldier. Politically, a member of a state who has a voice in its affairs; more accurately, a member of a republic or democracy.

CITRATES, s. in Chemistry, salts formed by the combination of any base with the citric acid.

CITRIC, a. in Chemistry, belonging to lemons and other similar fruits.

CITRINE, a. [citrus, Lat.] lemon-coloured; of a dark yellow.

CITRINE, s. [citrinus, Lat.] a species of crystal of an extremely beautiful yellow. It is generally clear, fine, and free from flaws; it is very plentiful in the West Indies, oftentimes set in rings by our jewellers, and may be mistaken for a topaz.

CITRON, s. [citrus, Lat.] a fruit which comes from a hot country, and is in smell, taste, and shape somewhat like a lemon. Citron-water, or Aqua-citæ, is distilled with the rind of citrons.

CITY, s. [ciuitas, Fr.] a large town enclosed with a wall; strictly, and in Law, a town corporate, that hath a bishop and a cathedral church; the inhabitants of a city. In London, it applies to that part which is properly London, in distinction from the adjoining parishes and suburbs.

CITY, a. living in a city; like a citizen; with vain parade or ostentatious affluence.

CIUDA'D RODRIGO, a. a fortified town of Spain, on the Portuguese frontier. It has a good cathedral, and an ecclesiastical college. Its population is above 5000. Lat. 40. 50. N. Long. 6. 20. W.

CIVET, s. [civet, Fr.] in Natural History, an animal of the weasel kind, which inhabits several parts of Africa and India, and produces the drug called civet.

CFVIC, a. [civis, Lat.] that relates to civil matters, opposed to military. A civic crown, among the Romans, was made of oaken leaves, and given to those that had saved the life of a citizen.

CIVIL, a. [civilis, from civis, Lat.] that belongs to a city, or the government thereof. Civil architecture, in that science, is that department which takes cognizance of public and private buildings, not of the ecclesiastical and military kind. Civil war is that which citizens or people of the same nation wage with one another. Civil death is that which is inflicted by the laws, in opposition to natural. Joined with power or majesty, that which is exercised on the principles of government, opposite to military. Civil law is that which is opposed to the common, and implies the Roman law, contained in the institutes, digests, and code. Civil year, that which is established by law in any country, and is so called to distinguish it from the natural year, which is determined by the revolution of the heavenly bodies. Civil List, the account of hereditary revenues of the crown of Great Britain, derived from various sources, out of which the expenses of the royal household, &c. were defrayed; now changed to a charge on the Consolidated Fund. Figuratively, civilized; humane; well-bred; complaisant; gentle; beautifully applied to inanimate things.

CIVILIAN, s. [civilis, Lat.] one who professes and makes the civil law his peculiar study.

CIVILIZATION, s. a law which renders a criminal process civil, by turning an information into an inquest, &c. That state of mankind, which is the highest to which it can be raised by commerce and education. It is opposed to barbarism. Also, the influence exerted on men by commerce and education; and in this sense is opposed to evangelization, which is the influence of the Christian religion.

CIVILITY, s. politeness; a polite address attended with humane and benevolent actions; a kindness bestowed in a polite manner.

To CIVILIZE, v. a. to instruct in such sciences as tend to render men humane.

CIVILIZER, s. one that reforms the savage manners of barbarians, and renders them both humane and polite.

CIVILLY, ad. in a manner agreeable to the principles of government and the rules of society; in a kind, condescending, good-natured, and genteel manner.

CIVITA VE'CHIA, a sea-port in the Campagna di Roma, belonging to the Papal States. It has a tolerably good harbour, with a lighthouse, and has a considerable trade. It is defended by a citadel, which is the residence of a military governor. It is 38 miles from Rome. Population about 10,000.

CIVITA VE'CHIA, or MELITA, a town in Malta, situated on a hill in the centre of the island, and strongly fortified. It is the see of a bishop. From this town may be seen the whole island, and sometimes the coasts of Africa and Sicily.

CLACK, s. [clack, Belg.] any thing which makes a continued and lasting noise, applied to that of a mill. Figuratively, incessant and importunate tattle; the tongue.

To CLACK, v. n. [klatschen, Teut.] to make a noise like that which is heard in a mill when going; to let the tongue run, or to talk much.

CLACKMANNAN, a small county of Scotland, bounded on the E. by Fifeshire, on the N. and W. by Perthshire, and on the S. by Stirlingshire. It is but 8 miles in length, and 6 in breadth. It produces good corn and pastures, and plenty of coals and salt. This shire, together with Kinross, sends one member to parliament. Pop. 19,155. Its capital, Clackmannan, stands on the Fort, and has a small harbour. It is 25 miles from Edinburgh. Pop. 2145.

CLAD, part. preter. from To CLOTHE.

To CLAIM, v. a. [clamer, Fr.] to demand as a right or due; to require authoritatively.

CLAIM, s. a demand, or right of demanding a thing as due.

CLAIMABLE, a. that may be demanded as due, or as belonging to a person.

CLAIMANT, s. he that pretends a right to any thing in the possession of another, and demands it as his property.

CLAIMER, s. one who demands a thing as his property.

CLAIRAUT, ALEXIS CLAUDE, a very eminent French mathematician of the last century. He was one of the successors of Newton, in the development of his stupendous and beautiful theory of gravitation, and aided in raising it to the rank of a law. He first investigated the problem of the three bodies, and applied it successfully to the furtherance of that branch of physical astronomy called the Lunar Theory. He also calculated the return of Halley's comet, in conjunction with Lalande, and a lady named Lepante, and the result was an error of a month only, which they had stated was possible. His fame also rests on what is called his Theorem, which he published in connexion with his investigation of the figure of the earth, in which he shows that the gravity varies with the elliptical form of the globe, and that its amount on any spot may be discovered by this means. He died in 1765, aged 52 years.

CLAIR-OBSCURE. See CHAUROUS.

To CLAMBER, v. n. [perhaps corrupted from climb,] to ascend or go up a steep place with difficulty, so as to be forced to use both knees and hands.

To CLAMM, v. a. [clammian, Sax.] to clog with any gluish or viscous matter.

CLAMMINESS, s. the quality by which any substance sticks to any thing that touches it; viscosity; ropiness.

CLAMMY, a. viscous, ropy, glutinous, or adhering to any thing which touches it.

CLAMOROUS, a. making a noise with the voice; speaking loud and turbulent.

CLAMOUR, s. [clamor, Lat.] a noise, or outcry; an exaltation of the voice in anger. Applied with elegance to inanimate things.

To CLAMOUR, v. n. to make a noise; or speak in a loud, passionate, and turbulent manner.

CLAMP, s. [clampe, Belg.] a piece of wood added to another to strengthen it, and prevent its bursting; a little piece of wood in the form of a wheel, used in a mortise, instead of a pulley; a quantity or collection of bricks. Clamp-nails are such as are used to fasten on clamps in the building or repairing of ships.

To CLAMP, v. a. in Joining, to fit a board with the grain to another piece across the grain; this is of use to prevent warping.

CLAN, s. [Celtic,] a family, race, or tribe; a body of persons. This form of society prevailed in Ireland and Scotland, and is not yet wholly superseded.

CLANGULAR, a. [clancularius, from clam, Lat.] secret, clandestine.

CLANDESTINE, a. [clandestinus, Lat.] underhand; secret; in order to evade any law; private: always used in a bad sense.

CLANDESTINELY, ad. in a secret or private manner, including some illegal or bad practice.

To CLANG, v. n. [clango, Lat.] to make a loud shrill noise with a brazen sound like that of a trumpet; or to make a noise like that of armour when struck with a solid body, or like swords when beat together.—v. a. to strike together, so as to make a noise.

CLANGOUR, s. [clangor, Lat.] a loud shrill sound.

CLANGOUS, a. making a loud and shrill noise.

CLANK, s. [onomatopoeic.] a loud, shrill, or harsh noise, made by hard metallic bodies when clashed together.

To CLAP, v. a. [clappan, Sax.] to strike together with a quick motion, so as to make a noise; to put one thing upon another with a hasty, sudden, and unexpected motion; to perform any action in a quick and unexpected manner; to applaud or praise a person by striking the hands together; to shut up with a quick or sudden motion. To clap up implies to complete suddenly, without much precaution.—v. n. to move nimbly with a noise; to enter with alacrity upon any thing.

CLAP, s. a loud noise made by the striking of two solid bodies together, or by explosion; when applied to thunder; applause or approbation, testified by striking the hands together. CLAPPER, s. one who strikes his hands together by way of applause; the tongue, or piece of iron which hangs in the inside of a bell, and makes it sound; a piece of wood in a mill for shaking the hopper. Figuratively, the tongue of a person that is very talkative; a word of reproach.

To CLAPPERCLAW, v. a. to scold.

CLAPPERTON, HUGH, one of the series of adventurous travellers in the region of the Quorra, in W. Africa. He made two journeys thither; the first from Tripoli, in conjunction with Major Denham, in which they succeeded in ascertaining much new and interesting information respecting the topography and customs of the nations of the interior, and the neighbourhood of Lake Tchad; the second from the Bight of Benin, accompanied by Lander, (who afterwards succeeded in the great object, for which so many brave lives had been sacrificed—the discovery of the source of the Niger, or Quorra,) and on this he died, in 1827, aged 30 years.

CLARE, a county of Munster, Ireland, 47 miles long, and 32 broad; bounded on the W. by the Atlantic; on the N. by Galway; and on the E. and S. by the Shannon, which separates it from Tipperary, Limerick, and Kerry. It is very hilly, some heights exceeding 2000 feet, and produces iron, coal, slate, marble, &c. &c. It has also very rich pastures. It is watered by the Shannon and its tributary streams, and has some lakes. There is also by the mouth of the Shannon a very wide tract of bog. It contains 79 parishes, and breeds more horses than any other county in Ireland, as also a great number of cattle and sheep. The county town is Ennis. Pop. 286,394. It returns three members to parliament.

CLARE, Suffolk. It is seated on a creek of the river Stour; the ruins of a castle, and a collegiate church, are still visible. They have a manufacture of baize. In this town is a very large church, and several dissenting meeting-houses. It is 56 miles from London. Market, Monday. Pop. 1700.

CLARE HALL, a college at Cambridge, built in the 14th century, where University Hall formerly stood. The present edifice was erected in the 17th century, and is a good-looking building, with a very fine situation near the river Cam. It has two good libraries, and a noble chapel. There is in connexion with this college an annual prize for an essay on the character of William III.; a singular case of hero-worship, and care for the preservation of constitutional Protestantism, by its founder.

CLARE, ST., the name of an order of nuns, founded in the 13th century, by a devotee of this name. They conformed to the Franciscan rule. The Minorites, London, are named from their convent, for they were also called Minorresses. See FRANCISCANS.

CLARENCEUX, CLARENTUX, [Fr.] the second king at arms, so called from the Duke of Clarence, son of Edward III., who first bore this office. He marshals and disposes of the funerals of all the lower nobility on the south side of the Trent, and is therefore called Surroy, i. e. South-roy, or South-king.

CLARENDON, EDWARD HYDE, EARL OF, one of the statesmen of the time of the civil wars of the 17th century, and subsequently lord chancellor to Charles II. He studied for the legal profession, and practised as a barrister, though not on any of the circuits. He sat in the parliament of 1640, and the Long Parliament, and at first, though with moderation, took part with the opponents of Charles; but on the parliament assuming an independence of the crown he sided with the royalists, and soon became one of the most confidential advisers of the king. On the open rupture between Charles and the Commons he was raised to a high dignity by the king, and remained with him. Being despatched by the king along with his son, on the disastrous campaign of 1645, into the W. of England, he was compelled to flee from England, and at length joined the exiled court at the Hague. He was one of the ambassadors sent by Charles II. to Spain, and was rewarded by the name of Lord Chancellor, and the confidence of the prince. On the Restoration he entered on the full honours and emoluments of his title, and carried out the schemes of the needy and unprincipled king, for obtaining money. But he was not a sufficiently easy tool for Charles's purpose, and other influences than wisdom and experience held sway at court. He was first made the standing jest of the courtiers, and at last, by the means of Lady Castlemaine, dismissed from his post. He was impeached by the Peers, and the people, identifying him more completely than he merited with Charles's profligacy, were equally incensed against him. In 1667 he again fled from England, and died in exile in 1674, aged 65 years. One of his daughters was married to the Duke of York, afterwards James II., whilst abroad. Clarendon has deserved well of after-times by his historical writings, mostly written when he was in degradation and exile; he would have deserved better had they been more accurate, and had he not, by misrepresentation, omission, and other serious faults, made them mere diatribes of party and personal gall. As lord chancellor, he took a discreditable part in the worst acts of the beginning of Charles II.'s reign, both as to the unblushing licentiousness of the court, the equally unblushing money-hunting, and the religious persecutions. And yet he seems to have brought about his own fall, by conscientiously acting the very opposite part in respect of all these matters. His oratory was very much admired, both in his earlier days, and in his later exaltation. Personal pride and ostentation of splendour marked him, and contributed perhaps to his downfall.

CLARENDON, CONSTITUTIONS OF, the name given in history to 16 Ordinances, passed at a great assembly of the barons and bishops, in the reign of Henry II., at Clarendon, Wilts, the object of which was to keep the clergy, and particularly the pope, in check.

CLARET, s. [clairet, Fr.] French wine, of a clear, pale red colour.

CLARICORD, CLARICORD, s. [clarus and chorda, Lat.] the name of a musical instrument in form of a spinnet, now disused.

CLARIFICATION, s. [clarus and fio, Lat.] the clearing any thing from impurities; the fining liquors.

To CLARIFY, v. a. [clarifier, Fr.] to fine or make any liquor clear—v. n. to clear up; to brighten.

CLARINET, s. in Music, a wind instrument made of wood, and sounding by means of a reed fixed at its upper end. It has a bold sound, fitting it for military bands; but it is made in three different keys, as one instrument will not give all the tones, &c. of its full scale.

CLARION, s. [clarin, Span.] a trumpet with a narrower tube and shriller sound than the common sort.

CLARITY, s. [clarté, Fr.] brightness; splendour.

CLARK, s. See CLERK.

CLARKE, DR. ADAM, the most eminent name for scholarship amongst the Wesleyan Methodists. He was intended for a trade, and was mostly self-taught. Having come under the notice of John Wesley, he was encouraged by him, and admitted to the ministry of his people. Arrangements were made, when his fame was great, for his being most frequently in the neighbourhood of London, by which means he was spared much of the desultoriness that marks the life of an itinerant preacher. He died in 1832, aged 70 years. His chief work is his Commentary on the Scriptures, and next to that is his Bibliographical Dictionary. He was employed by the Record Commission to edit Rymer's Fœdera. His scholarship was rather extensive than profound, and he was, from the lack of early and severe mental training, often led astray both by etymological and doctrinal whimsies, which considerably impair the value of his work. It is worthy of notice, that the Commentary, the only work of that kind of erudition amongst them, is not published by the Wesleyan Society, as their accredited works are.

CLARKE, DR. EDWARD, a traveller of some name, in the beginning of the present century. After some tours and journeys of less importance, he travelled through the N. of Europe and Asia, and returned by Syria, Egypt, Turkey, and Germany. His record of this long wandering is full of interest. And the stores of specimens both in natural history and antiquities which he brought back, were exceedingly valuable. The so-called tomb of Alexander the Great, in the British Museum, was amongst them. He died in 1822, aged 53 years.

CLARKE, DR. SAMUEL, one of the most famous metaphysicians of England, who lived in the end of the 17th and beginning of the 18th century. The events of his life were his books and his controversies. His Boyle Lectures, in which he attempted the impossibility of a logical a priori proof of the existence of God; his ethical speculations of the fitnesses of things; his vindication of liberty; and his Arianism;—by which he drew on him the attacks of Pope, Butler, Leibnitz, and the bench of bishops; in which Hoadley, More, Whiston, Newton, and others, defended him; and for which he is still occasionally solemnly arraigned, or apologized for, or gloried in;—are the things by which his name lives. His misfortune appears to be, that he lived before the psychological method of metaphysical inquiry was promulgated; his fault, that he mistook the capabilities of school logic, through his consummate skill in its use, to which may be added, perhaps, a sort of vindictive hostility to Descartes and Spinoza. He died in 1729, aged 54 years. He was a good scholar, and some of his editions of the classics are in vogue to the present day.

CLARKSON, THOMAS, one of a series of men, who, by practical goodness, have adorned our country during the last hundred years. He competed for a prize given for an Essay on Slavery, when at Cambridge, in his 24th year, and from that time to his death never ceased to labour in the cause of Abolition. Granville Sharp had obtained the decision, that there could be no slaves in England; Clarkson, aided by Wilberforce, Macaulay, and others, achieved the Abolition of the Slave Trade. Not ceasing then, by public meetings, writings, unwearied journeyings, and a most extensive correspondence, at the head of an association numbering some of the first men of the day, he largely contributed to the final overthrow of slavery in the British dominions. In all subsequent matters connected with the great work he had devoted himself to, and with similar philanthropic endeavours, he was always amongst the first with his pen and his influence to aid. He died in 1846, aged 86 years. He was a clergyman of the English Church, but he never engaged in any regular ministry, nor advanced beyond deacon's orders.

CLARY, s. in Botany, a genus of plants, called by Linnaeus, salvia. There are two British species, viz. the meadow and wild; the former with oblong, heart-shaped, scalloped leaves, and bluish purple blossoms, flowers in July; the latter with indented, serrated, smoothish leaves, and blue blossoms, is common in meadows and pastures, flowering from May to September.

TO CLASH, v. n. [kleetsen, Belg.] to make a noise, applied to two bodies struck together; to act with opposite views; to contradict, oppose, or disagree.—v. a. to strike one thing against another, so as to produce a noise.

CLASH, s. a noise made by the striking two bodies together; opposition of sentiments, opinions, or interests.

CLASHING, s. See CLASH.

CLASP, s. [cleespe, Belg.] a thin piece of metal curved at the extremities, which enters into a hole made in another place, and is used to fasten two things together, such as the two covers of a book, or the two foreparts of a garment, &c. Figuratively, an embrace, wherein the arms are thrown round the body of a person.

TO CLASP, v. a. to shut or fasten by a clasp; to hold within the hands; to make the fingers meet round the circumference of any thing held in the hand; to enclose.

CLASP-KNIFE, s. a knife which is furnished with a spring, and whose blade folds into the handle.

CLASS, s. [classis, Lat.] a collection of things ranged according to their different natures and value; a rank or order. In schools, a number of boys placed according to their attainments, and the authors they read.

TO CLASS, v. a. to range according to some stated method of distribution; to range according to different ranks.

CLASSIC, CLASSICAL, a. [classis, Lat.] a term chiefly applied to authors who are read in the classes at schools. Virgil, Cicero, Homer, and all the other Greek and Latin writers who flourished at a time when their language subsisted in tolerable purity, are included under the term classical.

CLASSIC, s. an author of the first rank for abilities, and esteemed a standard for style, &c.

TO CLATTER, v. a. [clattrern, Sax.] to make a noise by being often struck together, applied to sonorous or metalline bodies; to make a noise by talking loud, fast, and little to the purpose: a low word.

CLATTER, s. a rattling noise made by the frequent striking of hard bodies together; a confused and tumultuous noise.

CLAVATED, a. [clavatus, Lat.] knobbed; or abounding with knobs.

CLAUDE or LORRAINE, one of the most distinguished landscape painters of the Roman school, who lived at the beginning of the 17th century. He went to Rome as a pastry cook, and studied under Agostino Tassi, and afterwards under Paul Brils. He died in 1682, aged 82 years, having gained wealth, and more lasting renown, by the most unwearied perseverance in studying the objects he depicted, and acquiring skill in the use of his colours. His pictures are all of graceful and beautiful scenery, and this he has not merely faithfully drawn, but most marvelously idealized. The figures he introduced are complete failures.

CLAUDIAN, one of the later Roman poets, patronized by Stilicho, the guardian of Arcadius and Honorius. He had to contend with all the difficulties of using an acquired tongue, for Greek was his native language, and he was thoroughly successful. His poems are numerous, and if not equal to those of the Augustan writers, they are inferior only to them; if somewhat too confined to the praises of his patron, they are varied in their style, and tell most graphically the history of his regency. He died in about 410, aged about 45 years.

CLAUDIUS, surnamed NERO, the successor of Caligula, and fourth emperor of Rome. He was raised to the purple by the praetorian guards, who found him concealed in the palace after his predecessor's murder. The senate were projecting the restoration of the republican form, but were compelled to submit. His cowardly disposition made him the tool of the wickedness of his courtiers and his wives, so that his reign is marked with crime and blood. He ordered some public works for the improvement and adornment of the city; and visited our island, the greater part of which was subdued beneath the Roman empire during his reign. He was poisoned by his second wife in 54, aged 63 years, and having reigned nearly 14 years.

CLAUDIUS, M. A., the successor to Gallienus in the empire of Rome; he had been one of the rivals of his power, commonly called the Thirty Tyrants. He delivered Italy from the Goths, by a victory which was most terribly complete. He died in 270, aged 56 years, and having reigned well for 2 years.

CLAVE, the preter, of TO CLEAVE.

CLAVELLATED, part. [clavellatus, low Lat.] in Chemistry, made with burnt tartar.

CLAVICLE, s. [clavicula, Lat.] in Anatomy, the collar-bone, of which there are two, situated between the scapula and sternum, each of them resembling an Italic S, but in women more straight than in men.

CLAUVIUS, CHRISTOPHERUS, a learned and mathematical Jesuit of the 16th century, who is the author of the Ecclesiastical Calendar in use in the Churches of Rome and England. He wrote an immense book about this, with tables innumerable, and rules and formulae for enabling all future generations to compute the days for the orthodox observance of the movable fasts and feasts; his other books are quite superseded. He died in 1612, aged 75 years.

CLAUSE, (klawse) s. [clausula, from claudio, Lat.] a sentence; a single article; so much of a sentence as will make sense.

CLAUSENBURG, a free city of Prussia, in Hungary, in a county of the same name. It stands on the Zamos, which is a remote tributary of the Danube, in a beautiful valley or mountain-pass. It is fortified and well built, and has many relics of Roman origin. It has a handsome cathedral, and several academies and institutions. It has a population of about 25,000. Lat. 47. 0. N. Long. 23. 45. E.

CLAUSTRAL, a. [claustrum, Lat.] belonging to a cloister, or religious house.

CLAUSURE, s. [clausura, from claudio, Lat.] confinement; the state of a person shut up or confined in a monastery.

CLAW, s. [clawen, Sax.] the foot of a bird or beast, armed with a sharp-pointed horny substance.

TO CLAW, v. a. [clawen, Sax.] to scratch or tear with the nails.

CLAWED, part. furnished or armed with claws.

CLAY, s. [clai, Brit.] a compact, weighty, stiff, viscid, and ductile earth, when moist; smooth to the touch, easily dissolved in water, and when mixed with it, not quickly subsiding.

Pipe-clay, a grayish earth found in Dorsetshire and Norfolk, which burns into a pure dead white. Its soapy feel, and adhesion to the lips and tongue, are its distinctions, burnt and unburnt. London clay, the name of the lowest formation of the Tertiary series in England. Its lower beds were formerly classed separately as Plastic Clay.

CLAY, or CLEY, Norfolk. A town with a small harbour, and large salt-works in the neighbourhood, from whence salt is sent all over the country, and sometimes exported to Holland, the Baltic, &c. It is seated on an arm of the sea, between two rivers. It is 130 miles from London. Market, Saturday. Pop. 828.

TO CLAY, v. a. to cover with clay. In Agriculture, to manure with clay.

CLAY-COLD, a. as cold as clay. Figuratively, lifeless.

CLAYES, s. [claye, Fr.] in Fortification, wattles made with stakes interwoven with osiers, to cover lodgments.

CLAYEY, a. consisting of, or abounding in clay.

CLAYISH, a. of the nature of clay; like clay.

CLAY-MARL, s. a whitish, smooth kind of chalky earth, resembling clay, sometimes mixed with chalk-stones.

CLAY-PIT, s. a pit where clay is dug.

CLEAN, (kleen) a. [elene, Sax.] free from dirt, or soil. Figuratively, free from any moral stain, wickedness, or impurity.—ad. entirely, perfectly, fully, or completely.

TO CLEAN, v. a. to free from dirt or filth.

CLEANLY, a. free from dirt or filth, free from moral impurity; innocent; chaste.

CLEANLY, ad. in a clean, neat manner, free from dirt or filth.

CLEANNESS, CLEANLINESS, s. neatness; freedom from dirt or filth; elegance; exactness; freedom from any moral impurity.

TO CLEANSE, (klenze) v. a. [cleansan, Sax.] to free from dirt or filth by washing or rubbing. In Medicine, to purge; to remove from wounds what hinders a cure.

CLEANSE, (klenzer) v. [cleansere, Sax.] in Medicine, a purgative; a detergent.

CLEAR, (cleer) a. [clarus, Lat.] bright, transparent, pellucid, transparent; free from blame, innocent, without blemish; evident, indisputable, undeniable; free from distress, prosecution, or imputed guilt; vacant, out of debt, unentangled; out of danger.

TO CLEAR, v. a. to brighten; to vindicate one's character; to prove a man's innocence; to free from obscurity; to discharge a debt; to clarify liquors; to gain without any deduction for loss or charges. To clear a ship, is to obtain leave for sailing, or selling the cargo, by paying the customs.

CLEARANCE, s. a certificate that the ship has been cleared by the custom-house, by paying the duties.

CLEAR, CAPE, a promontory on a little island on the S. coast of Ireland. Lat. 51. 19. N. Long. 9. 24. W. There is also another island, called Cape Clear Island, at a small distance from Baltimore Haven; they are both inhabited.

CLEARER, s. the person or thing that removes any filth or obstruction; that which communicates light to the mind, or removes any difficulty or prejudices which may obscure the judgment.

CLEARING-HOUSE, an office at which clerks from the various banking-houses in London meet, and by a simple arrangement exchange the notes, &c. they have belonging to other houses, for notes, &c. belonging to their own, or a money payment. The amount of these transactions is frequently above £5,000,000 in a day.

CLEARLY, ad. free from darkness, obscurity, ambiguity; plainly; without any undue influence or prejudice; without evasion or reserve. Without deduction or diminution, applied to gains.

CLEARNESS, s. transparency, which renders a thing easy to be seen through, applied to glass. Freedom from dregs or filth, applied to liquors. Distinctness, plainness, freedom from obscurity and ambiguity, applied to ideas.

CLEAR-SIGHTED, a. able to discern and distinguish things; judicious; seeing into the consequences of things.

TO CLEARSTARCH, v. a. to starch in such a manner, that linen may appear transparent, and clearer than in common washing.

TO CLEAVE, (kleeve) v. n. preter. I clove, part. cloven. [cleofan, Sax.] to stick; to adhere to; to unite oneself to a person.

TO CLEAVE, (kleeve) v. a. preter. I clove, clove, or cleft, participle, cloven, or cleft. [cleofan, Sax.] to divide a thing with a chopper and with violence; to divide by a swift or rapid motion; to divide or separate; to part asunder.

CLEAVER, (kleezer) s. a large flat instrument made of metal, with a handle, of a long square form, used by butchers to separate the joints of meat from their carcasses; one who chops any thing. In Botany, a weed, named likewise Goose-grass, and Tongue-weed.

CLEF, s. [clef, Fr.] in Music, a mark placed at the beginning of the lines of a piece of music, which determines the name of each line, according to the scale. The three clefs are, the treble, or G clef; the C clef, which is alto, or tenor, according to its position on the staff; and the bass, or F clef.

CLEFT, participle passive, from TO CLEAVE.

CLEFT, s. a space made by the separation of the parts of any body; a crack. In Farriery, a disease in horses, which appears on the hough of the pasterns.

TO CLEFTGRAFT, v. a. in Gardening, to ingraft by cleaving the stock of a tree, and inserting a branch into it.

CLEMATIS, s. in Botany, the name of a genus of climbing plants, one of which, called Traveller's Joy, is very common in the S. E. quarter of Britain.

CLEMENCY, s. [clemeatia, Lat.] unwillingness to punish, and tenderness in inflicting punishment.

CLEMENS ALEXANDRINUS, a Father of the Church, who flourished about the end of the 2nd century. He was carefully taught in the philosophy of the day, and at length learned the truths of Christianity, as they were taught then. He became a teacher of them himself, and entered the clerical order, but never became more than a presbyter. Of his works, the Stromata is the most famous. He has left us in them a treasure of varied information respecting the times he lived in, far more valuable than his theology. He died in 220, aged about 70 years.

CLEMENT, a. [clemons, Lat.] unwilling to punish, and tender in executing or limiting punishment.

CLEMENT, the name borne by fourteen occupants of the Roman see: the most noticeable of which are, Clement I., or Clemens Romanus, the third pastor of Rome, who had been a companion of the apostles, and has left us an excellent letter to the Corinthians, and a fragment of another. He was put to death about 100 A. D. Clement VII. was the title assumed by an antipope, deposed by the Council of Constance; the true pope of this name was the one who refused to sanction Henry VIII.'s divorce, and thus gave the character to the Reformation in England. Clement XI. was engaged in broils during nearly his whole papacy. The first was with France and Austria, about the investiture of Philip V. of Spain, and the occupation of a town belonging to the Papal States. Then with France, by his Unigenitus Bull, against an Augustinian book. Afterwards with the Propagandist missionaries in China; about the old Preterite's attempt on England; and at last with the Turks, about Corfu. He died in 1721. Clement XIV., who suppressed the order of Jesuits, and died in 1774.

CLEMENTI, a celebrated composer, and performer on the piano-forte. He showed early signs of eminence, and was warmly encouraged by Mr. Beckford. He visited the continent several times after he settled in England. His music commenced an era in the use of the piano-forte, and is unsurpassed in its style and adaptation to that instrument. He died in 1832, aged 80 years.

CLEOBURY, called also North Cleobury, and Cleobury Mortimer, Shropshire. A town situated on the N. side of the river Trent. It is 150 miles from London. Market, Thursday, Pop. 1906.

CLEON, one of the demagogues of Athens, who has been immortalized by the satire of Aristophanes. He fell in running away from the Lacedaemonians under Brasidas, whom he had besieged in Amphipolis, in 422 B. C.

CLEOPATRA, the noted queen of Egypt, daughter of the Ptolemies, who insured both Julius Caesar and Mark Antony by her voluptuousness, and robbed the latter of his hope of the empire. She destroyed herself in 30 B. C., to avoid appearing as a prisoner in the triumph of Augustus.

TO CLEPE, v. a. [cleapan, Sax.] to call. Obsolete.

CLEPSYDRA, s. [klepto and udor, Gr.] a water-clock, or an instrument to measure time by the falling of a certain quantity of water, used by the ancients before the invention of clocks and hour-glasses, both by sea and land. There were many kinds of clepsydrae among the ancients, but had all of them this in common, that the water ran generally through a narrow passage, from one vessel into another, and in the lower was a piece of cork, which, as the vessel filled, rose up by degrees, and showed the hour.

CLERC, JEAN LE, a Genevese writer on theological subjects, whose skill in biblical criticism was admirable for the means he possessed, but whose theology lacks careful thought and profound examination of the subject. He was a Socinian in sentiment. He published many works on various subjects, and died in 1730, aged 79 years.

CLERGY, s. [clergé, Fr. clerikos, Eccles. Gr.] the general title of the class of men devoted to ecclesiastical or spiritual engagements and occupations, as teachers and rulers, in opposition to those not so engaged—called the laity, in those churches and communions in which these functionaries are incorporated as a class. In this country it pertains exclusively to the ministers of the Established Church, and they are divided into the superior clergy, as bishops, deans, prebendaries, &c., and the inferior clergy, as rectors, vicars, and curates. In Romanist countries, the clergy are divided into secular, or the bishops, priests, and deacons, who minister in dioceses and parishes, and regular, or the abbots, priors, and brothers, who live under conventual rule. In countries in which the state assumes the protection, &c. of any communion or church, this distinction of clergy and laity is more civil than ecclesiastical. This title is often vainly assumed by the ministers of communions amongst which no spiritual class, as such, can exist; and in some communions in which it can and does, this distinction, as a religious one, is questioned and rejected. See CHURCH, BISHOP, PRIEST, &c. &c., LAITY, BENEFIT OF CLERGY.

CLE/RYGMAN, s. a. a person dedicated by ordination to the service of the church; a person in holy orders.

CLE/RICAL, a. [clericus, Eccles. Lat.] belonging to the clergy.

CLER/K, s. [kleros, Gr.] because the clergy were supposed to be the peculiar heritage or property of God, a word originally used to denote a learned man, or man of letters; but now is the common appellation by which clergymen distinguish themselves in signing any deed, instrument, &c. Also the person who reads the responses of the congregation in the church to direct the rest. It is likewise a common name for writers or book-keepers, in public offices, or private counting-houses. In our courts of record, there is a great number of officers who go under this name.

CLE/RKSHIP, s. the office or employ of a clerk.

CLER/MONT, the capital of the department of Puy-de-Dôme, France, situated near the mountain whence the department is named, and distinguished from other towns in France of the same name by the appellation Ferrand. The town stands finely in the midst of the hills of Auvergne, near a small mountain-stream, that runs to the Allier. It is well built, but not so regularly as to sustain the picturesque impression produced by its more distant view. It has some fine buildings, the cathedral, and some market halls, &c. It is an ancient place, and has borne a part in the history of Europe. It has now a good trade, chiefly in the productions of the vicinity. It is 225 miles from Paris. Its population is about 30,000. Lat. 45. 40. N. Long. 3. 0. E.

CLEVE, CLIF, CLIVE, in the name of a place, denotes it to be situated on the side of a rock or hill; as Cleveland, Clifton, Standiff.

CLE/VELAND, a city and port of entry of Ohio, United States. It occupies a commanding situation on Lake Erie, at the mouth of the Cuyahoga river, and the N. termination of the Erie canal, and is second in importance in the state to Cincinnati alone. It is nobly built, with very wide streets, and a great square shaded with trees in the centre. Its harbour is one of the best on the lake, and has a pier and a lighthouse. It is connected by a small bridge and a floating bridge with Ohio city on the other side of the river. It is 359 miles from Washington. Pop. 6071, and of Ohio city 1577. There are six other places named Cleveland, and seven named Ohio, in the States.

CLE/VER, a. dexterous, quick, or skilful in the performance of any thing; well pleasing, convenient; well made, handsome. CLE/VERLY, ad. in a dexterous, ingenious, skilful, and proper manner.

CLE/VERNESS, s. a. proper, skilful, and dexterous performance; a quality which conveys the idea of fitness, ingenuity, and perfection, and thereby excites satisfaction in the mind.

CLE/VES, a circle of Düsseldorf, Prussia, bordering on Holland. It lies on the Rhine, and is a very flat and well-cultivated district. It has also some textile and other manufactures. Its population is about 50,000. Cleves, its capital, is a handsome town, seated on a hill, three miles from the Rhine, with a cathedral and other public buildings, some manufactures, and a mineral spring, which makes it a place of resort in the season. It has a population of about 8000. Lat. 51. 50. N. Long. 23. 45. E.

CLEW, s. [kloween, Belg.] any thing in a globular form; a ball of thread. Figuratively, any guide or direction, by means of which a person may surmount any difficulty, alluding to a ball of thread made use of by persons to find their way back again from a labyrinth. The clew of a sail is the lower corner, reaching down to that earing where the tackle and sheets are fastened.

TO CLEW, v. a. among sailors, joined with the word sail, signifies to raise them in order to be furled by means of a rope fastened to the clew, called the clew-garnet.

TO CLICK, v. n. [cliken, Belg.] to make a small, sharp, and successive noise, like that of the beats of a watch.

CLIC/KER, s. a tradesman's servant, who stands at the shop-door to invite customers to buy his wares; commonly called a barker.

CLIENT, s. [cliens, Lat.] in Law, one who employs a lawyer for advice or defence. Among the Romans, one who was dependent on some great personage, who undertook to defend him from oppression.

CLIENTELE, CLIENTSHIP, s. [clientela, Lat.] the office or condition of a client.

CLIFF, s. [clif, Sax.] a steep or craggy rock, generally applied to one on the sea-coast.

CLIFFE, KING'S, Northamptonshire, 88 miles from London. Market, Tuesday. Pop. 1278.

CLIFTON, Gloucestershire, a suburb of Bristol. Pop. 14,177. See BRISTOL.

CLIM/ATERIC, CLIMACTE/RICAL, a. [klimax, Gr.] among the old physicians and astrologers, is a name given to certain periods in a man's life, which they supposed to be very critical, and to denote some extraordinary change. According to some, every seventh year is climacteric; but others allow only those years produced by 7 multiplied by the odd numbers 3, 5, 7, and 9, to be climacterical. These years, they say, bring with them some remarkable change with respect to life, health, or fortune. The Grand Climacteric is the 63rd year; but some making two, add to this the 81st. The other Climacterics are the 7th, 21st, 35th, 49th, and 56th.

CLIMATE, s. [klima, Gr.] a word formerly employed to designate imaginary zones, drawn parallel to the equator, in which the diurnal and annual astronomical phenomena varied by only a small and popularly inappreciable degree. It now is used to signify all the thermometrical and hygrometrical conditions of animal and vegetable life in different parts of the globe. The temperature and moisture of any place depend generally on its latitude, but more particularly on its elevation above or beneath the sea-level, its geographical position, its topography, and the degree to which the conversion of bog and wood into arable and pasture land is carried. And these again are modified by electrical agencies, winds, and clouds. Some of the most interesting and remarkable phenomena that come under the head of climates, are,—the greater heat of countries under the tropics, than of the equatorial regions; the existence of zones, in which the seasons are alternately dry and rainy, in which it seldom or never rains, and in which there is no regularity in the rain; the equality, or nearly such, of the degree of highest temperature in all countries lying beyond 30 degrees from the poles; the difference of climate in places of the same latitude in Europe, and in Asia and America, associated with the expanse of land within the tropics in the longitude of Europe, and its comparative rareness both for Asia and America, together with the almost entire absence of land within the N. polar circle in the Old Continent, and the existence of much in the New; and the difference between the climate of the same degrees of latitude in the N. and in the S. hemisphere, associated with the fact, that in the N. the land is accumulated, especially towards the pole, whilst in the S. the greater expanse is sea, especially near the pole.

CLIMAX, s. [klimax, Gr.] in Rhetoric, a figure, wherein the sense of a period ascends or increases every sentence till it concludes; as in the following: "Whether Paul, or Apollus, or Cephas, or the world, or life, or death, or things present, or things to come; all are yours; and ye are Christ's; and Christ is God's," 1 Cor. iii. 22, 23.

TO CLIMB, v. n. preter. and participle passive, climbed, (sometimes pronounced clime,) [klimax, Sax.] to ascend; to ascend by their specific levity, &c., applied to vapours; to mount or go upwards.

CLIMBER, s. one who mounts, ascends, or scales any high or steep place. In Botany, a plant so called from its creeping up on other supports, as the ivy, honeysuckle, &c.

CLIME, s. the same as climate; generally used in poetry.

To CLIMB, v. a. to hold a thing in the hand with the fingers and thumb meeting over it; to shut the hand so as the fingers and thumb may reach over each other; to bend the point of a nail, when driven through any thing; to confirm, establish, or push home, applied to an argument.

CLINCH, s. a word which has a double meaning; a pun; a word made use of to conclude several lines in the different parts of a poem, and to rhyme to as many different words. In Navigation, that part of a cable which is fastened to the ring of an anchor.

CLINCHER, s. a cramp or holdfast, made of a piece of iron bent, or making an angle at the top, and used to fasten planks.

To CLING, v. n. preter. I clung, or have clung; part. clung; [klunger, Dan.] to stick close to, or hang upon, by twisting round a thing.

CLINIC, s. [klines, Gr.] a term applied by the ancient church bishops to those who received baptism on their death-bed.

CLINICAL, a. in Medicine, a term particularly used to signify the treating sick persons in bed, for the more exact discovery of all the symptoms of their diseases. A clinical lecture is a lecture delivered by the bed-side of the patient, and in which the lecturer refers his pupil to the actual situation of the patient.

To CLINK, v. a. to strike metals together so as to make them sound.—v. n. to make a noise, applied to the sound made by two pieces of metal struck together.

CLINK, s. a noise made by the striking of two pieces of metal, whether iron or steel, on each other.

CLINQUANT, a. [Fr.] dressed in embroidery, in spangles; false glittering; tinsel finery.

CLINTON, a town of New York, United States, having several important manufacturing establishments, and a promising educational institution, named Hamilton College, whose buildings occupy a noble site. It is 380 miles from Washington. Pop. about 800. Thirty-one other places have the same name.

CLOO, [Lat.] one of the Nine Muses, the patroness of history; and is generally represented crowned with laurel, holding a trumpet in her right hand, and a book in her left.

To CLIP, v. a. [clippen, Sax.] to embrace by folding the arms closely round; to enfold in the arms; to hug.—[klipper, Dan. or klippen, Belg.] to cut with shears. Figuratively, to diminish, applied to coin. To cut short, not to pronounce fully, applied to language.

CLIPPER, s. one that debases the coin, by cutting, filing, or otherwise diminishing its size and weight.

CLIPPING, s. the part cut or clipped off.

CLITHEROE, Lancashire. This town has manufactures of cotton, a medicinal spring, and a communication with the inland navigations, and stands, with its ruinous castle, built by the Lays, on the river Ribble, at the bottom of Pendle Hill. It is 217 miles from London. Market, Saturday. Pop. 6765.

CLIVE, ROBERT, LORD, the founder of the present British empire in India. He was a poor lad sent out as a writer to Madras, and who entered the military service of the E. India Company when war with the French began. His first renown arose from his taking Arcot; and for it he was honourably entertained in England, and sent out again with a commission from the crown, and a governorship. During the next campaign he avenged the horrors of the "Black Hole" of Calcutta, and gained the battle of Plassey, for which he was made governor of Calcutta. He was miserably repaid with a peerage; but was sent out again, when he fairly established the British power, and returned to laugh in sickness, and be charged with abuse of power. He destroyed himself in 1774, aged 49 years.

CLOAK, (klök) s. a loose garment without sleeves, worn over the rest of a person's clothes, either to defend them from cold or rain. Figuratively, a pretext, or pretence, in order to conceal any design.

To CLOAK, (klök) v. a. to cover with a cloak. Figuratively, to conceal any design by some specious pretext or artifice.

CLOAKBAG, s. a bag in which clothes are carried.

CLOCK, s. [eloco, Brit.] a machine moved by weights or a spring, and regulated by a pendulum, serving to measure time, and show the hour by striking on a bell. Twelve o'clock, &c. is an abbreviation for 12 of the clock, or the 12th hour. Applied to stockings, clock signifies the work with which the ankles are adorned. In Natural History, a sort of beetle.

CLOCKMAKER, s. an artificer whose profession is to make clocks.

CLOCKWORK, s. any movements which go by means of springs, wheels, and a pendulum, and in that respect resemble the movements of a clock.

CLOD, s. [clod, Sax.] a small mass of moist earth; a lump of earth or clay. Figuratively, a turf; the ground; any thing vile, base, and earthly; a dull, gross, stupid person.

To CLOD, v. n. to unite into a mass, on account of its moisture or viscosity; to curdle, used instead of clot.—v. a. to pelt with clods.

CLODDY, a. consisting of little heaps, small masses, or clods of earth.

CLODIUS, P., a dissolute patrician of Rome, whose hostility to Cicero has conferred an immortality of infamy on him. He engaged in an intrigue with Julius Cesar's wife, and violated the rites of the Bona Dea, which she was celebrating; to revenge himself on Cicero, who spoke against him on his trial, he procured adoption by a plebeian, and was elected tribune; he opposed Cicero's recall from exile, and the restoration of his property; and at last, becoming embroiled with Milo, and keeping a company of armed ruffians round him, he was killed in a brawl between them and Milo's company, in 52 B. C.

CLODPATE, s. a stupid fellow; one who cannot easily apprehend the meaning of another. Hence clodpated, an adjective, implying dull of apprehension, or stupid.

To CLOG, v. a. to load with something that may hinder motion; to burthen; to embarrass.—v. n. to be obstructed by the sticking of something to a thing.

CLOG, s. any weight or thing which impedes or hinders the motion of a thing; a restraint; an encumbrance, hindrance, obstruction, or impediment; a sole fastened by straps, worn by women over the shoes, to keep their feet clean or dry.

CLOGGINESS, s. the state of being hindered from motion; obstruction.

CLOGGY, a. that, by adhering to any instrument, stops up the passage, or otherwise hinders its motion.

CLOGHER, Tyne, in Ulster, Ireland. It is the see of a bishop, and stands on the Launty, which flows into the Blackwater. The cathedral and the palace are handsome buildings of their respective classes. It is 70 miles from Dublin. Pop. 705.

CLOISTER, s. [claustrum, Sax.] a habitation surrounded with walls, and dwelt in by monks or religious; a monastery for the religious of either sex. In a more strict sense, a square built on each of its sides, with a peristyle or piazza, in which the monks used to take exercise, &c.

To CLOISTER, v. a. to shut up in a monastery; to confine in a religious house.

CLOISTERAL, a. shut up in a monastery or nunnery; solitary; retired; reclusive.

CLOISTERED, part. solitary; inhabiting a cloister; confined in a monastery, or religious house. In Architecture, built round, or surrounded with a piazza or peristyle.

CLONFERT, Galway, in Connaught, Ireland. This place stands in the midst of the bogs of the Shannon. The cathedral is in ruins. The see is now combined with those of Killoke, Kilmefora, and Kilmacduagh. It is 70 miles from Dublin. Pop. 397.

CLONMEL, Tipperary, in Munster, Ireland. It is pleasantly situated on the Suir, over which are three bridges. It is a very neat and improving town, with a considerable export trade. It is 85 miles from Dublin. Pop. 13,505.

To CLOOM, v. a. [clomian, Sax.] to cover or stop up with clay, mortar, or any glutinous matter.

To CLOSE, (klöz) v. a. [clausus, Lat.] to shut any thing that is open; to conclude, finish, or perfect; to confine; to join any thing broken. To heal, applied to wounds; to join two parts together, after being separated. To close with, or in with, to come to an agreement with.

CLOSE, s. any thing shut, without passage or outlet; a small field surrounded with a hedge or rails. Applied to time, the end of any particular period or portion. The end of a sentence; a conclusion.

CLOSE, a. and ad. used with the verbs tie, shut, or fasten, shut so as nothing can come out, or any air make its entrance. "A close box." "A close room." Without vent or inlet; without motion; stagnating; sultry; or not easily breathed in, applied to the air. Having very few pores, applied to metals. "That very close metal" Locke. Dense; concise; short; without any redundancy; or thick, applied to the manner of expression. "Your thoughts lie so close together." Applied to situation, touching, or without any distance between the things mentioned. Applied to designs, secret or without discovery; having the appearance of reserve and secrecy; without wandering. "To keep our thoughts close to their business." Locke. Home; to the point; retired; without going abroad. "He keeps very close." Under great restraint. "A close prisoner." Narrow, dark, cloudy, misty, and sultry, applied to the sky or weather.

CLOSE-BODIED, a. that comes tight round the body, opposed to that which hangs loose.

CLOSE-HANDED, a. covetous; illiberal; void of generosity. CLOSE-LEAGUED, a. ranged near one another; in a thick and impenetrable body; secretly leagued, or privately conspiring against.

CLOSELY, ad. applied to shutting any vessel, &c. without vent or passage for the internal or external air; very near; not deviating from, applied to the translation of authors. "I have translated closely."

CLOSENESS, s. the state of having no passage for the air; narrowness; want of air; denseness; compactness; recluseness; solitude; reserve; secrecy; avarice; connexion.

CLOSE-PENT, a. shut close; without vent.

CLOSER, (klizer) s. a finisher or concluser.

CLOSET, (klizet) s. a small room for privacy and retirement; a shallow place furnished with shelves, and with a door, serving as a repository for curiosities, or family utensils.

To CLOSET, (klizet) v. a. to shut up or conceal in a closet; to make into a closet for the sake of privacy.

CLOSH, s. a distemper in the feet of cattle, called likewise the fouander.

CLOSURE, (klizure) s. the act of shutting or stopping up any aperture or cleft; confinement; conclusion; end.

CLOT, s. (klot, Belg.) a mass formed by thickening of any fluid body.

To CLOT, v. n. [klottieren, Belg.] to grow into small masses, applied to any fluid substance. To gather into clods, applied to moist or clayey earth.

CLOTAIRE, the name of two of the Merovingian monarchs of France, each of whom being left by his father ruler of one-fourth part of the Frankish empire, Soissons or Neustria, by conquest and violence gained the whole. Clotaire I. was son of Clovis, and died in 562. Clotaire II. was his great-grandson, and died in 628.

CLOTBAR, s. in Botany, a provincial term for the common burdock.

CLOTH, s. plural cloths, or clothes; [clath, Sax.] in a general sense, any thing woven, either from animal or vegetable substances, for garments; the linen wherewith a table is covered at any meal; the canvass on which pictures are painted; the several coverings which are laid on a bed.

To CLOTHE, v. a. preter. I clothed; part. I have clothed, or clad; to invest with garments; to cover or adorn with dress. SYNON. Clothes express simply that which covers the body. Dress has a less confined meaning; besides that of a bare covering, it includes in its idea a relation to form and fashion, as well to the ornaments as the necessities; thus we say, a Spanish dress; a rich dress.

CLOTHIER, s. one who carries on the manufactory of woollen cloth.

CLOTHING, s. dress; vesture; garments.

CLOTHO, in Greek Mythology, that one of the three Fates or Parces, who was represented as spinning the thread of each man's life.

CLOTHSHEARER, s. one who shears the nap of woollen cloth, after it has been raised by carders or teasers.

CLOTPOLL, s. a word of contempt and reproach, implying a stupid person; a blockhead, or thick-skull.

To CLOTTER, v. n. See To Clor.

CLOTTY, s. full of clots or lumps.

CLOUD, s. collection of condensed vapours suspended in the atmosphere. They consist of very small drops of water, detached by heat, and elevated above the surface of the earth. The laws of their formation, movement, precipitation as rain, &c. are very imperfectly understood. Meteorologists have classified and named them according to their appearance, as cirrus, or curl-cloud; cumulus, or stacken-cloud; stratus, or fall-cloud; nimbus, or rain-cloud; and cirro-cumulus, or fleeces-cloud; cirro-stratus, or wane-cloud; cumulo-stratus, or twin-cloud. Thunder-cloud, is one charged with electricity, which it rids itself of by lightning and thunder. Figuratively, the veins or dusky marks in agates or stones; any thing which obscures; a state of darkness; a crowd or great number.

To CLOUD, v. a. to darken; to make the countenance appear lowering; to render a truth obscure, or difficult to be understood; variegated or diversified with dark veins, applied to wood and stones.—v. n. to grow cloudy, dark, or overcast, applied to the sky or weather.

CLOUD-BERRY, s. in Botany, a plant of the bramble kind, also called knot-berry.

CLOUD, ST., a small town of the department of Seine et Oise, France, lying on the Seine, where is a royal palace and park, of great beauty as to situation, and graceful style as to the character of the building. There is a tower there built by Napoleon Buonaparte, which commands a very extensive and beautiful prospect. It is 15 miles from Paris. Population, about 2500.

CLOUD-CAPT, a. covered, topped by, or touching the clouds. "The cloud-capt towers," Shak.

CLOUDILY, ad. in a cloudy or dark manner.

CLOUDINESS, s. a state wherein clouds produce darkness and obscurity; want of brightness or lustre; foulness, applied to precious stones.

CLOUDLESS, a. without clouds; clear, applied to the weather. Without spot or foulness, applied to jewels.

CLOUDY, a. formed of clouds; dark, obscure, or overcast with clouds. Figuratively, obscure; dark; imperfect; sullen; dejected.

CLOVE, the preter. of To CLEAVE.

CLOVE, s. [clow, Fr.] a spice brought from the East Indies, which is the flower-bud of a tree whose leaves resemble those of the bay-tree.

CLOVE-GILLFLOWER, s. a flower so called from its smelling like clove.

CLOVE-PINK, s. a kind of dark-coloured pink, so named from its scent.

CLOVEN, participle of To CLEAVE.

CLOVEN-FOOTED, CLOVEN-HOOFED, a. having the foot or hoof divided into two parts.

CLOVER, CLOVER-GRASS, s. in Botany, a species of trefoil, several kinds of which are cultivated for fodder for cattle. To live in clover, is a phrase for living luxuriously, because clover is reckoned delicious food for cattle.

CLOUGH, s. [clough, Sax.] the cleft of a hill; a cliff; also an allowance in weight.

CLOVIS, the founder of the Frankish empire, and the first who professed Christianity. His profession was of great advantage to him in a temporal point of view, for the Romanist clergy lent, what to him was, a heaven-inspired sanction to all his schemes of conquest, whether directed against his pagan or heretical neighbours. He died in 511, having divided his dominions amongst his four sons.

CLOUT, s. [clut, Sax.] a square piece of cloth made double, serving, amongst other uses, to keep infants clean; a patch on a shoe or garment.

To CLOUT, v. a. to patch or mend in a coarse or clumsy manner; to cover with a thick cloth; to join awkwardly or clumsily together.

CLOUTED, part. patched or mended; joined in a clumsy manner.

CLOUTERLY, a. clumsy; awkward.

CLOWN, s. a rustic, or country fellow; one whose behaviour is rude, and manners are unpolished.

CLOWNISH, a. in a manner agreeable to clowns; rude, awkward, ill-bred, and coarse, like a clown.

CLOWNISHLY, ad. in a clumsy, coarse, rude, and ill-bred manner.

CLOWNISHNESS, s. unpolished rudeness; rustic simplicity, or awkward address; broadness and coarseness of expression. SYNON. Unpoliteness is a want of good manners; it does not please. Clownishness is a mixture of ill manners, it displeases.

Clovenishness proceeds from an entire want of education; unpoiteness from a bad one.

TO CLOY, v. a. [encloûr, Fr.] to fill so with food as to leave no appetite for any more; to surfeit almost to loathing.

CLOYNE, Cork, in Munster, Ireland. It is a small town consisting of but one street, lying E. of Cork harbour; and having a cathedral and a palace, of no pretensions as to appearance. It is a bishop's see in connexion with Cork and Ross. It is 100 miles from Dublin. Pop. 2200.

CLUB, s. [clappa, Brit.] a heavy and strong stick, used as an offensive weapon. An association formed for the benefit or enjoyment of the parties forming it; a political association for the maintenance and extension of certain views by meetings, &c.; also, an association of individuals simply for the purpose of keeping up an establishment of convenient resort for refreshment, reading, &c. In Gaming, the name of one of the suits of cards, called in French treffe, from its resembling the trefoil leaf, or that of clover-grass.

TO CLUB, v. n. to contribute one's proportion to a public expense; to join and unite in one common design; to carry on some common design which requires the assistance of many.

CLUB-HEAD, a. having a round or thick head.

CLUB-HOUSE, s. the name given to the convenient and elegant establishments in London, &c., where refreshments are provided for the subscribers, libraries and reading rooms maintained; constant intercourse for the members of political parties, or literary and social cliques provided, &c. In London they form very conspicuous objects in the vicinity of St. James's.

CLUB-LAW, s. the compelling the assent of a person by external force or violence.

CLUBMOSS, s. in Botany, a genus of mosses, called by botanists Lycopodium.

CLUBROOM, s. the room in which a club or company assembles.

CLUBBRUSH, s. in Botany, a species of bulrush, called also cat's-tail, or reed-mace.

CLUBTOP, s. in Botany, a genus of the funguses, called by botanists Clavaria.

TO CLUCK, v. n. [cloccan, Sax.] to make a noise like a hen when calling her chickens.

CLUMP, s. [klumpe, Teut.] a shapeless thick piece of wood, nearly as broad as long.

CLUMSILY, (klumsily) ad. in an uncouth, awkward, graceless, and unpleasant manner.

CLUMSINESS, (klumziness) s. want of ingenuity, skill, dexterity, or readiness in performing any thing; awkwardness.

CLUMSY, (klumzy) a. [lompsech, Belg.] awkward, artless, unhandy, and without grace in the performance of any thing; heavy, thick, and coarse, with respect to weight and shape.

CLUNG, the preter, and part. of TO CLING.

TO CLUNG, v. n. [clingan, Sax.] to dry or waste like wood after it is cut.

CLUNG, part. wasted away, by a consumption or other disorders; shrunk up with cold.

CLUNY, a town of the department of Saône et Loire, France. It is seated on a stream named Grône, (which flows into the Saône), over which it has a stone bridge, in a valley on the E. declivity of the Vosges. It has a few small manufactures; its importance arising from its being the seat of a reformed branch of the Benedictines, called from it the Monks of Cluny. It is 223 miles from Paris. Population, about 4000. Lat. 46. 25. N. Long. 4. 40. E.

CLUNY, MONKS OF, an order of monks who were part of the Benedictines, but reformed in the 10th century by the abbot of Cluny. They gained such reputation for their austerity and monastic excellence, that they grew to be a most important establishment in France, and had very many offshoots in England.

CLUSTER, s. [clyster, Sax.] a bunch, or several things of the same sort growing close together, and on one common stalk. Figuratively, a number of insects crowding together; a body of, or several, people collected together.

TO CLUSTER, v. n. to grow in bunches close together, and on one stalk, applied to vegetables. To gather close together in bodies, applied to bees. Generally, to gather into bunches.

CLUSTER-GRAPE, s. in Botany, the small black grape, generally the forward of any.

CLUSTERY, a. growing close together on one common stalk.

TO CLUTCH, v. a. to hold in the hand with the fingers and thumb closed together; to gripe, or grasp; to shut the hand close, so as to seize and hold a thing fast.

CLUTCH, s. a gripe, grasp, or seizure with the hand shut very fast and close. Figuratively, in the plural clutches, the claws or talons of a bird or wild beast.

CLUTTER, s. [see CLATTER,] a noise made by a person's being in a hurry about some trifling affair; a hurry or clamour; a low word.

CLWYD, a beautiful vale of Flint and Denbigh, N. Wales, enclosed by high and barren mountains, extending from the sea inland above 20 miles; a river of the same name runs through it. Its breadth is from 3 to 8 miles, and is covered with towns, villages, and gentlemen's seats.

CLYDE, a river of Scotland, which rises in Annandale, and running N. W. through Clydesdale, passes by Lanark, Hamilton, and Glasgow, and falls, after a course of about 100 miles, into the Frith of Clyde. It affords many romantic views, running for several miles between lofty eminences covered with wood, and exhibiting in its course many stupendous cataracts.

CLYDESDALE, a wild district in the S. part of Lanarkshire, in Scotland, where are extensive lead mines.

CLYSTER, s. [lygro, Gr.] in Medicine, an aperient or sedative preparation injected into the rectum by means of a syringe.

CNIDUS, a city of Caria, in Asia Minor, opposite the island of Cos, celebrated for its temple and statue of Venus. Its ruins are very extensive and interesting.

TO COACERVATE, v. n. [coacervo, Lat.] to heap together.

COACERVATION, s. the act of heaping, or the state of things heaped together.

COACH, (kôche) s. [coche, Fr.] a kind of carriage hung upon straps or springs, running on four wheels, having back and front seats; and distinguished from a chariot, because it has two seats fronting each other; and from a vis-a-vis, because more than one person can sit opposite to one another. It is applied most frequently to the public vehicles, which carried passengers both outside and inside, and by means of good horses and excellent arrangements, had made travelling both rapid, and safe, and agreeable; and have now been generally superseded by the railway system, which alone could successfully compete with them.

TO COACH, v. a. to carry or convey in a coach.

COACH-BOX, s. the seat on which the driver of the coach sits.

COACH-HIRE, s. money paid for the use of a hired coach.

COACH-HOUSE, s. the house in which the coach is kept.

COACH-MAKER, s. the artificer whose trade it is to make coaches.

COACHMAN, s. the driver of a coach.

COACTION, (coâction) s. [coço, Lat.] the obliging to do, or to refrain from doing, any action; force; compulsion.

COACTIVE, a. having the force of restraining from, or compelling to, any action; acting in concert with.

COADJUTANT, part. [cum and adjuco, Lat.] helping, assisting, or taking part with any person in any action; co-operating.

COADJUTOR, s. [cum and adjuco, Lat.] one engaged in assisting another; an assistant, associate, or partner in any undertaking. In the Canon Law, one appointed and empowered to perform the duties of another.

COADJUVANCY, s. [cum and adjuvans, Lat.] help; concurrence in any process or operation; a contributing to effect any particular design.

COADUNITON, s. [cum, ad, and unitio, Lat.] the uniting of several things or particles, so as to form one common mass.

TO COAGMENT, v. a. [coagmento, Lat.] to join, glue, or heap together, so as to form one mass.

COAGMENTATION, s. [coagmentatio, Lat.] a joining, uniting, gluing, or otherwise heaping several particles or substances together, so as to form one common mass. The joining several syllables or words together, so as to form one word or sentence, applied to style or grammar.

COAGULABLE, a. [coagulo, Lat.] that may thicken, grow dense, or concreate.

TO COAGULATE, v. a. [coagulo, Lat.] to make a thing curdle, to turn into clots, applied to the turning of milk into curds by means of rennet. — v. n. to curdle; to form concretions; to congeal.

COAGULATION, s. [coagulation, Lat.] the act of turning into curds. Concretion; congelation; or growing thick and tangible, applied to fluids. Also, the state of a thing congealed, curdled, or condensed; the substance or body formed by congelation or concretion.

COAGULATIVE, a. [coagulo, Lat.] that has the power of causing coagulations, concretions, curdling, or depriving a body of its fluidity.

COAGULATOR, s. that which causes condensations or concretions.

COAL, (kôl) s. [col, Sax.] a species of rock occurring in great abundance in a particular part of the series of formations, and consisting wholly of fossilized vegetable remains, which, having undergone a peculiar process whereby bitumen and charcoal are the chief ingredients, can now be used for domestic and other fires, and have almost wholly superseded the use of wood for that purpose. It is of a deep black colour, evidently stratified, splitting in a different direction to the lines of stratification usually, with a bright, lustrous fracture. But there are different kinds, coming from different localities, and from different parts of the series of rocks. Wood-coal, or lignite, is little more than fossil charcoal, and seldom occurs in sufficient quantities to make it worth working, considering its inferior quality. Cannel-coal, is a brilliant burning coal, containing more charcoal and less bitumen in its composition, in proportion to the quantities in other kinds. The coal of the midland districts burns with a bright flame, and leaves a white ash; the best coal of the N. coal-field gives few ashes, but leaves a good cinder.

COAL-BLACK, a. of the colour of coal; the deepest black.

COAL-BOX, COAL-SCUTTLE, COAL-SHOOT, s. a box to carry coal to the fire.

COAL-FISH, s. in Natural History, a species of beardless gadus.

TO COALESCE, (koal'esce) v. n. [cum and aleceo, Lat.] to unite together.

COALESCE, (koal'esce) s. [coalesco, Lat.] the act of coalescing or uniting several particles, whereby they adhere together and form one body or common mass.

COAL-FIELDS, s. in Commerce, the name of the districts in which coal-mines abound. There are in England about 16 different coal-fields.

COAL-FORMATION, s. in Geology, the name given to the group of rocks abounding in remains of plants, and amongst which are the coal strata.

COALITION, s. [coalitio, Lat.] the uniting or joining of different particles, so as to compose one common mass. In Politics, the junction of different parties to carry some measure.

COAL-MEASURES, s. in Geology, the rocks in which coal is found; consisting of alternating layers of sandstone and grit, shale or slate, and coal. The layers of coal vary from a few inches to some feet in thickness. These rocks evince most numerous evidences of great and ancient convulsions in the earth, they are split and twisted, and inclined in every direction, and traversed occasionally with walls of very hard rock, plainly of igneous origin. The cracks and dislocations are called faulds; the walls are named dikes. The inclinations and bendings of the strata are on the grandest scale, extending for many miles. In England these beds occur in a certain region where the outcrop, as the miners term it, of the strata called new red sandstone ends; or else immediately under this, as in the great coal-fields of the centre of the country. In Scotland and Ireland they occur also. In most of the countries of Europe they have been discovered and worked. In the states of Asia bordering on the Indian Ocean, and in Australia, they are known. In the United States and British N. America also. Thus almost every land has been supplied with this production, which has proved the greatest aid to commercial and manufacturing enterprise of any on the earth; without which, indeed, both manufactures and commerce never could have risen higher than they existed in the end of the middle ages. Many vain and losing attempts have been made to find coal, where any acquaintance with Geology would have forbidden the hope. It is only in one particular part of the series that the true coal strata occur, in these latitudes at least. As to the often-agitated question of the exhaustion of the coal of the British islands, it may be said generally, that if no more fields were found, the day must be very remote when no further supplies could be found. But there are many districts in these islands in which coal may yet be found and worked, especially as advancing science shall have increased the facilities, and mechanical and other appliances. The fossil remains of these beds are, as might be expected, of a peculiar character. Some remains of most remarkable fishes, sharing the character of the saurian tribes, exist; corals and shells of marine origin; some species of fresh-water shells, which are found in the coal itself; and above all, the plants, which are chiefly of the orders of ferns, equisetia, and club-mosses, and of coniferous and cactus-like plants, with some others undetermined. Of these vegetable remains, stems, sometimes 50 feet long, roots, leaves, and seed vessels abound, crushed and flattened in some cases, but preserving, in most instances, all the most delicate parts uninjured, though completely carbonized. It has been shown by recent experiments, that the plants of the orders found in the Coal-measures will endure unharmed maceration in water for periods of time which utterly destroy other orders. The evidence collected from various sources tends to show that the plants have not been drifted far, but are preserved near the spots on which they grew; that the climate of these N. regions was then nearly tropical; that there were great rivers with wide deltas, and archipelagos of islands, in which were deposited, with great tranquillity, the relics of these vast and strange forests, intercalated with sand and debris borne from the ocean; that since the deposition of these beds and their solidification, and in some cases before the deposition of the immediately succeeding formation, a long succession of years elapsed, marked by mighty convulsions, which upheaved, and broke, and contorted these strata as we see them; and lastly, that had it not been for these convulsions, the coal would not have been within the reach of man, nor the mines have been capable of being worked as they now are, so as to diffuse their benefits to all classes of society.

COAL-MINE, COAL-WORK, s. a mine in which coal is dug; a coal-pit.

COAL-TRADE. The capital embarked both in the mines and the transport of coals to market has been such as to bring the whole subject before parliament; and this term is applied to all that relates to the procuring and selling of coals, to their exportation, &c. &c.

COALY, (kôly) a. abounding in coal.

COAPTATION, s. [cum and apto, Lat.] the fitting or artful disposition or arrangement of the parts of a thing, or of the words of a sentence.

COARSE, (kôrse) a. mixed with dross, not refined, applied to metals; mean, vile, rough, and of no value. Rough, and consisting of large threads, applied to cloth or silk manufactures. Rude, uncivil, indelicate, ill-bred, applied to behaviour or manners. Unpolished, and not elegant, applied to language.

COARSE, s. in Natural History, a kind of American weasel, which emits an exceedingly offensive vapour.

COARSELY, ad. in a rude, rough, inelegant manner; free from any graces, or appearance of politeness.

COARSENESS, s. want of purity; abounding in dross; want of elegance or delicacy; clownishness, rudeness, or rusticity; a composition of mean and cheap materials.

COAST, (kôst) s. [coste, Fr.] the shore or land, which lies near and is washed by the sea. Used by Sir Isaac Newton, in the sense of the original French and Latin, for a side or part. The coast is clear, a phrase implying that any danger is over, and that there are no obstacles in a person's way.

TO COAST, v. n. to sail near a coast, or keep within sight of land.—v. a. to sail by; to sail near to.

COASTER, s. one who makes a voyage from port to port on the same coast, keeping at the same time within sight of the shore; one who sails near the shore.

COAT, (kôd) s. [cotte, Fr.] the outward garment of a man. Figuratively, any covering or tegument. The fur of a beast. In Heraldry, the escutcheon, field, or habit, on which a person's arms are portrayed.

TO COAT, v. a. to cover or spread over.

COATING, s. in Electricity, denotes a covering of sheet lead, tin-foil, or any other conducting substance, applied to the Leyden phial, or to any electric body, and serving to accumulate the electricity, to increase the force of the charge, and to facilitate the operation of discharging.

TO COAX, v. a. to endeavour to persuade a person by flattery, or insinuating address. A low word.

COAXER, s. one who endeavours to persuade a person by flattery, or artful and insinuating behaviour.

COB, s. a sort of sea-fowl, called also sea-cob.

COBALT, s. [from cobbold, the name of a race of evil spirits, living in mines, according to the old Grecian Mythology,] a brittle metal, of a reddish grey colour, and weak metallic lustre. It is met with chiefly in combination with arsenic, and is a constant ingredient of meteoric iron. It was formerly imported from Saxony, but it is now found abundantly in the Mendip Hills, in Somersetshire, and in a mine near Penzance, in Cornwall. It chiefly used for making the different kinds of smalts for painting and enamelling. It is extremely valuable to the manufacturers of porcelain, for it not only produces a beautiful colour, but endures the intense heat of their furnaces without any deterioration.

COBBETT, WILLIAM, the well-known political writer and lecturer, at the end of the last century and beginning of the present. His career, as narrated by himself, was altogether a remarkable one, and shows most convincingly what can be done by vigorous and unaided perseverance, and what are the dangers and failings such a system of training from the beginning exposes a man to. He was the son of a little farmer of Surrey, and after various attempts at employment, enlisted in a foot regiment, in which during eight years, at home and in British America, he gained the esteem of all by his conduct and intelligence, and was promoted to a sergeant-majorship, and then was discharged honourably at his own request. He left England to avoid the consequences of a charge brought against some of the officers of this regiment, and began in the United States his political writings in a high Anti-Jacobin tone. Prosecutions for libel drove him home again, and for more than thirty years his life was one constant round of literary labour, varied by another journey to the United States, prosecutions for libel, fines, and imprisonment. He did not long maintain his tory politics, and ended in being as violent in opposition to them. His last step was the obtaining a seat in the parliament of 1832. He died in 1835, aged 73 years. His writings are his Weekly Register, and Twopenny Trash, in which are embodied all his various political and politico-economical opinions; works relating to his own life and adventures; books addressed to Young People, and to the Poor; his Grammars, the History of the Reformation in England, &c. &c. And all are characterized by the coarsest, sternest common sense, and written with a complete mastery of the popular or Saxon element of our language.

TO COBBLE, v. a. [Cobler, Dan.] to mend any thing in a clumsy manner, generally applied to shoes; to do or make any thing in a coarse, unhandy, or awkward manner.

COBBLER, s. a mender of old shoes. Figuratively, a bad workman, who cannot perform any thing with elegance.

COBHAM, Surrey, a village washed by the Mole, made here four or five times broader than it is naturally, where are several fine gentlemen's seats. It is 19 miles from London. Pop. 1617.

COBIRONS, s. irons with a knob at the upper end, used in fire-places where wood is burned.

COBISHOP, s. a coadjutant bishop.

COBLENTZ, a fine and strongly fortified city, situated at the confluence of the Rhine and the Moselle, capital of the circle of the same name, in one of the Rhenish provinces of Prussia. It is not a handsome town, but it has some fine buildings, palaces, churches, and castles. It has bridges over both its rivers, that over the Rhine being of boats. It has also some good schools and libraries. A few manufactures are carried on, and there is a brisk trade. Near it is the valley of Ehrenbreitstein. Its population is about 20,000. Lat. 50. 24. N. Long. 7. 27. E.

COBNET, v. a. a boy's game; the conquering nut.

COBRA-DE-CAPELLO, s. in Natural History, a general name by which a genus of snakes is known, which lives in the tropical regions of the old world, and has a singular enlargement of the body immediately behind the head. They are all very venomous.

COBSWAN, s. the head or leading swan in a swannery.

COBURG, a principality of Germany, part of the duchy of Saxe-Coburg-Gotha. It adjoins to Bavaria, and is bounded northerly by the mountains of the Thuringerwald, some parts of which are about 3000 feet high. Its rivers fall into the Neckar. Some metals, coal, and building-stone are procured here. Good grain is grown, and plentiful pastures found; and the products of these sources of wealth, and its linen and other manufactures, form its trade. Its population is about 40,000. Its capital, of the same name, stands on the Itz, in a pleasant situation, and has some fine buildings, being the residence of the duke and the seat of government. It has also some fine public institutions, and manufactures. The fortress which gives name to the town stands yet near it. Its population is about 10,000. Lat. 50. 20. N. Long. 10. 45. E.

COBWEB, s. [Koepel, Belg.] the web or net of a spider. Figuratively, any snare or trap. Sometimes used for a restraint which may easily be broken through.

COCCIFEROUS, (koksiferus) a. [kokkos, Gr. and fero, Lat.] in Botany, a term applied to all plants having berries.

COCCULUS INDICUS, s. a poisonous berry, the fruit of an E. Indian plant, having a fine bitter taste, often mixed with malt liquors to make them intoxicating, though expressly forbidden by act of parliament.

COCHIN, a sea-port of Hindustan, on the coast of Malabar. It has a fine position for commerce, being at the only opening into the Back-water which is accessible to ships. Its trade consists chiefly in spices, but it is not so good as it was. It is 86 miles from Calicut. Lat. 10. 0. N. Long. 76. 8. E.

COCHIN-CHINA, a country of Asia, lying on the Indian Ocean, and bounded by China, Laos, and Siam. It is about 900 miles in length, and 200 in breadth; and has mountain ranges, which yield gold, iron, &c.; wide plains, on which various kinds of grain, drugs, spices, timber trees, &c. are grown; and in which elephants and other animals are found. It is watered by several large rivers, which might serve admirably for purposes of trade. It has also many good harbours. The inhabitants in language, appearance, &c. resemble the Chinese, and are in most things subject to them. Very few particulars are known respecting the population, &c.

COCHINEAL, s. [cochinilla, Span.] an insect found upon the cactus opuntia, &c., affording a beautiful scarlet colour, made use of by dyers, and forming a considerable article of trade between this country, and the W. Indies and America, as an import, and most of the countries of Europe and Asia, as an export.

COCHLEARY, (kikleary) a. [cochlea, Lat.] made in the form of a screw.

COCHLEATED, (kikleated) a. twisted in the form of a screw. Turbinated, applied to shells.

COCK, s. [coq, Sax.] the male of the species of domestic fowls, famous for its courage, pride, and gallantry; the male of any birds or fowls; an instrument turning with a screw, made of bell metal, and used in drawing liquors from casks; the notch of an arrow; that part of the lock of a gun which holds the flint. Weather-cock, an instrument turning round a pivot, used to show the point from which the wind blows. Cock-a-loop, or Cock on the hoop, a phrase implying triumphant exultation, or elation on some success.

COCK OF THE MOUNTAIN, s. in Natural History, a bird of the grouse kind.

TO COCK, v. a. to erect or set upright; to wear the hat with an air of petulance and smartness; to fix the cock of a gun ready for discharging; to lay hay in small heaps.—v. n. to strut, hold up the head, or look big on account of any little success.

COCKADE, s. a riband tied in a bow, or formed in the shape of a rose, worn in a man's hat.

COCKATOO, s. in Natural History, a species of parrot, found in New Holland, whose feathers are white, with a little yellow in the wings and tail, and also crested, very common in this country, but not possessed of the half-intelligent power of mimicry evinced by the grey and other parrots.

COCKATRICE, s. [cock and atter, Sax.] a fabulous reptile, supposed to be formed from a cock's egg hatched by a serpent; called also basilisk. Figuratively, a person of an insidious, venomous, and treacherous disposition.

COCK-BOAT, s. a small boat belonging to a ship.

COCK-CROWING, s. the time at which cocks crow. Figuratively, the morning.

TO COCKER, v. a. [coqueliner, Fr.] to indulge too much; to fondle, or treat with too much fondness.

COCKER, s. one who keeps cocks for fighting.

COCKER, EDWARD, according to his own description, practitioner in the arts of Writing, Arithmetic, and Engraving, in the 17th century. His book on the second of his professions may be regarded as the natural progenitor of most of the popular school books on that subject; and the posthumous fame it secured for the writer, has been condensed into a proverb. He died about 1675, aged about 45 years.

CO'CKEREL, s. a young cock.

CO'CKERMOUTH, Cumberland, a town situated at the confluence of the rivers Cocker and Derwent. The market-place and upper part of the town are between two hills, on one of which stands the castle, an extensive ruin, with five lofty towers, the walls between which are kept up; on the other stands the church, and the Kirkgate, an irregular but spacious part of the town. The lower part of the town is on a plain, consisting of a spacious street, with cross lanes. The upper and lower parts of the town are separated by the Cocker, but united by a bridge of one arch. It has manufactures of shalloons, serges, stockings, coarse linens, hats, and leather, with considerable tanneries. It is 305 miles from London. Markets, Monday and Saturday. Pop. 4940.

CO'CKET, s. a seal belonging to the custom-house; an instrument drawn on parchment, signed, sealed, and delivered to merchants, as a certificate that they have paid the customs for their goods.

CO'CK-FIGHT, s. a battle or match of cocks.

CO'CKHORSE, a. triumphant; exulting: a kind of low word.

CO'CKLE, s. [coquille, Fr.] a small and common shell-fish. In Botany, the agrostemma, which grows in corn-fields, is an annual plant, and flowers in June.

To CO'CKLE, v. a. to contract any stuff into wrinkles by wet or rain.

CO'CKLED, part. shelled; wrinkled by wet.

CO'CKLEWORT, s. in Botany, the astragalus. There are two British species, the wild licorice vetch, and purple mountain milkwort.

CO'CKLOFT, s. the room over the garret, in which fowls are supposed to roost.

CO'CKNEY, s. a person born in London: a word of contempt. Figuratively, any effeminate, luxurious, ignorant, or inexperienced person, dwelling in a city.

CO'CKPIT, s. a place wherein cocks generally fight. In a ship, a place on the lower deck of a man of war, in which are divisions for the pursuer, the surgeon, and his mates.

CO'CKROACH, s. in Natural History, the common name of an insect very troublesome in kitchens, bakehouses, &c., called the blatta.

CO'CKSCOMB, s. in Botany, a plant, the same with the yellow rattle, or pennygrass.

CO'CKSFOOT, s. in Botany, a kind of grass.

CO'CKSHEAD, s. in Botany, a plant called likewise sainfoin, and esteemed one of the best sorts of fodder for cattle.

CO'CKSPUR, s. in Botany, Virginian hawthorn; a species of medlar.

CO'CKSURE, a. confident; certain.

CO'CKSWAIN, s. [cocksweine, Sax.] an officer on board a man of war who has the command of a boat.

CO'CKWEED, s. in Botany, a plant called also dittander and pepperwort.

CO'COA, (cōco) s. See CHOCOLATE.

CO'COA-NUT, s. in Botany, the fruit of a kind of palm abundant in tropical regions, and the neighbourhood of the sea. Next to the bamboo, this palm furnishes the most in number and variety of useful things to man. In this country the oil of the nut is converted into soap and candles, and the fibres of the bark into cordage, matting, brooms, &c.

CO'CTILE, a. [coctilis, Lat.] made by baking.

CO'CTION, (coctio) s. [coquo, Lat.] the act of boiling. In Surgery, a digestion of matter.

COD, CO'DRISH, s. in Natural History, a sea-fish, caught on the banks of Newfoundland, and many other parts.

COD, s. [coddie, Sax.] in Botany, any case, or husk, in which seeds are lodged.

To COD, v. n. to enclose in a nusk, case, or cod.

CODE, s. [codex, Lat.] a book; a book of civil laws, appropriated by way of eminence to the collection made by Justinian.

CODICIL, s. [codicillus, Lat.] a writing made by way of supplement to a will, in order to supply something omitted, or alter and explain something contained in the testament.

CODILLE, s. [codille Fr.] in Gaming, a term at ombre, implying that the game is won against the player; this is termed bated, in quadrille.

To CO'DLE, v. a. [coctulo, Lat.] to parboil; to soften by the heat of water.

CO'DLING, s. an early kind of apple, so called from its being generally boiled for eating.

COEFFICACY, s. [cum and efficio, Lat.] the united power of several things acting together to produce an effect.

COEFFICIENCY, s. [cum and efficio, Lat.] the acting together, or joint power of several things to produce an effect.

COEFFICIENT, s. that which acts jointly with another. Coefficients, in Algebra, any factor of a product relatively to the other factors, whether it be a figure or a letter.

CE'NOBITES, (Cenobites) [koinos and bioo, Gr.] in Church History, the name given to those orders of monks who lived in societies and had all things in common, as opposed to such as lived solitary and retired lives, called hermits and anchorites. Several associations of a similar character have been attempted lately, some based on the expediency of such a plan for the advantage of all; and others on the statements in the Acts of the Apostles, of the social constitution of the church at Jerusalem.

COE'QUAL, a. being in the same state, condition, and circumstances as another.

COEQUALITY, s. the state of two persons or things which are equal to each other.

To COERCE, v. a. [coerceo, Lat.] to restrain by force, or punishment, from the committing any crime, or performing any action.

COE'RCIBLE, a. that may or ought to be restrained.

COE'RCION, (coërcion) s. [coerceo, Lat.] a check, or restraint. A restraining from the violation of any law, by means of punishment.

COE'RCIVE, a. that has the power of restraining; that has the authority of restraining by means of punishment.

COESSENTIAL, (coessensial) a. [con and essentia, Lat.] partaking of the same essence.

COESSENTIALITY, (coessensiality) s. the quality of partaking of the same essence.

COETERNAL, a. [cum and æternus, Lat.] existing eternally with another; equally eternal with another.

COETERNALLY, ad. in a manner equally eternal with another.

COETERNITY, s. [cum and æternitas, Lat.] having an eternity of existence together with, or equal to, the eternity of another.

COE'VAL, a. [cum and ævum, Lat.] born or produced at the same time; of the same age; living together.

COE'VOUS, a. of the same age; living at the same time.

To COEXIST, v. n. [cum and existo, Lat.] to exist, or be at the same time, or in the same place.

COEXISTENCE, s. the having existence at the same time or place with another.

COEXISTENT, a. having existence at the same time with another.

To COEXTEND, v. a. [cum and extendo, Lat.] to extend to the same space, period, or duration with another; followed by with, before the object with which the coextension is formed.

COEXTENSION, s. the act or state of extending to the same space or duration with another.

COFFEE, s. [Arab.] the berry of a shrub indigenous to Arabia and Abyssinia, dried or roasted with care, and much esteemed for the agreeable and aromatic flavour, and the stimulating properties of the decoction made from it. It is largely cultivated in the E. and W. Indies, but the product of these parts is not regarded as equal in quality to the Arabian or Mocha coffee. The essential principle of coffee, named in Organic Chemistry, Caffeine, has been shown to be identical with Theine, the essential principle of tea; but the effects of the two are decidedly different in many respects, which arises from other elements which enter into the decoctions or infusions made from these substances.

COFFEE-HOUSE, s. a place where coffee is sold, persons generally meet, (if near 'Change,) transact business, and the newspapers are taken in for the accommodation of customers.

COFFEE-POT, s. the covered pot in which coffee is boiled.

COFFEE-MAN, s. one that keeps a coffee-house.

COFFER, s. [coffre, Sax.] a chest for keeping money. Figuratively, treasure. In Fortification, a hollow lodgment across a dry moat, the upper part of which is raised with pieces of timber above the moat's level, is covered with hurdles laden with earth, and serves as a parapet with embrasures. It is generally used by the besieged to distress the enemy when they endeavour to pass the ditch.

To COFFER, v. a. to put into chests or coffers, followed by up.
COFFER-DAM, s. a dam formed in a river, of two or more rows of piles, driven very close to each other, the space between being rammed full of earth and stones, so as to be impervious to the stream. It is usually in the form of a circle, or semi-circle, and is employed to enable workmen to repair the foundations of wharfs and bridges, since by pumping the water out from the space enclosed by the dam, access can be had to the very bottom of the river without difficulty.

COFFERER, of the king's household, s. a principal officer at court, in the counting-house, or elsewhere, next to the comptroller, who inspects over the behaviour and conduct of the other officers of the household, and pays them their respective salaries.

COFFIN, s. [cofin, Fr.] the receptacle wherein a dead body is placed for its interment. In pastry, a mould of paste for a pie. A paper case in form of a cone or pyramid; a round piece of paper with the edges bent up perpendicularly, used by the apothecaries to drop their boluses in, to keep the outward part clean.

To COFFIN, v. a. to place, to enclose in a coffin.

To COG, v. a. to persuade, wheedle, or gain a person over by flattery, or an insinuating address; to falsify, or corrupt a manuscript, by inserting some word or sentence; to obtrude falsehoods, or endeavour to make them pass current. To cog a die, is to secure it so as to direct it in its fall.—v. n. to lie; to wheedle.
COG, s. the tooth of a wheel, by which it acts upon another wheel.

To COG, v. a. to fix cogs in a wheel.

COGENCY, s. [cogo, Lat.] the power of compelling; the power of extorting assent or obedience.

COGENT, part. [cogens, Lat.] able to compel to action; powerful; resistless.

COGENTLY, ad. in a forcible manner. Extorting conviction and assent, applied to arguments.

COGGER, s. a flattener; a wheedler.

COGGESHALL, Essex. It is seated on the river Blackwater, or Pant, over which there is a bridge. It has one large church, and three meeting-houses. The town consists of several narrow streets badly paved, and there is here a manufactory of baize. It is 44 miles from London. Market, Saturday. Pop. 3851.

COGGLESTONE, s. [cogulo, Ital.] a small pebble; a little stone.

COGITABLE, (cogitable) a. [cogito, Lat.] that may be thought on, or may be the subject of thought.

COGITATION, s. the act of thinking. Figuratively, thought, purpose, intention, or design; meditation.

COGITATIVE, a. having the power of thought; given to thought, study, or reflection.

COGNAC, a town of the department of Charente, France, noted for its wines and brandy. See CHARENTE.

COGNATION, s. [cogn and nascor, Lat.] in Civil Law, the relation between both males and females descending from the same stock; relation, partaking of the same nature.

COGNISE/E, (komsie) s. in Law, the person to whom a fine in lands or tenements is acknowledged.

COGNISOR, (komsor) s. in Law, one that passes or acknowledges a fine in lands or tenements to another.

COGNITION, s. [cognitio, Lat.] knowledge; complete conviction.

COGNITIVE, a. [cognitus, Lat.] that has the power of knowing or apprehending.

COGNIZABLE, (by some pron. kinnizable) a. [connoissable, Fr.] proper for the consideration or inspection of a person; subject to judicial examination and notice.

COGNIZANCE, (by some pron. kinnizance) s. [connoissance, Fr.] in Law, an acknowledgment of a fine, or confession of something done; the hearing of a matter judicially; the particular jurisdiction of a magistrate, or an object which more particularly falls under his inspection or notice; a badge by which any person may be known or distinguished. Generally, consideration, attention, notice.

COGNOMEN, s. [Lat.] a surname, or appellation by which any person is known. Amongst the Romans it was the name borne in addition to the family name, by any individual person.

COGNOMINAL, a. [cognomen, Lat.] having the same name.

COGNOMINATION, s. a surname, the name of a family, of name added from any accident or quality.

COGNOSCE/NCE, s. [cognosco, Lat.] knowledge.

COGNOSCIBLE, a. that may be known; possible to be known; being the object of knowledge.

To COHABIT, v. n. [cum and habito, Lat.] to dwell in the same place with another; to live together as man and wife.

COHABITANT, s. one who dwells in the same place with another.

COHABITATION, s. the act of dwelling with another in the same place; the living together as man and wife.

COHEIR, s. [cohears, Lat.] a man who enjoys an inheritance together with another.

COHEIRESS, s. a female who enjoys an inheritance with another.

To COHERE, v. n. [cohereo, Lat.] to stick together; to hold fast to one another as a part of the same body; to suit, fit, or be fitted to; to agree. To be well connected; to depend on what has preceded, and connect with what follows, applied to literary compositions.

COHERENCE, COHERENCY, s. [coherentia, Lat.] in Physics, that state of bodies in which their parts are joined together so as to resist separation. Generally, relation; dependency; consistency, so as one part of a discourse does not contradict another.

COHERENT, part. [coherens, Lat.] sticking together so as to resist a separation; suitable, adapted to one another; consistent, or not contradictory.

COHESION, (cum and herco, Lat.) the force whereby the primary atoms of matter are connected together so as to form sensible masses. Figuratively, cohesion signifies the state of union or inseparability both of the particles of matter and other things; connexion.

COHESIVE, a. that has the power of sticking fast, so as to resist separation.

COHESIVENESS, s. the quality of uniting so as to resist any attempt to separate them, applied to the particles of matter.

To COHOBATE, v. a. to pour any distilled liquor upon its residuum, or remaining matter, and distil it again.

COHOBATION, s. the returning any liquor distilled upon that which remains after the distillation, and then distilling it again.

COHORT, s. [cohorta, Lat.] in the Roman army, the tenth part of a legion, consisting of 6 centuries. The pretorian cohort, which was the body-guard of the commander, grew in the later days of the Roman state to be the only power. In Poetry used for any company of soldiers or warriors.

COIF, s. [coiffe, Fr.] a head-dress; a lady's cap; a sergeant-at-law's cap.

COIFFED, a. wearing a coif.

COIFFURE, s. [coiffure, Fr.] a head-dress.

To COIL, v. a. [coarctare, Fr.] to reduce into a narrow compass. To coil a rope, is to wind it in a ring.

COIL, s. [hollern, Teut.] a tumult, noise, confusion, or bustle, occasioned by some quarrel; a rope wound into a ring.

COMBATTOOR, a mountainous province in the S. of Hindustan, bounded by Malabar, Mysore, Trichinopoly, and Dindigul. Some peaks of the mountains rise above 6000 feet in height. It is not very large, being between 40 and 50 miles in each direction. On the whole, owing perhaps to its elevation, it is healthy. It produces grain of various kinds, and native manufactures. Its chief town, of the same name, is, for the country, a fine, though not large place, and is about 300 miles from Madras.

COIMBRA, a city and university of Beira, in Portugal, situated on a mountain, near the river Mondego. It has a fine cathedral, and the buildings of the university are noble. Connected with it is a good library. It has about 20,000 inhabitants, and under 2000 students. It is 100 miles from Lisbon. Lat. 41.0 N. Long. 8. 21 W.

COIN, s. [coigne, Fr.] a corner; any thing standing with a corner outward; a brick cut diagonally, pronounced quo or guine.

COIN, s. metallic money; payment of any kind; compensation. See NUMISMATICS.

As it is needful to know the values of different coins used by various nations, in order to understand works of History and Travels, and also for commercial purposes, some tables are subjoined.

Hebrew Coins.

	£	s.	d.	f.
Gerah, equal in value to about				12
Bekah			1	3
Shekel, or stater, or shekel of the sanctuary			2	60
Maneh, or mina		6	5	0
Talent	375	0	0	0
Drachma of gold, or daric		1	10	0
Shekel of gold		1	16	5
Talent of gold	5464	5	8	0

The talent and mina, however, were the names of sums of money, and not of coins. After the subjugation of Judea by the Roman power, Roman coins were used as well as the native coinage, and those of Assyria and Greece.

Greek Coins.

	£	s.	d.	f.
Chalcus, equal in value to about				0.75
Obolus			1	1
Drachma			7	3
Stater (of silver)		2	7	0
Stater (of gold)		16	4	0
Stater, Atticus (of gold)		1	0	0
Mina		3	4	7
Talent	193	15	0	0

The talent and mina here, too, are sums of money. The value of these coins fluctuated very much during the different periods of Grecian history. Also, it should be observed, that different states had different coins, and that this table contains only the principal coins, of the most prominent and commercial state, Athens, which had a wider circulation than Attica merely. In early times, in Sparta, Lycurgus, the mythic legislator, to check the mercantile enterprise of the people, and make each man as far as possible the consumer of his own produce, issued and enforced an iron coinage; but the dampness even of the Grecian atmosphere overthrew the idle scheme.

Roman Coins.

	£	s.	d.	f.
As, equal in value to about				3
Sestertius			1	3
Denarius			7	3
Denarius aureus		16	2	0
Aureus		1	4	33
Sestertium		8	1	52
Talent	193	15	0	0

The sestertium and the talent were sums of money, and not coins; the former, which must be distinguished from the sestertius, was the name given to the value of 1000 sestertii. Divisions of the as and of the denarius were also in use, but their names will indicate their value. The actual value of these coins, and the size and weight, varied at different periods of Roman history: the table contains the values that most frequently prevailed; reckoning by which, no great mistake can be made.

Roman Coins mentioned in the New Testament.

	£	s.	d.	f.
Assarium, or lepton (mite), equals about				0.75
Quadrans (farthing)				1.5
Denarius (penny)			7	3
Mina (pound)		3	2	60

For the value of the coins of other nations of antiquity, great numbers of which are preserved in our museums, and described in works on Numismatics, reference must be made to these works, and to dictionaries and treatises of the antiquities of the several people by whom they were used.

English Coins.

Pennies, halfpennies, and farthings, in silver and brass, coined by the Anglo-Saxon and Anglo-Danish kings, are very numerously preserved. Similar coins struck by the Norman and early Plantagenet kings, and by the nobles, bishops, and other authorities, also exist. In the reigns of the later Plantagenets, groats and half-groats were coined; and gold coins, in value equal to 18 groats, called florins, with half and quarter florins. Before this time, gold had been but little used for English coin, and had borne no distinct name. The noble (whose value is yet preserved in the well-known legal fee 6s. 8d.) supplanted the florin; and was displaced in the time of the Yorkists, by the angels, equal to it in value, the half-angels, and the rials, equal in value to 30 groats. The accession of the Tudors introduced new coins; in silver, came the crown, half-crown, shilling, sixpence, and its half, quarter, and eighth parts; in gold, the sovereign, and double sovereign, crown, half-crown, and noble, the values of all which are known. With the Stuarts were introduced guineas, half-guineas, and two and five guinea pieces in gold; with halfpence and farthings in tin and copper. Quarter guineas in gold were struck in the earlier reigns of the present house, Copper pence and two-penny pieces, and seven-shilling gold pieces, were issued by George III. At the end of the war our present coinage was introduced, excepting four-penny pieces, which were struck by William IV., in silver; and three-penny pieces, in silver, and parts of the farthing, in copper, by our present monarch. Double-sovereign and five-sovereign pieces are struck in gold, but are not in general circulation; and two-penny, penny-halfpenny, and penny pieces in silver, also, which are usually called Maunday-pence, from an ancient custom of giving these and other small silver coin, as alms, on Maunday Thursday, at the royal palace.

	£	s.	d.	f.
5 sovereign piece (gold)			5	0
Double sovereign			2	0
Sovereign			1	0
Half-sovereign			10	0
Crown (silver)			5	0
Half-crown			2	6
Shilling			1	0
Sixpence				6
Groat				4
Three-penny piece				3

Pieces of the several values of a penny, halfpenny, farthing, and half and quarter farthings, in copper.

It must not be supposed that the actual value of these coins continued the same, as the sameness of the name would seem to imply. The worth of metallic money always depends upon circumstances which no legislature can control; and as it can always be converted into bullion, no laws can keep it at a fictitious value.

French Coins.

	£	s.	d.	f.
40 franc piece (gold) equals about		1	11	8.2
20 ... (silver)			15	10
5 ...			4	0
2 ...			7	0
1 ...			9	2
1 ... (50 centimes)			4	3
1 ... (25 ...)			2	1
10 centime piece (billon)				3
10 ... (copper) (2 sous)				3
5 ... (1 sou)				2
1 ...				0.4

In addition to these coins, Louis d'ors and Napoleons yet circulate of the old gold coinage; and of the old silver coinage, ecus and half-ecus, and pieces of the value of 30, 24, 15, 12, and 6 sous.

Spanish Coins.

	£	s.	d.	f.
Doublon of eight crowns (gold) equals about		3	4	8
Doublon of four ... (pistole)		1	12	4
Doublon of two ...			16	2
Crown (half-pistole)			8	1
Piaster (silver)			4	33
Peseta			10	2
Half-peseta			5	1
Realillo				22

There are also in copper, maravedis, and quartas of 4 and 8 maravedis, or octavos.

COI

Portuguese Coins.

	£	s.	d.	f.
Moidore, or Lisbonine, or Pistole (gold) equals about	1	6	11	1
Half-moidore	...	13	5	2
Quarter-moidore	...	6	8	3
Moiadobra, or Portuguese	1	15	11	11
Half-moiadobra	...	17	10	2
16 teston piece	...	8	11	1
12 teston piece	...	6	4	1
8 teston piece	...	4	5	3
Cruzada	...	2	7	1
New cruzada	...	4	11	...
Vintem	...	2	3	...
Rei (copper)	...	0	6	...

Beside these, ducats in gold, and pieces of eight in silver, are occasionally used.

Dutch Coins.

	£	s.	d.	f.
20 florin piece (gold) equals about	1	14	2	3
10 florin piece	...	17	1	5
10 Williams	...	16	5	2
Ryder	...	1	5	1
Ducat	...	9	5	1.5
Ducatoon (silver or billon)	...	5	5	0
Rix-dollar, or patagon	...	4	4	0
Guilder, or florin	...	1	8	2
Schelling	...	6	0	...

The florin is divided into 20 sous, and the sou into 5 cents.

Swiss Coins.

	£	s.	d.	f.
32 franken piece (gold) equals about	1	17	9	0
16 franken piece	...	18	10	2
Pistole (Berne)	...	18	10	0
Ducat (Zurich)	...	9	5	0
Ducat (Berne)	...	9	2	3
Crown (Basle) (40 batz) (silver)	...	4	8	0
Crown (Basle) (30 batz)	...	3	7	1
Florin, or half-crown	...	1	9	1
Franken	...	1	2	1

The batz, which are copper, are about 1½d. in value.

Danish Coins.

	£	s.	d.	f.
Christian (gold) equals about	16	7	0	...
Ducat (specie)	...	9	4	3
Ducat (current)	...	7	6	0
Rix-dollar (silver)	...	4	6	0
Mark	...	7	2	...

Hamburg Coins.

	£	s.	d.	f.
Ducat (imperial) (gold) equals about	9	4	3	...
Ducat (town)	...	9	4	0
Rix-dollar (silver)	...	4	7	0
16 schilling piece	...	1	2	2

Prussian Coins.

	£	s.	d.	f.
Frederick (gold) equals about	16	6	0	...
Half-Frederick	...	8	3	0
Ducat	...	9	4	0
Thaler, or rix-dollar (silver)	...	2	11	1
Groschen	...	3	...	...

Saxon Coins.

	£	s.	d.	f.
Double Augustus (gold) equals about	1	12	11	0
Augustus	...	16	5	2
Half-Augustus	...	8	2	3
Ducat	...	9	4	0
Rix-dollar (silver)	...	4	1	1
Florin	...	2	0	2
Groschen	...	1	2	...
The Saxon thaler is a sum of money about	3	1	0	...

Bavarian Coins.

	£	s.	d.	f.
Caroln (gold) equals about	1	0	4	1
Maximilian	...	13	7	2
Crown (silver)	...	4	6	0
Rix-dollar	...	4	0	2
Teston	...	8	1	...

COI

Coins of Baden.

	£	s.	d.	f.
2 florin piece (gold)	16	8	1	...
Florin	...	8	4	0.5

Sveedish Coins.

	£	s.	d.	f.
Ducat (gold) equals about	9	3	1	...
Rix-dollar (silver)	...	4	6	0

Austrian Coins.

	£	s.	d.	f.
Half-sovereign (gold) equals about	14	9	0	...
Quarter-sovereign	...	7	4	2
Ducat	...	9	5	0
Crown, or rix-dollar (silver)	...	4	1	2
Florin	...	2	0	3
Kreutzer (copper)	...	2	...	...

In Lombardy the sovereign circulates, a gold coin in value about £1 7s. 1d.; and the livre, a silver coin, about 8½d. value.

Venetian Coins.

	£	s.	d.	f.
Ozella (gold) equals about	1	17	4	0
Pistola	...	15	11	1.333
Zecchino	...	9	6	0
Ducat	...	5	11	1
Ducat (silver)	...	3	4	0
Crown	...	5	3	3
Ducatoon	...	4	8	0

Tuscan Coins.

	£	s.	d.	f.
Ruspone (gold) equals about	1	8	7	0
Rosina	...	17	1	0
Zecchino	...	9	6	1.333
Crown, or 10 paoli piece (silver)	...	4	5	1
Paolo	...	5	0	...

Coins of the Papal States.

	£	s.	d.	f.
Pistole (gold) equals about	13	11	1	...
Zecchino	...	9	4	2
Crown, or 10 paoli piece (silver)	...	4	3	1
Paolo	...	5	1	...
Baioccho (copper)	...	2	...	...

Neapolitan Coins.

	£	s.	d.	f.
Ounce, or 3 ducats (gold) equals about	10	5	3	...
Ducat (silver)	...	3	4	1
Carlino	...	4	0	...

Sardinian Coins.

	£	s.	d.	f.
Carlino (gold) equals about	1	19	1	2
Pistola	...	1	2	6.3
Crown (silver)	...	3	8	3

Coins of Savoy.

	£	s.	d.	f.
Carlino (gold) equals about	5	19	0	0
Double pistola	...	1	3	9.2
Pistola	...	15	10	0
Zecchino	...	9	5	3
Crown (silver)	...	3	11	2

Russian Coins.

	£	s.	d.	f.
Imperial (gold) equals about	1	12	9	0
Ducat	...	9	2	1
Rouble (silver)	...	3	2	0
Copeck (copper)	...	1	5	...

Turkish Coins.

	£	s.	d.	f.
Zecchin (gold)	...	5	9	2
Piastre (silver)	...	1	7	0
Rouble	...	4	2	...
Paca (copper)	...	1	3	3.33

The aspres, of which there are 120 in the piastre, are very small and thin pieces of copper.

Persian Coins.

	£	s.	d.	f.
Rupree (gold) equals about	1	9	1	3
Rupree (silver)	...	1	11	2
Abassi	...	9	0	...
Mamoudi	...	4	2	...

		Indian Coins.
		£	s.	d.	£	s.	d.
Mohur (gold) equals	1 13 8, or	1	10	10	1	10	10
Rupee	...	1	9	2, or	1	9	30
Star pagoda	...				7	6	0
Sicca rupee (silver) varies from 2s. to	...				1	9	0

		Chinese Coins.
		£	s.	d.	£	s.	d.
Tale (silver) equals	...				6	8	0
Mace	...						80

These with candareens are properly weights; the cash, which are cast copper coins with a square hole in the middle, by which they are tied up in 10s., are the only proper coins of China, and 1000 of them equal a tale of fine silver.

Coins of the United States.

	£	s.	d.	f.
Eagle (gold), ten dollars, equals	2	1	8
Half-eagle (gold), five dollars	1	0	10
Dollar (silver)		4	2
Cent (copper)				2

To make these tables less in extent, in most of them, the values of half and quarter pieces, &c. are omitted; and none but the most commonly used coin named.

To COIN, v. a. to mint, or stamp metals for money; to make or forge any thing, used in an ill sense.

COINAGE, COINING, s. the stamping metals, or making money. Figuratively, coin or metallic money; the charges or expense of coining. Forgery, or invention, used in a bad sense. See MINT.

To COINCIDE, v. n. [coincido, Lat.] to fall upon, or meet in the same point; to be consistent with, to concur.

COINCIDENCE, s. the state of several bodies or lines falling upon the same point; concurrence; consistency, or uniting to effect the same end, or establish the same point.

COINCIDENT, a. [coincidentes, Lat.] falling upon the same point, applied to bodies or lines. Concurring; consisting; agreeing; mutually tending to the support of any particular point.

COINCIDATION, s. [cum and indico, Lat.] the concurrence of many symptoms bespeaking or betokening the same cause.

COINER, s. one that makes money. Figuratively, a maker of counterfeit money; an inventor.

To COJOIN, v. n. [conjungo, Lat.] to join with another in the same office.

COIT, s. [kote, Belg.] a thing thrown at a mark. See QUORT.

COITION, s. [coitio, Lat.] the act by which two bodies come together.

COKE, s. the cinder which results from burning coal in a close furnace, or in a heap covered with clay, so as to prevent access of atmospheric air. It is very useful, burning as charcoal does, without its deadly fumes.

COKE, SIR EDWARD, the famous lawyer of the beginning of the 17th century. He studied at Cambridge, and became a member of the Inner Temple at the outset of life, where he gained such fame as brought him solid reward in the form of incessant engagements at the bar; and higher honours in being appointed successively solicitor-general and attorney-general to Queen Elizabeth. At the accession of James I. Coke did not lose his office, but was more famous than ever, in consequence of the intrigues and plots against the great professor of king-craft, and the Anglican Church, as represented by him. He was soon advanced to the chief-justiceship of the Common Pleas and of the King's Bench; and in these offices showed that James had mistaken his character, for he steadily opposed his arbitrary exercise of authority. He was accordingly removed, and though he was for a time restored to the royal favour, he was imprisoned afterwards in the Tower, and otherwise made to feel the wrath of the king, for his attachment to the growing patriot cause in the House of Commons. The reign of Charles I. gave him scope to show himself, and we find him accordingly, after seeming to fall behind in ardour, the first who dared to lift up his voice against the worthless favourite Buckingham. In 1633 he died, aged 81 years. He was not free from the faults of his times, yet in comparison with his greater rival Bacon, he is worthy of all praise. His dedication of the matured wisdom of his last days to the nurturing and defending the growing liberties of England, will always be the most glorious trait of his life. Whilst in his own profession, till happier days come, Coke upon Littleton must be one of the most authoritative works on Common Law.

COL, one of the western islands of Scotland, 11 miles N. W. of the Isle of Mull. It is 13 miles long and 3 broad; contains a few horses, sheep, and goats; and has many lochs, which abound in fish. The inhabitants are about 800.

COLANDER, (cillender) s. [colo, Lat.] a sieve, either of hair, twigs, or metal, through which any mixture is strained, and leaves the grosser parts behind it.

COLATION, s. the act of filtering, straining, or separating any fluid from its dregs or impurities.

COLATURE, s. the art of separating the dregs of any fluid by straining it through a sieve, or filtering it through paper; the matter strained or filtrated.

COLBERG, a sea-port of Prussian Pomerania, and once a Hanse-town of Germany, remarkable for its salt-works. It is situated at the mouth of the Persante, and has a good harbour. It is well built, and has some noble institutions for charitable purposes. Its fisheries are valuable. It is nearly 200 miles from Berlin. Population, about 7000. Lat. 54. 22. N. Long. 15. 39. E.

COLBERT, JEAN BAPTISTE, the great minister of Louis XIV. of France, was born in humble circumstances, and entered the service of Cardinal Mazarin, by whom he was introduced to the king. He held various offices under the king for more than 20 years, during which he freed France from debt, and raised the net income of the state to three times its former amount, but it was by such oppressive taxes as enraged the people in the highest degree against him; and even so he had not enough to satisfy his luxurious and prodigal master. The commercial industry of the country may be regarded as his creation, but it was by self-destructive means that he raised it. Him, also, France long thanked for her first step. Learning, literature, and the fine arts, found in him a munificent patron; the royal library in particular remains a monument of this spirit; and some of the finest buildings in Paris attest his taste. He died in 1683, aged 64 years. He is a surprising instance of what native force of mind can effect; but he shows also how vain is that notion of government which makes the governing power the thing for which all other things exist, instead of making them that are governed the end for which governments themselves are called into being.

COLBERTINE, s. a kind of fine lace worn by women.

COLCHESTER, Essex. It is situated on a fine eminence near the Coln, which is navigable within three miles of the town for ships of large burthen, and for hoys and small barks to a place called the Hythe, where is a quay close to the houses. Here is a manufactory of baize and seys; and it is noted for oysters called natives. It has an ancient castle, and some other fine buildings both ancient and modern. It is a principal station on the E. Counties Railway. It is 51 miles from London. Markets, Wednesday and Saturday. Pop. 17,790.

COLD, a. [cold, Sax.] without warmth, or warming; having a sensation of cold, or shivering; that which is not volatile, or easily put in motion by heat. Figuratively, unaffected; not easily excited to action; indifferent; not able to move the passions; reserved, or void of the warmth of friendship and affection; chaste, temperate, not easily provoked to anger; not meeting with a warm or affectionate reception; deliberate; calm.

COLD, s. something void of heat or motion; that which produces the sensation of cold; a disease affecting the mucous membrane, that lines all the passages in the body, very common in changeable weather.

COLDLY, ad. without warmth or heat; with great indifference or unconcern.

COLDNESS, s. opposite to heat; that quality which causes a sensation of cold, and deprives a person of his natural warmth and heat. Figuratively, want of kindness, love, esteem, or affection; coyness, chastity.

COLDSTREAM, Berwickshire, Scotland. A town situated on the N. side of the Tweed, with a fine bridge over that river. One of the regiments of the foot-guards takes its name from this town. It is 60 miles from Edinburgh. Pop. 1913.

COLE, s. [cawl, Sax.] a general name for all sorts of cabbage.

COLEBROOK-DALE, on the banks of the Severn, in Shropshire, is a winding glen between two hills, where are considerable iron works and coal mines, and a large and elegant bridge, of cast iron, of one arch. There is also in the Dale a spring of fossil tar, or petroleum, together with a spring of brine.

COLERAINE, Londonderry, in Ulster, Ireland. It has a valuable salmon fishery, and is situated 4 miles from the sea, &c., on the Bann, which being rapid, it is difficult for vessels to come up to the town. It is 114 miles from Dublin. Pop. 6255.

COLERIDGE, SAMUEL TAYLOR, one of our greatest recent poets, theologians, and philosophers. He was the son of an eccentric clergyman of Devonshire, and was left fatherless at an early age. In Christ's Hospital, under Dr. Bowyer, he had his first training, and displayed even then the strong bent of his mind towards poetry, and the deepest problems of metaphysical science. At Cambridge he studied subsequently, but did not complete his course. We find him next, ill-disguised by the designation Comberback, in the 15th dragoons; whence, however, he was soon released. Bristol was the next field of labour and thought, and there with Southey, Wordsworth, and a few more, he started his golden dream of a Pantisocracy to be founded by them some where in the New World; there, too, and at Nether Stowey near it, he edited 10 numbers of his Watchman, preached as a Unitarian minister, and wrote some of his sweetest and finest poems. His peculiarities too became more marked,—intense application to metaphysics, and a sad neglect of trade excelsencies. He next went on to the continent, and studied under some of the great scholars in all sciences Germany then rejoiced in, visited other parts, and had to be smuggled from Italy, where he was regarded, and would have been treated, as a spy. Returning, he joined the Lake poets for two years, lectured at the Royal Institution, wrote in the Morning Post and Courier, and showed that in politics and religion his mind had undergone a total change. His Friend was first published at this time also. He removed to London next, and spent the remainder of his days at a friend's at Highgate, in planning, or rather dreaming, great works, and in executing fragments which make the lack of the unrealized dreams a loss not to be repaired; in talking, when he had gathered round fit and few audience, such discourse as the old man eloquent might have held; and in growing to a maturity in spiritual life, that makes his recorded thoughts more precious. He died in 1834, aged 62 years. Amongst politicians of a certain party it has long been the fashion to deride S. T. Coleridge, and to blacken his name and fame by any means that would serve. It is beginning to be felt that he was a great man, of clear spiritual vision, whose principles are so stated in his works as to enable any thinking reader to judge for himself respecting his conclusions and practical positions. In America he is better known than here. But his day is opening even here. His Aids to Reflection in particular is beginning to tell upon that class for whom it was written, and to whom it is beautifully adapted,—young men learning to think and judge of things. In Poesy his rank amongst the first has long been assigned him.

COLSEED, s. in Botany, the seed of the rape, a species of cabbage, from whence rape-seed oil is drawn, cultivated for feeding cattle.

COLSHILL, Warwickshire. It is seated on the ascent of a hill, near the Coln. It is 102 miles from London. Market, Wednesday. Pop. 2172.

COLET, DEAN, one of the distinguished divines in England just before the Reformation. He held various dignities and appointments, and at last was made Dean of St. Paul's, London. In the discharge of his duties he was most exemplary, and in some of his opinions gave augury of the coming change. He founded St. Paul's School, and died in 1519, aged 53 years. He has left a few works, of little moment.

COLLEWORT, s. in Botany, a species of the cabbage.

COLFORD, COLLEFORD, or CO'VEAD, Gloucestershire, a town near which are considerable iron works. It is 124 miles from London. Market, Tuesday. Pop. 2208.

COLIC, s. [colicus, Lat.] in Medicine, a severe pain in the lower venter, and so called because it was formerly thought to be seated in the colon.

COLIC, a. affecting the bowels. "Intestine stone and ulcer, colic prays," Milt.

COLIGNY, ADMIRAL DE, the most distinguished victim in the massacre of St. Bartholomew's day, in 1572, in France. He had been in the earlier part of his life a brave and able soldier and commander, and in the struggles during the reigns preceding Henry IV., had taken part with the Huguenots and done them great service. A treacherous peace having been got up by Catherine in the name of Charles IX., Coligny came to Paris. He was killed by the Duke de Guise, who entertained special enmity against him: aged 56 years.

To COLLAPSE, v. n. [collapse, Lat.] to fall together; to close together so as one side shall touch another.

COLLAPSION, v. the state of vessels closing of themselves; the act of closing together.

COLLAR, s. [collum, Lat.] that part of the dress of both sexes which surrounds the neck; also part of the harness put round the neck of horses, &c. when used for draught, to which the draughts are fastened. An ornament of metal, worn by knights of several military orders, hanging over the shoulders on the mantle, and generally consisting of a gold chain, enamelled with ciphers and other devices, and having the badge of the order suspended at the bottom. That of the order of the Garter consists of 26 pieces, of gold, with roses enamelled red, within a garter enamelled blue, and a George at the bottom. That of the order of the Bath, is of gold, formed of knots alternating with the three national flowers, enamelled proper, and imperial crowns. That of the Thistle, is of thistles and sprigs of rue, of gold, enamelled. That of St. Patrick, has six harps and five roses alternating with twelve knots, in the centre a crown, all of pure gold. To slip the collar, is a phrase for getting free, escaping or extricating oneself from any difficult engagement. A collar of brawn, is a quantity of brawn rolled and bound up in a roundish parcel.

To COLLAR, v. a. to seize by the collar. Joined with brawn, to roll up and bind with a string, in order to make retain a round form.

COLLAR-BONE, s. the clavicle.

To COLLATE, v. a. [collatum, Lat.] to compare one thing with another of the same kind. Applied to books, to compare and examine them, in order to find whether any thing be deficient, corrupted, or interpolated. Used with to, to place in an ecclesiastical benefice.

COLLATERAL, a. [eum and latus, Lat.] side to side; running parallel; mutual, or such as becomes near relations, applied to affection. In Geography, situated by the side of another. Concurrent, applied to proofs. In Cosmography, intermediate, or lying between the cardinal points. In Genealogy, applied to relations of the same stock, but not in the same line of ascendants and descendants; such are uncles, aunts, nephews, cousins. Collateral descent, in Law, is that which passes to brothers' children. Collateral assurance, is a bond made over and above the deed itself for the performance of a covenant. Collateral security, is a deed made of other lands, besides those granted by the deed of mortgage, on their not being a sufficient security.

COLLATERALLY, ad. side by side, applied to position or situation. Not in the same line of descendants, though from the same stock, applied to genealogy.

COLLATION, s. [collatio, Lat.] the act of bestowing or conferring, applied to gifts or favours; the comparing one copy or thing of the same kind with another. In Canon Law, the bestowing of a benefice by a bishop, who has right of patronage. Also an elegant public entertainment or feast.

COLLATIONOUS, a. [collatitius, Lat.] done by the contribution of money.

COLLATOR, s. one who examines copies or manuscripts, by comparing them with some other writing. In Law, one who presents to an ecclesiastical living or benefice, generally applied to the presentation of a bishop.

To COLLAUD, v. a. [collando, Lat.] to join in praising.

COLLEAGUE, (colleog) s. [collega, Lat.] a partner or associate in the same office.

To COLLEAGUE, (colleog) v. a. to unite or join with.

To COLLECT, v. a. [collectum, Lat.] to gather together; to bring several things together, or into the same place; to add into a sum; to infer, draw, or deduce from arguments. Followed by the reciprocal pronouns himself, &c., to recover from a service; to reassemble one's scattered ideas.

COLLECT, s. [collecta, Lat.] a short comprehensive prayer, used in the service of some churches.

COLLECTANEOUS, a. [collectaneus, Lat.] gathered together, collected.

COLLECTEDLY, ad. gathered in one view at once.

COLLECTIBLE, a. that may be gathered, or deduced from any premises.

COLLECTION, s. [collectio, Lat.] the act of gathering several pieces together; an assemblage of things in the same place. Also, the gathering of money at a meeting, or otherwise, for any specified purpose.

COLLECTIVE, s. [collectivus, Lat.] gathered together, consisting of several members or parts, forming a whole, or one common mass. In Logic, a collective idea, is that which unites several things of the same kind. In Grammar, a collective noun, is a noun which expresses a multitude, or several of the same sort, though used in the singular number; as, a company; an army; a fleet.

COLLECTIVELY, ad. in a body, taken together, opposed to singly or separately. In general; generally; in one mass or heap.

COLLECTOR, s. [collector, Lat.] one who gathers scattered things together; a compiler; a tax-gatherer.

COLLEGATARY, s. [con and legatum, Lat.] in the Civil Law, a person to whom is left a legacy in common with one or more other persons.

COLLEGE, s. [collegium, Lat.] a community, or society of men set apart for learning or religion. The word college bears a different sense in different countries. In Germany there was the college of electors, who assembled in the diet of Ratisbon. At Rome there is the college of cardinals, a body composed of three distinct orders of them. The universities have their several colleges, in which learning is taught. Among the Jews were several colleges, consisting generally of the tribe of Levi. Samuel is said to have founded the college or school of the prophets. Among the Greeks the Lyceum and Academy may be regarded as colleges. Colleges have been generally in the hands of those devoted to religion. Thus the Magi in Persia, the Gymnosophists in the Indies, the Druids in Gaul and Britain, had the care of instructing youth in the sciences. After the establishment of Christianity there were almost as many colleges as monasteries, particularly in the reign of Charlemagne, who enjoined the monks to instruct youth in music, grammar, and arithmetic. In London there is the College of Civilians, commonly called Doctors Commons, founded by Dr. Harvey, dean of the Archies, for the professors of the civil law residing in London. Also, the College of Physicians, a corporation of physicians; and the Royal College of Surgeons, a like corporation of surgeons. Sion College, or college of the London clergy, who were incorporated in 1631, at the request of Dr. White, under the name of the president and fellows of Sion College; it is likewise an hospital for ten poor men. Gresham College, or College of Philosophy, founded by Sir William Gresham, who built the Royal Exchange. The subjects of the lectures (now read in the Royal Exchange) are divinity, astronomy, music, geometry, rhetoric, civil law, and physic. College of Herald's, commonly called the Herald's Office, a corporation founded by King Richard III., who granted them several privileges, as to be free from subsidies, tolls, offices, &c. Colleges of Common Law, see Inns of Court.

COLLEGIATE, a. relating to a college, or possessed by a college.

COLLEGIAN, a. an inhabitant or member of a college.

COLLEGIATE, a. consisting of colleges; instituted or regulated after the manner of a college. Collegiate church, is that which is endowed for a society or body corporate, consisting of a dean and secular priests, without a bishop; of this kind are Westminster Abbey, Windsor, &c.

COLLEGIATE, a. a member of a college, or one bred at a university.

COLLET, s. [colletum, Lat.] formerly any thing that was worn about the neck. Figuratively, the neck. Among jewellers, that part of a ring in which the stone is set.

TO COLLUDE, v. a. [colludo, Lat.] to strike, beat, or dash two things together, or against each other.

COLLIER, JEREMY, one of the nonjurors, or clergy at the Revolution in 1688, who refused to acknowledge William III., and in consequence, a great authority with the highest church party. He suffered for his zeal through prosecutions, fines, imprisonments, outlawry, &c., but he never cooled. His writings were very numerous, and almost all of a controversial character. His Ecclesiastical History of Great Britain has a considerable reputation amongst the partisans of his views. He died in 1726, aged 75 years.

COLLIER, s. one who digs for coals in a mine; one who sells or deals in coals; a vessel made use of to convey coals by water.

COLLIERY, s. a coal-work.

COLLIGATION, s. [cum and ligo, Lat.] the binding things close, or together. COLLIMATOR, s. [con and lineo, Lat.] in Optics and Practical Astronomy, an instrument by which observers are enabled to detect any error in the direction of the line of sight in telescopes used in quadrants, sextants, &c.; which would make the observation incorrect.

COLLINGWOOD, ADMIRAL LORD CUTHBERT, a distinguished naval commander during the last war. He took part in the victories of Lord Howe, St. Vincent, and Trafalgar; and was engaged after the last battle in arranging the political affairs it opened the way to. He was the fast friend of Lord Nelson, whom he followed step by step through the usual degrees of promotion. His character as a commander, and in private, has always been highly esteemed, especially in the fleet. He died in 1810, aged 60 years.

COLLINS, ANTHONY, one of the most notorious of the Freethinkers (as they styled themselves) of the beginning of the last century. He was professionally attached to the law, but his numerous works on theological and moral subjects have been the preservers of his memory. He exerted himself, under the guise of great concern for Christianity, to bring it into contempt, and spared no sophistry in the attempt. Dr. Bentley's famous work, under the name of Phileleutherus Lapsidarius, is almost the only one of the countless replies to Collins's various treatises that has lived beyond its own age, or has deserved to do so. His character was estimable both in public and private; but it did not correct the natural tendency of his flippant and insincere writings. He died in 1729, aged 53 years.

COLLINS, WILLIAM, one of our most eminent lyric poets. He received a good education at Oxford, and commenced his literary career early in life. But indolence and mental dissipation hindered the realization of his manifold schemes for achieving renown. The last years of his life were spent, with few lucid intervals, in the horrors of madness. His poems are few in number, but of a high order, and have had amongst the best critics passionate admirers. He died in 1756, aged 35 years.

COLLIQUABLE, a. easily dissolved; liable to be melted.

COLLIQUAMENT, s. the substance any thing is reduced to by being dissolved or melted.

COLLIQUANT, part. a. [colliquans, Lat.] that has the power of dissolving, melting, or wasting.

TO COLLIQUATE, v. a. [colliquo, Lat.] to melt, dissolve, or turn a solid into fluid by heat, &c.—v. n. to melt; to be dissolved.

COLLIQUATION, s. [colliquatio, Lat.] the melting of any thing by heat.

COLLIQUATIVE, a. melting or dissolving. A colliquative fever is that which is attended with a diarrhoea, or profuse sweats.

COLLIQUEFACTION, s. [colliquefactio, Lat.] the reducing different metals to one mass, by melting them in a fire.

COLLUSIO, s. [collisio, Lat.] the act of striking two bodies together.

TO COLLOCATE, v. a. [colloco, Lat.] to place; to station.

COLLOCATION, s. [collocatio, Lat.] the act of placing; disposition.

COLLOP, s. a thin slice of meat, or steak; a piece or slice of any animal.

COLLOQUY, s. [cum and loquor, Lat.] a conference or conversation; a discourse in writing, wherein two or more persons are represented as speaking or talking together on any topic.

COLLOW, s. [supposed by Johnson rather to be colly, from coal] the black grime of burnt coals or wood.

COLLUCTATION, s. [cum and luctor, Lat.] the mutual struggle or commotion of the particles of any fluid between themselves; opposition; fermentation. Figuratively, contest; spite; mutual opposition.

TO COLLUDE, v. n. [cum and ludo, Lat.] to join in a fraud; to conspire in imposing on a person.

COLLUMPTON, Devonshire. It is a handsome town, seated on the river Columb, 150 miles from London. Market, Saturday. Pop. 3,900.

COLLUSION, s. [con and ludo, Lat.] in Law, a deceitful contract or agreement between two or more persons, for the one to bring an action against the other, in order to defraud a third person of his right.

COLLUSIVE, a. fraudulently concerted or agreed upon between two persons, in order to cheat a third.

COLLUSIVELY, ad. concerted or contrived in a fraudulent manner, with a fraudulent design.

COLLUSORY, a. carrying on a fraud by secret concert.

COLLYRIUM, s. [Lat.] in Medicine, an external remedy for disorders in the eyes.

COLMAN, GEORGE, the younger and elder, two play-writers and humourists of the end of the last century and beginning of the present. The father died in 1794, the son in 1836.

COLMAR, s. [Fr.] a sort of pear.

COLMAR, capital of the department of Haut Rhin, France. It stands below the hills called the Vosges, on the river Lauch. There is a brisk trade carried on in it; and it has some importance as a trading place given it by a canal communicating with the river Fecht. A few manufactures are carried on. And there is a college here, with an admirable library. It is about 260 miles from Paris, and has a population of about 20,000. Lat. 48. 4. N. Long. 7. 25. E.

COLNBROOK, Bucks and Middlesex. It is situated on four channels of the river Coln, over each of which it has a bridge. It is 17 miles from London. Market, Wednesday. Pop. 1050.

COLNE, Lancashire, a town near Pendle Hill. It is 218 miles from London. Market, Wednesday. Pop. 8615.

COLOGNE, (Köln), a circle of Prussia, lying on the Rhine, about 40 miles in length, and bounded by Arnsburg, Coblenz, Aix-la-Chapelle, and Düsseldorf. It has mountains in its east part, which afford mines of coal, and some metals, but generally it is plain and fertile, abounding in cattle and sheep. Bonn, the celebrated university, is in this circle. The population is about 420,000. Cologne, the capital of this circle, stands on the Rhine, and is an ancient and noble city, strongly fortified, and adorned with many magnificent buildings, of which the cathedral, famous amongst Romanists for its relics, is the most splendid. There are some good libraries and educational institutions at Cologne. The produce of the vicinity, and manufactures, (especially of wine and spirits,) furnish it with a good trade; though as a trading place it has greatly fallen, it having been one of the imperial towns in ancient times. It has a population of above 65,000. Lat. 50. 55. N. Long. 6. 56. E.

COLOGN EARTH, s. a deep brown ochre, which contains more vegetable than mineral matter, and owes its origin to the remains of wood long buried in the earth.

COLOMBIA, the general name by which the republics of Grenada, Ecuador, and Venezuela, in S. America, are known. See these names.

COLON, s. [Gr.] in Grammar, a point or stop marked thus (:), used to mark a pause greater than that of the semi-colon, and less than that of a period, employed where a close dependence as to sense exists between two sentences, but none as to syntax. In Anatomy, the greatest and widest of all the intestines, adjoining immediately to the rectum.

COLONEL, (kérnel), s. [Fr.] an officer in the army who has the command in chief of a regiment. Colonel-Lieutenant is one who commands a regiment of the guards, whereof the king, or other great personage, is colonel. Lieutenant-Colonel is the second officer of a regiment at the head of the captains, and commands in the colonel's absence.

COLONELSHIP, (kérnelship) s. the office of a colonel.

COLONIZATION, s. the act or process of colonizing.

TO COLONIZE, (kólonize) v. a. to plant with inhabitants; to settle with people brought from some other place; to plant with colonies.

COLONNADE, (colonna, Ital.) a peristyle of a circular form; or a series of pillars placed in a circle, and insulated withinside. Figuratively, any series or range of pillars.

COLONY, s. [colonia, Lat.] a body of people sent from the mother country to cultivate and settle some other place. The colonies of the W. part of S. America were chiefly for the purpose of working the mines there. England has had in New Holland colonies formed almost wholly of convicted criminals, which have proved to be what prudence and common sense might have foreseen, and are accordingly to be discontinued.

Figuratively, the country settled by a body of people both in and coming from some other place.

COLOPHONY, (Kólofony) s. [Colophon, a city, whence it is imported,] a resinous substance prepared of turpentine boiled in water, and afterwards dried; or from a slow evaporation of a fourth or fifth part of its substance by fire.

COLOQUINTEDA, s. [Koilia and kineo, Gr.] in Botany, the fruit of a plant of the same name brought from the Levant, often called bitter-apple.

COLORADO, a river of N. America, emptying itself into the Gulf of California, after a long course from the Rocky Mountains. It is very imperfectly known.

COLORATE, a. [coloratus, Lat.] coloured; dyed; marked or stained with any colour.

COLORATION, s. [coloro, Lat.] the art or practice of colouring or painting; the state of a thing coloured.

COLORIFIC, a. [color and facio, Lat.] that has the power of producing colours, or of colouring any body.

COLOSSÆ, a city of Phrygia Pacatiana in Asia Minor, seated on the Lycus, at which one of the earliest apostolical churches was formed.

COLOSSIANS, PAUL'S EPISTLE TO THE, written during Paul's first imprisonment at Rome, about 60—64 A. D. Considerable light will be thrown on it by the comparison of it with the same writer's Epistle to the Ephesians, which was written a very short time before. It consists of a very highly finished representation of the truth the Colossians had received, as a spiritual principle—a partaking of the life of Christ, and not as a merely intellectual doctrine, or outward ceremonial; and a series of practical exhortations founded on this representation, in which he draws a bold and masterly sketch of what must and ought to be the character of one who has participated in that new life-principle.

COLOSSUS, s. [Lat.] a statue of enormous size: that of Apollo at Rhodes, made by Chares, was so high that the ships of those days could pass at full sail between its legs; its height was 126 feet; it was overthrown by an earthquake after standing 1360 years; and was sold to a Jew, who loaded 900 camels with the brass of it.

COLOUR, (kállér) s. [color, Lat.] the sensation produced by the refraction and reflexion of the rays of light from the surface of any substance, or through any transparent medium, to our eyes. See OPTICS. In a popular sense, the hue in which any body appears to the eye. Figuratively, the rosy hue of the cheeks; the tint or hue produced by covering any surface with paint. Under colour, appearance or pretence.

TO COLOUR, (kállér) v. a. [coloro, Lat.] to mark or dye with some hue or tint. Figuratively, to palliate, or excuse; to assign some plausible or specious reason for an undertaking; to blush.

COLOURABLE, (kállérable) a. specious; plausible.

COLOURABLY, (kállérably) ad. plausibly; speciously.

COLOURED, (kállér) part. streaked; diversified with different hues.

COLORING, (kálléring) s. that branch of Painting which teaches the proper distribution of lights and shades, and laying the colours with propriety and beauty.

COLORIST, (kállérist) s. a painter excellent in the tints he gives his pieces, and the manner in which he disposes his lights and shades.

COLORLESS, a. without colour; white; transparent.

COLT, s. [colt, Sax.] a young horse that has never been ridden or broke. Figuratively, a raw, ignorant person.

COLTER, s. [cutter, Lat.] the sharp iron of a plough, which cuts up the ground perpendicularly to the ploughshare.

COLTIE, s. a term used by timber-merchants for a defect or blemish in some of the annual circles of a tree, whereby its value is much diminished.

COLTISH, a. resembling a colt; wanton.

COLTSFOOT, s. in Botany, a species of tussilago, or butterbur, with yellow compound blossoms, and large angular-toothed leaves, somewhat heart-shaped, appearing after the flower. A decoction of it is often used in coughs. It is found on moist, stiff lands, flowering in March.

COLT'S-TOOTH, s. an imperfect or superfluous tooth in the mouth of a young horse. Figuratively, an inclination to youthful pleasures, wantonness, or gaiety.

COLUMBA NO'ACHI, in Astronomy, a constellation of the S. hemisphere, recently made of some stars lying near Canis Major.

COLUMBA, ST. the traditional apostle from Ireland who taught the Gaels in Scotland Christianity. He lived in the 6th century, and founded the establishment on the island of Iona. The common narratives of his life are almost wholly legendary.

COLUMBARY, s. [columba, Lat.] a place where doves or pigeons are kept; a dove-cot; a pigeon-house. Amongst the Romans, it also meant the places where the urns containing the ashes of the dead were placed.

COLUMBATES, s. in Chemistry, salts formed by the combination of any base with the columbic acid.

COLUMBIA, District of, United States, a tract of country 10 miles square, ceded by Virginia and Maryland, lying on both sides the Potomac, having a plain but sterile surface, little fitted for agriculture. It is the centre of a considerable and active commerce, having three ports and one navy-yard on the river. It was ceded, however, for the purpose of becoming the seat of government, and Washington was built on it. It is not represented in Congress. It has two colleges. Population, 43,712, of whom 4694 are slaves.

COLUMBIA, capital of S. Carolina, United States, stands on the Congaree river, on a plain elevated above the surrounding country. It is regularly laid out, and though built mostly of wood, is a handsome place. The state house, and buildings connected with the government, and the buildings of S. Carolina college, are good. The college is a fine institution, with a good library. It is 506 miles from Washington. Pop. 3500. There are in the States 27 other places bearing this name.

COLUMBIA, the name of a large river flowing W. from the Rocky Mountains into the N. Pacific Ocean, in 47° N. Lat., watering the whole of the Oregon territory. Its course is very circuitous, and it receives the waters of many tributaries in its course. The navigation of the part next the ocean, though it admits vessels drawing 12 feet of water, is rendered very difficult by shoals and quicksands; and the mouth has a dangerous bar. Its whole course is above 700 miles in length.

COLUMBIC, a. in Chemistry, belonging to columbium.

COLUMBINE, s. [columba, Lat.] in Dyeing, a pale yellow, or changeable dove-colour. Likewise the heroine or chief female character in pantomime entertainments. In Botany, a plant, with leaves like the meadow-rue.

COLUMBIUM, s. in Chemistry, a metal of an iron grey colour, known also by the name tantalum.

COLUMB MAGNA, or St. CO'LUMB, Cornwall, a small town with a large parish, seated on a hill, at the bottom of which is a river which runs into the sea at a small distance. It is 249 miles from London. Markets, Monday and Thursday. Pop. 3146.

COLUMBO, a town on the W. side of the island of Ceylon, formerly subject to the Dutch, but now in the hands of the English. It is the seat of their government, and is well fortified. It has a harbour, but not very serviceable. It is well built, and has some handsome edifices belonging to the government. Its trade is good, being the chief emporium for the productions of the island. Pop. about 40,000. Lat. 7. 4. N. Long. 79. 50. E.

COLUMBUS, (or COLON.) CHRISTOVALE, the navigator who in the 15th century discovered the continent of America. He was ever of an adventurous disposition, and meeting in Henry, the navigator of Portugal, a prince who sympathized with the discoveries of travellers, hoped to enlist the Portuguese court in his behalf. At length he obtained from Ferdinand and Isabella of Spain what he desired, and set forth on his novel voyage. After many discouragements he reached the Bahamas, and having discovered Cuba, St. Domingo, and other neighbouring islands, returned to Spain. In three subsequent expeditions he discovered others of the W. Indian islands, and parts of the N. and S. American continents. He was also doomed to experience the customary meed the world bestows on its greatest men. He was deprived of all solid recompence for his toil, and worn out with petty vexations. He died in 1506, aged about 60 years. It is exceedingly doubtful whether he were absolutely the first to discover the New World; but it was by his discovery that it first became a reality for Europe, and from its date may be reckoned a new era in the history of commerce and civilization.

COLUMBUS, capital of Ohio, United States, stands on the Scioto river. It is regularly and handsomely built, and has some fine churches and public buildings for government purposes. There is also an asylum for the deaf and dumb, and a lunatic asylum, with some other public institutions, that are great ornaments to this city. A bridge over the Scioto connects this place with Franklinton. It is 393 miles from Washington. Pop. 6048. There are 12 other places named thus in the States, of which one in Georgia, on the Chattahoochee river, a place of some importance as a centre of steam-navigation, having a population of 3114, deserves notice.

COLUMN, (colūm) s. [columna, Lat.] in Architecture, a round pillar, tapering, but not regularly from the base upwards; and used either singly as a monument, or to support or adorn buildings.

The forms of the columns of nations which have attained any refinement of art, vary much. The Grecian form is that which satisfies most completely the demands of taste. There are three varieties of this, the Corinthian, the Ionic, and the Doric; the last severely simple, the first admitting of profuse and elaborate ornament. To these varieties the Roman architects added the Tuscan and the Composite; the first, in some respects, plainer than the Doric; the latter more ornamented than the Corinthian. Beside these differences, there were regular proportions allotted to each variety; and peculiar forms and details both in the capitals and bases. In Military Art, a body of men drawn up in such order as to present but a narrow front, and at the same time to move with the greatest force upon the enemy. Columns are usually divided into portions to prevent the disorder which would otherwise arise at the least check. With printers, when pages are divided lengthwise, each part is called a column.

COLUMNAR, COLUMNARIAN, a. formed in the shape of a column.

COLURES, (colētræ) s. [coluri, Lat.] in Geography and Astronomy, two great circles imagined to intersect each other at right angles, in the poles of the world; one of which passes through the equinoctial points, Aries and Libra; the other through the solstitial points, Cancer and Capricorn.

COMA, s. [Gr.] in Physic, a lethargic sleep.

COME EREXES, in Astronomy, a constellation lying behind the Lion, in the N. hemisphere.

COMATOSE, a. [coma, Gr.] lethargic; sleepy; or affected with a coma.

COMB, (kōm) s. [camb, Sax.] a toothed instrument made of horn, tortoise-shell, &c., used to adjust, &c., the hair; likewise an instrument made of iron or steel wires fixed upright on a piece of wood, through which flax, wool, or hemp, is passed to prepare it for spinning; the crest of a cock, so called from its resembling the teeth of a comb. Also, the receptacles or hollow places in a bee-hive, wherein the honey is stored.

To COMB, (kōm) v. a. [camben, Sax.] to clean or smooth the hair by passing a comb through it; to make wool or flax fit for spinning, by passing it through a comb.

To COMBAT, v. n. [combattre, Fr.] to fight, generally applied to a duel, or a fight where the persons engage hand to hand.—v. a. to fight. Figuratively, to engage.

COMBAT, s. [combat, Fr.] a contest, generally applied to an engagement between two persons; a duel. Figuratively, opposition or struggle.

COMBATANT, s. [combattant, Fr.] he that fights. Figuratively, a champion or stickler for any opinion.

COMB-BRUSH, s. a brush to clean combs.

COMBER, (kōmer) s. one who passes wool through the comb, and prepares it for the spinner.

COMBINATION, s. a union of private persons for some particular purpose. Figuratively, union of qualities or bodies; mixture.

In Chemistry, a term expressive of the chemical union of two or more substances, in opposition to mere mechanical mixture. Association, applied to ideas. In Mathematics, combinations are the different parcels of any number of things that can be taken, each consisting of a certain number of the things, without regard to the order in which they stand in the parcels. In Politics, and Political Economy, the association and union of persons having a common interest, to secure that interest by means of the power obtained by combining; as of employers against their men, and workmen against their masters, in respect of hours of work, and wages; and of tradesmen against purchasers, &c.

To COMBINE, v. a. to join together. Figuratively, to link together in unity, affection, or concord.—v. n. to join together, applied to things. Figuratively, to unite in one body. To unite in friendship, applied to persons.

COMBLESS (kōmless), a. wanting a comb, without a comb, applied to a cock.

COMB-MAKER, s. one whose trade is to make combs.

COMB-MARTIN, Devonshire, a town seated on an inlet of the Bristol Channel, with a cove for the landing of boats. It is 181 miles from London. Market, Saturday. Pop. 1390.

COMBUST, a. (comburo, Lat.) burnt.

COMBUSTIBLE, a. that may be burnt, or that easily catches fire.

COMBUSTIBLES, substances which readily take fire. In Chemistry, certain substances which are capable of combining more or less rapidly with oxygen.

COMBUSTIBLENESS, COMBUSTIBILITY, s. the quality of catching fire easily.

COMBUSTION, (kōmbūst-yūn) s. [Fr.] the burning of several things together; conflagration; consumption by fire. Figuratively, confusion, noise, hurry, commotion, produced by restless minds, either in moral or political affairs. In Chemistry, it is regarded as the combination of oxygen with any combustible body, accompanied by the emission of light and heat. Spontaneous Combustion, is combustion that takes place without any mechanical cause, and without the contact or approach of any substance in a state of combustion. Many cases of the combustion of the human body, without a sufficient immediate cause, are on record; they are nearly all of immoderate spirit-drinkers, but the cause is quite uncertain.

TO COME, v. n. preter. I came, or have come; participate, come; [comen, Sax.] to move from a distant to a nearer situation, either to a thing or person; to approach, draw near to, or advance towards; to proceed; to issue; to become; to become present, and no longer absent; to happen; to fall out. To come about, to come to pass, to fall out; to change; to come round. To come after, to follow. To come in, to enter; to comply; to yield; to hold out no longer; to arrive at a port, or place, or rendezvous; to become modish, or brought into use; to be an ingredient; to make part of a composition. To come into, to join with, to bring help; to comply with; to agree to. To come over, to repeat an act; to revolt; to rise in distillation. To come out, to be made public; to be discovered. To come out with, to give a vent to; to let fly. To come abroad, to be publicly known or published. To come to, to arrive at or attain; to follow as a consequence; to happen. To come again, to come a second time; to return. To come at, to reach. To come by, to obtain, gain, or acquire. To come in for, to be early enough to obtain a share of any thing, alluding to the custom of hunting, where those dogs that are slow come in for no share of the game. To come near, to approach; to assemble. To come off, to escape; to quit or fall from, or leave. To come on, to thrive, or grow; to advance to combat. To come to, to agree or consent; to amount to, applied to arithmetic. To come to himself, &c., to recover from a fright or a fit. To come up with, to overtake. To come upon, to invade, attack, or seize unexpectedly.

COME, interjection, implying an exhortation to attention, despatch, and courage, when used singly; but when repeated, it implies a grant, permission, supposition, or a transition from the topic which preceded, to avoid giving offence.

COME, ad. means when it shall come. To come, in futurity; not present.

COMEDIAN, [comédien, Fr.] one who acts on the stage. In a restrained sense, applied only to one who appears in a comedy; but in a more loose sense, any actor.

COMEDY, [comæ and oîe, Gr.] a dramatic piece, representing some diverting transaction, being an exact picture of common life, exposing the faults of private persons, in order to render them ridiculous and universally avoided.

COMELINESS, s. grace; handsomeness united with an appearance of dignity.

COMELY, a. handsome, graceful, applied to that appearance which excites reverence rather than love. Applied to things, that which is suitable to a person's age and condition, consistent with virtue, or agreeable to the rules of right reason.

COMELY, ad. in a graceful, becoming, and pleasing manner.

COMER, s. that which soon grows, or rises above ground, applied to plants. A visitor, a person who enters or settles in a place. To give up oneself to the first comer, is to embrace any doctrine implicitly, and without examination.

COMET, [kōmētēs, Gr.] in Astronomy, a name given to a large class of bodies revolving round our sun in highly elliptical orbits, which present the appearance of a nucleus of luminous matter, surrounded by light luminous vapour, which streams off from the nucleus on the side away from the sun. As they are very unsubstantial, the disturbing forces they are exposed to in their orbits act on them with excessive violence. The resistance of the ether filling the planetary spaces has shortened the orbit of one, Encke's comet, by some days, since it was first discovered. And the failure in the predicted return of some, which had been observed but once, and then indicated a very short period, may be accounted for by the perturbations which some of the larger planets occasioned them, having changed the character of their path during the time of the observation. There are three comets, the times of whose revolutions are ascertained and verified by their returns. The first, called Halley's, has a period of 76 years, and was seen last in the autumn of 1835. The second, Encke's, has a period little exceeding 3 years; and the third, Biela's, has a period of nearly 7 years; but both these are telescopic. Beside these, there are some hundreds of all degrees of brilliancy, but mostly telescopic, of which nothing more is known than the results of isolated observations. The only theory respecting their nature, which has any claims to attention, is that which regards them as gaseous in their nature; the fact of one of them having gone between the moons of Jupiter without occasioning any derangement of that complex and beautiful system, and another having twice crossed the earth's orbit, when she was at no great distance, without any acceleration or retardation having been detected, assures us that the matter composing them must be in a state of extreme tenuity. Beside which, stars of no great magnitude and brilliancy have been seen by constant observers, even through the nucleus itself. These bodies were, until late years, regarded as the causes of war, famine, pestilence, drought, &c.

COMETARIUM, s. [Lat.] a mathematical machine, representing the method of a comet's revolution.

COMETARY, COMETIC, a. that belongs or relates to a comet.

COMFIT, s. [kōnfit, Belg.] a dry sweet-meat; any vegetable preserved by boiling it in sugar, and drying it afterwards.

TO COMFORT, v. (comfōrto, low Lat.) to strengthen, excite, invigorate, enliven, or make a person undertake a thing boldly by persuasions; to make a person grow cheerful that is in sorrow, by advice and arguments.

COMFORT, s. support, assistance, or countenance; consolation, or support under calamity and danger.

COMFORTABLE, a. receiving relief or support in distress; affording consolation; having the power of lessening distress.

COMFORTABLY, ad. in a cheerful manner; in a manner free from dejection or despair.

COMFORTER, s. one that diminishes or lessens the degree of a person's sorrow under misfortunes; one who strengthens and supports the mind in misery or danger. A title given both to Jesus Christ, and to the Spirit of Truth, in the New Testament.

COMFORTLESS, a. without comfort, without any thing to lighten the burthen or allay the sensation of misfortunes; applied both to persons and things.

COMFREY, s. in Botany, a species of the symphytum of Linnaeus, with leaves betwixt egg and spear shaped, running along the stem, and yellowish white or purple blossoms. It is found on the banks of rivers and wet ditches, flowering in May.

COMIC, COMICAL, a. [comique, Fr.] relating to or fit for comedy; ridiculous or causing mirth, either from an unusual assemblage of ideas, seemingly inconsistent, or antic gestures and polite railery.

COMICALLY, ad. in such a manner as to raise mirth, either by an association or assemblage of ideas seemingly inconsistent, by polite or good-natured railery, or by some odd or antic gestures.

COMICALNESS, s. that quality by which a thing appears odd or ridiculous, and raises mirth in the mind.

COMINES, PHILIP DE, a French nobleman, and the historian of the events of the latter half of the 15th century. The beginning of his life he spent in the service of Charles the Bold, of Burgundy; afterwards he entered the service of Louis XI. Charles VIII., after an interval of disfavour, continued this royal patronage; and the events of which he was an eye-witness and a participant, he has recorded in a clear, straightforward way. He died in 1509, aged about 63 years.

COMING, s. the act of moving towards a person or place; approach; presence, or arrival; the presence of a thing which was absent some time before. Coming-in, the product of a person's estate, pension, salary, or business.

COMING, part. applied to the inclination, propensity, or affection, fond; forward; easily complying. Applied to time, something not present; something future.

COMITIAL, (comitatus) a. [comitia, Lat.] relating to an assembly, applied particularly to that of the Romans.

COMMA, s. [Gr.] in Grammar, a pause or stop marked thus (,) used to distinguish those parts of a sentence which serve as expletives to the chief factors or components thereof, but are not so distinct from it in syntax or sense as most subordinated accessory sentences are. In Music, the smallest of all the sensible intervals of tone, seldom used but in theory, to show the justness of the concords, and is about the ninth part of a tone, or interval, whereby a perfect semitone, or tone, surpasses an imperfect one. In Natural History, a very beautiful moth, so called from its having a white mark on one of its wings, in the form of this point.

To COMMAND, v. a [commander, Fr.] to order, including the idea of authority; to keep in subjection; to oblige a person to perform any thing. Figuratively, to arrogate or claim by mere force; to overlook; to be situated above any place, so as to be able to look into or annoy it.

COMMAND, s. authority or power. Figuratively, the exercise of authority, or enforcing obedience. In a military sense, the power of overlooking and taking or annoying any place.

COMMANDEI, s. he that has the direction of or authority over others. In a military sense, a leader, chief, or officer. Also, a paving-beetle, or rammer. In Surgery, an instrument, called likewise a glossoconium, used in most tough, strong bodies, where the luxation has been of long continuance.

COMMANDEI, s. the exercise of a command, or the office of a commander. In History, applied to a benefice or fixed revenue belonging to a military order, and conferred on ancient knights, who had done some considerable service to the order.

COMMANDEMENT, s. [commandement, Fr.] an express order to do or abstain from any thing. When it orders any thing to be done, it is named a positive command; but when it forbids the doing a thing, it is then termed a negative command.

COMMANDESS, s. a woman vested with supreme authority.

COMMATRIAL, a. [con, or cum, and materia, Lat.] consisting of the same matter with another thing.

COMMATRIALITY, s. of the same matter or substance with another; resemblance to something in its matter or substance.

COMMEMORABLE, a. [con and memorabilis, Lat.] deserving to be mentioned with honour and reverence, worthy to be celebrated and kept in remembrance.

To COMMEMORATE, v. a, to preserve the memory by some public act; to celebrate solemnly.

COMMEMORATION, s. the doing something in order to preserve the remembrance of any person or thing.

COMMEMORATIVE, a. tending to preserve the remembrance of any person or thing.

To COMMENCE, v. n. [commencer, Fr.] to begin; to take its beginning; to assume a new character which it never did before, applied to persons and things.

COMMENCEMENT, s. beginning; date.

To COMMEND, v. a [con and mandare, Lat.] to represent a person as possessed of those virtues that demand notice, approbation, and esteem; to praise; to deliver, or intrust, with confidence, and full assurance of protection; to desire to be mentioned in a kind and respectful manner.

COMMENDABLE, a. worthy of praise.

COMMENDABLY, ad. laudably; in a manner worthy of commendation.

COMMENDAM, s. [commenda, low Lat.] in Canons, a vacant benefice which is given to a person to supply till some other person is presented or named to it.

COMMENDATARY, s. one who holds a living on commendam.

COMMENDATION, s. a favourable representation of a person's good qualities; praise; recommendation; a message of kindness.

COMMENDATORY, a. that commands or engages notice, esteem, and approbation, from a favourable display of good qualities; containing praises.

COMMENDER, s. one who praises or displays the virtues of another, in order to render him esteemed and beloved.

COMMENSALITY, s. [con and mensa, Lat.] the act of eating, or sitting to eat, at the same table with another.

COMMENSURABILITY, COMMENSURABLENESS, s. [con and mensura, Lat.] the capacity of being measured by some common measure or standard.

COMMENSURABLE, a. in Geometry, having some common aliquot part, or which may be measured by some common measure, so as to leave no remainder. Thus an inch and a yard are commensurable, because an inch taken 36 times is a yard.

To COMMENSURATE, v. a, to reduce to one common measure; to extend as far as.

COMMENSURATE, a. reducible to one common measure; equal; proportionate.

COMMENSURATELY, ad. a capacity of measuring or being measured by another, equally extensive.

COMMENSURATION, s. the reduction of, or measuring a thing, by some common measure; proportion.

To COMMENT, v. n. [commentor, Lat.] to write notes; to explain, interpret, or expound.

COMMENT, s. notes or annotations, in order to explain an author; exposition; explanation; remark.

COMMENTARY, s. [commentarius, Lat.] a continued and critical explanation of the sense of an author.

COMMENTATOR, s. one who writes remarks, notes, or explanations of an author.

COMMENTITIOUS (commentitiosus) a. [commentator, Lat.] invented; forged; fictitious; without any existence but in the brain.

COMMERCE, s. [cum and merces, Lat.] the exchange of commodities, or the buying and selling merchandise both at home and abroad, in order to gain profit, and increase the conveniences of life. Commerce, that is, the intercourse of nations for the exchange of their several productions, has been one of the main agents in promoting civilization. By extending the sphere of human knowledge,—by accustoming men to wide differences of language, customs, and modes of thinking,—by unfolding to view interests which, relating to humanity at large, dwarf all the greatest interests of any particular section of mankind,—by making men feel the superiority of actual manly worth and power over the factitious dignity of birth and station,—it has operated thus. Not that it is able to carry men beyond a certain stage in the progress of the race, far short of the goal; for it tends in turn to produce feelings and institutions as inimical to the greatest interests of man as feudalism itself. An aristocracy of capitalists, and the spirit of trade developed to gigantic proportions, are the evils to be watched for and prevented. But wherever nations have given it free scope, it has brought good to them; where they have hindered, discouraged, or prevented it, they have damaged themselves; and where they have sought to quicken its growth and force its development by legislative stimuli, they have damaged themselves in another way. The history of the great trading nations of old, Tyre, Babylon, Egypt, Carthage, Israel under Solomon, exhibit different aspects of the influence of commerce. Athens and Sparta afford a most instructive contrast of the two opposite classes of evils which interference with commerce entails. Rome developed the result of every influence commerce can exert, in her long career. In the middle ages we have, in Persia and Arabia under the successors of the warlike Caliphs, in the republics of Italy, and in the imperial or Hanse towns of Germany, some fine and most instructive examples. Spain and Portugal on one side, and Holland on the other, repeat these lessons in the next period. And now we have in China on one side, and Great Britain and the United States on the other, the story without an end. The tendency of the legislation of the present age is, undoubtedly, to set free commerce from all restrictions, and to withhold from it all adventitious supports. This is what should be promoted by every effort every man can make; and meanwhile it should be remembered, that education can carry mankind on to lengths which commerce could never reach; and that religion can raise men to heights which education alone could never attain. SYNON.

Commerce is used figuratively, for intercourse of any kind. Traffic, relates more to the exchanging of merchandise; trade and commerce, to that of buying and selling; with this difference, that trade seems to imply the manufacturing and vending of merchandise within ourselves; commerce, negotiating with other countries.

COMMERCIAL, a. belonging or relating to trade or commerce.

TO COMMIGRATE, v. n. [com and migro, Lat.] to move in a body, or with one common consent, from one country to another.

COMMIGRATION, s. the removal of a large number of persons or animals from one country to another.

COMMINATION, s. [com and minor, Lat.] a threat, a declaration or denunciation of punishment or vengeance for any crime; an office of the Church of England, containing threatenings denounced against certain crimes, and recited on Ash-Wednesday.

COMMINATORY, a. applied to a clause in any law or edict, importing a punishment for the breach or violation of it.

COMMUNIBLE, a. [communio, Lat.] that may be broken, powdered, or reduced into small parts.

TO COMMUNUTE, v. a. to pulverize; to grind; to break into small parts.

COMMUNUTION, s. the act of reducing into small particles, by grinding, powdering, breaking, or chewing.

COMMISERABLE, a. [com and miseror, Lat.] that deserves, or is the object of, pity and relief; showing pity and compassion to persons in distress.

TO COMMISERATE, v. a. to pity; to compassionate. SYNON. We naturally commiserate the sorrows of one we love. We may pity, and yet not have compassion. We may have both pity and compassion, yet not commiserate.

COMMISSERATION, s. [commiseratio, Lat.] a tender, sympathizing, and affectionate regard for those in distress.

COMMISSARY, s. [commissarius, low Lat.] an officer commissioned occasionally for a certain purpose; a delegate or deputy. In church government, one who exercises ecclesiastical jurisdiction in such places as are at a considerable distance from the bishop's see. In the army, a commissary-general of the musters, is one who takes a view of the numbers or strength of every regiment, sees that the horse are well mounted, and that the men be well clothed and accoutred. Commissary-general of provisions furnishes the army with every necessary for its food.

COMMISSION, s. [commisio, Lat.] the act of intrusting any thing; a trust; a warrant by which any trust is held. In common Law, the warrants or letters patent, which all persons, exercising jurisdiction, have to empower them to hear and determine any cause or suit, as Commission of the judges, &c. There are a great variety of Commissions issued from the crown. In Trade, it sometimes means the power of acting for another, and sometimes the premium or reward a person receives for so doing, which is  $\frac{1}{2}$ ,  $\frac{1}{3}$ ,  $\frac{1}{4}$ , or more per cent., according to the nature or circumstances of the affair.

TO COMMISSION, v. a. to authorize, empower, appoint, or give a person authority to discharge an office.

COMMISSIONER, s. one whose name is inserted in any warrant for the discharge of a public office; one empowered to act in a particular quality by patent or warrant.

COMMISSURE, s. [commisura, Lat.] a joint; or a place where two bodies, or the parts of an animal body, are joined together.

TO COMMIT, v. a. [committo, Lat.] to intrust; or trust a person; to send a person to prison; to perform, act, or perpetrate some crime or fault.

COMMITMENT, s. the act of sending a person to prison; imprisonment.

COMMITTEE, s. a number of persons to whom the consideration, examination, or execution of any affair is referred.

COMMITTER, s. a perpetrator; he that commits.

COMMITTABLE, a. liable to be committed; worthy of imprisonment.

TO COMMIX, v. a. [com and miscere, Lat.] to mix, blend, or join several things together, or into one mass.

COMMIXION, COMMIXTION, s. mixture; incorporation.

COMMIXTURE, s. the act of mingling; the state of being mingled; incorporation.

COMMODOE, s. [Fr.] the head-dress of a woman.

COMMODOUS, a. [commodus, Lat.] suitable to any particular purpose; free from any hindrance or obstruction; convenient; seasonable, or suitable; spacious, well contrived, applied to building.

COMMODOUSLY, ad. in a convenient manner, applied to situation. Enjoying the necessities and comforts of life, applied to condition. Fitted or suited to any particular end or view.

COMMODOUSNESS, s. the fitness or suitability of a thing to any end; advantage.

COMMODITY, s. [commoditas, Lat.] convenience, profit, interest, or advantage. In Commerce, wares, goods, merchandise, or that which is the object of trade.

COMMODORE, s. in the navy, an under admiral, or person commissioned to command a squadron of ships. When three or more sail of ships are in company, the eldest captain assumes this post, and has this title. The commodore's ship is distinguished by a broad red pendant, tapering towards the outer end, and sometimes forked.

COMMODUS, L. ÆLIUS AURELIUS, the emperor of Rome who succeeded Marcus Aurelius. The outset of his public life inspired great hope, but he soon gave himself up to the practice of every private and public evil that his station gave him the opportunity of doing. He sacrificed, without compunction, all who thwarted his will in any way; and after having been repeatedly plotted against without success, he was poisoned by his concubine. He was killed in 193, having reigned 13 years.

COMMON, a. [communis, Lat.] that is enjoyed by different species of animals; belonging equally to more than one; the property of no person; without a proprietor or possessor; vulgar; mean; trifling; frequently seen; usual; easy to be had; of little value; general; public; intended for the use of every body. In Grammar, applied to such verbs as signify both action and passion. Applied to nouns, such as signify both sexes under one term, as parent signifies both father and mother.

COMMON, s. an open field, free for any inhabitant of the lordship wherein the common lies to graze his cattle in.

TO COMMON, v. n. to enjoy a right of pasture in an open field in conjunction with others.

COMMONABLE, a. that may become open or free, applied to ground.

COMMONAGE, s. in Law, the right of pasture in a common; or fishing in another person's water; or of digging turf in the ground of another; the joint right of using any thing equally and together with others.

COMMONALTY, s. [communauté, Fr.] the people of the lower rank; the common people. Figuratively, the major part or bulk of mankind.

COMMONER, s. one of the common people; one of low rank; a person who bears no title; one who has a seat in the House of Commons. In Law, one who has a joint right to pasture, &c. in an open field. In the university, one who wears a square cap with a tassel when under-graduate, is of rank between a battler and gentleman commoner, and eats at the common table.

COMMONITION, s. [com and monere, Lat.] advice, warning.

COMMON LAW, s. customs, which by long prescription have obtained the force of law, and were received as laws in England, before any statute was enacted in parliament to alter the same; and are now distinguished from the statute law.

COMMONLY, ad. generally; frequently; usually.

COMMON-MEASURE, s. in Arithmetic, any number which divides any other two or more numbers without any remainder. Greatest common-measure, is the highest in amount in cases where two or more numbers will serve as common-measures.

COMMONNESS, s. frequency, or repetition; participation among, or application to several.

TO COMMONPLACE, v. a. to reduce to and transcribe under general heads.

COMMONPLACE-BOOK, s. a book wherein things or extracts are recorded alphabetically, or reduced to general heads, in order to assist a person's memory, or enable him to supply himself with any curious observations on any topic he wants.

COMMON-PLEAS, s. the queen's court, now held at Westminster, but formerly movable; it was erected at the time that Henry III. granted the great charter. In personal and mixed actions, it has a concurrent jurisdiction with the Queen's Bench, but has no cognizance of the pleas of the crown; the actions come hither by originals; the chief judge is called Lord Chief Justice of the Common Pleas, who is assisted by three other judges, all of them created by letters patent.

COMMON-PRAYER, s. the liturgy, or forms of service, used by the Church of England.

COMMONS, s. the vulgar; the lower sort of people; the Lower House of parliament, consisting of members chosen by the various cities, towns, and counties of England, according to the law and customs of the land. A portion of food or victuals usually eaten at one meal, so called at the universities.

COMMONWEAL, COMMONWEALTH, (communio vel, communio) s. in its primary sense, used in Law, the common good; a regular form of government or polity, established by common consent; a form of government in which the supreme power is lodged in the people; a republic; a democracy.

COMMORANCE, COMMORANCY, s. dwelling; habitation; abode; residence.

COMMORANT, a. [commoror, Lat.] resident; dwelling; tarrying; sojourning.

COMMOTION, s. [commocio, Lat.] tumult, disturbance, sedition, disorder, or confusion, arising from the turbulent dispositions of its members, applied to a state. Figuratively, inward confusion or violence; disorder of mind; perturbation; a violent motion or agitation.

To COMMUNE, v. n. [communio, Lat.] to converse; to talk together; to impart sentiments mutually.

COMMUNICABILITY, s. an open or generous disposition, whereby a person is willing to impart his sentiments to another; the possibility or power of being imparted or communicated to another.

COMMUNICABLE, a. [Fr.] that may become the property of, or be related or imparted to, another; used with to.

COMMUNICANT, s. one who partakes of the Lord's supper.

To COMMUNICATE, v. n. [communio, Lat.] to impart to another; to make another a joint partaker with ourselves; to confer or bestow a possession; to discover one's sentiments or knowledge to another.—v. n. to partake of the Lord's supper; to be connected or joined; to have something common with another.

COMMUNICATION, s. [communication, Fr.] applied to science, the act of imparting, discovering, or revealing. A common inlet or passage, leading from one place to another; the mutual intelligence kept up between persons or places; a conversation, conference, or imparting a person's sentiments in mutual discourse.

COMMUNICATIVE, a. inclined to make advantages common; liberal of benefits or knowledge; not close; not selfish.

COMMUNICATIVENESS, s. readiness of imparting benefits or knowledge to others.

COMMUNION, s. [communis, Lat.] intercourse; fellowship; common possession; a partaking of the same thing. Also, the celebration of the Lord's supper.

COMMUNITY, s. [communitas, from communis, Lat.] a government; a body of people united together in the same form of government; common participation, possession, or enjoyment, opposed to prohibition.

COMMUTABILITY, s. the quality of being the proper object of interchange, or of being capable of exchange.

COMMUTABLE, a. that may be ransomed or redeemed.

COMMUTATION, s. [commuto, Lat.] change, alteration, bartering; the exchanging a corporeal for a pecuniary punishment. The Commutation Act, a statute changing the levying of a tenth on all the produce of land into an annual rent-charge, determined in its amount by the average price of corn for seven preceding years.

COMMUTATIVE, a. relating to exchange. Commutative justice, that which is exercised in trade, and is opposed to fraud or extortion in buying and selling.

To COMMUTE, v. a. to exchange; to put one thing in the place of another; to buy off, or ransom.—v. n. to atone; to bargain for exemption.

COMMUTUAL, a. mutual; reciprocal. Used only in poetry. "Communtual zeal," Pope.

COMO, a town, lake, and district of that part of the Austrian empire which lies S. of the Alps, and was once Lombardy. The lake is about 3 miles in breadth, and 88 in circumference, and is surrounded by most enchanting scenery. The town is situated on the S. extremity of the lake. The inhabitants have established several manufactories of cotton and silk, and trade with the Grisons. It is 20 miles N. W. of Milan. Its population is under 20,000. Lat. 45. 44. N. Long. 9. 7. E. The district lies between Bergamo and the lake Maggiore, and is bounded on the N. by the Grisons, and on the S. by Milan. It is a hilly region, abounding with fertile spots, yielding excellent wine and fruits. On account of its climate and rich scenery it has always been the resort of the rich, whose villas are very numerous. There are about 400,000 inhabitants.

COMORIN, CAPE, the southernmost point of Hindustan. Lat. 8. 0. N. Long. 77. 35. E.

COMORO ISLANDS, a cluster of islands in the Indian Ocean, lying opposite to the coast of Zanguebar, in Africa, N. W. of Madagascar. They are four in number, Johanna or Anjoin, Mayotta, Mobilla, and Comoro or Angazija. Comoro, which gives name to the rest, is the largest, but Anjoin is the chief in importance. The mountains are lofty, and richly clothed with wood, chiefly fruit-trees; fine streams are numerous, and the grass and trees are green throughout the year. They produce rice, yams, all kinds of tropical fruits, and honey. At Anjoin the sultan resides. The natives are more numerous than their Mohammedan masters, but cannot get rid of them. The East India Company's ships often touch here for refreshments. The people on the coast speak English intelligibly. They preserve the language and manners of Arabia, and are not of so dark a complexion as the original natives. The entire population is about 12,000.

COMPACT, s. [compactum, Lat.] a bargain or agreement entered into by two or more parties; a contract.

To COMPACT, v. a. to unite or join together closely; to consolidate, or render solid by pressing the particles of a body close together; to league, or enter into a bargain.

COMPACT, a. close, dense, and heavy; having few pores, and those very small. Applied to style, concise, or containing much matter in few words.

COMPACTLY, ad. in a close, neat manner.

COMPACTNESS, s. firmness, hardness, density.

COMPACTURE, s. the manner in which any thing is joined; a joint or joining.

COMPAGES, s. [Lat.] a composition or system wherein several things are joined or united.

COMPAGINATION, s. [compago, Lat.] union, or joining several parts together.

COMPANION, s. [compagnon, Fr.] one with whom a person frequently converses, or with whom he is generally seen.

COMPANIONABLE, a. fit for the company of others; agreeable; sociable.

COMPANIONSHIP, s. a body of men forming one company; fellowship or association.

COMPANY, s. [compagnie, Fr.] several persons assembled in the same room, either for conversation or mutual entertainment; several persons united together to carry on one general and common design; a number of persons united or incorporated by some charter; a body corporate; a corporation. The several professions and bodies exercised in the city of London, are incorporated into distinct fraternities, called guilds, governed by their particular laws. There were formerly various trading companies, some of which have become extinct. By far the most important of any now existing, is the East India Company. Joint-stock Companies are combinations for trading with capital raised by shares, the profits of which are divided amongst the shareholders in proportion to their shares. It is usually restricted to Banking Companies. In Military Affairs, Company means a small body of infantry, under one captain. In the Marine, a number of merchant ships going the same voyage, and mutually bound by charter party, to stand by and defend each other. To bear or keep company, is to go with a person, or to visit him often.

To COMPANY, v. a. to be often in a person's presence; to go or walk with a person; to attend; to associate with.

COMPARABLE, a. worthy to be compared; equal to, or resembling.

COMPARABLY, ad. in such a manner as is worthy of comparison; in a comparative manner.

COMPARATES, s. in Logic, the two things compared to one another.

COMPARATIVE, a. [comparo, Lat.] that results merely from a comparison with another; that has the power of forming a comparison, or comparing two things or ideas together, in order to find out their resemblance or difference. In Grammar, the comparative degree is the form into which an adjective or adverb is put, either by inflexion, or the use of other adverbs, to express the relation of the subject, or of the verb, to some other like thing, or action, in reference to the intensity of its manifestation of the attribute expressed by such words.

COMPARATIVELY, ad. in a comparative manner; according to the distance or likeness found from comparing.

To COMPARE, v. a. to bring two or more things together, in order, by an inspection of them, to find in what they agree or differ; to apply one thing as the measure of another; to liken. When the comparison intends only an illustration of a thing by its likeness, then to or unto is used before the thing brought by way of illustration. But when persons or things are compared together, to discover in what they agree or disagree, or their relative proportions, then with is used.

COMPARE, s. the state of being compared; likeness; estimate or judgment formed on comparison.

COMPARISON, s. [comparaison, Fr.] judging of the difference of two things, by examining, or comparing them together; the state of a thing compared. In Grammar, the formation of an adjective through the various degrees in which the signification is heightened or diminished, as soft, softer, softest.

To COMPART, v. a. [compartir, Fr.] to divide or lay down a general design or plan, in all its different parts, divisions, or subdivisions.

COMPARTITION, s. the act of comparing or laying down the several parts or divisions of any plan or design. Figuratively, the part of any plan. In Architecture, the useful and graceful distribution of the whole ground-plot of an edifice into rooms of office, of reception, and entertainment.

COMPARTMENT, s. [compartment, Fr.] a design composed of different figures, disposed with symmetry, as ornaments of a parterre, ceiling, or picture: a division of a picture, or design.

To COMPASS, v. a. [compasser, Fr.] to surround; to enclose; to stand round in a ring; to besiege or block up; to grasp or enclose in the arms; to obtain, attain, secure, or have.

COMPASS, s. orbit; revolution; extent or limit; enclosure. In Music, the power of the voice, or of an instrument, to sound any particular note. In Navigation, an instrument consisting of a box, in which a magnetical needle is suspended so as to play freely, and thus point out the magnetic N., and enable pilots to steer their vessels with assurance of safety at all times. Compasses, a mathematical instrument, consisting of two branches, fastened together at the top by a pivot, about which they move as on a centre, and are used in taking distances, drawing circles, and in working problems in the mathematics.

COMPASSION, s. [compassion, Fr.] a disposition of mind which inclines us to feel the miseries of others with the same pain and sorrow as if they were our own.

COMPASSIONATE, a. easily affected with sorrow or pain, on viewing the calamities and distresses of others.

To COMPASSIONATE, v. a. to pity, and be moved with sorrow at the sufferings of others.

COMPASSIONATELY, ad. in a pitying, tender, sympathizing manner.

COMPATERNITY, s. [con and paternitas, Lat.] the relation of a godfather to the person for whom he answers.

COMPATIBILITY, s. consistency; the power or possibility of coexisting in the same subject, or at the same time; agreement.

COMPATIBLE, a. [compatelo, Lat.] consistent with; fit for; suitable to; becoming or agreeable to.

COMPATIBLENESS, s. the quality of agreeing with.

COMPATIBLY, ad. fitly; suitably, so as to be applicable to the same subject, and coexist in it at the same time.

COMPATRIOT, s. [con and patria, Lat.] one of the same country.

COMPEER, s. [compère, Fr.] an equal in rank; an associate or companion.

To COMPEER, v. a. to be equal with in quality; to match.

To COMPEL, v. a. [compello, Lat.] to make a person do or refrain from some act by force; to extort by force; used with from, before the person suffering the violence.

COMPELLABLE, a. that may be forced.

COMPELLER, s. he that makes a person do or refrain from an action by force.

COMPEND, s. [compendium, Lat.] in Literature, signifies abridgment, epitome, extract, or summary.

COMPEN'DIOUS, a. concise; brief, or containing much in few words, applied to style. Near, or short, applied to travelling.

COMPEN'DIOUSLY, ad. in a short or concise manner.

COMPEN'DIOUSNESS, s. brevity, or shortness; the quality of containing much in a short space, or performing much in a short time.

COMPEN'DIUM, s. [Lat.] an abridgment of discourse; a short or concise method of writing on any subject.

COMPENSABLE, a. [compens, Lat.] that may be recompensed.

To COMPENSATE, v. a. to make amends for; to countervail; to counterbalance.

COMPENSATION, s. amends; recompence; a thing of equal value to another; an equivalent.

COMPENSATIVE, a. that compensates, or counteravails.

COMPETENCE, Co'MPETENCY, s. [competo, Lat.] such a quantity as is just sufficient, without superfluities; such a fortune as is sufficient to supply the necessities of life, and is between poverty on one side, and affluence on the other. In Law, the right or authority of a judge, whereby he takes cognizance of any thing.

COMPETENT, a. suitable; proportionable; sufficient in numbers, quantity, or power, to any undertaking; moderate; qualified or fit for; consistent with; applicable to.

COMPETENTLY, ad. properly; sufficiently; without excess or defect.

COMPETITION, s. [con and peto, Lat.] the endeavouring to gain something in opposition to another; rivalry; contest; opposition.

COMPETITOR, s. [Lat.] one who claims or endeavours to gain something in opposition to another; a rival.

COMPIE'GNE, a town in the department of Oise, France. It stands on a sloping ground near the river whence the department is named, and is not remarkable in appearance. It has a bridge over the river. Several branches of manufacture are carried on here, and it has some trade, chiefly in agricultural produce. Its history, and the royal park adjoining, have made it known. It is 45 miles from Paris. Population, about 10,000. Lat. 49. 26. N. Long. 3. 0. E.

COMPILEATION, s. [compilo, Lat.] a collection from various authors; an assemblage or mass of things heaped together.

To COMPILE, v. a. to form or collect from various authors. Figuratively, to write; compose; to form from an assemblage of various circumstances or incidents.

COMPILEMENT, s. the act of piling together; the act of heaping up.

COMPILER, s. a collector; one who composes a work from various authors.

COMPLACENCE, COMPLA'CENCY, s. [complacentia, Lat.] a satisfaction arising in the mind on viewing some action which is worthy of its approbation, or in contemplating something which, on account of its amiableness, produces joy; the cause of joy, of rational pleasure and satisfaction; a genteel address, which bespeaks approbation, and causes pleasure; civility, complaisance, politeness, applied to behaviour.

COMPLACENT, a. affable; kind; civil; polite.

To COMPLA'IN, v. n. [complaigndre, Fr.] to find fault with; to accuse a person with having been guilty of some crime.—v. a. to weep, lament, or bewail.

COMPLAINANT, s. one who urges a suit, or commences a prosecution against another.

COMPLAINER, s. one who complains; a murmurer; a lamentor.

COMPLAIN'T, s. [complainte, Fr.] a mournful representation of injuries or pain; grief; the act of finding fault with any thing. Figuratively, the cause of dissatisfaction, or complaining.

COMPLAISANCE, s. [complaisance, Fr.] a civil behaviour, whereby a person complies with the inclinations of another, in order to insinuate himself into his esteem and favour. SYNON. Complaisance is the characteristic of the lover; politeness, of the courtier; but to be well-bred denotes the gentleman.

COMPLAISANT, a. [complaisant, Fr.] civil; polite; endeavouring to please.

COMPLAISANTLY, ad. in a civil, kind, condescending, and polite manner.

To COMPLA'NATE, COMPLA'NE, v. a. [complano, Lat.] to level, to make smooth and flat.

COMPLEMENT, s. [compleo, Lat.] that which perfects or completes any thing; a full, complete, or requisite quantity or number. In Geometry, applied to the arc of a circle, what it wants of 90 degrees; applied to parallelograms, are the parallelograms, which, when lines parallel to the sides are drawn, cutting each other in the diagonal, thus dividing the whole into certain numbers of similar figures, touch the point of intersection. In Navigation, applied to a course, what it wants of 90 degrees, 8 points, or a quarter of a circle. In Astronomy, the distance of a star from the zenith. Complement of the curtain, in Fortification, is that part in the interior side of it which makes the demi-gorge. Arithmetical complement, is what any number lacks to make it even with the unit of the next higher denomination. Complement of a logarithm, is what a logarithm wants of 10.

COMPLETE, a. [completus, Lat.] finished; perfect; wanting nothing; without defects; ended; concluded. SYNON. We may easily make a thing complete, and, with much pains, finish it; after all, it may not be perfect.

To COMPLETE, v. a. to perfect; to finish; to answer perfectly.

COMPLETELY, ad. perfectly; fully; in a perfect manner.

COMPLETENESS, s. perfection; a quality which implies a thing to be finished without defect.

COMPLETION, s. the existence of some circumstance predicted, whereby every part of a prophecy is fulfilled; accomplishment; the greatest height, or perfect state.

COMPLEX, s. [complexor, Lat.] a collection, summary, or the whole of a thing, consisting of several parts.

COMPLEX, COMPLEXED, a. compounded; consisting of several parts; including several particulars.

COMPLEXEDNESS, s. composition; containing a variety of circumstances or particulars.

COMPLEXION, s. the enclosure or involution of one thing in another; the colour of the outward part of the body, particularly that of the countenance. In Physic, the temperature, habit, or disposition of the body. A sanguine complexion, is that of hot or warm persons, and is so called from the blood being thought to be more predominant in such.

COMPLEXIONAL, a. depending merely on the habit or temperature of the body.

COMPLEXIONALLY, ad. by complexion, or by the habit of the body, or predominance of some of the fluids.

COMPLEXLY, ad. in a compound manner; consisting of several particulars, opposed to simply.

COMPLEXNESS, s. the state or quality of being composed of several particulars different from each other.

COMPLEXURE, s. the compounding or uniting of one thing with others.

COMPLIANCE, s. the yielding consent to a thing proposed; the ready performance of a thing requested; condescending so far to the humours of a person, as to do every thing he can desire or expect; condescension.

COMPLAINT, part. yielding to the touch; bending with any force; yielding, condescending.

To COMPLICATE, v. a. [complico, Lat.] to join or add one thing or action to another; to compose or make a whole, by the uniting of several things different from each other.

COMPLICATED, a. compounded of a variety of parts.

COMPLICATION, s. [complicatio, Lat.] the joining, mixing, blending, or involving several things in one another; a whole consisting of several things.

COMPLER, s. a man of an easy temper; a man of ready compliance.

COMPLIMENT, s. [compliment, Fr.] a profession of great esteem, or an expression of approbation or praise, merely from ceremony and politeness; a mere ceremonious expression.

To COMPLIMENT, v. a. to make use of expressions of respect, from a bare principle of good behaviour and ceremony; to speak in praise of a thing or person, contrary to one's real sentiments and opinion.—v. n. to use ceremonious or adulatory language.

COMPLIMENTAL, a. expressive of respect and civility.

COMPLIMENTALLY, ad. in a mere ceremonious manner.

COMPLIMENTER, s. a person abounding in compliments.

COMPLINE, s. [compline, Fr.] the last of the canonical hours in the Romish daily service.

COMPLOT, s. [Fr.] a plot, or ill design, concerted and carried on by two or more persons; a conspiracy or confederacy.

To COMPLOT, v. a. [complotter, Fr.] to join in a design; to bring about an ill design.

COMPLOTTER, s. one who joins in a plot; a conspirator.

To COMPLY, v. n. [complier, Fr.] to consent to any request; to suit oneself to a person's humours; to yield to.

COMPONENT, a. [componens, Lat.] that composes or contributes to the forming of a compound body.

To COMPORT, v. n. [comporter, Fr.] to suit, to agree with; to act agreeably or suitably to.

COMPORT, s. behaviour; manner of looking and acting; conduct.

COMFORTABLE, a. consistent, opposed to contradictory. COMFORTMENT, s. behaviour or conduct.

To COMPOSE, (compose). The s in this word and its derivatives is sounded like z; v. a. [composuer, Fr. compono, Lat.] to form a mass, consisting of several things joined together; to form or consist of; to place in a proper form; to join words together in a discourse with art and care; to reduce to a state of calmness, rest, and quiet; to reconcile. With printers, to put the letters in order in the composing stick. In Music, to set any thing to tune; to form a proper collection, order, or disposition of the notes.

COMPOSED, part. calm, serious, sedate, undisturbed.

COMPOSEDLY, ad. in a calm, serious, serene, or sedate manner; free from any perturbation or confusion.

COMPOSEDNESS, s. sedateness; calmness; tranquillity of mind; a freedom from any disturbance or disorder, applied to the mind.

COMPOSER, s. an author or writer on any subject; one that adapts or sets words to music, or forms a tune from a peculiar assemblage of the notes of music.

COMPOSITE, a. [composito, Lat.] in Architecture, one of the five orders of columns, termed likewise the Italian or Roman order; its capital is formed from the Ionic and Corinthian order. Composite numbers, are those that can be measured by some other number above unity, as 12 by 2, 3, 4, 6.

COMPOSITION, s. [compositio, Lat.] the act of forming a whole from parts different from each other; the act of combining simple thoughts together, in order to form a complex one; the distribution or orderly placing of the several parts of a plan, design, or picture; the work or production of an author; an agreement; contract; a reconciliation, or terms in which differences or quarrels are settled. In Commerce, a contract, whereby a creditor accepts part of his debt in compensation for the whole. In Grammar, the formation of sentences, or prefixing a particle or other word to any word, to increase, diminish, or alter its signification. In Music, the art of disposing notes, so as to form tunes or airs. Composition of forces, velocities, &c., in Mechanics, is the discovery of the direction, amount, &c. of the forces, &c., which combined produce a result, the direction, amount, &c. of which is known. See RESOLUTION.

COMPOSITOR, s. [compositour, Fr.] in Printing, the person who works at the case, sets up the forms, and prepares the types, by arranging them properly therein for printing.

COMPOST, s. [Fr. from compono, Lat.] a mixture of different soils together, in order to make a manure for assisting the natural soil, so as to amend, improve, and render it more fruitful.

To COMPOST, v. a. to manure; to enrich, or improve ground by mixture of different soils.

COMPOSTELLA, s. St. Jago de, a city, the capital of Galicia, in Spain, seated on a peninsula formed by the rivers Sa and Sarela. It contains many religious houses, 12 churches, and a university, which, with the public squares, are very magnificent. In former days it was one of the holy places to which great numbers of pilgrims continually journeyed, under the belief inculcated by the Romish Church, that it was an act of great merit, and power for the remission of sins. It is 265 miles from Madrid. It has a population of about 30,000. Lat. 43. 0. N. Long. 8. 25. W.

COMPOSURE, (composeure) s. the writing or inditing a work; composition or production, applied to books. Arrangement, mixture, or order; frame; make; temperament; sedateness. Adjustment, or reconciliation, applied to difference or quarrels.

COMPUTATION, s. [con and poto, Lat.] the act of drinking or tipping together.

To COMPOUND, v. a. [con and pono, Lat.] to mingle several ingredients together; to form by unity several things together; to place together in different lights, attitudes, or positions; to produce by being united; to reconcile, or put an end to a difference or quarrel, by concessions or compliance with the demands of an adversary; to pay a part of a debt, for want of a capacity to discharge the whole, and to be cleared for that reason from any further demand; to agree on certain terms; to contract.

COMPOUND, a. formed or produced by several ingredients, opposed to simple. In Grammar, formed by joining two or more words. The primary rules of Arithmetic are called so, when applied to quantities of more than one denomination in value, as pounds, shillings, and pence; or cwts., lbs., ozs. Compound Interest, is the interest paid after a lapse of years, on the amount of the principal and the annual interest added annually to it, and is therefore a higher rate than simple interest; e. g. any sum of money at 5 per cent. per ann., compound interest, is doubled in about 14 years; the same sum at the same rate, simple interest, would not be doubled till the end of 29 years. Compound Fracture, in Surgery, is when any bone is broken in more places than one at the same time.

COMPOUND, s. the mass formed by the union of two or more ingredients.

COMPOUNDABLE, a. that may be united together so as to form one mass; capable of being united.

COMPOUNDER, s. one who endeavours to bring adverse parties to an agreement; a reconciler. In the University, a person of superior rank or fortune, who is allowed to commute for residence, by paying extraordinary fines.

To COMPREHEND, v. a. [con and prehendo, Lat.] to comprise, include, contain, or imply; to have an adequate, clear, and determined idea of any doctrine or proposition. SYNON. We comprehend what is reducible to the forms of the understanding, e. g. the laws of nature; we apprehend what we know, yet cannot reduce to those forms, e. g. the Creator and Sustainer of the works of nature.

COMPREHENSIBLE, a. [comprehensibilis, Fr.] capable of being perfectly and clearly known.

COMPREHENSIBLY, ad. in a large extent, applied to the acceptance of words.

COMPREHENSION, s. [con and prehendo, Lat.] the act or quality of comprising or containing; a summary compendium or abstract; capacity, or the power of the mind to admit several ideas at once. Comprehension, in English Church History, denotes a scheme for relaxing the terms of conformity, in behalf of Protestant Dissenters, and admitting them into the communion of the Church. It was attempted in 1667-8, and 1674, and again immediately after the Revolution, but always failed. It has been proposed since, by various members of the Church of England. The union of Dissenters and Churchmen in any ecclesiastical organization is an utter impossibility. See DISSENT.

COMPREHENSIVE, a. able to understand many things at once; comprising much in a narrow compass; extensive.

COMPREHENSIVELY, ad. in a compendious or concise manner.

COMPREHENSIVENESS, s. the quality of including much in a narrow compass.

To COMPRESS, v. a. [comprimo, Lat.] to reduce in a narrow compass by force; to squeeze closer together.

COMPRESS, s. in Surgery, a bolster formed of linen cloth, folded into several doubles, laid under a bandage, to prevent a wound from bleeding or swelling, or to retain the remedies applied to it.

COMPRESSIBILITY, s. the quality of being reduced by force into a narrower compass.

COMPRESSIBLE, a. capable of being reduced by force into a narrower compass.

COMPRESSION, s. [Lat.] the action of bringing the particles of a body nearer together by external force, and thereby decreasing its bulk or dimension; the act of pressing together.

COMPRESSURE, s. the act or force of a body pressing upon another.

To COMPRIZE, (komprize) v. a. [compris, Fr.] to contain; to include; to comprehend.

COMPROBATION, s. [con and probo, Lat.] confirming by a joint testimony of two or more persons.

COMPROMISE, (kompromize) s. [con and promitto, Lat.] a mutual promise of one or more parties to refer the determination of a dispute or controversy to the arbitration or decision of one or more persons; a compact or bargain, in which some concessions or compliances are made on each side.

To COMPROMISE, (kompromize) v. a. to settle or put an end to a dispute or claim by mutual concessions.

To COMPT, (kvunt) v. a. [compter, Fr.] to make an estimate; to add up, or find the amount of a row of figures in arithmetic.

COMPTROLLER, s. See CONTROLLER.

COMPULSATORY, a. [compello, Lat.] having the power of forcing a person against his will.

COMPUSSION, s. [compulsus, Lat.] the act of forcing a free agent to do or abstain from an action, contrary to the preference of his mind; a violence or force; the state of being compelled.

COMPULSIVE, a. having the power to force a person to perform or abstain from an action; forcible.

COMPULSIVELY, ad. in a forcible manner; by compulsion; by force.

COMPUISIVENESS, s. the quality of obliging a person to perform or abstain from any act contrary to his inclination.

COMPUISORILY, ad. in a forcible manner; by force.

COMPUISORY, a. [compulsore, Fr.] having the power of commanding or forcing obedience.

COMPUSSION, s. [pungo, Lat.] the act of causing a pain resembling that of pricking; irritation. In Divinity, an inward grief, caused by the consciousness of having offended God; sorrow; anxiety; contrition; or repentance; remorse.

COMPUCTIONS, s. repentant; sorrowful; tender.

COMPUCTIVE, a. causing remorse; causing a sorrow from a consciousness of guilt.

COMPURGATION, s. [con and purgo, Lat.] the clearing and justifying one man's innocence or veracity by the oath of another.

COMPURGATOR, s. [Lat.] in ancient Law, a person who, by oath, clears and justifies another's innocence.

COMPUTABLE, a. capable of being numbered or estimated.

COMPUTATION, s. the act of estimating or counting the value of things; a calculation; a sum or number found by calculation, or an arithmetical process.

To COMPUTE, v. a. to find by an arithmetical operation; to estimate; to reckon; to count.

COMPUTE, s. a reckoning; calculation; the amount or sum total.

COMPUTER, s. one who makes calculations; an accountant.

COMPUTIST, s. [computiste, Fr.] one skilled in numbers or calculations.

COMRADE, s. [camerade, Fr.] one who lives in the same house; a person who is jointly concerned with another in an undertaking.

CON, (con, Lat.) always joined or fixed to words, signifying together, as connect; sometimes against, as contend; and sometimes something great or immense, as in configuration. Before a vowel or an h, it drops the n, as in coeternal, cohabit; and before the labials b and p, it is changed into an m, as in combustion, compare; and before t and m, it assumes the same letter, as in co-lect, com-mute.

CON, [an abbreviation of contra, Lat.] is used to imply an opposition to any motion; or that a person is on the negative side of a question. Nem. con for nemine contradicente, Lat., is used to signify that a motion is passed without any opposition.

To CON, v. n. [connan, Sax.] to know; to learn perfectly.

CONCAMERATE, v. a. [concamero, from camera, Lat.] to arch over; to vault; to lay concave over.

CONCAMERATION, s. an arch or vault, or any thing formed like an arch.

To CONCATENATE, v. a. [catena, Lat.] to link together; to join or connect the parts of any thing, that they shall have mutual dependence on each other, like the links of a chain.

CONCATENATION, s. a series of links. In Philosophy, a connexion of things, which mutually depend on each other, like the links of a chain.

CONCAVATION, s. the act of scooping a thing, or making it of a hollow or concave form.

CONCAVE, a. [concavus, Lat.] hollow, applied to the inner surface of a circular body, such as that of an egg-shell, of an arch, or a ball, opposed to convex. Empty, without any thing to fill the cavity. Concave Lenses and Mirrors, in Optics, are those whose surfaces are hollowed, producing in the mirrors a magnifying, and in the lenses a diminishing, power. See OPTICS.

CONCAVITY, s. the inner surface of a circular body.
CONCAVO-CONCAVE, a. hollow or concave on both sides.
CONCAVO-CONVEX, a. hollow or concave on one side, but convex or protuberant on the other.

CONCAVOUS, a. [concaus, Lat.] hollow, without angles, applied to the inward surface of a round body.

CONCAVOUSLY, ad. resembling the hollow of the inner surface of a round body.

To CONCEAL, (concel) v. a. [con and celo, Lat.] to hide or keep any thing from the sight or knowledge of others; to cover; to keep secret. SYNON. It requires care and attention to conceal; art and cleverness to dissemble; labour and cunning to disguise.

CONCEALABLE, a. capable of being kept from the sight or knowledge of others; possible to be kept secret.

CONCEALEDNESS, s. the state of being hid or kept from the sight or knowledge of others.

CONCEALER, a. he that conceals any thing.

CONCEALMENT, s. the act of hiding from the knowledge or sight of others; the state of being hid or kept secret; a place of retirement from the sight of others.

To CONCEDE, v. a. [concedo, Lat.] to grant or admit a principle or opinion as true; to let a point pass without any dispute.

CONCEIT, (konset) s. [concupio, Lat.] a conception, thought, or idea; apprehension; understanding; strength of imagination; mere fancy, a pleasant thought or shining sentiment; an opinionative persuasion, or a high opinion of a person's judgment, which exposes him to ridicule; a word of reproach. Out of conceit with, a phrase of a person's being tired, or no longer being fond of a thing.

To CONCEIT, v. a. to fancy; to imagine; to think, generally implying an opinion that has not the sanction of reason.

CONCEITED, part. of a strong imagination; proud, or entertaining too high an opinion of one's abilities.

CONCEITEDLY, ad. in a scornful or whimsical manner; in a manner which discovers too high an opinion, or too great a fondness in a person of his own parts.

CONCEITEDNESS, s. opinionativeness.

CONCEIVABLE, (konseivable) a. that may be imagined or thought; that may be understood or believed.

CONCEIVABLENESS, s. the quality of being apprehended by the mind.

CONCEIVABLY, ad. in an intelligible manner; in such a manner as to be apprehended by the mind.

To CONCEIVE, (konseiv) v. a. [conceiv, Fr.] to form in the mind; to imagine; to form an idea of; to comprehend; to think.—v. n. to become pregnant.

CONCEIVER, s. one that understands, or comprehends.

CONCENT, s. [con and canto, Lat.] concert of voices, harmony, concord; consistency.

To CONCESTRATE, v. a. [con and centrum, Lat.] to drive inwards, or towards the centre; to drive into a narrow compass; to condense.

CONCENTRATION, s. forcing into a narrow compass, or driving towards the centre; the highest degree of mixture, whereby two or more particles touch by a reception, or forcing one within the other.

To CONCENTRE, (konseter) v. n. [concentrer, Fr.] to tend towards the same, or towards one common centre.—v. a. to direct or contract towards one centre.

CONCENTRIC, CONCENTRICAL, a. [con and centrum, Lat.] having one common centre, applied to circles and spheres.

CONCEPTACLE, s. [conceptaculum, Lat.] that in which any thing is contained; a reservoir.

CONCEPTIBLE, a. [concupio, Lat.] that may be apprehended or understood; intelligible.

CONCEPTION, s. [conceptio, Lat.] the act of conceiving or becoming pregnant; notion; apprehension; idea. Sentiments; purpose.

CONCEPTION, a town and port of Chili, S. America, built a few miles from the sea, in the angle formed with it by one of the Chilean mountain torrents. It has few good buildings, owing to the frequent earthquakes. It lies about 250 miles from Valparaiso. Its population is about 10,000. Lat. 36. 45. S. Long. 73. 0. W.

CONCEPTIOUS, (konseptious) a. apt to conceive, or become pregnant; fruitful.

CONCEPTIVE, a. capable to conceive.

To CONCEARN, v. a. [concerner, Fr.] to relate, or belong to; to affect with some passion; to make uneasy or sorrowful; to be of importance to; to be intrusted or commissioned to act for a person, used with for. SYNON. Many people make themselves uneasy at that which does not in the least regard them; meddle with what no way concerns them; and at the same time are indifferent to those things which touch them nearly.

CONCERN, s. business; circumstances; engagement; interest; importance.

CONCERNEDLY, ad. with affection; with interest.

CONCERNING, prep. [originally a participle, has the force of a preposition before a noun,] about; of; relating to; with relation to.

CONCERNMENT, s. the thing in which a person is interested; an affair; business; influence; relation; importance; the engaging or taking part in an affair; emotion of mind.

To CONCERN, v. a. [concerner, Fr.] to take measures with another to bring a design to pass; to contrive.

CONCERT, s. a communication of designs, an establishment of measures to be pursued by persons engaged in one design. In Music, a number of musicians and singers performing the same piece. Concert-pitch, is the standard of the musical scale adopted by the profession, but often changed.

CONCERTATION, s. [con and certo, Lat.] strife, contest, or contention.

CONCERTATIVE, a. [concertativus, Lat.] quarrelsome; contentious; recriminating.

CONCERTINA, s. in Music, an instrument consisting of a bellows having metallic tongues, like those of the accordion, fitted into each end. In shape it is hexagonal, and is played with both hands, whilst having a complete scale, it is more useful and agreeable than the accordion.

CONCESSION, s. [concessio, Lat.] an act of granting or yielding; the thing granted or yielded.

CONCESSIONARY, a. given by indulgence or allowance, or purely to terminate a dispute.

CONCESSIVELY, ad. by way of concession.

CONCH, s. [concha, Lat.] a shell; a sea-shell.

CONCHA, (kinka) s. [Lat.] in Anatomy, the second or inward cavity of the auricle or external ear.

CONCROID, (khinkoid) s. in Geometry, a curve line always approaching nearer a straight line, to which it is inclined, but never meets it.

CONCHOLOGY, s. [conche and logos, Gr.] one of the sciences of classification, a branch of zoology, and natural history, which treats of that class of animals called molluscous, and testaceous, as the character of their bodies, or their shelly coverings, are regarded. Since physiological science has received the impetus given by Cuvier and his successors, it has been customary to regard these shells simply as parts of the molluscous animal, and therefore Conchology does not now stand as a science teaching the classification of shells simply, but is regarded as synonymous with Malacology; which see.

CONCILIAR, a. [concilio, Lat.] relating to a council.

To CONCILIATE, v. a. [concilio, Lat.] to gain or procure affection; to reconcile.

CONCILIATION, s. the act of procuring esteem, or reconciling.

CONCILIATOR, s. one who makes peace between parties at variance; a reconciler.

CONCILIATORY, a. relating to reconciliation.

CONCINNITY, s. [concinnitas, Lat.] decency; fitness.

CONCINNOUS, a. [concinnus, Lat.] comely; becoming; pleasant; agreeable.

CONCISE, a. [concisus, Lat.] short; brief.

CONCISELY, ad. in a brief or short manner; in few words.

CONCISENESS, s. brevity; shortness.

CONCISION, s. cutting off; total destruction.

CONCITATION, s. [concito, Lat.] the act of exciting; agitation; or setting into a ferment or commotion.

CONCLAMATION, s. [conclamo, Lat.] an outcry. Also a custom among the Romans, of calling the dead party by his name for eight days successively: on the ninth, concluding he was past recovery, they carried him forth and buried him.

CONCLAVE, s. [Lat.] a private or inner apartment; the place wherein the election is held for a pope; a meeting or assembly of all the cardinals that are at Rome, for the election of a pope; a close or private assembly.

TO CONCLUDE, v. a. [concludo, Lat.] to draw as a conclusion or inference from certain premises; to infer; to judge or determine; to end; to finish; to complete a period, applied to time; to acknowledge as truth.

CONCLUDENT, part. decisive; following by direct consequence; consequential.

CONCLUSIBLE, a. [conclusus, Lat.] following as a consequence from certain principles; to be inferred.

CONCLUSION, s. [conclusio, Lat.] determination or putting an end to an affair or transaction; an opinion formed from experience or from a collection of propositions; the event of experiments. SYNON. The sequel in part forms the story; the conclusion puts the finishing stroke to it.

CONCLUSIVE, a. decisive, or that puts an end to any contest. CONCLUSIVELY, ad. in a determinate, positive, peremptory manner.

CONCLUSIVENESS, a. the power of gaining assent, or forcing conviction; regular consequence, or following from any premises, according to the rules of logic.

TO CONCOAGULATE, v. a. to curdle or congeal one thing with another.

CONCOAGULATION, s. [con and coagulo, Lat.] a coagulation or curdling, by which several bodies are joined in one mass.

TO CONCOCT, v. a. [concoquo, Lat.] in Medicine, to digest in the stomach, so as to form into chyle; to purify; to heighten the quality of a thing by heat.

CONCOCTION, s. [concoctio, Lat.] in Medicine, the change which the food undergoes in the stomach ere it be converted into chyle; maturation, or heightening the powers or qualities of a thing by heat.

CONCOMITANCE, CONCOMITANCY, s. [con and comes, Lat.] united to; attending; inseparable from; accompanying.

CONCOMITANT, a. a companion; an attendant.

CONCOMITANTLY, ad. accompanying; in the manner of an attendant.

TO CONCOMITATE, v. a. [concomitor, Lat.] to attend; to be joined inseparably with another.

CONCORD, s. [concordia, Lat.] agreement between persons and things; the suitableness of one thing to another; peace, union, mutual kindness. In Grammar, that part wherein words are made to agree in number, person, and gender, &c. In Music, the relation of two sounds that are always agreeable to the ear, whether applied in succession or consonance.

CONCORD, capital of New Hampshire, United States, lying on the Merrimack river, over which it has two bridges. A vast water-power has been created by the falls of this river, and the locks made when it was rendered navigable for boats. There are some noble public buildings connected with the government, &c. It is 481 miles from Washington. Pop. 4897. There are 26 other places so named in the States, at one of which, in Massachusetts, commenced the war of the Revolution, which led to the independence of the United States.

CONCORDANCE, s. [concordo, Lat.] an agreement. An index to the Holy Scriptures, wherein all the words are ranged alphabetically, and the various places where they occur referred to. The best for the English Bible is that of Alexander Cruden.

CONCORDANT, part. [concordans, Lat.] agreeing with; consistent with; correspondent. In Music, consisting of concords or harmonies.

CONCORDAT, s. a treaty between the Pope and any government respecting the affairs of the Roman Church, temporal or spiritual, within its dominions.

CONCORDATE, s. [concordat, Fr.] a compact; convention; or a society held together by a common discipline, or statutes.

CONCORPORAL, a. [con and corpus, Lat.] of the same body. TO CONCORPORATE, v. a. to unite, blend, or mix several things together, so as to form one mass, system, &c.

CONCOURSE, (kin-kōse) s. [concreta, Lat.] a crowd, or several persons assembled together in one place; the point wherein two bodies meet together; the force or action with which two or more bodies meet together.

CONCREMENT, s. [concreasco, Lat.] a mass formed by concretion.

CONCRESCENCE, s. the act or quality of growing by the union of separate particles.

TO CONCRETE, v. a. [con and cresco, Lat.] to form from a union of several particles or bodies; to unite several masses or particles in one body.—n. to coalesce, cohere, or join together, so as to form one mass.

CONCRETE, a. formed by the union or cohesion of several particles or substances. In Logic, a concrete term is that which, while it expresses the quality, expresses, implies, or refers to some subject or substance in which it inheres, and is generally the same as an adjective in Grammar.

CONCRETE, s. an assemblage or mixture; a body or mass composed of several particles or principles.

CONCRETELY, ad. in such a manner as to include the substance with the quality.

CONCRETENESS, s. curdling; coagulation; or the gathering several fluids into a solid mass.

CONCRETION, s. the act whereby a soft body becomes hard, or the particles of a fluid become fixed, so as not to yield to the touch; the coalition or uniting of several particles so as to form one mass.

CONCRETIVE, a. that has the power of uniting several particles together, so as to form one mass; that has the power of turning a fluid into a solid; that has the power of producing coagulation, or the curdling of a fluid body.

CONCRETURE, s. a mass formed by the cohesion of several particles.

CONCUBINAGE, s. [Fr.] the act of living or cohabiting with a woman, as a wife, without being married.

CONCUBINE, s. [con and cubo, Lat.] a woman who is kept by a man, and lives with him, though not married to him; a kept mistress.

TO CONCULATE, v. a. [conculco, Lat.] to tread upon, or trample under foot.

CONCULATION, s. [con and calco, Lat.] trampling with the feet.

CONCUPISCENCE, s. [concupiscentia, Lat.] an inordinate desire of women; lust.

CONCUPISCENT, part. [concupiscens, Lat.] lustful; having an irregular appetite after carnal things.

CONCUPISCENTIAL, (konkupissential) a. relating to concupiscence, or having an irregular desire after women.

CONCUPISCIBLE, a. that may be desired; that raises, excites, or exerts desire.

TO CONCUR, v. n. [con and curro, Lat.] to meet together; to join in one action or design, applied to several persons; to unite with; to be conjoined with; to contribute to the effecting one common event or design.

CONCURRENCE, CONCURRENCEY, s. assistance; union; conjunction; united efforts to promote any design; agreement in any opinion or sentiment.

CONCURRENT, part. acting in conjunction, or together; promoting the same design.

CONCURRENT, s. that which contributes to the performance of a design.

CONCUSSION, s. [concutio, Lat.] the act of putting a thing into a violent motion; shaking; agitation.

CONCUSSIVE, a. that has the power or quality of shaking.

TO COND, CON, or CONX, v. a. in sea language, signifies to guide or conduct a ship in her right course.

CONDE, LOUIS DE BOURBON, THE GREAT, a celebrated French general of the 17th century. He commenced his career early, and in the 30's years' war fought against the emperor of Germany, with various success. The wars of Fronde, at home, followed, and here he pursued such a course as led to his being imprisoned by Mazarin, whom he afterwards drove from the position of supreme power which he had assumed. In the Spanish service, he subsequently was often engaged with the equally celebrated Turenne. Being restored to his native country by Louis XIV., we find him fighting beside Turenne, against William of Orange, and the great general Montecuculi. He ended his life in peaceful retirement; but the soldier never was wholly lost in the admirer of letters. He died in 1686, aged 65 years.

TO CONDEMN, (kondem) v. a. [condemno, Lat.] to pass sentence against a person, whereby he is subject to punishment; to censure, to blame, or find fault with.

CONDEMNABLE, a. that may be blamed, found fault with, or is subject to the sentence of a judge.

CONDEMNATION, s. [condemnatio, Lat.] passing or pronouncing sentence against a person, whereby he is subject to punishment or penalty, either in respect to person, fortune, or life. Figuratively, the state of a person on whom sentence has been passed.

CONDEMNATORY, a. having the force of condemning or subjecting a person to punishment.

CONDEMNER, s. the person who condemns, censures, blames, or finds fault with.

CONDENSABLE, a. that is capable of being made more solid, or forced into a smaller compass.

TO CONDENSE, v. a. [condenso, Lat.] to make more solid or thick by compression or force, applied to fluids.

CONDENSATE, a. made thicker or more solid by compression or external force.

CONDENSATION, s. the act of bringing the parts of a body closer to each other, and increasing their contact, whereby the body is rendered more dense, compact, and heavy; opposite to rarefaction.

TO CONDENSE, v. a. [condenso, Lat.] to make any body more thick, compact, or weighty, by increasing the contact of its particles; applied by some only to the effect of cold, but by others used for compression, or the effects of external force, which diminishes the size of the pores of a body, and renders it, consequently, more solid.—v. n. to grow thick, applied to the effects of cold on fluids; to become solid and weighty, by shrinking to a narrower compass.

CONDENSE, a. thickened; close; compact; become more solid by the effect of cold, or compression.

CONDENSER, s. a pneumatic engine, by means of which an unusual quantity of air may be forced into a small space, or by which three, four, or five atmospheres may be injected more than a thing would contain naturally. In the steam engine, it is a small chamber kept cool by a jet of water, into which the steam passes when forced out of the cylinder, and being there reconverted into water, is carried off to the cistern which supplies the boiler. Electrical Condenser, an instrument invented by Wilke and Æpius, and improved by Cavallo and Volta, for the purpose of examining the phenomena connected with very small charges of electricity. See ELECTRICITY.

CONDENSITY, s. the state of a fluid, whose parts are fixed so as not to give way to the touch, by cold, coagulation, or compression. Thickness, applied to consistence.

TO CONDESCEND, v. n. [con and descendo, Lat.] to lay aside the dignity of rank, in order to make oneself agreeable to, or on a level with, inferiors; to behave with familiarity to inferiors; to stoop; to submit.

CONDESCENDENCE, s. [condescendence, Fr.] an act whereby a person in authority lays aside the difference of rank in order to converse freely with his inferiors; a granting some favour to a person, or consenting to yield him some advantage which he could not demand.

CONDESCENDINGLY, ad. in such a manner as to lay aside the claims of authority and dignity; or to yield up a right, or consent to a request, from a principle of good nature and generosity.

CONDESCENSION, s. the behaviour of a superior, whereby he treats one of lower rank as his equal, and grants him favours he cannot demand.

CONDESCENSIVE, a. courteous; treating inferiors without distance; affable, and ready to serve or grant any favour, or forego a right to serve or oblige another.

CONDIGN, (kondin) a. [condignus, Lat.] worthy; suitable to; merited; deserved, or proportionable to; generally applied to the punishment due to a person for his crimes.

CONDIGNLY, (kondinly) ad. in a manner suitable to a person's crimes; deservedly.

CONDIGNNESS, (kondin-ness) s. proportion suitable to a person's crimes.

CONDILLAC, ETIENNE DE, a French metaphysician of the 18th century, who may be regarded as the immediate author of that shallow materialism, which was regarded as philosophy, immediately before the French Revolution, and which produced the atheism which characterized the greater number of the actors in that terrible drama. His works are professedly explanations of Locke's system, but they omit one part of it, and are constructed on a different method altogether. He developed his views in their relation to various subjects with great ability and clearness, and to this, as well as the character of them, may be attributed their rapid adoption. There are a few who profess still to hold similar opinions. He died in 1780, aged 65 years.

CONDIMENT, s. [condimentum, Lat.] seasoning, sauce, that which excites the appetite by a sharp taste.

TO CONDITE, v. a. [condo, Lat.] to preserve or pickle.

CONDITION, s. [conditio, and condicio, Lat.] state, or the circumstance of a person or fortune; rank; the terms of any contract, bargain, or agreement. A quality or property which determines the nature of a thing; an attribute or accident, in a logical sense. Figuratively, a writing containing the terms of an agreement.

TO CONDITION, v. n. to stipulate; to make terms.

CONDITIONAL, a. to be performed on certain terms; not absolute, but subject to certain limitations.

CONDITIONALLY, ad. on certain terms or limitations.

CONDITIONARY, a. stipulated; bargained; to be done as a means of acquiring any thing.

TO CONDITIONATE, v. a. to make conditions for; to regulate by, or perform on, certain conditions.

CONDITIONATE, a. established and grounded on certain terms and conditions.

CONDITIONED, part. having qualities either good or bad.

TO CONDOLE, v. n. [con and doleo, Lat.] to lament with those who grieve for any misery, misfortune, or calamity.—v. a. to bewail a misfortune with another.

CONDOLEMENT, s. grief; sorrow; mourning for any loss or misfortune.

CONDOLENCE, s. [condolance, Fr.] a sympathizing grief arising from the misfortunes of another, which expresses itself by lamenting with the person in distress.

CONDOLER, s. one who expresses a complimentary concern for the sorrow of another, and the cause which occasions it.

CONDOR, a species of vulture which inhabits tropical America, the feathers of which are principally black, with white round the neck and in the tail and wings. Its claws are not hooked as the hawk tribes' usually are, its neck and head are bare, and its bill very formidable. It has its dwelling without a nest on ledges of lofty mountains, and from them it descends to the plains, where it kills even large animals for food.

CONDORCET, M. JEAN A. NICOLAS CARITAT, MARQUIS, a mathematician, philosopher, and politician, of the period before the French Revolution, and the greater part of the Revolution itself. His scientific attainments, which were considerable, would have entitled him to a celebrity, without his philosophic and political dreams, or his tragic end. He was the author of much of the sentimentalism which was displayed in the schemes framed by those who conducted the most frightful scenes in that period. His republicanism was built on no sounder foundation than such philosophic sentimentality. He finally attached himself to that part in the Convention, called Girondins, who had some scruples about the length to which changes should be carried, and he shared their fall. He poisoned himself in prison, into which he was thrown, on being discovered as he attempted concealment, in 1794, aged 51 years.

TO CONDUCE, v. n. [con and duco, Lat.] to promote an end by acting consistently.

CONDUCTIBLE, a. having a power of conducting to, or promoting a design. Used for two or more causes operating to one end.

CONDUCTIVE, a. that has a tendency, power, or quality, to promote or produce any end.

CONDUCTIVENESS, s. the quality of promoting or contributing to the production of some end.

CONDUCT, s. [conduct, Fr.] management, or tenor of actions; the act of commanding an army; convoy, or escorting with a guard; the guard conveying, securing, or escorting; a warrant by which a convoy is appointed; behaviour; or a series of actions regulated by some standard.

TO CONDUCT, v. a. [conduire, Fr.] to accompany a person in order to show him his way to any place; to direct, lead, or guide; to usher; to introduce; to manage; to head an army, or command a body of troops. SYNON. We conduct and guide those who know not the way; we lead those who cannot or care not to go by themselves. We conduct an affair; we guide a traveller; we lead an infant.

CONDUCTOR, s. a guide, or one who shows another the way; a leader or commander; one who transacts an affair. In Surgery, an instrument which serves to conduct the knife in the operation of cutting for the stone, and in laying open sinuses and fistulas. It is also called a gorget. Conductors, in Electricity, are those bodies that transmit electricity; other bodies are called non-conductors.

CONDUCTRESS, s. a woman who directs or leads a person, or carries on any undertaking.

CONDUIT, (conduit), s. [Fr.] a canal, or pipes made use of for the conveyance of water at a distance from the reservoir or spring head; an aqueduct; a place furnished with a cock, whence people are publicly supplied with water.

CONDUPLICATION, s. [conduplicatio, Lat.] a doubling; a duplicate.

CONE, s. [konos, Gr.] in Geometry, a solid body whose base is a circle, its uppermost part ending in a point; it resembles a sugar loaf, and may be conceived as formed by the revolution of a triangle on one of its sides as on an axis.

To CONFABULATE, v. n. [confabulo, Lat.] to talk easily and with carelessness together; to chat with a person.

CONFABULATION, s. easy, familiar, careless, cheerful talk with a person.

CONFABULATORY, a. belonging to entertaining and careless conversation.

To CONFECT, v. a. [conficio, Lat.] to preserve fruit, &c. with sugar.

CONFECT, s. a sweetmeat.

CONFECTION, s. [confectio, Lat.] the preserving fruit or vegetables by means of clarified sugar. In Pharmacy, any thing prepared with sugar; a liquid or soft electuary; the assembling or union of different ingredients.

CONFECTIONARY, s. a place where elegant food from different ingredients is made, or fruits are preserved.

CONFECTORER, s. one who makes and sells sweetmeats.

CONFEDERACY, s. [con and fœdus, Lat.] a league, contract, or agreement, entered into by several states and bodies of men for their mutual advantage and defence.

To CONFEDERATE, v. a. to unite in a league, or agree with, in order to accomplish some design.

CONFEDERATE, a. leagued, or united by some contract to accomplish some design.

CONFEDERATE, s. one who enters into an engagement with another, whereby they are obliged mutually to assist and defend each other; an ally.

CONFEDERATION, s. [confederation, Fr.] a league; an act whereby two or more persons oblige themselves to assist each other; an alliance.

To CONFER, v. n. [confero, Lat.] to discourse with a person on some important, grave, and stated subject; to talk with a person on any subject, in order to come to a determination.—v. a. to compare the sentiments of one person or author with those of another; to give a thing which could not be claimed; to bestow a favour; to contribute or conduce.

CONFERENCE, s. [conference, Fr.] the act of discoursing with another, in order to settle some point in dispute, or treat upon any subject in a public character; a meeting appointed for the discoursing of some point in debate; comparison, or examination of things by comparing them together.

CONFERRER, s. he that discourses with another on some stated point; he that bestows a favour on another.

To CONFESS, v. a. [confessus, Fr.] to acknowledge the having done something amiss. To disclose a person's sins to a priest, in order to obtain absolution. To own. To avow; to profess. To grant. Not to dispute. To show; to approve; to attest.

CONFESSIONALLY, ad. in such a manner as must extort universal consent; generally owned; avowedly; indisputably.

CONFESSION, s. profession; avowal; the acknowledgment of sins in private to a priest, in order to obtain absolution.

CONFESSIONAL, s. [Fr.] in the Romish Church, a little box or desk, wherein the priest takes the confession of a penitent.

CONFESSIONARY, s. [confessionaire, Fr.] the confession chair or seat, wherein the priest sits to receive the confession of a penitent.

CONFESSOR, s. [confessor, Fr.] one who professes a religious sentiment or opinion in the face of danger, and amidst the most cruel tortures. In the Romish Church, a priest, who is authorized to receive the confessions of penitents, and grant them absolution.

CONFEST, a. [the proper way of spelling confessed,] open; generally known; acknowledged, in a good sense. Notorious, in a bad sense.

CONFESTLY, ad. indisputably; evidently; without doubt or concealment.

CONFICIENT, (confishient) part. [con and facio, Lat.] causing or producing in company with some other person or thing.

CONFIDANT, s. [confidant, Fr.] a person intrusted with the secrets of another, most commonly applied to those who are intrusted with affairs of lovers.

To CONFIDE, v. n. [confido, Lat.] to trust in, implying a strong persuasion or assurance of a person's abilities to assist another, or his fidelity in keeping a secret.

CONFIDENCE, s. [confidentia, Lat.] a strong assurance of the fidelity and ability of another. When joined to the reciprocal pronouns, himself, &c., a strong assurance of the efficacy of a person's own abilities; a virtuous and assuming boldness.

CONFIDENT, part. assured of a truth beyond any possibility of doubt; positive; secure of success; without fear of a miscarriage; without suspicion; bold; to a vice.

CONFIDENTLY, ad. in such a manner as to discover no fear of a miscarriage; securely.

CONFIDENTNESS, s. a favourable opinion of one's own judgment; assurance.

CONFIGURATION, s. [configuration, Fr.] the order in which the particles of bodies are united together; the form of a body made by the order in which its particles are united together.

To CONFIGURE, v. n. [con and figura, Lat.] to dispose or form by uniting in a particular manner.

CONFINE, s. [confinis, Lat.] a limit, border, edge, or utmost verge of a thing or place.

CONFINE, a. bordering upon, applied to places; it implies that the one begins where the other ends. Touching, adjoining, or contiguous.

To CONFINE, v. n. to border upon; to touch; to be contiguous to.—v. a. to bound; to limit; to enclose; to shut up; to restrain; to imprison; to immure; to keep at home; not to quit or neglect.

CONFINELESS, a. boundless; without limits, end, or pause.

CONFINEMENT, s. the act of restraining a person from going abroad; the act of enclosing a person in prison; the state of a person in prison, or kept at home without liberty of going abroad; restraint.

CONFINER, s. a person who lives at the extremity, or on the borders of a country; one who deprives another of the liberty of walking abroad, or shuts him up in a prison.

CONFINITY, s. [confinitas, Lat.] nearness; neighbourhood; likeness.

To CONFIRM, v. a. [confirmo, Lat.] to put beyond doubt, by additional proofs; to settle a person in an office; to fix; to complete; to render perfect; to admit to the full privileges of a Christian by imposition of the hands of a bishop.

CONFIRMABLE, a. that is capable of incontestable evidence.

CONFIRMATION, s. the act of establishing any person or thing in a place or office; an additional or new proof to evince the truth of a thing or opinion beyond doubt or contradiction; a proof which brings conviction. In the Churches of Rome and England, an ecclesiastical rite, whereby a person, arrived to years of discretion, undertakes the performance of every part of the baptismal vow, made for him by his godfathers and godmothers, and receives the imposition of hands from the bishop. In the Romish Church it is regarded as a sacrament.

CONFIRMATOR, s. [Lat.] one who proves a thing beyond doubt.

CONFIRMATORY, a. establishing, or giving such additional proof as may increase the certainty or probability of any fact or action.

CONFIRMEDNESS, s. a quality implying certainty, when applied to evidence; an inveteracy or strength, not easily to be surmounted, when used of habits.

CONFIRMER, s. one who establishes an opinion or fact by new evidence or proofs; one who establishes or secures a person in the possession of any dignity.

CONFISCABLE, a. [confisco, Lat.] liable to be seized on as a fine or punishment for some crime.

To CONFISCATE, v. a. to seize on private property, and convert it to the use either of the chief magistrate, or the public, by way of punishment.

CONFISCATION, s. the seizing of private property on account of some crime, and converting it to the use of the chief magistrate or of the public.

CONFITENT, s. [confiteor, Lat.] one confessing; one who confesses his faults.

CONFITURE, s. [Fr.] a sweetmeat; a confection; a comfit.

To CONFIX, v. a. [configo, Lat.] to fix down; to fasten.

"Or else for ever be confixed here," Shak.

CONFLAGRANT, part. [con and flagro, Lat.] burning together; involving in the same fire.

CONFLAGRATION, s. a general fire spreading over a large space, and involving several things in its flames.

CONFLATION, s. [con and fluo, Lat.] the act of blowing several wind instruments at the same time; the casting and melting of metal.

To CONFLICT, v. a. [con and figo, Lat.] to strive or struggle in order to get victory, applied to persons and things.

CONFLICT, s. a combat, or fight between two, seldom used of a general battle; a contest or strife; a struggle between opposite qualities; an agony or pang, wherein nature seems to struggle hard against suffering and pain.

CONFLUENCE, s. [confuito, Lat.] a uniting of two or more streams or rivers; the act of crowding or coming in great numbers to one place; a concourse or a multitude gathered into one place.

CONFLUENT, part. running one into another; meeting or mixing together.

CONFLUX, s. the uniting or union of several streams or rivers. Figuratively, a crowd, a great number of persons collected together.

CONFORM, a. [con and forma, Lat.] assuming the same form or quality as another; like.

To CONFORM, v. a. to bring into the same shape, or into agreement with.—v. n. to comply or agree with.

CONFORMABLE, a. having the same form; agreeable, suitable, consistent; compliant, or submissive to authority.

CONFORMABLY, ad. agreeably; suitably; with compliance.

CONFORMATION, s. [conformatio, Lat.] the particular union or order of the parts of a body, and their disposition to make a whole; the act of producing suitableness, or conformity to any thing.

CONFORMIST, s. in English Church History, one who complies with the mode of worship used by the Church of England.

CONFORMITY, s. likeness; resemblance; the act of regulating one's actions to some law; consistency. In English Church History, compliance with the worship of the Established Church.

CONFORTATION, s. [conforto, a low Latin word.] collation of strength; corroboration.

To CONFOUND, v. a. [confundo, Lat.] to mingle or mix things so that their forms or natures cannot be distinguished; to substitute or make use of one word for another, which conveys different ideas; to puzzle or perplex the mind by indistinct ideas, or words used in an indeterminate manner; to amaze, astonish, and render unable to reply; to destroy.

CONFOUNDED, part. hateful; prodigious: a low word, to express any thing in the superlative degree.

CONFOUNDEDLY, ad. shamefully; hatefully: a low word.

CONFUNDER, s. one who perplexes, astonishes, or destroys.

CONFRATERNITY, s. [con and fraternitas, Lat.] a brotherhood, or body of men united for some religious purpose.

CONFRICTION, s. [con and frico, Lat.] the act of rubbing.

To CONFRONT, v. a. [confronter, Fr.] to stand directly opposite to; to stand face to face; to oppose; to set in opposition; to contrast; to compare one thing with another.

CONFRONTATION, s. [Fr.] the act of opposing one evidence to another.

CONFUCIUS, or TCHUNG-FUT-ZEE, the great philosopher, priest, and legislator of China, who lived about 500 a. c. Much that is excellent is found amongst his moral precepts; but much has been added to them of later date. The narratives of his life are almost wholly legendary, nothing more is certainly known than that he met with no very general favour when he began his work, and experienced such reverses as such teachers have usually endured. He is the founder of the empire and manners of China, and is worshipped as a god. His political system is only an amplification of the forms and relations of the family, and to this may be traced the peculiar features of the nation he formed.

To CONFUSE, (confuse); the s in this word and its derivatives sounding like z, v. a. [confusus, Lat.] to put in disorder; to make irregular; to perplex by indistinct ideas, or by using words without any determinate signification.

CONFUSEDLY, ad. in an indistinct manner; mixed, opposed to separate; perplexed, or not clear; without any order; in obscure, indistinct, or unintelligible terms.

CONFUSEDNESS, s. want of distinctness or clearness; want of order or regularity.

CONFUSION, s. an irregular, careless, or disorderly mixture; tumult; the using words without any precise meaning; overthrow; destruction; astonishment; distraction of mind.

CONFUTABLE, a. that may be shown to be false or groundless.

CONFUTATION, s. [confuto, Lat.] the act of destroying the arguments of another, by showing them to be false, inconclusive, or groundless.

To CONFUTE, v. a. to destroy the force of an argument; to show the proofs of an adversary to be groundless, inconclusive, sophistical, or false.

CONGE, (konjé) s. [Fr.] an action showing respect, compliment, or submission, consisting in bowing the body, in men; and in women, in sinking with the knee bent, or making a courtesy; leave, or the action of taking leave. Congé d'elire, Fr. i. e. leave of election, in Canon Law, is the king's permission to a dean and chapter to choose a bishop when the see is vacant. In Architecture, a moulding in form of a quarter round, or a cavetto, which serves to separate two members from one another; such is that which joins the shaft of the column to the cincture.

To CONGEAL, (konjé) v. a. [congeo, Lat.] to change or thicken any fluid by cold. Figuratively, to thicken any fluid, applied generally to the blood.—v. n. to grow thick.

CONGEALABLE, a. that may grow thick by cold.

CONGEALMENT, s. the clot or thick mass formed by cold; concretions.

CONGELATION, s. the act of freezing, or producing such a change in a fluid body, that it grows thick, or its particles become fixed like those of a solid body.

CONGENER, s. [con and genus, Lat.] a thing of the same kind or nature.

CONGENEROUS, a. of the same genus or species; arising from the same principle; proceeding from the same cause. Used only by scientific writers.

CONGENIAL, a. [con and genius, Lat.] partaking of the same genus; of the same nature, disposition, or kind.

CONGENIALITY, s. a partaking of the same genus, nature, or disposition.

CONGENIALNESS, s. a sameness of disposition.

CONGER, (in this word the g has a hard sound before e), s. [congrus, Lat.] a large eel, frequenting salt waters.

CONGERBERRY, a village in Somersetshire.

CONGERIES, s. [Lat.] a mass consisting of smaller bodies heaped together.

To CONGEST, v. a. [congero, Lat.] to heap up; to gather together.

CONGESTION, (konjést-yun) s. in Surgery, blood gathered together in the capillary vessels.

CONGIARY, s. [congiarium, Lat.] a gift distributed by the Roman emperors, consisting of corn and oil.

To CONGLACIATE, v. n. [conglacio, Lat.] to turn to ice.

CONGLACIATION, s. the changing into ice; the state of a thing changed into ice; vitrifying, or turning into glass.

CONCLETON, Cheshire, a town seated on the river Dane. It has manufactories of leather gloves, cotton, and silk. It is 164 miles from London. Market, Saturday. Pop. 9222.

To CONGLOBATE, v. a. [conglobo, Lat.] to unite in the form of a globe or ball.

CONGLOBATE, part. moulded into a ball.

CONGLOBATELY, ad. in a globular, round, or spherical form.

To CONGLOBE, v. n. to gather into a firm round ball; to gather into a round mass.

To CONGLOMERATE, v. a. [conglomerare, Lat.] to gather several things into a round mass.

CONGLOMERATE, part. gathered into a round ball or mass, so that the compounding bodies appear distinct. Figuratively, twisted or collected together.

CONGLOMERATE, s. in Geology, a concretion of pebbles, sand, &c. with clay, afterwards hardened into a mass. Some conglomerates are very ancient, others are found in the process of formation. They are called also Breccia, and Pudding-stone.

CONGLOMERATION, s. a collection of matter into a loose round ball; intertexture; mixture.

To CONGLUTINATE, v. a. [conglutino, Lat.] to glue, cement, or join fast together by any viscous, sticking, or glutinous substance.—v. n. to stick or cohere together.

CONGLUTINATION, s. the act of sticking together; the act of uniting and fastening the lips of a wound together.

CONGLUTINATIVE, a. having the power of sticking together, or uniting the lips of a wound.

CONGLUTINATOR, s. that which has the power of making things cohere, or stick together.

CONGO, a tract of country lying on the W. coast of Africa, and bounded by Angola and Loango on the N. and S. Towards the interior the boundaries are not ascertained, nor, perhaps, defined. It has several large rivers, of which the Congo or Zaïre, and the Dando, are the most considerable. It is fertile, and produces many useful fruits, grains, and vegetables, both indigenous, and imported by the early Portuguese settlers, abundantly. Palm-wine is also produced for consumption and exportation. It has all the wild animals of tropical Africa, elephants, leopards, buffaloes, monkeys, serpents, poisonous insects, &c. &c.; and skins and ivory, as well as fruits, spices, &c., are their staple articles of commerce. The African Slave-trade of modern history had its birth here, and is still carried on, when the European cruisers can be evaded. The climate is not very healthy for Europeans, the rainy season being particularly hurtful. The people are but partially reclaimed from mere barbarism and Fetishism, although they have a regular government, an old established commerce, and missions from the Jesuits ever since the discovery of the country. San Salvador is the Portuguese name of the principal place. The number of the population is altogether unknown.

CONGRATULATE, part. [congratulator, Lat.] rejoicing with another; expressing one's rejoicing with another.

To CONGRATULATE, v. a. to express joy on the good success or advantage of another.

CONGRATULATION, s. the act of expressing joy on account of the success or happiness of another.

CONGRATULATORY, a. expressing joy for the good fortune of another.

To CONGREET, v. n. to salute together, implying the making and returning of a compliment. Not in use.

To CONGREGATE, v. a. [congrego, Lat.] to collect several things into the same mass, or several persons into the same place.—v. n. to assemble, meet, or come together.

CONGREGATE, a. collected close together; forming one mass or body.

CONGREGATION, s. an assembly of people met together for religious worship. In Church History, an assembly of several ecclesiastics, constituting and forming a body.

CONGREGATIONAL, a. belonging to an assembly or congregation; also belonging to Congregationalism.

CONGREGATIONALISM, s. in Church History, the system of ecclesiastical order and discipline based on the principle, that each congregation or church, voluntarily formed of believers in Jesus Christ, is sufficient of itself to perform all the work and bear all the characteristics of a church according to the New Testament, in complete independence of any other church, or synod, assembly, bishop, or any other visible authority whatever. It is also designated Independency.

CONGRESS, s. [congressus, Lat.] a shock, or conflict; an appointed meeting for settling of affairs between different nations. Congress, is the assembly of delegates from the United States held at Washington. See UNITED STATES.

CONGRESSIVE, a. meeting together; encountering.

CONGREVE, WILLIAM, a dramatic writer of the close of the 17th and beginning of the 18th century. He was one of the first of the playwrights in England, for though not lacking originality, his productions are destitute of all indications of genius; and even without this defect, are, by their revolting coarseness, ness, rendered unfit for the tastes of the present age. He died in 1729, aged 58 years.

To CONGRUE, v. n. [congruo, Lat.] to agree; to suit; to import; to become.

CONGRUENCE, s. [congruentia, Lat.] agreement; the suitability or consistency of one thing to another; consistency.

CONGRUITY, s. fitness; suitability of one thing to another; consistency. In Geometry, applied to figures or lines, which meet or correspond exactly when applied to, or laid over, each other.

CONGRUOUS, a. [congruus, Lat.] agreeable to; consistent with; suited or proportionate.

CONGRUOUSLY, ad. in such a manner as to agree or be consistent with, applied to sentiments; suitably.

CONIC, Co'NICAL, v. a. [conicus, Lat.] having the form of a cone, sugar-loaf, or round pyramid. Conics, or conic sections, that part of Geometry which treats of cones, and the curves arising from the section of a cone by a plane, which are the ellipse, the parabola, and the hyperbola.

CONICALLY, ad. in form of a cone, or sugar-loaf.

CONICALNESS, s. the state or quality which partakes of the properties of a cone.

To CONJECT, v. a. [con and jacio, Lat.] to guess at a thing.

CONJECTOR, v. a. a guesser; a conjecturer.

CONJECTURABLE, a. being the object of conjecture; that may be guessed.

CONJECTURAL, a. depending on, or determined from, uncertain principles by mere guess.

CONJECTURALITY, s. that which is inferrible only from guess.

CONJECTURALLY, ad. by guess; by conjecture.

CONJECTURE, v. a. a guess; a surmise.

To CONJECTURE, v. a. to guess.

CONJECTURER, s. a guesser; one who forms opinion without proof.

CONIFEROUS, a. [conus and fero, Lat.] in Botany, bearing a fruit resembling a cone.

To CONJOIN, v. a. [conjoindre, Fr.] to join together; to unite together in friendship; to knit or join together in marriage.—v. n. to take part with another in any action.

CONJOINT, part. [conjoint, Fr.] united; connected; associated. In Music, applied to two or more sounds heard at the same time.

CONJOINTLY, ad. together; in union, opposed to apart or separate.

CONJUGAL, a. [con and jugum, Lat.] belonging to marriage.

CONJUGALLY, ad. consistently with married people.

To CONJUGATE, v. a. to unite; to join. In Grammar, to enumerate all the forms of a verb, produced either by inflexion or the use of auxiliaries.

CONJUGATE, v. n. in Conics, applied to the shortest of the two diameters bisecting the other, or a right line bisecting the transverse diameter of an ellipsis.

CONJUGATION, s. a couple, pair, or two things of the same sort joined together; the act of uniting or joining together; union. In Grammar, the modification of a verbal root by prefixes, changes of vowels, strengthening consonants, endings, and the use of auxiliaries, for the purpose of expressing the various modifications of action or passion, mood, tense, number, and person, whereby the verbal notion is susceptible.

CONJUNCT, part. [con and jungo, Lat.] joined with another; concurring; united.

CONJUNCTION, s. the uniting two things together. Figuratively, a league or confederacy. In Astronomy, the meeting of the stars or planets in the same degree, minute, and second of the zodiac. In Grammar, a word used to connect the clauses of a period or sentence and parts of sentences together.

CONJUNCTIVE, a. closely united. In Grammar, the mood of a verb, used in subordinate accessory sentences, and where contingency or conditionality is implied. See SUBJUNCTIVE.

CONJUNCTIVELY, ad. in union; operating together, opposed to apart or separate.

CONJUNCTIVENESS, s. the quality of uniting or joining two or more things together.

CONJUNCTLY, ad. jointly; together, opposed to apart.

CONJUNCTURE, s. [conjunction, Fr.] a union or meeting of several circumstances or causes; a critical or particular period of time; connexion of several things forming a whole; consistency, or a union of qualities which can exist at the same time in the same or different subjects. SYNON. We know people on particular occasions. We should demean ourselves according to the occurrence of the times. It is commonly the conjunction that determines us which side to take.

CONJURATION, s. the form of obliging a person to give his evidence. See ADJURATION. Magic words, characters, ceremonies, charms, which are said to have the power of raising the dead, and devils. A plot; a conspiracy.

TO CONJURE, v. a. [con and jur., Lat.] to entreat a person with the greatest earnestness, and by the respect he has to some deity person, or sacred being.

TO CONJURE, v. a. to influence by magic or enchantments; to charm.—v. n. to practise enchantments.

CONJUREMENT, s. serious injunction; solemn demand.

CONJURER, s. an enchanter, or a person who makes use of magical charms; an impostor, who pretends to have commerce with the world of spirits, and by that means to be able to foretell the future events of a person's life, to discover thieves, &c.

TO CONN, v. a. [connan, Sax.] to learn or get without book. To give. See TO CON.

CONNATE, a. [con and natus, Lat.] born with; innate; born at the same time with another.

CONNATURAL, a. [con and natura, Lat.] consistent with, or flowing from nature; of the same original or nature.

CONNATURALITY, s. resemblance of nature; or an essential resemblance and connexion.

CONNATURALLY, ad. in such a manner as to be born with, or innate.

CONNATURALNESS, s. the quality of being born with, of being innate or interwoven in our nature.

CONNAUGHT, the most westerly province in Ireland, containing the counties of Leitrim, Sligo, Mayo, Roscommon, and Galway. It is bounded on the W. and N. W. by the ocean, on the N. by Ulster, and on the E. and S. by Leinster and Munster. It is 130 miles in length, and 84 in breadth. It has some ranges of lofty hills, and a considerable portion of its surface is occupied with bog. It has no considerable rivers, besides the Shannon; but has several convenient bays and creeks. It is fertile in many places, and grazes many black cattle. Irish linen manufactures are also springing up. Pop. 1,418,850.

TO CONNET, v. a. [con and necto, Lat.] to join together by some intermediate means, alluding to the union formed by cement; to join together the members of a period, or the arguments of a discourse, in such a manner as they shall have a mutual dependence on each other, like the links of a chain.

CONNECTICUT, one of the United States, N. America, bounded by Massachusetts, Rhode Island, and New York, and lying on Long Island Sound. It contains 4674 square miles, and is divided into 8 counties. It is in general a hilly country, but the hills are of no great elevation. The soil is generally good, but better adapted to grazing than tillage. The shore is indented with numerous creeks and bays, which furnish many harbours. The chief river is the Connecticut, whence the State is named, which rises on the N. border of New Hampshire, forms the boundary line between Canada and the States, flows through parts of New Hampshire, Vermont, and Massachusetts, and crossing the midst of this State, after a course of 410 miles, enters the Atlantic. It is navigable for sloops for 50 miles. The Housatonic and the Thames are also considerable streams. Iron is its only metal. Marble and freestone are quarried to some extent. Its climate is healthy, but variable. The exports of this State consist of the meat and cattle grown in its pastures, the products of its fisheries, and some kinds of grain. It has several woollen and cotton factories, with others of common and necessary articles to a less considerable extent. There are thirty-three banking establishments. This State has three colleges, one of which is that called Yale College at New Haven. Hartford and New Haven are its capitals; and this latter place, with New London and Bridgeport, are its chief sea-ports. Its population is 300,015, of whom 8195 are free coloured people.

CONNECTIVE, a. having the power of joining different things together, so as they may have a mutual dependence on each other.

CONNECTIVELY, ad. jointly; in union; having mutual dependence on each other, arising from union.

TO CONNEX, v. a. to join, link, or fasten several things to each other.

CONNEXION, s. a relation whereby one thing adheres to and depends on another; the act of fastening things together in such a manner, that they may stick as if joined by cement, and depend on each other like the links of a chain; dependence; commerce; union formed by interest.

CONNEXIVE, a. that has the force of joining or uniting together.

CONFINVANCE, s. the beholding or seeing any fault without taking notice of it, or punishing the offender.

TO CONNIVE, v. n. [con and niceo, Lat.] to wink; to pass by a fault without taking notice of it, or punishing the offender.

CONNOISSEUR, R. s. [Fr.] one who is perfectly acquainted with any object of knowledge or taste; a perfect judge or critic. Sometimes used of a pretended critic.

CONNOR, Antrim, in Ulster, Ireland. This village stands on the Glenwhirly river, which flows into Lough Neagh; and is of no note save as giving name to an Irish see, now held in connexion with those of Down and Downmore. It is about 110 miles from Dublin. Pop. 265; and of the parish, 8272.

TO CONNOTE, v. a. [con and nota, Lat.] to imply, to signify by implication.

CONNUBIAL, a. [connubialis, Lat.] relating to marriage; conjugal.

CONOID, s. [honoceides, Gr.] in Geometry, a solid body resembling a cone, excepting that it has an ellipsis instead of a perfect circle for its base.

CONOIDICAL, a. approaching to a conic form.

CONON, the Athenian general who commanded at the victory of Arginusse, and was afterwards defeated at Ægospotami and exiled himself. He subsequently, with the aid of Pharnabazus, a Persian, completely defeated, and for a time overthrew, the Spartan power, and returned to Athens in triumph. He died in Cyprus about 390 B. C.

TO CONQUASSATE, v. a. [con and quasso, Lat.] to shake or agitate with violence. Used only by technical writers.

CONQUASSATION, s. violent motion; agitation.

TO CONQUER, v. a. [conqueror, Fr.] to subdue, overcome, or over-run by force of arms; to surmount; to get the better of any difficulty.—v. n. to obtain the victory. SYNON. It requires courage and valour to conquer; endeavour and resolution to subdue; patience and perseverance to overcome.

CONQUERABLE, a. possible to be overcome. Figuratively, easily surmounted.

CONQUEROR, s. one who surmounts any difficulty; one who subdues by force of arms.

CONQUEST, s. [conqueste, Fr.] the act of subduing by force of arms; the thing gained by victory; victory or success in arms.

CONSANGUINEOUS, a. [con and sanguis, Lat.] near akin; of the same blood; related by birth.

CONSANGUINITY, s. relation by blood; relation or descent from one father.

CONSCIENCE, (kónshíence) s. [conscio, Lat.] the faculty or act of judging of the nature of our actions, whether they be good or evil, implying a comparison of them with some standard of moral action; the determination of the mind with respect to the quality of any action, after its commission; the knowledge of our own thoughts, or consciousness; real sentiments, private thoughts, used with in. Scruple or consciousness, used with make.

CONSCIENTIOUS, (kónshíoushious) a. [conscientia, Lat.] scrupulous; examining every thing according to the dictates of conscience, and acting conformably; exactly just.

CONSCIENTIOUSLY, ad. according to the direction of conscience.

CONSCIENTIOUSNESS, (kónshíoushiousness) s. exactness or tenderness of conscience; an excess of scrupulousness.

CONSCIONABLE, (kónshíonable) a. agreeable to the dictates of conscience; just.

CONSCIONABLENESS, (kónshíonableness) s. equity; reasonableness; agreeableness to, or consistency with, the dictates of conscience.

CONSCIONABLY, (kónshíonably) ad. in a manner agreeable to the dictates of conscience; justly; reasonably.

CONSCIOUS, (kónshíous) a. [conscio, Lat.] inwardly sensible of a thing, whereof it is possible to have a distinct idea. Knowing from recollection or memory; knowing or understanding; bearing witness of, or sensible of, from the instigations of conscience.

CONSCIOUSLY, (kónshiously) ad. sensibly; or having the sensation of the operation of some faculty of the mind.

CONSCIOUSNESS, (kónshiousness) s. the perception or sensation of what passes in a man's own mind; an internal acknowledgment or sense of guilt, or of having performed any particular action.

CONSCRIPT, part. [conseribo, Lat.] written or registered. Applied to the Roman fathers or senators, whose names were registered in the list of the senate. A conscript, amongst the French, is a modern term for a new-raised soldier or recruit.

CONSCRIPTION, s. an enrolling or registering.

To CONSECRATE, v. a. [consecro, Lat.] to dedicate or set apart to Divine uses; to sanctify or appropriate, as pleasing to the Deity.

CONSECRATE, part. [consecratus, Lat.] set apart for Divine uses; dedicated to the service of God; sacred.

CONSECRATION, s. the act of appropriating, dedicating, or setting apart any common or profane thing to religious uses, by means of certain ceremonies or rites; the benediction of the bread and wine in the sacrament of the eucharist, amongst the Romanists.

CONSECRATOR, s. the person who performs the rites by which a thing is appropriated to Divine uses.

CONSECTARY, a. [consecarius, Lat.] following as a consequence.

CONSECTARY, s. a proposition which follows from some preceding definition, lemma, axiom, or the like.

CONSECUTION, s. [consecutio, Lat.] a chain of consequences; succession. In Astronomy, the month of consecution, is the space between one conjunction of the moon with the sun to another.

CONSECUTIVE, a. [consecutif, Fr.] following in an uninterrupted succession; following; immediately succeeding.

CONSECUTIVELY, ad. after or following as an effect.

CONSESSION, s. [con and sensio, Lat.] agreement; accord.

CONSENT, s. the act of yielding, or compliance with a request; agreement; unity of sentiment; harmony, or agreement of parts. Synon. We consent to the will of others by permitting; we acquiesce in what is proposed by conforming; we agree to what is said by approving. Prov. They agree like cats and dogs. They agree like bells, they want nothing but hanging.

To CONSENT, v. n. to agree to; to promote the same end; to yield or comply with a request; to admit.

CONSENTANEOUS, a. [consentaneus, Lat.] agreeable or suitable to; consistent with.

CONSENTANEOUSLY, ad. in a manner agreeable to; consistent with, or suitable to.

CONSENTANEOUSNESS, s. consistence; agreeableness.

CONSENTIENT, (kónsensient) part. unanimous; agreeing, or united in opinion.

CONSEQUENCE, s. [consequar, Lat.] the relation or connexion between two propositions, whereof one follows or is deduced from the other; that which follows from, or is produced by, any cause or principle; event, effect; importance, moment, or concern.

CONSEQUENT, part. following from some premises, applied to argument. Following as an effect.

CONSEQUENT, s. the last proposition of an argument, deduced from or included in some preceding proposition; an effect, or that which proceeds from the operation of any cause. Consequent of a ratio, in Arithmetic, is the latter of the two terms, or that to which an antecedent is referred; thus in  $a:b$ , or the proportion of  $a$  to  $b$ ,  $b$  is the consequent, and  $a$  the antecedent.

CONSEQUENTIAL, (kónsequénsial) a. produced by a necessary chain of causes and effects; deduced according to the rules of reason or logic.

CONSEQUENTIALLY, (kónsequénsially) ad. deducing consequences, or making inferences; according to the rules of reason or logic; by consequence; eventually; in a regular series.

CONSEQUENTLY, ad. by consequence; necessarily; inevitably, from a necessary connexion of effects to their causes; in consequence.

CONSERVABLE, a. [conseruo, Lat.] capable of being preserved or kept.

CONSERVANCY, s. applied to the courts held by the lord mayor for the preservation of the fishery on the river Thames, which are styled courts of conservancy.

CONSERVATION, s. the act of preserving bodies or systems from corruption or decay.

CONSERVATIVE, a. having the power of keeping from corruption or decay. The title assumed by a political party, to indicate their opposition to radical reforms in the state.

CONSERVATOR, s. [Lat.] one who preserves from corruption or decay; an officer established for the preservation of the privileges granted some cities; or a person who is authorized to determine differences arising between the citizens.

CONSERVATORY, s. a place wherein a thing is kept in a manner suitable to its nature; specially applied to hot-houses and buildings for the growth and culture of exotic plants.

CONSERVATORY, a. having the power of preserving a thing from corruption or decay.

CONSERVE, s. a sweetmeat made by boiling fruit in clarified sugar. In Pharmacy, a medicine in the form of an electuary, made of the leaves of flowers, beat with sugar in a mortar.

To CONSERVE, v. a. to preserve without loss or detriment.

CONSERVER, s. a layer up; a reposit; one that preserves any thing from loss or diminution.

CONSESSION, s. [con and sedeo, Lat.] a sitting together.

CONSESSOR, s. [Lat.] one who sits with another.

To CONSIDER, v. a. [considero, Lat.] to think much on a thing; to revolve often in the mind; to meditate on; to view with attention; to determine or resolve after weighing the consequences of an action; to remark; to call to mind; to observe; to respect; not to despise; to require; to reward for his trouble. — v. n. to think maturely; to deliberate; to doubt; to hesitate.

CONSIDERABLE, a. that is worthy of notice, regard, or attention; important; valuable; respectable; large; or conveying a sense between little and great.

CONSIDERABLENESS, s. importance; value; dignity; a quality which claims our notice.

CONSIDERABLY, ad. in a degree deserving some, though not the highest, notice; in a great degree.

CONSIDERATE, a. serious; given to consideration or thought; pitying; prudent, or moderate.

CONSIDERATELY, ad. calmly; coolly; prudently.

CONSIDERATION, s. the act of thinking on; mature thought or deliberation; meditation; importance; worthiness of regard; motive of action; influence; reason. In Law, the actual ground for enforcing the fulfillment of a contract, or the transfer of property, apart from bequest; an equivalent.

CONSIDERER, s. one who employs his thoughts on any subject.

To CONSIGN, (kónsijn) v. a. [consigno, Lat.] to transfer one's property to another. In Commerce, to send goods, or direct them to another. Figuratively, to commit or intrust, with to. — v. n. to yield, submit, or resign; to consent or submit.

CONSIGNATION, s. [consignatio, Fr.] the act of transferring property to another. In Commerce, the transmitting or sending goods to another.

CONSIGNMENT, (kónsijnment) s. the act of transferring the writing by which property is transferred, or goods sent to another to be sold.

To CONSTITUTE, v. n. [con and isto, Lat.] to subsist, or be preserved in existence; to continue in the same state; to be comprised or contained; to be composed; to agree or exist in the subject; to subsist, or have being.

CONSTITENCE, CONSTITENCY, s. the natural state of bodies; the degree of thickness or thinness, applied to fluids; substance, form, make; uniformity of appearance, action, or qualities; freedom from contradiction, or variety.

CONSTITENT, part. [constitens, Lat.] not contradictory; not opposite; reconcilable; agreeing; firm; or solid.

CONSTITENTLY, ad. in such a manner as to imply no contradiction; agreeably; uniformly.

CONSTITUTORIAL, a. relating to some court where an ecclesiastic is judge.

CONSTITUTORY, s. [constitorium, low Lat.] a court consisting of ecclesiastics; the place where an ecclesiastical court is held; a court held at Rome, consisting of cardinals, at which the pope is president. Figuratively, an solemn assembly.

CONSUATE, (kónsúáté) s. [con and socius, Lat.] one who joins with another in an undertaking; an accomplice.

TO CONSO'CIATE, (consociate) v. a. [consocio, Lat.] to unite or join two things together; to cement, or hold together.—v. n. to unite or join with.

CONSO'CIATION, (consociation) s. an alliance, or connexion; intimacy, or union.

CONSO'LABLE, a. that admits comfort.

TO CONSOLE, v. a. [consolor, Lat.] to allay the sense of misery; to assuage sorrow; to impart comfort.

CONSOLATION, s. [consolatio, Lat.] that which diminishes grief, and alleviates misery; comfort.

CONSOLATOR, s. [Lat.] a comforter.

CONSO'LATORY, a. that affords comfort.

TO CONSOLE, v. a. to cheer; to comfort; to lessen the sense of misery; to diminish a person's grief.

CONSOLE, s. [Fr.] in Architecture, an ornament cut upon the key of an arch, which has the pediment, and occasionally serves to support little cornices, figures, beasts, or vases.

CONSOLE, s. the person or thing which administers comfort.

CONSO'LIDANT, part. in Surgery, having the property of closing or uniting wounds.

TO CONSO'LIDATE, v. a. [con and solidus, Lat.] to form into a compact or hard body; to harden.—v. n. to grow firm, hard, or solid.

CONSOLIDATION, s. the act of uniting into one mass; the act of uniting two parliamentary bills together.

CONSOLS, [technical contraction of Consolidated Annuities,] the popular or market name of certain Stock in the Funds, which was made by bringing under one head in the public accounts several different kinds of annuities, bearing interest of 3 per cent. The largest financial operations of government, and the greatest public traffic, being in this stock, it is usually quoted as the sign of the state of the money market. See FUNDS.

CONSONANCE, CONSONANCY, [con and sono, Lat.] in Music, the sounding of two notes together; and the union and agreement of two sounds. Figuratively, consistence or agreement of opinions or sentiments.

CONSONANT, a. agreeable; consistent; according; reconcilable.

CONSONANT, s. in the alphabet, the name of those letters which represent the various modifications to which the vocal sounds, represented by the vowels, are subjected in the formation of words.

CONSONANTLY, ad. in a consistent manner; suitably; agreeably.

CONSONANTNESS, s. the quality of agreeing with; consistency.

CONSONOUS, a. agreeing in sound, harmonious.

CONSPIA'TION, [conspicio, Lat.] the act of laying to sleep. Little used.

CONSORT, s. [consors, Lat.] a companion, generally applied to signify one who shares the lot assigned by Providence to another, and appropriated to a person joined in marriage to another; an assembly; consultation; concurrence; union.

TO CONSORT, v. n. to unite, join, or associate, followed by with.—v. a. to join, or to marry; to mix; to accompany.

CONSPICU'ITY, s. brightness; easiness to be seen even at a distance; the plainness of any truth or proposition.

CONSPICUOUS, a. [conspicio, Lat.] easy to be seen; to be seen at a distance. Figuratively, eminent, famous, distinguished; easily discovered, manifest.

CONSPICUOUSLY, ad. easily to be seen, or discerned by the sight; remarkable for some excellence; eminently; famously; remarkably.

CONSPICUOUSNESS, s. exposure to the view; the being visible at a distance; eminence.

CONSPIRACY, s. [conspiro, Lat.] a private agreement between two or more persons to commit some crime; a plot. In Law, it signifies an agreement between two or more to injure, or procure to be injured, an innocent person. A conspiracy to maintain suits and quarrels; of victuals, to sell their victuals at a certain price; and of labourers and artificers, to raise their wages, is also punishable by law.

CONSPIRANT, part. joining with another in a plot, or other bad design.

CONSPIRATION, s. See CONSPIRACY.

CONSPIRATOR, s. [Lat.] one who has secretly engaged to carry on a plot, or some bad design, with another.

TO CONSPIRE, v. n. to enter into an agreement with others to carry on a plot or other bad design. To agree together.

CONSPIRER, s. a conspirator; a plotter.

CONSPIRING, part. tending mutually to produce one design. In Mechanics, conspiring powers are such as do not act in directions opposite to each other.

CON'STABLE, JOHN, an English artist, who gained and preserved no small celebrity, as a landscape painter. Accurate observation, and accurate representation of what he observed, freedom from the pedantic rules popular with dilettanti critics, and at the same time no very vivid apprehension of any ideal of art, are his chief characteristics. He died in 1837, aged 61 years.

CON'STABLE, s. [conestable, Fr.] an officer in various manners. Lord High Constable was anciently an officer of the crown, both of England and France, whose authority was so very extensive, that the office has long since been laid aside in both kingdoms, except on particular occasions, as the king's coronation. The function of the Constable of England consisted in the care of the common peace of the land, in deeds of arms, and in matters of war. The first constable was created by the Conqueror; the office continued hereditary till the 13th of Henry VIII., when it was laid aside, as being so powerful as to become troublesome to the king. From the Lord High Constable are derived those inferior ones, since called the Constables of hundreds and franchises, ordained in the 13th of Edward I. by the statute of Winchester, for the conservation of the peace, and view of armour, which appointed that two constables should be chosen in every hundred. These are what we now call High Constables: and under these it was found necessary to appoint others in every town, called Petty Constables, who act as servants to magistrates in the execution of their warrants, and as protectors of the public peace, by taking into custody such as disturb it. We have also constables denominated from particular places; as Constable of the Tower, of Dover Castle, of Windsor Castle, of the castle of Caernarvon, and many other castles in Wales, whose office is the same with that of the Castellans, or governors of castles.

CON'STABLESHIP, s. the office of a constable.

CONSTANCE, the name of two lakes that separate Switzerland from Germany. The Upper Lake, or the Bodensee, is 45 miles long, and 12 broad. Through this lake the Rhine flows, and then enters the Lower Lake, or Zeller See, which is 10 miles long, and 10 in its greatest breadth. There is a great deal of trading carried on between the various towns on its banks by its means; and the scenery of its neighbourhood is very fine.

CONSTANCE, a city of Baden, Germany, pleasantly seated on the Rhine, between two lakes of the same name. It has magnificent public buildings, and once flourished in commerce; but is now much reduced. It has some considerable manufactures, but depends chiefly on the trade of its surrounding country. Its population is about 6000. Lat. 47. 35. N. Long. 9. 6. E. Council of Constance, was an oecumenical assembly of the Roman Church held in the 15th century, which terminated a disgraceful rivalry between three pretended popes, denied the pope to the laity in the eucharist, martyred John Huss and Jerome of Prague, and ordered the dead of John Wicliffe to be dug from his grave and cast into the river.

CONSTANCY, s. [constantia, Lat.] a state which admits of no change or alteration, opposed to mutability; consistency; resolution; steadiness to any principle in spite of threats, dangers, promises, or rewards; a firm and inviolable attachment to a person, including an unalterable affection; veracity, or the consistency of a narrative with the nature of things.

CONSTANS, one of the three sons of Constantine the Great, who was left as his share of the empire, Italy, Illyria, and Africa. Constantine II., attempting to deprive him of Italy, lost his life in a battle near Aquileia, and thus Constans acquired his portion. He professed and patronized the orthodox Creed of Nice, but his life was a shame to humanity. Magnentius conspired against him, and he was slain in a wood at the foot of the Pyrenees, in 350, after a reign of 13 years.

CONSTANT, a. [constans, Lat.] firm; strongly and immovably attached to any principle or person; assiduous, or without intermission. In Mathematics, applied to those quantities in any problems which do not vary, and therefore afford a sure basis for calculations.

CONSTANTINOPLE, called by the ancients BYZANTIUM, and by the present inhabitants STAMBOUL, one of the largest and most celebrated cities of Europe, capital of the Ottoman Empire. It is pleasantly seated between the Black Sea and the Sea of Marmora, on a neck of land separated from Nátolia by a strait a mile in breadth. The Grand Seigneur's palace, called the seraglio, is on the sea-side, surrounded by walls flanked with towers, and is 7 miles in circumference, including the gardens. Its principal entrance is of marble, and called the Porte, (in Turkish, Capi,) whence the denomination of the Ottoman Porte is given to the Turkish empire. Fronting the great gate of the seraglio, is the celebrated mosque of St. Sophia, built for a Christian church by the emperor Justinian. In the castle of the seven towers, to which an eighth has been added, situated near the Sea of Marmora, state prisoners are confined. The bazaars, or markets, are square buildings, covered with domes, and supported by arcades. The houses in general are crowded with inhabitants, yet they have a mean appearance on the outside, where there are few or no windows, and the streets are narrow; even the palaces of the grandes have nothing remarkable on the outside, but within they are decorated with splendid and costly ornaments. The great square, near the mosque of the sultan Bajazet, is the place for public diversions. The street called Adrianople, is the longest and broadest in the city. The circumference of the city with the suburbs, is about 34 miles. The suburb called Pera is delightfully situated, and is the place where the European ambassadors reside. Constantinople is built in form of a triangle, and, as the ground rises gradually, there is a view of the whole town from the sea, in which the palaces, mosques, baguins, and caravansaries, rising above the other houses, have a grand effect. The harbour is spacious and convenient, and is called the Golden Horn. A considerable trade is carried on here, although the Turks have little beyond raw produce to export. The population is about 800,000, of which about half are Turks, and the rest Greeks, Armenians, Europeans of different nations, and to the amount of about a third, Jews. Lat. 41. N. Long. 25. 56. E.

CONSTANTINOPLE, THE STRAIT OF, anciently the Thracian Bosphorus, forms the communication between the Euxine or Black Sea, and the Propontic or Sea of Marmora. It is the boundary between Europe and Asia in this part, and is 20 miles long, and, where narrowest, a mile and a quarter broad. The adjacent country is remarkably beautiful. On one side of the strait is situated Constantinople, and on the other Scutari, which is considered as a suburb to the city.

CONSTANTINUS MAGNUS, the first Roman emperor who professed Christianity, and under whom all the corruptions, which had long been kept down only by the hard regimen of persecution, came forth to sudden and fatal perfection. He was of imperial birth, and his father held the rank of Cæsar in the western part of the empire. On his death, the soldiers proclaimed Constantinus emperor, but he assumed at first only the title of Cæsar. Soon he was able, by his popularity in the army and his military skill, to claim a partnership with Galerius and Maxentius in the empire. On the death of Galerius, Constantinus attacked Maxentius and defeated him; on which occasion, it is said, he saw in the heavens a peculiarly formed cross, with a Greek inscription, signifying, "by this conquer," which led to his becoming the patron of Christianity, assigning the old heathen temples for the use of the Christians, with their incomes also, and bestowing on Christian professors both civil and military offices in preference to such as were not Christian professors. He had associated Licinius with him in the empire, but he soon was at war with him, and, being conqueror, was sole emperor till his death. He forbade by edict all the most objectionable features of paganism; he held the Council of Nice, which condemned Arianism, but he afterwards befriended Arius, and was baptized by an Arian bishop; he built Constantinople, on the site of the ancient Byzantium; he was not wholly free from the cruelty which so many emperors in the decline of the empire displayed; but the greatest injuries he inflicted on Christianity are to be ascribed to his ecclesiastical advisers rather than to him. He died in 337, aged 64, and having reigned 31 years.

CONSTANTINUS, the name of two joint emperors of Rome: the first, the father of Constantine the Great, surnamed Chlorus, reduced a rebellion which had broken out in Britain, and was a good ruler as times were, especially towards the Christians; he died in 306, having reigned 15 years;—the second, in the division of the empire by his father, Constantine the Great, received the East for his share, but after the fall of Constantine II. and murder of Constans by Magnentius, he attacked the latter, and, overcoming him, became sole emperor. He had not the wisdom of his father, for, professing Arian Christianity, he persecuted both the adherents of paganism and the orthodox Christians; and by his proceedings, nurtured a new enemy to himself and to Christianity, in the person of Julian, surnamed the Apostate. Julian being proclaimed emperor by the army, Constantine with indignation and shame sickened and died, in 361, having reigned 24 years.

CONSTANTLY, ad. in an invariable, consistent, or unalterable manner; without ceasing; perpetually.

To CONSTELLATE, v. n. [con and stella, Lat.] to shine with a collected lustre, or general light.—v. a. to unite several shining bodies in one splendour.

CONSTELLATION, s. in Astronomy, a system of several stars that are seen in the heavens, next to one another. Astronomers, for the better distinguishing and observing the stars, have adopted the classification of the stars made by the poets of Greece and Rome, who grouped them most fancifully, and gave these groups the names of animals, and men, and various things connected with their poems and national legends; which arrangement is certainly one of the most inconvenient that can be conceived, but in all probability will never be disused.

CONSTERNATION, s. [consternatio, from consterno, Lat.] amazement, or wonder, occasioned by some unexpected, great, and terrible object.

To CONSTIPATE, v. n. [con and stipo, Lat.] to crowd together, or reduce into a narrow compass; to thicken any fluid body; to stuff up, or stop any passage. In Physic, to bind, or render costive.

CONSTIPATION, s. the act of crowding into a narrow compass; the forcing the particles of a body closer than they were before; the act of thickening, applied to fluids; stoppage or obstruction caused by fulness; costiveness.

CONSTITUTE, v. a. [constituo, Lat.] that makes any thing what it is; elemental; essential; original; necessary to existence; that of which any thing consists.

CONSTITUTE, s. the person or thing which constitutes the formation of a thing; one who authorizes or deposes another to act for him; that which is necessary or essential to the being or subsistence of a thing.

To CONSTITUTE, v. a. [con and statuo, Lat.] to give existence to a thing; to give a thing its particular nature and properties; to make a thing to be what it is. Applied to law, to enact, pass, or establish.

CONSTITUTER, s. the person who appoints another to act for him.

CONSTITUTION, s. the act of establishing; disposing; producing the particular texture of the parts of a body; the habit or temperament of a body, arising from a peculiar disposition and quality of its parts; temper of mind; an established form of government; particular law; established usage; institution. Apostolic Constitutions, are canons prescribing with great particularity the constitution, organization, discipline, and worship of the church, professedly the work of the apostles, or of Clemens Romanus; but actually of a much later date, about the 4th or 5th century, being one of the many forgeries by which the Episcopacy of the middle ages was established. Constitutions and Canons Ecclesiastical, are the prescriptions on which the discipline and organization of the Church of England, as far as it is an ecclesiastical body, rest. Many are now fallen into desuetude, and by the changes in the Church regarded as a political body, have been repealed, yet none have been altered since the days of James I. and all are subscribed to, and enjoined, as if no changes had taken place.

CONSTITUTIONAL, a. flowing from the particular temperament or habit of a person's body, or from the peculiar temper and disposition of his mind; implanted in the very nature of a thing; consistent with the form of government; legal.

CONSTITUTIVE, a. that constitutes any thing what it is; elemental; essential; productive.

To CONSTRAIN, v. a. [constraine, Fr.] to force a person to perform or refrain from some action; to violate; to ravish; to confine; including the idea of force or pressure.

CONSTRAINABLE, a. liable to force or compulsion.

CONSTRAINEDLY, ad. by constraint; by compulsion.

CONSTRAINER, s. the person that forces or compels.

CONSTRANT, s. [contrainte, Fr.] the act of overruling the will or desire; compulsion or force; confinement. Figuratively, reserve.

To CONSTR/CT, v. a. [constringo, Lat.] to contract or bind close; to draw the parts of any thing closer to each other; to cramp.

CONSTR/CTION, s. [constrictio, Lat.] the drawing the parts into a narrow compass, or close together; contraction. SYNON. Compression is from an outward force, constriction from some quality; as the throat is compressed by a bandage, and constricted by a cold.

CONSTR/CTOR, s. [Lat.] that which contracts. In Anatomy, applied to those muscles which shut up or close some of the canals or tubes of the body.

To CONSTR/NGE, v. a. to bind, or force the parts of a body closer together; to compress.

CONSTR/NGENT, part. having the quality of binding, or making the parts of a body approach nearer to each other.

To CONSTR/CT, v. a. [con and struo, Lat.] to form from different materials; to build; to compile, or constitute.

CONSTRU/CTION, s. [constructio, Lat.] the act of forming from an assemblage of different things, joined together with art and regularity; the form of a building; structure; the manner in which things are laid together. Figuratively, the sense, meaning, or interpretation of a word; judgment; mental representation. In Grammar, the arrangement of the parts of each sentence, and of the sentences, so as to convey the meaning intended, fully and clearly, and without violation of the powers of the words employed. Construction, in Geometry, the drawing of such lines and figures as are required for the demonstration of a theorem, or the solution of a problem.

CONSTRU/CTURE, s. an edifice; a building; a pile or frames composed of several things placed together with regularity and art.

To CONSTR/UE, v. a. to place words in a grammatical order, and explain their meaning.

CONSUBSTANTIAL, (konsubstantsial) a. [con and substo, Lat.] having the same substance or essence; of the same kind or nature, applied to material bodies. In Creeds, this word is regarded as the test of orthodoxy respecting the Trinity.

CONSUBSTANTI/LITY, (konsubstantsiidshlity) s. the existence of more than one in the same essence.

To CONSUBSTANTIATE, (konsubstantsiatiye) v. a. to unite in one common substance or nature.

CONSUBSTANTIATION, (konsubstantsiidshion) s. the real presence of the body and blood of Christ in the bread and wine after consecration, in the sacrament of the eucharist, according to the Lutherans. Something like this is held by the Church of England.

CONSUL, s. [Lat.] the title of the two chief magistrates at Rome, which were created on the expulsion of the kings; they ruled one year, were presidents in the senate, commanded the armies of the republic, and decided the differences between the citizens. A person commissioned to judge between merchants in foreign parts, take care of their interests, and protect their commerce.

CONSULAR, a. [consularis, Lat.] relating or belonging to a consul.

CONSULATE, s. [consulatus, Lat.] the office of a consul; the time during which a person exercises the office of a consul.

CONSULSHIP, s. the office of a consul.

To CONSUL/T, v. n. [consulito, Lat.] to deliberate together.—v. a. to apply to for advice; to act with regard or respect to; to act so as to promote some end. Figuratively, to plan or contrive; to examine into the sentiments of an author.

CONSULTATION, s. [consultatio, Lat.] the act of taking the advice of one or more persons; an assembly of several persons meeting together to give their opinions on any subject.

CONSULTER, s. one who applies to another for counsel, advice, or intelligence.

CONSUMABLE, a. that may be diminished, altered, wasted, or destroyed.

To CONSUME, v. a. [consumo, Lat.] to waste by separating the particles of a body; to diminish; to lessen a person's fortune or money by expenses; to destroy.

CONSUMER, s. one who spends, wastes, or destroys.

To CONSUM/MATE, v. a. [consummer, Fr.] to perfect or finish, to complete, or render complete; to end.

CONSUM/MATE, a. [consummo, Lat.] perfect; complete; finished; without defect of any circumstance or particular required for its completion or perfection.

CONSUMMATION, s. the completion or conclusion of any action or undertaking; the final termination of all things.

CONSUMPTION, s. [consumo, Lat.] the act of consuming, wasting, or destroying; the state of wasting, decaying, or perishing; the use of goods and wastes produced by nature, or by the industry and skill of men. In Medicine, a disease, the distinguishing feature of which, is the gradual and rapid wasting away of the fleshy parts of the frame, and the seat of which is the lungs.

CONSUMPTIVE, a. having the quality of wasting, consuming, or destroying; diseased or affected with a consumption.

To CONTABULATE, v. a. [con and tabula, Lat.] to floor with boards.

CONTABULATION, s. a joining of boards or planks together.

CONTACT, s. [contactus, from contingo, Lat.] touch; close union. In Astronomy, a planet and star, or any two planets, are said to be in contact, when they are in or so near the same longitude and latitude of the zodiac, that the nearer body hides, either wholly or in part, the other from our view; also applied to the first or last impression of the moon, or inferior planet, on the sun's disk. In Mathematics, it is when one line, plane, or body, is made to touch another, but not to cut or enter into it.

CONTACTION, s. the act of joining or touching.

CONTACTION, s. [contagio, from contingo, Lat.] the communicating a disease from one body to another. Pestilence, or that which affects a person with diseases by unwholesome effluvia. Figuratively, the propagation of vice, or the power which vice has to propagate itself.

CONTACTIOUS, a. infectious; to be communicated from one to another, applied to the manner in which pestilential diseases or vices are propagated.

CONTACTIOUSNESS, s. the quality of propagating a disorder or vice from one person to another.

To CONTAIN, v. a. [contineo, Lat.] to include any fluid within its sides, applied to a vessel; to comprise, applied to writings. Figuratively, to restrain or keep within bounds.

CONTAINABLE, a. possible to be included within certain bounds; possible to be included within a vessel.

To CONTAMINATE, v. a. [contamino, Lat.] to defile; to pollute by base mixture.

CONTAMINATE, part. defiled; polluted.

CONTAMINATION, s. the act of pollution; the state of a thing defiled or polluted.

To CONTE/MN, (contem) v. a. [contemno, Lat.] to despise; to disregard; to slight, neglect, or defy.

CONTE/MNER, s. one who despises, scorns, or has a mean opinion of a thing; one who hears the threats of another without being concerned; a despiser; a scorner.

To CONTE/MPER, v. a. [contempero, Lat.] to moderate, or allay, by the mixture of some opposite quality.

CONTE/MPERAMENT, s. temperature or quality resembling another.

To CONTE/MPERATE, v. a. to diminish any quality by the addition of its opposite.

CONTE/MPERATION, s. the act of lessening any quality by the mixture of a contrary one; the act of tempering, or moderating; the act of blending opposite humours.

To CONTE/MPLATE, v. a. [contempro, Lat.] to consider with continued attention and application.—v. n. to muse; to think with great attention.

CONTE/MPLATION, s. [contemplatio, Lat.] studious or intense thought on any subject; the act of keeping any idea brought into the mind for some time actually in view; the employment of the thoughts about Divine things; study or speculation.

CONTE/MPLATIVE, a. given to thought; studious; employed in study.

CONTE/MPLATIVELY, ad. thoughtfully; attentively; with deep attention.

CONTE/MPLATOR, s. [Lat.] one employed in study; a student.

CONTE/MPORARY, (usually pron. contemporary) a. [contempo- rain, Fr.] living in the same age; born at the same time; existing at the same point of time.

CONTEMPORARY, s. one who lives at the same time with another.

To CONTEMPORIZE, v. a. [con and tempus, Lat.] to make contemporary; to place in the same age.

CONTEMPT, s. [contemptus, from contemno, Lat.] the act of looking on a thing as an object worthy of scorn; and, on account of its meanness, unfit for approbation; the state of being despised. In Law, refusal to obey any orders given by competent authority.

CONTEMPTIBLE, a. worthy of scorn on account of its weakness or insignificance; despised, or thought unworthy of notice.

CONTEMPTIBLENESS, v. that quality which renders a thing the object of scorn and contempt.

CONTEMPTIBLY, ad. meanly; in a manner deserving contempt.

CONTEMPTUOUS, a. using an insolent expression of scorn and disdain, on account of the meanness of a thing, whether it be real or imaginary.

CONTEMPTUOUSLY, ad. in a manner which expresses a mean and disdainful idea either of a person or thing.

CONTEMPTUOUSNESS, s. the quality expressive of an insolent disdain of a thing, on account of its real or supposed meanness.

To CONTEIND, v. n. [contendo, Lat.] to strive or struggle in opposition to another; to vie with; to debate with warmth.

CONTEINDER, s. one who opposes the opinions of another; an opponent.

CONTENT, a. [contentus, Lat.] satisfied with one's present lot, though not pleased with it; submitting without opposition.

To CONTENT, v. a. to satisfy so as to stop complaint; to confine one's desires to that which is in our possession; to restrain our actions within certain limits; to give a person his demands, so as to hinder him from making any more; to please; to gratify.

CONTENT, s. a disposition of mind whereby a person confines his desires to what he enjoys, without murmuring at his lot, or wishing ardently for more. In the plural, that which is contained or included in any vessel or receptacle; the capacity of containing; the purport of any writing; the chief things treated of by an author. SYNON. No restless or turbulent man can ever enjoy true content. Satisfaction hardly ever accompanies immoderate ambition.

CONTENTATION, s. satisfaction or content. Out of use.

CONTENTED, part. resigned to the dispensations of Providence; satisfied with one's present lot, without murmuring at its defectiveness, or desiring more.

CONTENTION, s. [contentio, from contendo, Lat.] an opposition of sentiments or opinion; a warm espousal of any doctrine or interest in opposition to others; eagerness to bring about a design; emulation.

CONTENTIOUS, (kontentshius), a. inclined to oppose the sentiments of another; quarrelsome; litigious. Contentious Jurisdiction, in Law, is a court which has a power to judge and determine differences between contending parties. The lord chief justices and judges have a contentious jurisdiction; but the lords of the treasury, and the commissioners of the customs, have none, being merely judges of accounts and transactions.

CONTENTIOUSLY, (kontentshiusly) ad. out of a fondness for opposition or contradiction.

CONTENTIOUSNESS, (kontentshiusness) s. proneness to oppose, contend, or quarrel with.

CONTENTLESS, a. dissatisfied with one's present condition; void of resignation to the dispensations of Providence.

CONTENTMENT, s. [contentment, Fr.] full satisfaction in present enjoyment, without a wish for more; pleasure; gratification; or delight.

CONTERMINOUS, a. [con and terminus, Lat.] bordering upon; touching at the boundaries.

To CONTEST, v. a. [contester, Fr.] to dispute, to oppose an opinion; to call in question; to contend with a person for any right, property, or other subject—v. n. to strive, contend, vie, or emulate.

CONTEST, s. a dispute, or opposition of opinions; a difference; a controversy.

CONTESTABLE, a. that may be disputed, opposed, or controverted.

CONTESTABLENESS, s. possibility of being disputed or controverted.

CONTESTATION, s. the act of opposing the sentiments of another; strife; contradiction.

To CONTEX, v. a. [con and texo, Lat.] to weave together; to unite by interposition of parts.

CONTEXT, s. [contextus, Lat.] the general tenor and series of a discourse; the parts which precede or follow a sentence quoted.

CONTEXT, s. woven close together; interwoven.

CONTEXTURE, s. the peculiar arrangement, order, or disposition of the parts of a body; the composition which is formed from a union of various and previously separate parts; constitution; the manner in which any thing is woven or formed.

CONTIGNATION, s. [con and ignis, Lat.] a frame of beams or boards joined together; the act of framing or joining the parts of a building together.

CONTIGUITY, s. actual touching; a situation in which two things touch each other.

CONTIGUOUS, a. [con and tango, Lat.] meeting so as to touch; bordering, applied to countries or places which join.

CONTIGUOUSLY, ad. in such a manner as to touch or join.

CONTIGUOUSNESS, s. touching; nearness, so as to touch.

CONTINENCE, CONTINENCY, s. [continencia, Lat.] restraint, or command over our thoughts and passions; continuance or uninterrupted series; chastity.

CONTINENT, part. chaste; restrained from an immoderate use even of lawful pleasure; contiguous or joined to.

CONTINENT, s. a main land, not intersected by the sea, containing many various countries. The continents which best deserve the name are two, the ancient continent, which comprehends Europe, Asia, and Africa, and the new continent, which is called America. Australasia or New Holland is an island, yet from its extent may be considered a continent. Popularly amongst us, Europe is termed the continent.

To CONTINGE, v. v. [con and tango, Lat.] to touch; to reach; to happen.

CONTINGENCE, CONTINGENCY, s. the quality of being free to exist or not to exist; applied to future events, and opposed to those which necessarily happen.

CONTINGENT, a. not necessarily happening; casual.

CONTINGENT, s. something casual, or uncertain; a future event which may or may not happen, according as things shall be circumstanced. In Law, it is a use limited in a conveyance which may or may not happen, according to the contingency mentioned in the limitation of use. And a contingent remainder is when an estate is limited to take place at a time to come, on an uncertain event.

CONTINGENTLY, ad. in a contingent, uncertain, casual manner.

CONTINGENTNESS, s. the quality which denominates an action or future event to be uncertain with regard to its existence.

CONTINUAL, a. [continueo, Lat.] incessant; without interruption; succeeding without any respite or intermission.

CONTINUALLY, ad. without any pause or respite; without ceasing.

CONTINUANCE, s. an uninterrupted succession, habit, or repeated act of the same kind; abode or dwelling for some time in the same place; duration; perseverance.

CONTINUATE, a. intimately or closely connected; uninterrupted; unbroken, or incessant.

CONTINUATELY, ad. with continuity; without interruption.

CONTINUATION, s. an uninterrupted succession.

CONTINUATIVE, s. an expression which denotes continuation, permanency, or duration.

CONTINUATOR, s. he that keeps a succession without interruption; one who goes on with the work which another has left imperfect, or carries it on.

To CONTINUE, v. n. to remain with a person; to last; to endure; to unite without any intervening substance; to proceed in an action without interruption.

CONTINUEDLY, ad. in a manner free from any intermission, respite, pause, or cessation; without ceasing.

CONTINUER, s. one who perseveres in any action without interruption or ceasing.

CONTINUITY, s. close union without interruption or ceasing.

Law of Continuity, is the term by which is expressed the fact, that throughout the universe, both in matter and mind, all changes and processes are effected without breaks and interruptions, in a gradual and unbroken progress.

CONTINUOUS, a. joined together without any chasm or intervening space.

TO CONTORT, v. a. [con and torqueo, Lat.] to wrest, twist, or writhe.

CONTORTION, s. the action of twisting; the twisting or wresting of a member of the body out of its place.

CONTOUR, (contour), s. in Designing and Painting, an outline which limits or determines any figure.

CONTRA, prep. [Lat.] used in Commerce, to signify the side of an account contrary to the debt; i. e. the credit side. In Composition, it signifies contrary, or against. Contra-alto, Contra-tenor, names of species of the alto voice for singing, or of the alto key in written music.

CONTRABAND, a. [contrabando, Ital.] that is prohibited by the laws of nations; illegal; applied chiefly to the carrying on of trade with nations, or in articles, or in a manner, contrary to the law of the land.

TO CONTRABAND, v. a. to import goods prohibited.

TO CONTRACT, v. a. [con and traho, Lat.] to draw together; to draw into one mass; to comprise; to make a bargain; to betroth, applied to a compact between a man and woman; to acquire; to reduce to a narrow compass.—v. n. to shrink, or grow short.

CONTRACT, s. an agreement entered into by two parties; a compact; the act of betrothing; a writing which contains the terms or conditions of a bargain or agreement.

CONTRACTEDNESS, s. the quality which denotes a thing to be reduced into a narrower compass; narrowness or smallness of extent.

CONTRACTIBILITY, s. the possibility of being reduced to a less compass by shrinking.

CONTRACTIBLE, a. capable of being reduced to a narrower compass.

CONTRACTIBLENESS, s. the quality of being reduced to a less compass by shrinking, or of suffering contraction.

CONTRACTILE, a. having the power of contracting or shortening itself.

CONTRACTION, s. [contractio, from con and traho, Lat.] the act of shortening a writing, or reducing the substance of it to less compass; the act of shrinking or decreasing in magnitude or dimensions; the state of a thing shrunk, shrivelled, or drawn into a narrow compass. In Anatomy, it means the shrinking up of a fibre, or an assemblage of fibres, when extended. As paralytic disorders generally proceed from a too great relaxation of the fibres in the part affected; so, on the other hand, convulsions and spasms proceed from a preternatural contraction of the muscles of the part affected. In Grammar, the reduction of two vowels or syllables into one.

CONTRACTOR, s. one of the parties to a contract or bargain.

TO CONTRADICT, v. a. [contra and dico, Lat.] to oppose; to assert a thing quite opposite or contrary to another; to deny the assertion of another; to oppose; to be opposite, or irreconcilable with.

CONTRADICTER, s. one who opposes the sentiments of another; an opponent.

CONTRADICTION, s. the asserting by words that the opinion of another is false; opposition; inconsistency; contrariety; a species of direct opposition.

CONTRADICTIONS, (contradictiones) a. inconsistent, or opposite; inclined to oppose, civil at, or contradict another.

CONTRADICTIONSNESS, (contradictionesness) s. inconsistency, opposition, or contrariety.

CONTRADICTORILY, ad. inconsistently; in such a manner as to be guilty of inconsistencies or contradictions.

CONTRADICTORINESS, s. the highest degree of opposition, applied to truth or opinions.

CONTRADICTORY, a. opposite to, or inconsistent with. In Logic, applied to propositions, of which one must be true and the other false.

CONTRADISTINCTION, s. the explanation or determining the sense of a word, by producing one that has an opposite signification.

TO CONTRADISTINGUISH, v. a. to distinguish or explain by contrast, or producing a contrary quality.

CONTRAFFSSURE, s. [contra and fendo, Lat.] in Surgery, a crack or fissure in the skull, in the part opposite to that wherein the blow was received.

TO CONTRAINDICATE, v. a. [contra and indico, Lat.] to point out a method contrary to the general tenor of a disease; as when a vomit might seem advisable, the patient's being subject to vomiting shows that it ought by no means to be prescribed.

CONTRAINDICATION, s. in Physic, a symptom which forbids that to be done which the main scope of a disease at first thought seems to point out.

CONTRAMURE, s. [contremur, Fr.] in Fortification, an out-wall about, or opposite to, the main wall of a city.

CONTRARIETY, s. [contra and nitor, Lat.] a contrary resistance, reaction, or a resistance to any force.

CONTRAPOSITION, s. [contra and positio, Lat.] the placing opposite, or over against.

CONTRAREGULARITY, s. contrariety to rule.

CONTRARIANT, a. [Fr.] contradictory; opposite and irreconcilable in sense.

CONTRARIETY, s. [contrarietas, from contra, Lat.] opposition; inconsistency; a quality or position opposite to, or destructive of, another.

CONTRARILY, ad. in a manner opposite to, inconsistent, or irreconcilable with; differently; in opposite directions.

CONTRARINESS, s. the quality of being opposed to, or inconsistent with.

CONTRARIOUS, a. opposite; different in the highest degree.

CONTRARIOUSLY, ad. oppositely; in contrary or opposite directions; in a manner inconsistent.

CONTRARIWISE, ad. on the contrary; in a contrary manner.

CONTRARY, a. inconsistent; disagreeing; in an opposite direction, and unagreeable to the wind. In Logic, applied to propositions, both of which cannot be true, yet both may be false. On the contrary, borrowed from the commercial phrase per contra, signifies on the opposite side, or in opposition to something which has been alleged or offered. To the contrary, to an intention or purpose quite contrary; against; or in opposition to any thing.

TO CONTRARY, v. a. [contrarius, Fr.] to oppose; to thwart; to contradict.

CONTRAST, s. [contraste, Fr.] in Painting and Sculpture, an opposition or difference between the position, attitude, &c., of any two figures, or the lines which form objects by means whereof they cause a variety, and tend to set off each other. In Architecture, the avoiding of the repetition of the same thing, in order to please by variety; as in the gallery of the Louvre, the pediments are alternately arched and angular.

TO CONTRAST, v. a. in Painting, to place in a contrary attitude, &c., in order to set off one figure by another. Figuratively, to set in contrary positions; to set one thing off by coupling it with another.

CONTRAVALLATION, s. [contra and vallo, Lat.] in Fortification, the means used by an army to defend themselves from the sallies of a town they besiege, consisting of a trench guarded by a parapet, without musket-shot of the town, and drawn between the besiegers and the town.

TO CONTRAVENTE, v. a. [contra and venio, Lat.] to oppose; to obstruct the performance of a thing; to act contrary to a bargain, contract, or agreement.

CONTRAVENTER, s. he who opposes another.

CONTRAVENTION, s. [Fr.] an opposition to any law; a violation of, or acting contrary to, a law.

CONTRACTATION, s. [contracto, Lat.] a touching or handling.

CONTRIBUTARY, a. paying a tribute to the same person; concurring to promote a design.

TO CONTRIBUTE, v. a. [contribuo, Lat.] to give or pay a portion of money towards carrying on some common design.—v. n. to promote, or bear a part or share in the promoting any design.

CONTRIBUTION, s. the act of paying a share of the expenses required to carry on any design; a sum paid by a town taken, or in danger of being taken, by an enemy, to prevent its being plundered; a sum of money collected from several persons.

CONTRIBUTIVE, a. that promotes any design in conjunction with other things or persons.

CONTRIBUTOR, s. one who bears a part in the measures taken to accomplish any design; one who pays his share towards raising a sum of money.

CONTRIBUTORY, a. promoting the same end; paying a share towards raising a common fund, or certain sum.

To CONTRISTATE, v. a. [contristare, from tristis, Lat.] to sadden; to make sorrowful.

CONTRISTATION, s. the act of making sad; sorrow; heaviness of heart; sadness; gloominess; grief; discontent; melancholy moan; trouble.

CONTRITE, a. [contritus, from contrere, Lat.] in its primary signification, bruised, or much worn. In Divinity, sorrowful for sin from a love of God.

CONTRITENESS, s. contrition; repentance.

CONTRITION, s. in its primary sense, the act of rubbing two bodies against each other so as to wear off some parts of the surfaces. In Divinity, that penitence or sorrow for sin which arises from the love of God. In the Church of Rome, certain distinctions are made between the merits of different kinds of penitence, the most meritorious being called Attrition, the less, Contrition.

CONTRIVABLE, a. possible to be discovered, or planned by the mind.

CONTRIVANCE, s. the projecting or planning the most possible methods to accomplish any design, or attain any end. Figuratively, a plan; a scheme; a plot; an artifice.

To CONTRIVE, v. a. to invent, plan, or project the means of attaining any end, or accomplishing any design.—r. n. to form, design, or lay a plot.

CONTRIVEMENT, s. invention.

CONTRIVER, s. an inventor; a projector; one who forms projects for the attaining an end, or accomplishing some design.

CONTROL, (the o in this word and its derivatives is pronounced long, contrôl), s. [contrôle, Fr.] the account kept by a person as a check upon another. Figuratively, restraint, a check; power; authority; dominion.

To CONTROL, v. a. to examine the accounts of another by a check kept against him. Figuratively, to restrain; to keep under restraint; to govern; to overpower; to confute.

CONTROLLABLE, a. liable to be controlled, overruled, or restrained; subject to restraint.

CONTROLLER, s. a person who examines public accounts by a check; one who has the power of overruling, restraining, or governing the actions of another.

CONTROLLERSHIP, s. the office or compliment of a controller.

CONTROLMENT, s. the power of restraining the actions or active powers of another; opposition; resistance.

CONTROVERSIAL, (controversial) a. relating to dispute, or opposition of sentiments; that may be disputed.

CONTROVERSY, s. [controversia, from contra and verto, Lat.] an opposition of opinions or sentiments, generally applied to disputes carried on with some warmth, in writing or print; a suit at law about the property of a thing; opposition, or struggling against the force of a thing.

To CONTRAVERT, v. a. to oppose the sentiments of another in writing.

CONTROVERTIBLE, a. that may give occasion to dispute; that may be opposed.

CONTROVERTIST, s. a disputant; a person versed or engaged in literary wars or disputations.

CONTUMACIOUS, (kontumashious) a. [contumax, Lat.] insolently obstinate, implying a contempt of lawful authority, and acting against it from a spirit of insolent opposition.

CONTUMACIOUSLY, (kontumashiously) ad. in such a manner as shows an insolent obstinacy, or disobedience of lawful authority.

CONTUMACY, CONTUMACIOUSNESS, s. disobedience to lawful authority, including insolence, perverseness, and the highest degree of impudence.

CONTUMELIOUS, a. [contumeliosus, from contumere, Lat.] reproachful; rude; sarcastic; contemptuous; inclined to utter reproach, or practise insults; brutal; productive of reproach; shameful; ignominious.

CONTUMELIOUSLY, ad. in a rude, reproachful, contemptuous, or abusive manner.

CONTUMELIOUSNESS, s. that quality which arises from, or denominates any expressions to be rudely reproachful, and abounding with bitterness.

CONTUMELY, s. [contumelia, Lat.] language abounding with the bitterest expressions, intended to subject a person to the reproach of others, and to render him uneasy. Figuratively, infamy, which subjects a person to the reproaches of others.

To CONTUMERE, (kontiase) v. a. [con and tundo, Lat.] in its primary signification, to beat together, to bruise. In Surgery, to hurt by a blow, or some blunt body, so as to discolour the skin by an extravasation of the blood, &c., without breaking it, or destroying its continuity.

CONTUSION, s. the act of beating or bruising. Figuratively, the effect of beating or bruising. In Medicine, a hurt occasioned by a fall, or blow from any blunt weapon, which discolours the skin without cutting it, or destroying its continuity.

CONVALESCENCE, CONVALESCENCY, s. [con and valesco, Lat.] a recovery of health.

CONVALESCENT, a. recovering; or returning from a disorder to a state of health.

CONVENABLE, a. [convenable, Fr.] consistent with; agreeable to; accordant to.

To CONVENE, v. a. [con and venio, Lat.] to call together by summons; to assemble a number of persons into the same place; to summons, to appeal, in a law sense.—r. n. to come or assemble together.

CONVENIENCE, CONVENIENCY, s. [con and venio, Lat.] the suitableness or fitness of a thing to promote any end; advantage; profit; ease; or freedom from any obstruction, difficulty, or embarrassment.

CONVENIENT, a. fit, suitable to effect an end, proper or necessary; free from obstructions. Applied to situation, commodious, seasonable.

CONVENIENTLY, ad. suitably with a person's ease, interest, or advantage; commodiously; properly.

CONVENT, s. [con and venio, Lat.] an assembly of persons dedicating themselves entirely to the service of religion, and without any commerce with the world. A place inhabited by monks or nuns.

CONVENTICLE, s. [a diminutive of convent,] an assembly. Figuratively, a meeting for worship, generally applied to the meetings and meeting-houses of Nonconformists, by way of reproach; a secret assembly for the contrivance of some plot or crime.

CONVENTICLER, s. one who frequents private and unlawful assemblies, particularly those held for worship.

CONVENTION, s. a treaty, contract, or agreement between two or more parties; also an assembly, union, coalition. It is also a name given to an extraordinary assembly of parliament, or the states of the realm held without the king's writ; as was the convention of the estates, who, upon the retreat of King James II, came to a conclusion, that he had abdicated the throne, and the right of succession devolved to King William and Queen Mary; whereupon the assembly expired as a convention, and was converted into a parliament. Also, in later history, the name of the assembly held during the French Revolution, when there was no regularly constituted authority in the land.

CONVENTIONAL, (konvénshional) a. stipulated; or agreed to by bargain or contract. Applied to actions, it means such as are sanctioned by custom or law, but have no moral or religious sanction.

CONVENTIONARY, (konvénshinary) a. acting according to the articles of some agreement or contract.

CONVENTUAL, a. [conventuel, Fr.] belonging to a convent.—s. a monk; or one who lives in a convent.

To CONVERGE, v. n. [con and vergo, Lat.] to meet in a point; to approach nearer to each other till they join in a point, applied to the rays of light, or lines drawn from different surfaces.

CONVERGENT, CONVERGENCE, part. [con and vergo, Lat.] issuing from diverse points, and approaching nearer to each other till they meet in a point.

CONVERSABLE, a. written sometimes conversible, but improperly; [Fr.] qualified or fit for conversation; fit for company; affable; inclined to communicate knowledge or sentiments to another.

CONVERSABLENESS, s. the quality flowing from affability and good nature, which renders conversation agreeable.

CONVERSABLY, ad. in such a manner as to engage the conversation of others, and entertain them agreeably with discourse.

CONVERSANT, a. [Fr.] used or habituated to; familiarly acquainted with; intimate; having intercourse with. Used with about, it implies employed; engaged; relating to; having for its object; or concerning.

CONVERSATION, s. [converso, Lat.] easy discourse with another; a familiar discourse; intercourse; commerce; behaviour; life; or moral conduct.

CONVERSATIVE, a. fit for conversation, or intercourse with men, opposed to contemplative.

To CONVERSE, v. n. [con and versor, Lat.] in its primary signification, to live with; to keep company with. Figuratively, to hold intercourse with; to be acquainted with by study; to be used to; to discourse.

CONVERSE, s. conversation, or the sentiments of a person communicated in familiar discourse. Figuratively, familiar acquaintance. In Logic, the proposition formed by the change of the position of the subject and the predicate of any simple sentence.

CONVERSELY, ad. with change of order; in a contrary order; reciprocally.

CONVERSION, s. [con and certo, Lat.] the change from one state to another. In Divinity, a change from wickedness to piety, or from a false religion to a true one. In Logic, the change effected in a sentence by making the subject the predicate, and vice versa. In Algebra, the reducing any quantities that are in various denominations to one common denomination, for the sake of simplifying the process.

CONVERSIVE, a. fit for conversation or discourse; inclined to communicate sentiments by discourse.

To CONVERT, v. a. to change into another substance; to change from one religion to another, generally used for a change from a false to a true one; to change the terms of a proposition; to undergo or suffer a change.

CONVERT, s. one prevailed on to change his religion.

CONVERTER, s. a person who persuades another to change his religion.

CONVERTIBILITY, s. the quality of being an object of conversion; possibility of conversion.

CONVERTIBLE, a. that may be changed; that may be altered with respect to its qualities; that may be transmuted; that may be interchanged, or used instead of another.

CONVERTIBLY, ad. in such a manner as to be interchanged or used for the other.

CONVEX, a. [convexus, Lat.] swelling to the view; protuberant, applied to the external surface of a globe or circular body.

CONVEX, s. a convex body; a body swelling externally into a circular form.

CONVEXED, part. bending outwardly, applied to the outward surface of any round body.

CONVEXEDLY, ad. protuberant; in a convex form; or like the outward surface of a globe.

CONVEXITY, s. protuberance in a circular form.

CONVEXLY, ad. in a convex form.

CONVEXNESS, s. spheroidal protuberance; convexity.

CONVEXO-CONCAVE, a. hollow on one side, and convex on the other.

To CONVEY, v. a. [convehio, Lat.] to move from one place to another; to transport; to transmit; to transfer a right or property to another; to impart; to introduce.

CONVEYANCE, s. the act of moving a thing from one place to another; a method of sending goods from one place to another. Figuratively, the means or instruments by which any thing is introduced from one place to another. In Law, the transferring of property from one to the other; a writing or instrument by which property is transferred.

CONVEYANCER, s. a lawyer conversant in drawing writings whereby property is transferred from one person to another.

CONVEYANCING, s. the business of a conveyancer; a particular branch of legal practice, relating to the tenure and transfer of real property.

CONVEYER, s. a person who carries or removes goods from one place to another; one who is engaged in conducting waters from one place to another by means of pipes, channels, &c.

To CONVICT, v. a. [con and vinco, Lat.] to prove guilty of some crime.

CONVICT, a. convicted; detected in guilt.

CONVICT, s. a person proved to be guilty of a crime.

CONVICTION, CONVINCEMENT, s. the proof of guilt, either by being outlawed, by appearing and confessing, or by inquiry; the act of proving a crime; confutation; consciousness of guilt.

CONVICTIVE, a. having the power of convincing.

To CONVINCE, v. a. to prove any proposition so as to make a person acknowledge its truth; to evince, manifest, or vindicate.

CONVINCIABLE, a. capable of acknowledging the strength of a proof or evidence; capable of being convicted or proved guilty; liable to be confuted.

CONVINCINGLY, ad. in such a manner as to make a person see and acknowledge the truth of any proposition or reality of any fact.

CONVINCINGNESS, s. the power of convincing.

CONVIVIAL, a. [convivialis, from con and vivo, Lat.] relating to an entertainment of several persons.

CONUNDRUM, s. [a cant word,] a low jest or quibble, drawn from the double signification of words, or distant resemblance of things.

To CONVOCATE, v. a. [con and voco, Lat.] to call several persons together; to summons several persons to meet, or come to an assembly.

CONVOCAION, s. [convocatio, Lat.] the act of calling several persons to an assembly; an assembly. An assembly of the clergy of England, by their representatives, to consult upon matters ecclesiastical. It is held during the sessions of parliament, and consists of an upper and lower House. In the upper sit the bishops, and in the lower the inferior clergy, who are represented by their proctors, consisting of all the deans or archdeacons, of one proctor for every chapter, and two for the clergy of each diocese, in all 143 divines, viz. 22 deans, 53 archdeacons, 24 prebendaries, and 44 proctors of the diocesan clergy. The lower House chooses its prolocutor, whose business it is to take care that the members attend, to collect their debates and votes, and to carry their resolutions to the upper House. The Convocation is summoned by the king's writ, directed to the archbishop of each province, requiring him to summons all bishops, deans, archdeacons, &c. But since the year 1665, when the clergy gave up the privilege of taxing themselves to the House of Commons, they seldom have been allowed to do any business; and are generally prorogued from time to time till dissolved, a new one being generally called along with a new parliament. The only equivalent for giving up the privilege of taxing themselves, was their being allowed to vote at elections for members to the House of Commons, which they had not before. Likewise an assembly at Oxford, consisting of the vice-chancellor, doctors and masters of arts, wherein the conferring of degrees, expulsion of delinquent members, and other affairs relating to the university, considered as a body corporate, are transacted.

To CONVOKE, v. a. [con and voco, Lat.] to call together several persons; to summons to an assembly.

To CONVOLVE, v. a. [con and volveo, Lat.] to roll together; or roll one part over another.

CONVOLUTED, part. twisted, writhed, or rolled up, so that one part laps over another.

CONVOLUTION, s. the act of rolling the parts of a thing over one another; the state of a thing rolled up, so as its parts close over each other.

To CONVOY, v. a. [convoyer, Fr.] to guard or protect ships by sea, or provisions by land, from falling into the hands of an enemy.

CONVOY, s. in Maritime affairs, one or more ships of war, employed to accompany and protect merchant ships against pirates and other enemies. In Military matters, it is a body of soldiers appointed to guard any supply of men, money, ammunition, or provisions, conveyed by land into a town, army, or the like, in time of war.

CONVUSANCE, s. [convoissance, Fr.] notice; knowledge; or authority of inquiring into an affair. A law term.

To CONVULSE, v. a. [con and vello, Lat.] in Medicine, to give involuntary motion or contraction to any parts of the body.

CONVULSION, s. in Medicine, a preternatural and violent contraction of the muscular system, or of part of it. Also any violent eruption, earthquake, or subterraneous disorder; any sudden commotion or rebellion in a state.

CONVULSIVE, a. [convulsif, Fr.] that gives an involuntary motion, twitches, or spasms. In Medicine, applied to those motions which should naturally depend on the will, but by some disorder are caused involuntarily.

CONWAY, Caernarvonshire, N. Wales. It is seated at the mouth of the river Conway, and is a large walled town, with a castle, and the houses are well built. Near this town, corn, timber, and oak-bark are in great plenty. Copperas is manufactured from a rock found on the bank of the river. Formerly it was famous for pearl-fishing, and there is still plenty of pearl muscles, but they are now neglected. It is 235 miles from London. Market, Tuesday. Pop. 1,358.

CONY, s. [coniculus, Lat.] in Natural History, a creature which burrows and breeds in warrens; a rabbit.

TO COO, v. n. [from the sound,] to make a mournful noise like a dove.

COOK, s. [coquus, from coquo, Lat.] a person who professes to dress victuals for the table. A cook-maid is a female employed in dressing victuals.

TO COOK, v. a. to prepare victuals. Figuratively, to prepare any thing for a particular design.

COOK, JAMES, known as Captain Cook, the famous circumnavigator and discoverer in the Pacific Ocean. He rose by energy and perseverance from a very humble origin, to the well-earned celebrity he enjoys. It was under Admiral Sir Hugh Palliser, during the Canadian war, that he first obtained any notice, and by the reputation he acquired as a seaman, and as an hydrographer, gained the command of an expedition which was sent out to observe a transit of Venus, and seek for the supposed southern continent. During this and two subsequent voyages, he rediscovered New Zealand, visited the E. coast of New Holland, explored many of the Polynesian groups, verified and extended our knowledge of the N. W. part of the American continent, disproved the existence of any such S. continent as was imagined, and brought home specimens of plants and animals before unknown. His treatment of the aborigines of the countries he visited, and his discipline and treatment of his sailors, show that he was a right-hearted man. He was killed in an unprepared rising of the natives of Hawaii, or Owhyhee, in the Sandwich Islands, which he had shortly before discovered, in 1779, aged 51 years.

COOKE, DR. BENJAMIN, an eminent organist and composer of the last century. He was organist of Westminster Abbey and St. Martin's in the Fields; and his glees continue to be of great favourites as they were when first composed. Some of his sacred music is very fine. He died in 1793, aged 67 years.

COOKERY, s. the art of dressing victuals.

COOK-ROOM, s. a room in which provisions are prepared for the ship's crew; the kitchen of a ship.

COOK'S INLET, a considerable arm of the sea entering in a N. E. direction the Russian territory of N. America; on the E. of the long promontory of Alaska.

COOL, a. [koolen, Belg.] a lesser degree of coldness, approaching to, or somewhat cold. Figuratively, free from anger or any violent passion; not over-fond; indifferent.

TO COOL, v. a. to lessen heat;—v. n. to lose heat; to become less hot. Figuratively, to become less eager by the impulse of passion or inclination.

COOLER, s. that which has the power of diminishing or lessening the degree of heat in any body; a vessel made use of by brewers to cool their sweet wort in.

COOLLY, ad. in such a manner as to be between hot and cold. Figuratively, without heat or passion.

COOLNESS, s. middle state between excessive heat and excessive cold. Figuratively, applied to the passions, freedom from any violent affection; want of cordial love or affectionate regard; indifference.

COOM, s. [écume, Fr.] the snot that gathers over an oven's mouth; the matter which works out of carriage wheels.

COOMB, COMB, s. a dry measure containing four bushels. In connexion with names of places, it signifies a hollow, narrow valley.

COOP, s. [kuype, Belg.] a vessel for keeping liquor; a pen or enclosure to confine poultry in.

TO COOP, v. a. to confine, shut up, or enclose in a narrow compass.

COOPEE, s. [coupé, Fr.] the name of a particular step or motion in dancing.

COOPER, s. one who makes casks, or any vessel whose parts are held together by hoops.

COOPER, SIR ASTLEY, a very distinguished surgeon of the beginning of the present century. He studied under Cliné and Hunter, and was remarkable for the ceaseless diligence with which he prosecuted his anatomical researches. His example, his lectures, and his writings may have contributed largely to that change in the nature of surgical practice, which has taken place recently. He was officially connected with St. Thomas's Hospital, Guy's Surgeons' Hall, and the College of Surgeons, of which last institution he was twice president. He died in 1841, aged 73 years.

COOPER, SAMUEL, a painter of miniature likenesses, who, under the government of Cromwell, and his predecessor and successor, in this country and in France, enjoyed a first-rate reputation amongst the highest classes. He painted portraits of some of the most distinguished persons of his age, amongst whom were Oliver Cromwell, Charles II., and some of the ladies of his court, which have well maintained his celebrity. He died in 1672, aged 63 years.

COOPERAGE, s. the price paid for coopers' work; a place where coopers work.

TO CO-OPERATE, v. n. [con and operor, Lat.] to labour with another, in order to perfect or finish any work; to concur in producing the same effect.

CO-OPERATION, s. the act by which two or more persons or things contribute to promote the same end.

CO-OPERATIVE, a. concurring to promote the same design or produce the same effect.

CO-OPERATOR, s. he that endeavours to promote the same end as others.

CO-ORDINATE, a. [con and ordo, Lat.] of equal rank, order, or degree with another; not being subordinate. In analytical Geometry, this term is applied to the portions of two lines intersecting each other at a known angle, by which the position of a point or a right line, curve, &c. &c., may be determined, and become the subject of mathematical investigation.

CO-ORDINATELY, ad. in the same order or rank with another.

CO-ORDINATENESS, s. the state of a thing of a degree or rank equal with another.

CO-ORDINATION, s. the state of holding the same rank or degree.

COOT, COOTE, s. in Natural History, a name of the water-hen. COP, s. [Sax.] the top; the top or head of any thing; or any thing rising to a head or point.

COPAL, s. [Span.] a resinous substance, pure, transparent, of a watery colour, and little smell. It flows out of the trunk of a tree by incision, is inflammable, dissoluble in oil, and used in some medicines, but chiefly as a varnish.

COPARCENERS, s. [con and particeps, Lat.] such as have equal portions in the inheritance of their ancestors. Thus, the female issue, in default of male, come equally to the hands of their ancestors; and by the custom of gavel-kind in Kent, the father's lands, at his death, are equally divided among all his sons.

COPARCENY, s. an equal share of coparceners.

COPARTNER, s. one who has a share in some common stock or affair; one who carries on business in conjunction with another; one equally concerned and involved in the same calamity, or enjoying the same advantage, with another.

COPARTNERSHIP, s. a state wherein a person has an equal share of the profits or loss of trade, or is engaged in the same common design with another.

COPAYVA, s. [it is sometimes written copivi, copivi, copaiaba, capayva, cupayva,] in Medicine, a gum which distils from a tree in the Brazils, and is made use of in disorders of the urinary passages.

COPE, s. [see COP.] any thing with which the head is covered; an ornament worn by priests, reaching from the shoulders to the feet; any thing spread over the head.

TO COPE, v. a. to cover or arch over. To reward; to give in return. To cope with, to contend with; to fight or combat; to oppose.

COPENHAGEN, the capital of Denmark. It is seated on the E. shore of Zealand, and the N. shore of Amak, islands of the Sound, and is the most uniform and best built city in the north. It contains four royal palaces, one university consisting of four colleges, and nineteen churches. The streets are almost all broad, and in a straight line, well paved, with a foot-way on each side, but too narrow for general use. It is the see of a bishop. The haven is generally crowded with ships; and the streets are intersected by broad canals, which bring the merchandise close to the warehouses on the quays. It is divided into the New Town and Old Town; and has some important manufactures. Population about 120,000. Lat. 55. 41. N. Long. 12. 35. E.

COPERNICUS, NICOLAS, the reviver of the ancient Pythagorean theory of the solar system, and establisher of it by observation and calculation. He studied in Prussia first, and afterwards in Italy. At Rome he acquired great renown as a professor, and entered the church. Returning to his own country, he devoted himself to his studies, and at length produced, warily, and under the sanction of Rome, the then startling announcement, that the sun was the centre of this system, and that the planets revolved round it, the moon being a secondary planet and revolving round our earth, as it does about the sun; yet hampered and encumbered with many of the speculations which required all the force of Kepler and Newton to sweep away. He was ridiculed and disbelieved even by philosophers like Bacon, but his system, purified from absurdities by bolder and clearer speculators, and corrected and amplified by observers possessed of greater powers and means than his, has lived. He died in 1543, aged about 70 years.

COPIER, s. one who transcribes a writing, or imitates any coin, or other original.

COPING, s. [coppe, Sax.] in Architecture, the upper tire of masonry, which covers a wall.

COPIOUS, a. [copiosus, Lat.] plentiful; abundant; in great quantities; abounding in words and images; not confined.

COPIOUSLY, ad. plentifully; in great quantities; large; in a diffusive manner, applied to style or descriptions.

COPIOUSNESS, a. plenty; abundance; great quantities of any thing; diffusiveness; exuberance.

COPIST, s. in diplomatic science, signifies a transcriber or copier of deeds, books, &c.

COPPLAND, s. a piece of ground which terminates with an acute angle.

COPLEY, JOHN S., an American painter of the last age, of some celebrity. He visited Europe, and finally settled in England. His great painting of the Death of Chatham is known by all. He died in 1815, aged 78 years.

COPPEL, a. rising or terminating in a point at top.

COPPEL, s. spelt likewise copel, cupel, cuple, cuppel; [coppe, Sax.] a vessel used by assayers and refiners to try and refine their metals in.

COPPER, s. [opper, Belg.] one of the most abundant of the metals, which was well known to the ancients. Native copper is by no means uncommon, but it is extracted chiefly from the native sulphuret, especially from copper pyrites. It is of a red colour, and receives a considerable lustre by polishing. It is both ductile and malleable, and in tenacity is inferior only to iron. It is hard and elastic, and consequently sonorous: less fusible than silver, but more so than gold. It rusts in a short time from exposure to air and moisture, being converted into a green substance, carbonate of the black oxide of copper. It is one of the most widely applied of the metals to the service of man. It is manufactured into various culinary utensils; it is coined and made into buttons by dies; rolled into plates, it is employed to sheathe the bottoms of ships, and sometimes as a light and durable roofing for houses. In composition, it is employed as an alloy for both silver and gold; in making brass and bronze; and for bell-metal. The recent advances of electrical science have discovered a field for its employment by means of the galvanic battery, of surpassing interest and utility. Copper also signifies a large vessel or boiler fixed in brickwork. Copper-work is a place where copper is worked or manufactured.

COPPERAS, s. [Coppe-roose, Belg.] a name given to the sulphate of the protoxide of copper, commonly called blue vitriol, used as an astringent in surgery, and in galvanic batteries;—to the sulphate of the protoxide of iron, commonly called green vitriol; and to the sulphate of the oxide of zinc, commonly called white vitriol. All are made usually by the application of dilute sulphuric acid to the several metals; and the last two are employed in dyeing, and making of colours and inks.

COPPER-PLATE, s. a thin plate of copper, upon which, by means of graving-tools, and acid, a copy of a drawing or painting is made, from which copies may be taken by rubbing printer's ink into all the lines, &c. cut in the metal, and passing the plate with the paper through a rolling press.

COPPER-SMITH, s. a person who makes vessels formed of copper.

COPPERY, a. containing copper; made of copper; coloured like copper.

COPPICE, (it is often written and pron. copse), s. [coppeaux, Fr.] a low wood cut at stated times for fuel; a small wood, consisting of under-wood, or brush-wood.

COPPLE-STONES, s. lumps or fragments of stone, broken from the adjacent cliffs, and rounded by being bowled and tumbled to and fro by the action of water.

COPROSE, s. a provincial term for the corn poppy.

COPSE, s. See COPPICE.

TO COPSE, v. a. to preserve under-woods.

COPTIC, the name of a branch of the great Semitic family of languages, spoken by the Copts, in which certain translations of the Scriptures, and of ecclesiastical and devotional works, which are of some value in Biblical literature. The language is of some interest and value in the study of comparative grammar, for illustrating some peculiarities of the family it belongs to.

COPTS, or COPIHITS, the name of a people dwelling in Upper Egypt and Abyssinia, principally, who are distinguished from the other races of the N. E. quarter of Africa, by their profession of a very debased form of Christian faith. Their church retains most of the characteristics of the so-called Universal Church of the middle ages. They are much diminished in numbers now, and are losing their distinctive peculiarities.

COPULA, s. [Lat.] in Logic and Grammar, that member of a simple sentence which connects the subject, or thing spoken of, with the predicate, or thing said of it; as, the tree falls, he runs away, where the terminal s of the verbs serves as copula; or, the tree is falling, he is running away, where is serves as copula. In Logic no other word or inflexion is regarded as copula than is or are.

COPULATIVE, a. [copulare, Lat.] having the power of uniting. Applied in Grammar to a class of conjunctions which are employed to unite co-ordinative words and sentences.

COPY, s. [copia, low Lat.] a writing which consists of the substance of some other, and is written, word for word, from some original; an individual book, or manuscript, of an author; an instrument by which any thing is conveyed, in Law; a picture drawn from an original piece; a line or piece of writing for scholars to go by.

TO COPY, v. a. to transcribe a writing or book word for word; to imitate a design or picture.—v. n. with from, and sometimes with after, before the object of imitation.

COPY-BOOK, s. a book in which copies are written for learners to imitate.

COPYHOLD, s. in Law, a tenure by which the tenant hath nothing to show but the copy of the rolls made by the steward of the lord's court. This tenure the tenant holds in some sort at the will of the lord, though not simply so, but according to the custom of the manor.

COPYHOLDER, s. a person admitted a tenant of any lands or tenements in a manor, which have, time out of mind, been devisable to such as will take the same by copy of court roll, according to the custom of the said manor.

TO COQUET, v. a. [coqueter, Fr.] to treat with an appearance of love, without any real affection.—v. n. to pretend the lover.

COQUETRY, s. [coqueterie, Fr.] a desire of attracting the notice of the other sex; an affectionation of love expressed in advances, without being affected with that passion.

COQUETTE, s. [Fr.] a gay girl, who endeavours to attract the notice of the other sex, and by an affectionation of tenderness to engage a number of suitors, merely from vanity.

CORACLE, s. [coracle, Brit.] a boat used by the Welch fishers, made of a frame of wicker-work covered with leather.

CORALL, s. [corallium, Lat.] the calcareous matter forming the internal framework, or the cells of certain marine zoophytes. It is commonly applied to one particular kind, which is of a beautiful red colour, and is found in the Mediterranean Sea. There is also a black kind common.

CORALLINE, a. [corallinus, Lat.] consisting of coral; resembling coral.—s. a class of organized existences which are found in the seas of all climates, and in fresh water, the true place of which in the kingdom of nature is unknown, some naturalists calling them plants, and some animals.

CORALLOID, CORALLOIDAL, a. [corallion and eidos, Gr.] resembling coral.

CORAL-RAG, s. in Geology, one member of the Oolitic series of formations, distinguished by the great abundance of corals in it. It is best developed in Wiltshire, but corresponding and similar beds occur quite across the kingdom to the Yorkshire coast.

CORAL-SWORD, s. in Botany, a species of the dentaria, found in shady places.

CORANICH, CORONACH, s. among the Scotch and Irish, the custom of singing at funerals, anciently prevalent in those countries, and still practised in several parts.

CORBAN, s. [Heb.] a word which signifies a gift, offering, or present, made to God or his temple. When, among the Jews, a man had thus devoted all his fortune, he was forbidden to make use of it, even for the purposes of common justice or mercy.

CORBE, (corb) a. [corbe, Fr.] crooked.

CORBEILS, s. [corbeille, Fr.] in Fortification, little baskets filled with earth, and used to shelter the men when firing at the besiegers.

CORBEL, CORBIL, s. in Architecture, the representation of a basket. Also, a short piece of timber or stone placed in a wall, with its end projecting so as to furnish a support for a beam, &c.

CORBY, Lincolnshire, a small country town, supplying the villages round with a market for their commodities alone. Market, Wednesday. Pop. 714.

CORCYRA, the ancient name of the island of Corfu, on the coast of Greece. This island is of some note in the history of Greece, as the celebrated and disastrous Peloponnesian war arose out of a quarrel between its citizens and the inhabitants of Epidamnus, a city which had sprung from an offshoot of themselves.

CORD, s. [cort, Brit.] a string made of hemp twisted, generally applied to that which is composed of several strands. In Scripture, "The cords of the wicked," are the snares with which they entangle the weak and innocent. "The cords of sin," are the consequences of crimes and bad habits, which are as it were bands, which it is almost impossible to break. "Let us cast away their cords from us," is to cast off subjection, which, like cords, binds and restrains. "To draw iniquity with cords of vanity," are worldly profits, or pleasurable allurements, which attract as strongly as cords. "The cords of a man," are such motives as are suited to a man as a rational agent, and consist in reasons and exhortations. A cord of wood, is a quantity consisting of a pile of eight feet long, four high, and four broad, being supposed originally to be measured by a cord.

TO CORD, v. a. to bind or fasten several things together with a cord.

CORDAGE, s. a quantity of cords; the ropes of a ship.

CORDATED, part. [cor, Lat.] resembling a heart.

CORDAY, CHARLOTTE, a young girl of Caen in Normandy, who, during the French Revolution, feeling deeply the miseries and bloodshed which were threatened to and inflicted on France by the writings and speeches of the Jacobin leaders, and being inflamed by the attempt made by the Girondin leaders, to secure the ascendancy for their party by means of civil war, to be commenced in Calvados, took a journey to Paris, under colour of some business for a friend, attended the Convention, selected Marat as the most ferocious of his party, assassinated him at his own dwelling, and was guillotined in 1793, aged 25 years.

CORDED, part. made of ropes, or cords. A corded silk is that whose surface is not level, but rises in weals of the size of a small string or cord.

CORDELIERS, (Cordeliers) s. [Fr.] in Ecclesiastical History, a branch of the Franciscans, or religious order of St. Francis; they wore a coarse grey cloth with a little cowl, or cloak of the same cloth, and a rope girdle with three knots, from whence they take their name. They were in all things guided by the rule of St. Francis, which they observed with great rigour. In the French Revolution, this name was assumed by a club of the Revolutionists, who split off from the Jacobins during the early part of their career, as too moderate for them, and held their meetings in the Cordeliers' convent. They afterwards rejoined their mother society.

CORDIAL, s. [cor, Lat.] in Medicine, a stimulating draught. Also, a species of liqueur. Figuratively, any thing which occasions joy, gladness, or revives the spirits.

CORDIAL, a. reviving; strengthening. Applied to the affections, sincere; hearty; without hypocrisy.

CORDIALITY, s. sincere affection; freedom from hypocrisy.

CORDIALLY, ad. in a manner free from hypocrisy; in a sincere and affectionate manner.

CORD-MAKER, s. a rope-maker.

CORDON, s. [Fr.] the ribbon worn by a member of any order of knighthood. In Fortification, a row of stones jutting out before the rampart and the basis of the parapet; also, a chain of military posts.

CORDOVA, anciently CORDUBA, a large city of Andalusia, Spain. It is seated on the Guadalquivir, over which is a stone bridge of 16 arches built by the Moors. Here are 16 parish churches, besides the cathedral, 36 convents, 16 hospitals, 2 colleges, and an ancient palace of the Moorish kings, lately converted into stables for Andalusian horses. The cathedral, which was formerly a mosque, still retains the name of Mezquita. In the square, called the Plaza Major, are splendid buildings, under which are piazzas. There are many orchards and gardens within the walls of the city, and in the neighbouring mountains there are groves of citron, orange, fig, and olive trees. The trade consists of wine, fruits, silk, and Cordovan leather, and the best horses of Spain are bred from it. It is 135 miles from Madrid. Population, about 50,000. Lat. 38.0. N. Long. 4. 40. W.

CORDWAIN, s. a kind of leather from Cordova in Spain.

CORDWAINER, s. [cordonnier, Fr.] a person who makes and sells shoes.

CORE, s. [cor, Lat.] the heart; the inner part of any thing.

CORE'A, a peninsula, lying to the N. E. of China, bounded on the S. W. by the Yellow Sea, which parts it from China; on the N. by Chinese Tatar; and on the S. by a narrow sea, which parts it from the Japanese Islands. It extends from N. to S. about 500 miles, and about 200 from E. to W. Corea is mountainous, and of a very inclement climate; and it has some large rivers. Corn and rice are grown abundantly, and of these, with some metals, as gold and silver, some minerals, the skins of some of its native animals, a small breed of horses, the native manufactures, spices, and ginseng, their trade consists. The inhabitants greatly resemble the Chinese in manners, language, religion, &c., and are possessed of some degree of civilization. The king lives at a town on the river Hanching, called King-foo, and is a tributary of the emperor of China.

CORE'LLI, an Italian composer of the latter part of the 17th century, who at Paris, Munich, Rome, and other places gained great celebrity by his sonatas and concertos, which he retains undiminished to the present day. He was equally celebrated for his skill in performing on the violin. He died in 1713, aged 60 years.

CORFE CASTLE, Dorsetshire, a town with some trade in stone, and knit stockings. It is seated on a peninsula, called Purbeck Isle, between two hills, on one of which stands the castle, said to have been built by King Edgar, now in ruins. It is 120 miles from London. Market, Thursday. Pop. 1946.

CORFU, anciently known by the name of SCHERIA, PHÆACIA, CORCYRA, and DREPANON, an island of the Mediterranean, near the coast of Albania, is the chief of the Ionian Islands' republic. The islanders make great quantities of salt; and the country abounds with vineyards, oranges, lemons, citrons, olive trees, grapes, honey, wax, and oil. The capital is Corfu, on the E. coast of the island. Lat. 39. 40. N. Long. 20. 17. E. The population of the island is about 70,000.

CORIA'CEOUS, (koridshious) a. [corium, Lat.] consisting of, or resembling leather.

CORIAN'DER, s. [coriandrum, Lat.] in Botany, a plant with a fibrous annual root; it has an umbellated flower; is found by road-sides, and flowers in June. The leaves have a strong disagreeable smell, but the seeds are tolerably grateful when dry. The seed vessels are used in medicine as a carminative, and to flavour confections and cordials.

CORIN'NA, a Grecian poetess, a few fragments only of whose writings remain. She was a native of Boeotia, and is said to have been the preceptress of Pindar. Her fame during her life, and subsequently in her own country, was very great; whence arises no slight regret at the almost total loss of her poems. She flourished about 500 B. C.

CORINTH, s. [from Corinth in Greece,] a small fruit, commonly called a currant.

CORINTH, or CORANTO, an ancient and celebrated city, situated on the isthmus which joins the Morea to Greece. It was the capital of one of the small but wonderful states of ancient Greece, and was bounded by the territories belonging severally to Argos, Sicyon, and Megara. It had ports on the Saronic and Corinthian Gulfs, and was the emporium of the trade of the Peloponnese. It hence acquired great wealth, and with it a taste for the refinements of philosophy, and of profligacy, and it was famed for both. It was a close oligarchy; and in the subjugation of Greece by Rome, it first cheerfully assumed the yoke. It is now decayed, the houses being intermixed with fields, orange groves, and gardens, like a village; there still remain, however, ruins of temples, and other marks of its former magnificence. The adjacent country abounds with corn, wine, and oil; and from the castle, seated on the top of an almost inaccessible rock, there is one of the finest prospects of land and water in the world. Its present population is under 2000. Lat. 37. 58. N. Long. 23. 28. E.

CORINTHIAN, a. belonging to Corinth. Corinthian brass, was the name of the finest quality of that metal, said to have been first formed by the accidental fusion of bronze statues, and parts of other metals, at the conflagration which destroyed Corinth. Corinthian Order, in Architecture, is that kind of column which was the most richly ornamented amongst the Greeks, though less so than the Composite Order of the Romans. It was always fluted, and sometimes the lower part was reeded also. The capital was formed of the foliage of the acanthus, and had a peculiarly beautiful effect.

CORINTHIANS, The two Epistles of Paul to the, the title of two books of the New Testament, of peculiar interest and value. They are of a particularly practical character, and are the discussion of certain matters wherein the apostle perceived that the recently made converts to Christianity in Corinth required to be reproofed, instructed, or exhorted to act as they knew. The first was written while Paul was staying at Ephesus, and treats of the following subjects in turn;—the parties which had already sprung up in the Corinthian church; the laxity of their discipline; their religious spirit; marriage; idol-worship; conduct of public worship and teaching; the resurrection and future life; and the collections for the aid of the Christians at Jerusalem. The Second Epistle was written during the apostle's journey through Macedonia, after he had left Ephesus because of the tumult occasioned by the makers of silver models of the temple of Artemis or Diana. The former part powerfully treats of his relation to them as their teacher in the knowledge of Christianity; he then proceeds in the same noble strain to exhibit the practice and principle of Christian liberality; and in the last part defends himself against the open and the covert attacks made upon him amongst them, with a most affecting manifestation of generosity and self-sacrifice.

CORIOLANUS, CNEUS M., one of the heroes of Rome's mythic age, whose valour and proud spirit were the theme of some of her most popular lays. He was of noble birth; almost single-handed he retrieved an impending defeat of the army, and took Corioli, a Volscian town, whence his name. Unpopular, notwithstanding, and not choosing to court the people's favour, he was at length banished, and found a home amongst his former foes. He now planned revenge, and advanced against his trust-stricken native city. Deaf to all embassies, he waited the acceptance of the humiliating terms he proposed, or their refusal, as a signal to lay siege to it at once, when his aged mother, and wife and children, came forth, pleaded, and were successful; they saved Rome, but lost Coriolanus. This is said to have happened about 490 B. C.

CORK, a county of Munster, Ireland, 84 miles in length, and 62 in breadth, being the largest in the kingdom. It is bounded on the W. and S.W. by Kerry and the sea; on the N. by Limerick; on the E. by Waterford and a part of Tipperary; and on the S. by the ocean; and contains 269 parishes. It abounds with excellent harbours, and has many fine rivers, as the Blackwater, Lee, Bandon, Ilon, &c. There are several ranges of hills, some of which are above 2000 feet high, and isolated points, like one called the Sugar-loaf hill, occur. Coal, and some other minerals, and several metals, are found; building-stone, also, and slate. The soil varies; in many parts it is fertile, but some parts are wholly uncultivated. Population, 773,398. It returns 8 members to parliament.

CORK, capital of the county of the same name. It is a well-built city, and has been much improved in late years. It is seated on the river Lee, by which it is nearly surrounded, and by means of the different channels, vessels come up into the different parts of the town. Its principal export is salt provisions. Their other exports consist of pork, tallow, hides raw and tanned, butter, candles, calves', lambs', and rabbits' skins, wool, linen and woollen yarn, and worsted and linen cloth. The country adjacent to Cork is hilly and beautiful, affording extensive and diversified prospects. It is 124 miles from Dublin. Pop. 80,720. The bishopric named from this place is now held along with those of Cloyne and Ross. Cork Harbour, or the Cove of Cork, one of the best in the world, is about 9 miles below the town, and so spacious and deep, as to be capable of containing the largest vessels, and the most extensive fleets. The entrance is easy, and it is secure from currents and storms. One side of Cork Harbour is formed by Great Island, which is 4 miles long and 2 broad, and very fertile.

CORKY, s. [Korch, Belg.] in Botany, a species of oak, which is stripped of its bark every eight or ten years. Of the bark, which is very light and elastic, are formed bungs for barrels, and stopples for bottles, which likewise go by the name of the tree, and are called corks. These trees are very common in France, Spain, and Italy.

CORKING-PIN, s. a pin of a large size.

CORKY, a. consisting of, or resembling cork.

CORMORANT, s. [Fr.] in Natural History, a sea-bird that preys upon fish. Figuratively, a glutton.

CORN, s. [Sax. korn, Teut.] the grain or seed of certain gramineous plants, separated from the spica, or ear; one species of which is made into bread. There are several species of corn, such as wheat, rye, and barley, millet, and rice, oats, maize, and lentils, pease, and a number of other kinds, capable of being used as food for man. A single particle of gunpowder or salt. Also, [from cornu, Lat.] a horny excrescence, or great thickening and induration of the skin on the toes.

TO CORN, v. a. to form gunpowder into grains, or small particles; to salt, or sprinkle meat with salt; so used by the old Saxons.

CORNAGE, s. a tenure which obliges the landholder to give notice of an invasion by blowing a horn.

CORNBRASH, s. in Geology, the uppermost member of the great Oolitic formation; a bed rich in fossils, and particularly well exhibited in the W. of England.

CORNEILLE, PIERRE, the great French dramatist of the 17th century. His success and his fame is of a very mingled character, some of his pieces, as The Cid, Horatius, The Liar, (a comedy,) and Cinna, being excellent productions, and exhibiting great power both of thought and of expression; others being condemned when represented, and only preserved from being forgotten by the misfortune of having his name to them. Napoleon used to wish that Corneille was living that he might have made him his minister. He died in 1684, aged 78 years.

CORNEL, s. in Botany, the dogberry, which is common in woods and hedges, and flowers in June.

CORNELIAN, s. See CARNELION.

CORNEMUSE, s. [Fr.] a kind of rustic horn.

CORNEOUS, a. [cornu, Lat.] horny, or resembling horn.

CORNER, s. [cornel, Brit.] an angle, or space formed by the meeting of two walls. Figuratively, a secret or private place; the extremities. Corner-stone, is the stone that unites the two walls at the corner; the principal stone. In the New Testament this name is applied to Christ, Acts iv. 11, and elsewhere.

CORNERWISE, ad. from one corner to another; diagonally; with the corner in front.

CORNET, s. [cornetto, Fr.] a horn or musical wind instrument used by the ancients in war; a company or troop, perhaps as many as had one cornet. An officer in the cavalry, who bears the ensign or colours in the troop; he is the third officer in the company, and commands in the absence of the captain and lieutenant. Cornet, in Farriery, is the lowest part of the pastern of a horse.

CORNET-A-PISTON, a recently invented musical instrument of the cornet kind; there are three pistons in some instruments, and two, or one, in others, by pressing which with the fingers to different depths in the tubes in which they play, the various notes are produced. They are made in different clefs, and have great power and effect.

CORN-FLAG, s. in Botany, a common genus of plants, of which there are many species, some with red, and some with white flowers.

CORNICE, s. [corniche, Fr.] in Architecture, the uppermost member of the entablature of a column, or that which crowns the order; likewise all little projectures of masonry, or joinery, where there are no columns, as the cornice of a chimney, of a beaufet, &c. Cornice ring, in Gunnery, the next ring from the muzzle-ring backwards.

CORNICULATE, a. [cornu, Lat.] in Botany, applied to such plants as, after each flower, produce many horned pods, called siliquose plants. Corniculate flowers, are such hollow flowers as have a kind of spur or little horn on their upper part.

CORNIFIC, a. [cornu and facio, Lat.] productive of or making horns.

CORNIGEROUS, a. [cornu and gero, Lat.] horned; bearing or having horns.

CORN-LAWS, s. statutes imposing duties on all corn imported into England from other countries, the amount of duty being in the last alterations graduated according to the average price of corn in England. Their effects being proved to be the enhancement of the price of corn, and therefore the price of bread, the restriction of the field of manufacturing and commercial industry, and the artificial raising of rents and tithes, they have been virtually repealed, and in a few years will be out of the statute book.

CORN-RENT, s. payment for the hire of land graduated according to the average price of corn.

CORNUCOPIA, s. [Lat.] in ancient Mythology, the horn of the goat Amalthea, which suckled Jupiter. It is generally the characteristic of the goddess of plenty, and described in the form of a large horn, adorned with flowers, and filled with fruits.

To CORNUTE, v. a. to confer or bestow horns.

CORNU TED, part. grafted with horns; horned.

CORNWALL, a county of England, which forms the S. W. extremity of Great Britain. It is bounded on the E. by Devonshire; to which other parts are washed by the sea. Its length from E. to W. is 74 miles, and its greatest breadth about 43; on the S. W. it terminates in two promontories, the Lizard Point and the Land's End. It contains 9 hundreds, and 206 parishes. The central part, which is the highest, is mostly covered with barren moors, but there are fertile tracts beside the rivers which flow to the N. and S. of it. The Tamar, the Camel, the Fowey, the Fal, &c., are its chief streams. Its being surrounded on three sides by the sea, keeps its temperature very even, there being seldom any severe frosts, or great heats, and spring being earlier here than in the rest of England; but it is exposed to storms, and has abundance of rainy and foggy weather. Its chief importance arises from its mineral riches. It has valuable copper mines, in which gold and silver are sometimes met with in small quantities. Its tin mines are most extensive, and celebrated in remotest antiquity. Lead, iron, zinc, arsenic, &c., also occur. There are very many kinds of rock quarried here, for building, as granite and freestone, slates for roofing, grit for making millstones, &c. A species of very clear crystal is common, which is known to jewellers as the Cornish diamond. The growth of corn is not considerable for its extent, nor the numbers of cattle. It was one of the retreats of the ancient Britons when the Saxons seized the E. parts of the island, and it is but lately that the last remnant of the old Celtic dialect of this island has become extinct. It gives a ducal title to the eldest son of the sovereign; and as revenue, he has the proceeds of a duty charged on all the tin raised. Launceston and Bodmin are its two chief towns. Pop. 341,279. It returns 14 members to parliament.

CORNWALLIS, CHARLES, MARQUIS OF, the English commander whose loss of York Town, and surrender as a prisoner of war to the forces of the United States, in 1781, put an end to all hope of success in the war, and insured the independence of the Americans. He had been successful in the earlier part of the war, and in India, and Ireland, both as a general and as viceroy, he obtained and maintained considerable credit. He died in 1805, aged 63 years.

CORNY, a. horny, strong, or hard like a horn; producing grain or corn.

COROYLLA, s. [Lat.] in Botany, the name of that part of a plant which immediately surrounds the organs of fructification, and is commonly called the flower. It is in most instances the most beautiful part of the plant, and appears in different species in every variety of form and arrangement, and every variety of colour.

COROLLARY, s. [corollarium, Lat.] a necessary consequence drawn from some proposition which has been proved or demonstrated.

COROMANDEL, the coast of, is the eastern coast of the peninsula of Hindustan, extending from Cape Calymere, in lat. 10. 20., to the mouth of the Kistnah, in lat. near 16. 0. N. On this coast lie Madras, Pondicherry, Tranquebar, and other European factories, from which chintz, calicoes, and muslins, with some diamonds, are imported into Europe. There is not a port for large vessels on the whole coast, which is an even, low, and sandy country; and about Madras, the land rises so little, that it is difficult from the sea to mark the distinction between land and water, unless by the different objects that are on the shore.

CORONA, s. [Lat.] in Architecture, a large, flat, strong member of a cornice, so called from its crowning not only the cornice, but likewise the whole order. In Optics, the halo, a luminous circle surrounding the sun, the moon, and the brighter planets and stars, when there is a haze in the atmosphere.

CORONA BOREALIS, in Astronomy, the Northern Crown, a constellation of the northern hemisphere.

CORONAL, s. [corona, Lat.] a crown, a garland.—a. that belongs to the crown or top of the head. The coronal suture, in Anatomy, is the first of the cranium, which reaches across from one temple to the other.

CORONARY, a. relating to or seated on the crown of the head. In Anatomy, applied to those arteries which furnish the substance of the heart with blood.

CORONATION, s. the act or solemnity of crowning a king.

CORONER, s. an ancient officer of this kingdom, so called because he is wholly employed for the king and crown. Coroners are conservators of the peace in the county where they are elected, being two or more for each county. Their authority is judicial and ministerial: judicial where a person comes to a violent death, to take and enter up appeals of murder, pronounce judgment on outlawries, &c. The ministerial power is, when the coroner executes the king's writ, on exception taken to the sheriff. He is elected for life, and thus his authority does not terminate on the demise of the king, like that of such officers as act by the king's commission. On default of sheriffs, coroners are to impanel juries, and to return issue on juries not appearing.

CORONET, s. [coronetta, Ital.] an inferior crown worn by the nobility; that of a duke is adorned with four strawberry leaves; that of a marquis, with four pearls placed interchangeably with four strawberry leaves; that of an earl, with the pearls raised above the leaves; that of a viscount, sixteen pearls; and that of a baron has only four pearls.

CORPORAL, s. [corporal, Fr.] in the army, the lowest non-commissioned officer in foot regiments, who commands one of the divisions, places and relieves sentinels, keeps good order, and receives the word of the inferiors that pass by his corps. On board ship, an officer who has the charge of setting the watch and sentries, and relieving them; he sees that all the soldiers and sailors keep their arms neat and clean, teaches them how to use them, and has a mate under him. Launce-corporal, is an honorary corporal, his pay being merely sentinel's pay.

CORPORAL, a. [corporal, Fr.] relating to the body, in Divinity and Philosophy. When used in opposition to spirit, or its affection, it is styled and spelt corporeal, and then signifies material.

CORPORALITY, s. the quality of consisting of body or matter.

CORPORALLY, ad. in a sensible or material manner; bodily.

CORPORATE, a. [corpus, Lat.] united into a body or community.

CORPORATENESS, s. the state of a body corporate or community.

- Reference to the Hundreds
1. Stratton
  2. Looe
  3. Looe
  4. Looe
  5. Looe
  6. Looe
  7. Looe
  8. Looe
  9. Looe
  10. Looe
  11. Looe
  12. Looe
  13. Looe
  14. Looe
- The figures prefixed indicate the distance from London.
- The County returns 4 Members.

Scale of English Miles
 10 20 30
 Railway Stations shown

CORPORATION, s. a body politic, authorized by prescription, patent, charter, or by act of parliament, to have a common seal, one head officer or more, able, by their common consent, to grant or receive in law any thing within the compass of their charters, and to sue and be sued even as one man. Corporations are either spiritual or temporal; spiritual, as bishops, deans, archdeacons, parsons, vicars, &c. Temporal, as mayor, commonalty, bailiff, burgesses, &c.; also called Municipal. And some are of a mixed nature, and composed of temporal and spiritual persons, such as heads of colleges and hospitals.

CORPORATURE, s. the state of being embodied.

CORPORREAL, a. consisting of matter or body, opposed to spiritual.

CORPOREITY, s. the quality of a thing which has a body; an embodied state.

CORPORIFICATION, s. [corpus and facio, Lat.] the act of giving a body to a thing, or rendering it the object of the touch or other senses.

To CORPORIFY, v. a. to thicken or gather into a body.

CORPS, (usually pron. kôr) s. [Fr.] a body or collection of soldiers. In Architecture, that part which projects or stands out from a wall, and serves as a ground for some decoration or ornament.

CORPSE, s. the body, used in contempt; a dead body; a carcass.

CORPULENCE, Corpulence, s. [corpulentia, Lat.] bulkiness of body; fatness; grossness.

CORPULENT, a. [corpulentus, Lat.] fleshy; abounding in fat and flesh.

CORPUS-CHRISTI, s. a festival kept the next Thursday after Trinity-Sunday, instituted in honour of the eucharist. The name of two colleges at Oxford and Cambridge. That at Oxford was founded in the 16th century, by Fox, Bishop of Winchester. It has received additions since that time from various benefactors; and has a good library, and a fine altar-piece in the chapel, by Rubens. That at Cambridge dates from the 14th century, but its buildings have been recently restored. It is enriched with a library of MSS. formerly belonging to Archbishop Parker, who left other property to it also.

CORPUSCLE, s. [corpusculum, Lat.] in Physics, a minute particle, or physical atom, of which a natural body is composed or made up.

CORPUSCULAR, CORPUSCULARIAN, a. belonging to atoms, or the same particles of bodies. The corpuscular philosophy, is that which endeavours to explain the phenomena of nature by the motion, rest, or position of the corpuscles, or minute particles, of which bodies consist.

To CORRADE, v. a. [corrado, Lat.] to rub off; to wear away, by rubbing two bodies together.

CORRADIATION, s. [con and radius, Lat.] the conjunction of rays in one point.

To CORRECT, v. a. [corrigo, Lat.] to punish a person for a fault in order to make him amend; to give a person notice of his faults. In Medicine, to counteract, or lessen the force or ill qualities of one ingredient by another.

CORRECT, a. [correctus, Lat.] that is perfect; freed from errors or mistakes.

CORRECTING-PLATE, s. in Magnetism and Navigation, a most valuable invention of Professor Barlow's, for neutralizing the disturbing influence exercised on the compass, by the iron-work in various parts of a ship. It consists of a double circular plate of iron, and is fixed, by a hole in the centre, in that direction in reference to the compass, which is ascertained, by various experiments, most completely to check the disturbing action. For other influences, such as change of climate, &c., which the great improvements in navigation render of consequence, no corrector has, as yet, been invented.

CORRECTION, s. [correctio, Lat.] punishment for faults in order to produce amendment; an amendment; reprehension; censure; or notice of a fault. House of correction, is a prison where criminals undergo the punishments inflicted for minor offences against the laws. In Medicine, the lessening any quality of an ingredient by joining it with one of opposite qualities.

CORRECTIVE, a. having the power of counteracting any bad qualities.

CORRECTIVE, s. that which has the power of altering or counteracting any bad quality; limitation; restriction.

CORRECTLY, ad. in such a manner as to be free from faults; exactly.

CORRECTNESS, s. perfection, arising from frequent and accurate alterations.

CORRECTOR, s. [Lat.] he who amends a person by means of punishment. In Medicine, an ingredient in composition which guards against, or abates, the force of another. Corrector of the press, one who amends the errors committed in printing.

CORREGIDOR, s. a chief magistrate in Spain.

CORREGIO, ANTONIO ALLEGRI, IL, a great Italian painter of the beginning of the 16th century, a pupil of Frari and Mantegna. He established himself in his native district, near Modena, and though wholly unacquainted with the models of antiquity, gave to his figures the surpassing grace which genius alone can; whilst in colouring, and in the more difficult chiaro-oscuro, he manifested the hand of a master. His Magdalen is well known by the numerous copies and engravings. He died in 1534, aged 40 years.

To CORRELATE, v. n. [con and relatus, Lat.] to have a mutual or reciprocal relation to one another, as father and son.

CORRELATE, s. one that stands in an opposite relation, as father and son.

CORRELATIVE, a. having a reciprocal relation, so that the existence of the one depends on the existence of the other.

CORREPTION, s. [con and ripio, Lat.] reproof, chiding, reprehension, or oburgation.

To CORRESPOND, v. n. [con and respondeo, Lat.] to answer; to match; to suit; to be proportionate, or adequate to another; to keep up an acquaintance with another by sending and receiving letters.

CORRESPONDENCE, CORRESPONDENCY, s. an agreement; the matching and fitting of two things together; an intercourse kept up by letters; friendship; intercourse; a commerce.

CORRESPONDENT, s. a person with whom commerce is carried on, or intelligence kept by mutual messages or letters.

CORRESPONDENT, CORRESPONSIVE, a. suiting; fitting; agreeing; answering.

CORRÈZE, a department of France, surrounded by the departments of Lot, Dordogne, Cantal, Haute-Vienne, Puy-de-dôme, and Creuse. The Corrèze, the Vézère, and the Dordogne are its chief rivers; and the country is not very hilly, but barren, and affording scanty pasture land, with fertile and tolerably well cultivated tracts in some parts. Tulle is its chief town. Its population is about 320,000.

CORRIDOR, s. [Fr.] in Fortification, a road or way, about twenty yards broad, along the edge of a ditch withoutside, encompassing the whole fortification, called likewise the covert way. In Architecture, a gallery, or long aisle, round a building, leading to several chambers at a distance from each other.

CORRIGIBLE, a. [corrigo, Lat.] that may be altered for the better; that is a proper object for punishment; corrective; or having the power of amending any error, fault, or bad quality.

CORRIVALRY, s. competition; opposition.

CORROBORANT, part. [corroboro, Lat.] having the power of strengthening or giving strength.

To CORROBORATE, v. a. [corroboro, Lat.] to confirm an assertion; to strengthen, or make strong.

CORROBORATION, s. the act of strengthening; the confirmation or establishing a truth by some additional proof; addition of strength.

CORROBORATIVE, a. having the power of increasing strength, or of service in particularly bodily weaknesses.

To CORRODE, v. a. [corrodo, Lat.] to eat away by degrees, applied to the action of a liquid on some solid body; to prey upon; to consume or wear away by degrees.

CORRODENT, a. [corrodens, Lat.] having the power of separating the particles of a body, applied to the effect of some menstruum or fluid on solid bodies.

CORRODIBLE, a. [con and rodo, Lat.] possible to be consumed or corroded.

CORROSIBILITY, s. the quality of being corrosive; the possibility of having its particles divided by some menstruum.

CORROSIBLE, a. that may have its particles consumed or separated by some menstruum.

CORROSIBLENESS, s. the quality of being liable to have its particles separated by a menstruum.

CORROSION, s. the dissolution or separation of the particles of a body by an acid or saline liquor or menstruum.

CORROSIVE, a. having the power of insinuating itself between, and separating the particles of, a body; having the power of vexing, or of making a person uneasy or angry.

CORROSIVE, s. that which has the power of consuming, eating, or wasting away; that which has the power of fretting, giving pain, or rendering a person uneasy.

CORROSIVELY, ad. in the manner of or like a corrosive; having the quality of a corrosive.

CORROSIVENESS, s. the quality whereby a fluid insinuates itself between the pores of a solid body, separates them, or wastes away.

CORRUGANT, a. [corrugans, from ruga, Lat.] having the power of wrinkling, or contracting into wrinkles.

To CORRUGATE, v. a. to wrinkle, or purse up.

CORRUGATION, s. [corrugatio, Lat.] the act of drawing or contracting into wrinkles.

To CORRUPT, v. a. [con and rumpo, Lat.] to turn from a sound to a putrescent state; to infect. Figuratively, to engage a person to do something contrary to his inclination or conscience, by bribes or money; to spoil; to vitiate, or render bad.

To CORRUPT, v. n. to become putrid; to grow rotten; to putrefy; to lose purity.

CORRUPT, a. [corruptus, Lat.] vicious; void of moral goodness; lost to piety; biassed by bribes. Tainted; rotten, applied to things.

CORRUPTER, s. that which putrefies or taints; one who, by ill example, or base motives, seduces a person to vice.

CORRUPTIBILITY, s. the possibility of being corrupted, putrefied, or rendered worse.

CORRUPTIBLE, a. that may be putrefied, or grow rotten; that may be destroyed, or rendered vicious.

CORRUPTION, s. putrescence; rottenness. In Politics, a state wherein persons act only from lucrative motives; the means by which any person may be rendered vicious; or a thing may be made rotten. In Surgery, the matter contained in any ulcer or wound, called pus, by practitioners. In Law, the taint which grows to a person or his heirs, on account of his having been guilty of felony or treason.

CORRUPTIVE, s. having the power or quality of rendering tainted or rotten.

CORRUPTLESS, a. that cannot be corrupted.

CORRUPTLY, ad. with corruption; with taint; with vice; without integrity.

CORRUPTNESS, s. the quality or state of a corrupted body; vice.

CORSAIR, s. [Fr.] an armed vessel which plunders merchant vessels; a pirate.

CORSE, s. [corps, Fr.] a poetical word for a carcass or dead body.

CORSELET, s. [Fr.] armour for the breast. Also the covering of part of the bodies of insects, in Entomology.

CORSET, s. an article of female dress, sometimes used to give support to the back and chest, by feeble individuals, but more frequently, by foolish ones, to secure a slenderness of appearance, unnatural, inelegant, and most destructive to health, and even life, at times.

CORSHAM, or COSHAM, Wilts, a town noted for its manufacture of woollens. It is 120 miles from London. Market, Wednesday. Pop. 3842.

CORSICA, a large island in the Mediterranean Sea, lying to the W. of Italy, and immediately to the N. of Sardinia. It is about 100 miles in length, and half as much in breadth. A ridge of mountains runs from N. to S. through the centre of the island, some of whose peaks are about 9000 feet in height. There are many rivers, or streams, none of any length or size to render them worthy of notice. The wealth of the island lies in its mines of iron and other metals; its marble and building-stone quarries; and in its wide and ancient forests, which furnish admirable timber trees, for strength and ornamental purposes, and many valuable fruit trees also. Its climate is not very much praised, and its corn-growing and grazing is at a low ebb. It has a few, but poor manufactures, so that its exports are chiefly the raw materials supplied by nature to the country. The people are not much advanced in civilization, nor has their incorporation with France done much for them yet. One native has obtained an undying celebrity—Napoleon Buonaparte. Bastia and Ajaccio are the capitals; Porto Vecchio, Bonifacio, St. Florent, &c. are its ports and harbours. It is included amongst the departments of France. Its population is about 230,000.

CORTESE, s. [Sp.] the name given to the parliaments of Spain and Portugal. They have not much freedom, nor power, having been retrograding in those respects whilst the parliaments of other nations advanced.

CORTEZ, HERNAN, the conqueror of Mexico in the 16th century, and thus the founder of the greatness of the Spanish empire during its brief period of supremacy in Europe. He experienced in this task all the difficulties which a scanty armament, a numerous and irritated enemy, and hostile fellow-countrymen could invent, yet by courage and address he mastered them all, and effected the purpose for which he was sent thither. He afterwards engaged in voyages of discovery, and ended his adventurous life, as so many then and always have done, under the frowns of those who reaped all the fruit of his labours. He died in 1547, aged 62 years.

CORTICAL, a. [cortex, Lat.] barky; belonging to the outward part of any thing. In Anatomy, the cortical substance of the brain is its exterior part.

CORTICATED, a. resembling the bark of a tree.

CORTICOSE, a. full of bark.

CORTONA, a city of Tuscany, Italy. It has a noble cathedral, and several fine churches, most of which are adorned within with chefs-d'œuvres of Italian art. It has some trade in the produce of the vicinity, wine, fruits, corn, &c. Its population is about 6000. It is 60 miles from Florence.

CORUNDUM, s. [Hind.] a stone found in India and China, which, when crystallized, has usually the form of a six-sided prism. The amethyst, ruby, sapphire, and topaz, are considered as varieties of this spar, differing chiefly in colour. It is commonly called adamantine spar. Emery is by some reckoned to be a species of corundum.

